OF ENGLAND.

S A D B

SABDEN, a hamlet, in the township of PENDLETON, parish of WHALLEY, union of CLITHEROE, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 1160 inhabitants. It is situated in the eastern extremity of the township, on the bank of a tributary of the river Calder, which is here crossed by a bridge, and flows through a district exceedingly hilly.

SACOMB (St. Mary), a parish, in the hundred of BROADWATER, union and county of HERTFORD, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Ware; containing 325 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1510a. 1r. 6p., of which the surface is varied, and the scenery enriched with wood. Sacomb Park, the seat of John Abel Smith, Esq., is supposed to have been one of the first inclosed in England, and the appearance of the oaks bespeaks great antiquity; the mansion was built about the year 1800. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 4., and in the gift of Samuel Smyth, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £335. 15., and the glebe comprises 12 acres. The church, situated upon an eminence on the north side of the Ware and Wotton road, has a tower on the south side of the nave, formerly embattled, and contains in the chancel two stone stalls, and a piscina under trefoil arches, with memorials of the Rolt family. A school is partly supported by Mr. Smith; and there is a bequest of £5 per annum, for apprenticing a child.

SADBERGE, a chapelry, in the parish of HAUGHTON-LE-SKERNE, union of DARLINGTON, S. W. division of the STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Darlington, on the road to Stockton-upon-Tees; containing 372 inhabitants. This was formerly a place of great importance, and the capital of a district or county of the same name, having its gaol, sheriff, coroner, and other civil officers, and it also conferred the title of Earl on the bishops of Durham. The Stockton and Darlington railway passes in the vicinity. The village is pleasantly situated on a fine eminence, which rises with a gradual ascent on every side to such an elevation as to command an extensive view over the south-eastern part of the county, and up Teesdale as far as the high grounds beyond Barnard-Castle. The tithes have been commuted for £229. 2. 4., and there is a glebe of 42 acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew. A school on the national plan is partly supported by a small endowment.

SADDINGTON (St. Helen), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Harborough; containing 279 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1674a. 3r. 27p., of which 271 acres are arable, and the remainder pasture; the surface is undulated, and the scenery varied; the soil is clay, alternated with gravel, and the prevailing timber is ash growing in the hedges. The reservoir of the Leicester and Northampton canal covers about fifty-two acres here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 2. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £280: the tithes were commuted in 1770, for land, which, including 29 acres of glebe, comprises 230 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style. A school is supported by subscription; and the produce of an allotment of land, and other bequests, in the whole amounting to £16 per annum, are distributed among the poor.

SADDLEWOOD, a tything, in the parish of HAWKESBURY, union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Upper division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Tetbury; containing, with Killcott and Tresham, 296 inhabitants.

SADDLEWORTH CUM QUICK, a parochial chapelry, in the parish of ROCHDALE, county of LANCASTER, but locally and for civil purposes in the wapentake of AGBRIGG and MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 12 miles (N. E. by E.) from Manchester, and 12 (S. W. by W.) from Huddersfield; containing 16,829 inhabitants. This district, which is 7 miles in length and about 5 in breadth, is of considerable historical interest; and during the occupation of Britain by the Romans, that people had a camp at Castleshaw, in the chapelry, which formed the first station from Manchester, on the road to York. It is said, though on doubtful authority, that this camp was superseded by a fortress which, with its ramparts and outworks, occupied an area of some acres in extent, and from its situation at the foot of Stanedge, a lofty range of hills, continued for many generations to be a baronial residence of some importance. At the time of the Conquest the place was constituted a manor; and in the year 1200, William de Stapleton, to whom it then belonged, founded a chapel here for his tenants, and made it subordinate to the mother church of St. Chad, Rochdale. From the Stapletons the manor was purchased by the Ramsden family, who had previously granted to the monks of Roche Abbey that portion of Frier Mere which after the Dissolution was given by Henry VIII. to Arthur Ashton of Rochdale; the manor subsequently passed into other families, and was ultimately divided.

The district comprises an area of more than 20,000 acres, which for many generations formed one entire tract of forest land; and though the introduction of the woollen and cotton manufacture has tended materially to the cultivation and improvement of the soil, there are still upwards of 6000 acres uninclosed. The surface is mountainous, but by the great industry of the inhabitants is cultivated almost to the very summit of the hills. The valleys, of which Greenfield is remarkable for the romantic beauty of its scenery, are watered by the river Tame and many rivulets, and abound with rich grazing land; the declivities of the hills also afford good pasture, and the roads over the hills and valleys, formed at great expense, are excellent. The chapelry is divided into four constablewicks, Frier Mere to the north-east, Lords Mere to the south-east, Quick Mere to the west, and Shaw Mere to the south-west, all comprising numerous villages and hamlets, of which the inhabitants are actively employed in the various factories that have been established in this populous manufacturing district. The proprietors of nearly all of the factories are also merchants, and trade largely with America and the continent. Throughout the whole chapelry the woollen and cotton manufacture is most extensively carried on, there being on the banks of the river and its tributary streams no less than 100 mills in full operation; and for the more regular supply of water to the several works, a spacious reservoir of 250,000 square yards has been constructed. In the township of Quick are the Royal George mills, belonging to Messrs. R. R. Whitehead and Brothers, for the manufacture of cotton, linen, and woollen cloths, and every description of texture in which those materials are employed, either separately or in combination, in any species of machinery connected with the paper, cotton, and flax trades. Among the various articles of ingenious contrivance produced at these works, are, woollen-rope for Brockeden's patent corks and bottle-stoppers, the woollen driving-belt, used as a substitute for leather, and for which the proprietors have obtained a patent, and also the patent hydraulic belt; the manufacture of buntings for naval flags is likewise extensive. A mill for the manufacture of coarse paper has also been established. Quarries of freestone are found in some places, and mines of coal are in operation. The Huddersfield canal passes through the district from north-east to south-west, under Stanedge Hill, by a tunnel 3 miles in length, affording every facility for the conveyance of heavy goods and produce to and from Manchester and Leeds and other places.

The principal village in Saddleworth is Upper Mill, situated about a mile from the parochial church, and eminently calculated by its fine position and other superior local advantages, for extensive trade. The road from Huddersfield, through Ashton-under-Line, to Manchester, is good, and renders the place a great thoroughfare; the houses are built more regularly, and more in the form of streets, than in any other village in the district, and it possesses all the interest of a busy and flourishing little town. The justices of the peace hold here their special and petty sessions. Several public institutions have been formed: at Old Delph is a subscription library with a collection of more than 1000 volumes; gas-works have also been erected, by a proprietary of £10 shareholders, at an expense of £2000. At Dobercross, one of the villages, are the Saddleworth Joint Stock Bank, and the Saddleworth Savings' Bank; and in New Delph and several other villages, are many handsome private residences. Post-offices have been established at Delph, Dobercross, and Upper Mill; and fairs for cattle, and various kinds of merchandise, are held at Delph, on the 24th April, 9th July, and 24th September; at Dobercross, on the 2nd Thursday in March, and the last Thursday in July; at Upper Mill, on the Wednesday in Whitsun-week, and the first Wednesday in October; and at Bentfield on the Tuesday before Easter.

In the latter part of the 17th century, Saddleworth is described in several deeds and public documents as the parish of "Saddleworth cum Quick," and for all civil purposes is now considered a distinct parish; but in ecclesiastical matters it is subject to the vicar of Rochdale, in whose patronage the living, a perpetual curacy, is. The old chapel, dedicated to St. Chad, is still existing, but the tower was rebuilt in 1746, and the nave and chancel were enlarged and almost rebuilt in 1833, by subscription and church-rates, aided by a grant of £400 from the Incorporated Society; it is a neat specimen of the later English style, and contains 1104 sittings, of which 872 are free. In the north aisle is a tablet to the memory of John Winterbottom, paymaster of the 52nd regiment, born at Saddleworth in 1781, and who died at Barbadoes in November 1838, having served with distinction, as a private at Ferrol; as sergeant-major at Copenhagen and Vimeiro; and as lieutenant and adjutant at Corunna, Busaco, Ciudad Rodrigo, Badajos, Salamanca, Vittoria, Orthes, Tarbes, Toulouse, and Waterloo: the tablet was erected by 130 officers of his regiment and other military friends, to commemorate his bravery as a soldier, and worth as a man. Chapels have been erected at Dobercross, Lydgate, and Frier Mere, the livings of which are perpetual curacies, in the patronage of the Vicar; and there are places of worship for Independents at Delph, Upper Mill, and Spring-head, and for Wesleyans at Delph, Upper Mill, and Bagulay. A free school was founded in 1729, by Ralph Hawkward, who endowed it with £280; and in augmentation of the master's salary, John Walker, in 1755, bequeathed £200. There are national schools at Castleshaw, Deanshaw, Kilgreen, and other places. At Greenfield are some interesting natural curiosities, consisting of huge caverns, rocks, and formerly a stupendous rocking-stone, with many Druidical remains.

SAFFRON-WALDEN.—See WALDEN, SAFFRON.

SAHAM-TONEY (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Watton; containing 1217 inhabitants, and comprising about 4000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 19. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £796; patrons, Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford: there is a glebe of about 50 acres, with a handsome parsonage-house. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, with a lofty embattled tower. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; a free school is endowed with £42 per annum, and a national school was erected in 1832, by the Rev. W. Parker, who also, in 1841, built three almshouses. At the inclosure in 1800, about 54 acres were allotted to the poor. Humphry Prideaux, author of the Connexion of the Old and New Testament, was rector of the parish.

SAIGHTON, a township, in the chapelry of CHURTON-HEATH, parish of St. OSWALD, CHESTER, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Chester; containing 313 inhabitants. The Chester and Crewe railway passes through it. A rent-charge of £90 has been awarded as a commutation for the vicarial tithes, and there is a glebe of $19\frac{1}{4}$ acres.

SAINTBURY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EVESHAM, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Chipping-Campden; containing 133 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1336a. 22p.; the surface is diversified with hills; the soil in the lower grounds is a strong clay, and in the upper of lighter quality; in the valleys are some good meadows, and the remainder is productive arable land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £415; patron, J. R. West, Esq. The church has undergone various alterations, but there is still a Norman door remaining. Castle Bank, an ancient camp in the parish, is ascribed to the Danes, and supposed to have been dependent upon a larger one upon the summit of the same hill, in the adjoining parish of Willersey.

SALCOMBE, a chapelry, in the parish of MALBOROUGH, union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of STANBOROUGH, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S.) from Kingsbridge; containing 972 inhabitants. This place, which, from the mild temperature of its climate, has been termed the Montpelier of England, is much visited for the beauty of its scenery, and as a resort for consumptive patients. The village, of which the population within the last 35 years has increased threefold, and which has a very considerable trade, is pleasantly situated on the western side of the entrance to Kingsbridge harbour; the houses in general are well built, and the neighbourhood contains several handsome villas and marine residences. There are 50 vessels belonging to the place, of which 30 are schooners of the first class, employed principally in the fruit and coasting trade. Passage-vessels sail every day to Plymouth. Ship-building is carried on to some extent; a peculiar kind of beer called white ale is brewed here; and a pleasure-fair is held at Whitsuntide. The chapel, originally erected prior to the year 1401, was rebuilt in 1801, by subscription, and is served by a curate appointed by the vicar of West Alvington. There are also places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Some remains of an ancient castle, which formerly existed here, may be traced.

SALCOMBE-REGIS (St. PETER AND St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Sidmouth; containing 525 inhabitants. This place, bounded on the south by the English Channel, was anciently held in royal demesne. The parish comprises about 2700 acres; the surface is diversified with hills, and is generally elevated tableland; the soil is sand, alternated with chalk, and the substratum mostly of the old red sandstone formation; gypsum and chalk-lime are found. Several of the females are employed in making lace. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 12. 8., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, the appropriators: the great tithes have been commuted for £135, and the vicarial for £150; the glebe comprises 9 acres. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the early English style, with Norman details, and a handsome embattled tower having a circular turret. A national school is supported by subscription. There was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Clement and St. Mary Magdalene.

SALCOTT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, hundred of WINSTREE, N. division of ESSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Colchester; containing 181 inhabitants. This parish, called also Salcot-Verley, from one of the proprietors of the manor, comprises about 2000 acres of marshy ground, and is bounded on the south by a creek which separates it from the parish of Great Wigborough: the village is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Verley Channel, which is navigable to the place. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of Mrs. Clive: the tithes have been commuted for £75. The church is a small ancient edifice.

SALDEN, a hamlet, in the parish of MURSLEY, union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Winslow; containing 38 inhabitants.

SALE, a township, in the union of ALTRINCHAM, parish of ASHTON-UPON-MERSEY, though locally in that of GREAT BUDWORTH, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (E.) from Ashton; containing 1309 inhabitants. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the township.

SALEBY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Alford; containing, with the hamlet of Thores-thorpe, 233 inhabitants, and comprising about 1740 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £227; patrons, Trustees of Alford grammar school. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1803; the glebe comprises 230 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure. A school is endowed with £6 per annum, and is further supported by the vicar.

SALEHURST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TICEHURST, hundred of HENHURST, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (N.) from Battle; containing 2099 inhabitants. This place is of some antiquity, and a Cistercian abbey was founded here in 1176, by Alured de St. Martin and Queen Adeliza, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £248. 10. 6.: there are some remains of the buildings. The parish comprises 6480*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.*, of which 4759 acres are arable and pasture, and 1649 woodland; the surface is irregular, rising in some parts to a considerable elevation, and commanding extensive views over a fertile and richly-wooded country; the district abounds with iron and sand stone, of which the former was once wrought. The river Rother flows through the parish; and the road to Hastings passes by the villages of Robert's-Bridge and Hurst-Green, at which latter, a beautiful spot, petty-sessions are held monthly. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14; net income, £503; patrons, the Executors of the late H. Winchester, Esq.; impropiator, Sir S. B. P. Micklethwait, Bart. The church is a handsome structure in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and contains some remains of stained glass. There are places of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported partly by an endowment of £16. 17. 8. per annum. John Freeland, Esq., in 1803, bequeathed the interest of £1200 to the poor.

SALESBURY, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4½ miles (N.) from Blackburn; containing 399 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £118; patron, Lord de Tabley, who supports a school.

SALFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOBURN, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, 4½ miles (N. by W.) from Woburn; containing 325 inhabitants. This place, which lies on the borders of Buckinghamshire, was formerly the property of a family who took their name from it, and was afterwards possessed by the Drakelows, and by the Charnocks, from whom it passed by marriage to the Herveys. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1750 to the rectory of Holecutt, and valued in the king's books at £7. 16. 3.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1807. The church contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SALFORD, LANCASTER.—See MANCHESTER.

SALFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 330 inhabitants. It comprises 1520 acres, of which 932 are arable, 516 meadow and pasture, and 12 coppice; the surface is hilly, the soil various, and the arable land produces good crops of wheat. The substratum abounds with stone of good quality for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 3.; net income, £251; patron, Nash Skillicorne, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1769. The church is an ancient structure, and there are the remains of two ancient crosses.

SALFORD (St. MATTHEW), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Stratford division of the hundred of BARCHINWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5¾ miles (S. by W.) from Alcester; containing 865 inhabitants, and comprising 4608 acres. The river Avon, and its tributary stream the Arrow, run through the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £111; patron and impropiator, Sir Grey Skipwith, Bart. William Perkins, in 1656, gave £232 for the support of a free grammar school, of which the income is now upwards of £40; and another school is partly supported by the vicar. An ancient mansion, the property of Mr. Berkeley, is now occupied as a nunnery, the society consisting of an abbess, sixteen professed nuns, and a school for young ladies, noviciates.

SALHOUSE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of St. FAITH, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Norwich; containing 642 inhabitants. It comprises 2033 acres, chiefly arable; the surface is enlivened with several sheets of water, and the navigable river Bure forms the eastern boundary of the parish. The Hall, a handsome mansion, the seat of Robert Ward, Esq., was formerly the property of the Lord Chief Justice Holt. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Wroxham. The church, an ancient structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, has been recently repaired, and several of the windows have been embellished with stained glass by Mr. Ward. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a neat school has been built by subscription, on ground given by Mr. Ward. Land producing £25 per annum was allotted to the poor on the inclosure of the parish.

SALING, GREAT (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Braintree; containing 349 inhabitants. This parish, which formerly included also the parish of Little Saling, comprises 1651*a.* 11*p.*, chiefly arable, and is intersected by a rivulet which rises in the parish of Great Bardfield, and falls into the Blackwater; the soil is various, but generally fertile. The village is pleasantly situated on a green of triangular form, comprising about five acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the gift of the incumbent and impropiator, the Rev. Bartlet Goodrich: the tithes have been commuted for £34 to Guy's Hospital, £55 to the impropiator, £35 to the vicar of Felstead, and £141 to the incumbent of Great Saling. The church, a small ancient edifice with a tower, supposed to have been erected in the reign of Henry II., contains monuments to the Yeldham, Goodrich, and Sheddin families. A national school is supported by subscription.

SALING, LITTLE.—See BARDFIELD-SALING.

SALISBURY, a city, having separate civil jurisdiction, locally in the hundred of UNDERDITCH, S. division of WILTS, 82 miles (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 10,086 inhabitants. This city owes its origin to the ruin of Old Sarum, where the bishops of the diocese of Wiltshire had originally fixed their seat; but their successors, from its exposed situation on an eminence, its want of water, and the annoyance to which they were subject from its military tenants, who not only levied contributions on their property, but insulted the priests in the exercise of their devotions, solicited permission to transfer the see to a more appropriate spot. Bishop Poore, having, in 1215, obtained licence from Pope Honorius, selected the site of the new city, which lies in a pleasant vale, about two miles from the remains of Old Sarum, and in 1220 laid the foundation of the present magnificent cathedral. The completion of that edifice was soon followed by the removal not only of the members of the establishment, but also of the inhabitants, who, gradually deserting the old town, built houses near the new church, and modern Salisbury consequently soon increased in extent, and grew into importance. Its progress was much accelerated by a charter of Henry III., constituting the place a free city, and conferring on its inhabitants the same privileges and immunities as were enjoyed by the people of Winchester; and that monarch also empowered the bishop to surround the city and the cathedral close with walls and ditches, to repair the roads and bridges, and to levy tallage for the completion of the walls. Disputes, however, arising between the ecclesiastical authorities and the citizens respecting these aids, in the reign of Edward I., both parties appealed to the king in council, who decided in favour of the bishop, and deprived the citizens of their charter, which was subsequently restored to them upon an amicable arrangement of the matter by the parties themselves. About this period, Bishop Bridport built a bridge at Harnham, and thus changing the direction of the great western road, which formerly passed through Old Sarum, that place was completely deserted, and Salisbury became one of the most flourishing cities in the kingdom. Edward I. presided over a parliament here, to deliberate upon measures for recovering the province of Gascoigne, that had been seized upon by Philip of France; on which occasion none of the clergy assisted, the king having suspended them from the exercise of their secular functions for refusing him aid. In the reign of Edward III., a second parliament, for inquiring into the state of the kingdom, was held at Salisbury, to which Mortimer, Earl of March, and his partisans, came with their followers in arms: the Earls of Kent, Norfolk, and Lancaster, who, on being summoned to attend, were prohibited by Mortimer from appearing with any military forces, perceiving on their arrival, the warlike preparations of his own adherents, retreated for the purpose of assembling their retainers, and returning with an army, were about to take vengeance on Mortimer, when the quarrel was compromised through the intervention of the clergy. From the time of Edward I., the bishops and the citizens appear to have lived in a state of mutual harmony, till the time of Richard II., when the prelate requiring the corporation to concur with him in his efforts to suppress the meetings of the Lollards, who assembled here in great numbers, the latter refused, and the bishop appealing to the king, obtained an order in council compelling them to assist him in that object. In the reign of Richard III., the Duke of Buckingham, who had headed an unsuccessful insurrection against him, was taken prisoner in his retreat, and being brought hither, was immediately executed, in 1484, without any trial. No event of historical importance appears in connexion with the city, till after the close of the parliamentary war, when, during the interregnum, Col. Wyndham, with other gentlemen of the county, marched into Salisbury with 200 armed men, and proclaimed Charles II. king; but they were not supported by the inhabitants of the surrounding country.

The CITY is pleasantly situated in a spacious valley, near the confluence of the rivers Nadder and Willey with the Avon, and consists of several principal streets regularly formed, and intersected at right angles by smaller ones, dividing the town into a number of squares called Chequers, which derived their form from the original grant of the bishops of a certain number of perches in front and in depth allotted for building; the areas round which the houses have been erected are laid out in gardens. Most of the buildings are of brick, and modern; many are handsome, but some, more ancient, are irregular in form and size, and constructed with timber and brick-work plastered over. The waters of the river run through most of the streets in canals lined with brick, and contribute greatly to their cleanliness. The city is connected by two stone bridges of six arches each, with the suburb of Fisherton, including which it occupies an area nearly three-quarters of a mile square; and it is joined to the suburb of East Harnham by an ancient bridge of ten arches, divided into two parts by a small islet, on which was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. John, where three chaplains were appointed to say mass, and to receive the contributions of passengers towards the keeping of it in repair. Some improvement has been lately effected in paving and lighting the town, which is amply supplied with water. The Salisbury and Wiltshire library and newsroom was established in 1819, and is supported by a proprietary and by annual subscriptions. A small neat theatre is opened for some months in the winter; assemblies and concerts are held occasionally, and races take place in August, and are in general well attended. Salisbury was formerly celebrated for its manufactures of flannels, druggets, and the cloths called Salisbury Whites; but these branches of TRADE are now almost extinct, and what remains is confined to a very inconsiderable number of persons: the town, however, is still noted for its manufacture of the more select articles of cutlery of superior quality, though the sale is very limited; and a silk-factory, employing about 120 persons, has been lately established. The Salisbury canal, joining with the Andover line near Romsey, was originally intended to be continued westward to Bath and Bristol, connecting the Bristol and English Channels, but the design was abandoned. The market-days are Tuesday and Saturday; the former for corn, of which there is an abundant supply, and the latter for cheese and all kinds of provisions; there is also a large cattle-market every alternate Tuesday. The fairs, which are falling into disuse, are on the Tuesday after January 6th, for cattle; Tuesday after the 25th of March, for cloth; Whit Monday and Tuesday, for horses and pedlery; and October 20th, for butter and cheese. The poultry cross, which appears to have been built in the reign of Edward III., and of which only the lower part is remaining, is situated without the south-west corner of the market-place, an extensive quadrilateral area, well arranged.

The first CHARTER granted to the city was by Henry III., in the eleventh year of his reign, which was confirmed and altered by several succeeding sovereigns; but the controul, previously to the passing of the Municipal Corporations' act, was wholly regulated by the charters bestowed by James I., Charles I. and II., and Anne. The government, agreeably with that act, is now vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those for parliamentary purposes; the city is divided into three wards, and the number of magistrates is five. The city exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has continued to return two members to parliament: the borough was extended in 1832, and now comprises an area of 601 acres; the mayor is returning officer. The recorder holds quarterly courts of session. On the part of the bishop are a bailiff and deputy-bailiff, who preside at a court of record, for the recovery of debts to any amount, but no process has issued from it for several years past; they also hold a court leet for the bishop, as lord of the manor. The spring assize and the Lent quarter-session for the county regularly take place here, and petty-sessions occur every Monday. The council-house, having been destroyed by fire, was rebuilt in 1795, under the provisions of an act of parliament, at the expense of the late Earl of Radnor, on the site of the ancient guildhall; it is a handsome building of white brick, ornamented with rustic quoins and cornices of stone, and consists of two wings, connected by a central vestibule. The county gaol and bridewell, a substantial and spacious edifice, was erected in 1818, at the western extremity of Fisherton-Anger, at an expense of about £30,000.

The seat of the DIOCESE was originally established about the beginning of the tenth century, at Wilton, in this county, where it continued under the superintendence of eleven successive bishops, of whom Hermannus, the last, having been appointed to the see of Sherborne, annexed that bishopric to Wilton, and founded, for the united dioceses, a cathedral at Old Sarum, which was afterwards completed by Osmund, who accompanied William the Conqueror into England, and was by that monarch made bishop. The see remained at Old Sarum till the year 1220, when Richard le Poore transferred the episcopal chair to Salisbury, where it has since remained. Under the provisions of the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, a considerable alteration has been made in the territorial extent of the diocese, which now comprises the county of Dorset, and part of Wiltshire, and contains 428 benefices. The establishment consists of a bishop, dean, precentor, chancellor, treasurer, five canons residentiary, three archdeacons (for Dorset, Sarum, and Wilts), a subdean, succentor, thirty-eight prebendaries, four minor canons or priest-vicars, six singing men, eight choristers, an organist, and other officers. The bishop appoints the precentor, chancellors of the church and diocese, the treasurer, the archdeacons, the subdean, and subchanter, the prebendaries, and to 36 benefices, and has an income of £5000; the Dean and Chapter, which consists of the residentiary canons, have the patronage of the minor canonries and 16 benefices with an income of £2799; and the minor canons form a corporate body with an income of £243. The proceeds of one suspended canonry have been transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The CATHEDRAL, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, begun by Richard le Poore in 1220, and completed in 1258, is one of the most magnificent and interesting ecclesiastical edifices in the kingdom. It is in the form of a double cross, with a highly-enriched tower, rising from the intersection of the nave and larger transepts, and surmounted by a lofty spire rising to the height of 400 feet from the pavement, being the highest in England: the whole building, with the exception only of the upper part of the tower, and the spire, which are of later date, are in the purest style of early English architecture. The west front is divided into five compartments, by buttresses ornamented with canopied niches filled with statues; between the two central buttresses is the principal entrance through a richly-moulded arch of spacious dimensions, with a smaller on each side; above the entrance is a large and elegant window, and at the angles of the front are square embattled towers finely enriched, crowned with angular pinnacles and surmounted by spires. The north front is of considerable beauty, and the end fronts of the transepts, projecting boldly from the sides of the main building, and displaying, in successive series of arches, a pleasing variety of composition, corresponding with the general style, are a fine relief to the exterior. The interior, of which the perspective is impressively striking, is exquisitely beautiful, from the loftiness of its elevation and the delicacy and lightness of its structure. The nave is separated from the aisles by a handsome range of ten clustered columns and pointed arches; the roof, which is plainly groined, is 84 feet high, and the space above the columns is occupied by a triforium of elegant design, and a range of clerestory windows of three lights, of which the central is higher than the rest, and which is continued round the whole extent of the building; the larger transepts, of the same character with the nave, consist of three arches of similar arrangement, and the smaller of two arches. The choir, divided from the nave by a screen of modern workmanship supporting the organ, which was the gift of his Majesty George III., consists of seven arches, and by the removal of the altar-screen, has been connected with the Lady chapel, of which the roof, being lower than that of the choir, in a great degree destroys the effect. The bishop's throne, the pulpit, and the prebendal stalls, are of finely-executed tabernacle-work, and harmonise with the prevailing character of the building; the floor of the choir is of black and white marble, and the east window is embellished with a painting of the Resurrection, by Eginton, from a design by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The choir is also ornamented with a painting of the Elevation of the Brazen Serpent in the Wilderness, from a design by Mortimer, executed by Pearson, the gift of the late Earl of Radnor; and many of the other windows are painted in Mosaic. The cathedral was lately repaired, under the superintendence of Mr. Wyatt, at an expense of £26,000; the chapels in the transepts have been removed, and their principal ornaments have been distributed in various parts of the building. In the nave, choir, and transepts, are numerous monuments to the bishops of the see, among which are those of Bishops Joceline and Roger, the latter perhaps the earliest specimen of monumental sculpture extant; also of a chorister bishop, one of the children of the choir, who died while personating the character of a bishop, according to custom, during the festival of St. Nicholas; besides several monuments to the earls of Salisbury, and the neighbouring nobility and gentry. The cloisters are the largest and most magnificent of any in the kingdom, and the cathedral close has some entrance gateways of ancient character and of elegant design. The chapter-house, of an octagonal form, of which the roof is supported by one central clustered column, is a beautiful building lighted by lofty windows; the frieze is ornamented with subjects from the sacred writings in bas-relief, which are in tolerable preservation. The episcopal palace is the work of different times, and combines various styles; a considerable portion was added by the late Dr. Shute Barrington: it contains portraits of nearly all the modern prelates of the see.

The city comprises the parish of St. Edmund, containing 4461 inhabitants; part of St. Martin's, 3051; and the parish of St. Thomas, 2515; also the extra-parochial district of the Cathedral Close, with 596. The living of St. Edmund's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £176; patron, the Bishop. The church, formerly collegiate, is a fine structure in the later English style, with a tower, which, having fallen down in 1653, was rebuilt in an appropriate manner; the interior is neatly arranged, but the chancel has been modernised; at the east end is a beautiful painted window of the Ascension, by Eginton, the gift of the late Samuel Whitchurch, Esq. The living of St. Martin's is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. 1½.; net income, £188; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church is a spacious building, combining different styles, with a tower surmounted by a spire. The living of St. Thomas' is a perpetual curacy; net income, £118; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The church is a large handsome edifice in the later English style, with a tower on the south side of the south aisle; the chancel and other parts are specimens of considerable merit, and among the monuments is one supposed to be that of the Duke of Buckingham, who was executed here in the reign of Richard III. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The grammar school, in the Close, is for the education of eight boys: among the scholars taught in it was Addison the poet. The city grammar school was instituted by Queen Elizabeth, and is endowed with £15. 9. 1. crown rents, and £10. 12. 2., previously appropriated to the schools at Trowbridge and Bradford, in lieu of which it was established. A school in which eight orphan girls are educated, was founded by the Rev. John Talman, in 1755, who left a house in High-street. Another school is endowed by the late Charles Godolphin, Esq., for the maintenance and education of eight orphans, daughters of poor gentlemen; the mistress is allowed £280 per annum, and £30 for house rent. A school for the choristers of the cathedral is supported by the bishop, and a national central school by subscription.

The infirmary, a commodious brick building near Fisherton bridge, owes its origin to Lord Feversham, who bequeathed £500 to the first institution of the kind which should be established in the county. The College of Matrons was founded in 1683, for the maintenance of the widows of ten clergymen, by Seth Ward, bishop of the diocese, who assigned to it property producing an income of £200, which has been much augmented by the increased value of the endowment, a bequest by W. Benson Earle in 1794, and some subsequent donations; the buildings are within the Close, and the establishment is under the direction of the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter. Bishop Richard le Poore established, near Harnham bridge, an hospital for a master, eight aged men, and four women, which was completed by his successor, Bishop Bingham, and is now occupied by a master, six aged men, and six women. Trinity Hospital, instituted in 1379, by Agnes Boltenham, and augmented in 1397, by John Chandler, was placed upon its present foundation by charter of James I., and the endowment has since received several additions. Among other similar establishments are, Bricket's hospital, in Exeter-street, established in 1534, for six aged men or women; Eyre's hospital in Winchester-street, in 1617, for six men and their wives; Blechynden's hospital, in Green Croft-street, in 1683, for six aged widows; Taylor's hospital, in Bedwin-street, founded in 1698, and the endowment subsequently augmented by Matthew Best and Francis Swanton, for six aged men; and Frowd's hospital, in Rolleston-street, instituted in 1750, for six aged men and six women. There are also several other almshouses, of which the principal are, three in St. Ann's-street, the bequest of Robert Sutton; six in Culver-street, supposed to be the donation of Bishop Poore; twenty-six in Bedwin-street, the gift of Madame Menks; and thirteen in Castle-street, presented by William Hussey, Esq., in 1794, and subsequently endowed by the will of the donor. Various charitable bequests have been made for apprenticing children, and for distribution among the indigent; and the regulation of the affairs of the poor is under a local act, which embraces the three parishes; but the Close is in the union of Alderbury.

A college was established here by Egidius de Bridport, in 1260, in which many of the students who had retired from Oxford, in consequence of their quarrel with Otho, the Pope's legate, in 1238, afterwards continued their studies: and there were formerly remains of a monastery of Grey friars, instituted by the Bishop of Salisbury, in the reign of Henry III., on a site of ground given by that monarch; of a convent of Black friars, to which Edward I., if not the founder, was at least a considerable benefactor; and of the hospital of St. Michael, and the college of St. Erith. The neighbourhood abounds with flints found in the alluvial soil, and with strata of chalk; these flints, both the nodular from the chalk, and the fractured found in the gravel, yield a variety of organic remains of the spongia and alcyonia genera; several valuable collections have been formed in the neighbourhood, and it has been reckoned that there are not less than twelve distinct species of that submarine substance. Among the eminent natives of the city have been, Walter Winterton, Cardinal of St. Sabric; William Herman, author of several works in prose and verse; John Thornborough, Bishop of Worcester; George Coryate, author of The Crudities; Michael Muschant, an able civilian and poet; Sir Toby Matthews, a celebrated Jesuit and politician; Dr. Thomas Bennet, a noted divine and writer; Thomas Chubb and John Eden, distinguished controversial writers; John Greenhill, a celebrated portrait-painter; William and Henry Lawes, musicians and composers; Dr. Harris, an eminent historian and biographer; James Harris, author of Hermes; John Tobin, author of The Honey-moon, and other dramatic works; and the late Admiral Tobin, who died in 1838. Salisbury gives the title of Marquess to the family of Cecil.

SALKELD-GATE.—See PLUMPTON-WALL.

SALKELD, GREAT (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Kirk-Oswald; containing 441 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 3600 acres, of which about 1000 are rough pasture, 250 woodland, and the remainder chiefly arable. It is intersected by the river Eden, which is crossed by a bridge of singular construction, with elliptical, semicircular, and pointed arches, partly built with the materials of an old bridge taken down about fifty years since: the remains of a pier belonging to a still more ancient structure, demolished by a great flood in 1360, are yet visible in the stream. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 10. 10.; net income, £345; patron, Bishop of Carlisle. The tower of the church, which appears to have contained four rooms one above another, was formerly resorted to as a place of security, and under it is a dungeon. There are places of worship for Presbyterians and Primitive Methodists. In the neighbourhood are vestiges of an ancient encampment, the ramparts of which are twelve feet high; and on the common is a chalybeate spring. Among eminent natives have been, Dr. George Benson, a non-conformist divine and biblical critic, born in 1699; the late Lord Ellenborough, chief justice of the king's bench; and Rowland Wetheral, the celebrated mathematician and astronomer, born in the middle of the last century.

SALKELD, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of ADDINGHAM, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (S.) from Kirk-Oswald; containing 120 inhabitants.

SALL (St. PETER and St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 1¾ mile (N. N. E.) from Reepham; containing 267 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1802*a.* 3*r.* 15*p.*, of which 1100 acres are arable, 609 pasture and meadow, and 55 woodland. Sall House is a handsome mansion, situated in a well-wooded park. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 7., and in the gift of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £560, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, with a house lately enlarged by the Rev. Edward Bulwer, incumbent. The church is a stately cruciform structure, principally in the later English style, with a lofty and elegant embattled tower, crowned by pinnacles; the chancel is separated from the nave by a richly carved and painted screen, and on each side are thirteen stalls; there are numerous monuments, and the north and south porches are of elegant design.

SALMONBY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Horncastle; containing 116 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 2½.; net income, £308; patron and incumbent, the Rev. W. Bowerbank.

SALPERTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Northleach; containing 206 inhabitants. The parish comprises nearly 1400 acres, of which the surface is undulated, and the soil generally stony, and of little depth; it is situated a little to the north of the road from Northleach to Cheltenham, and to the south of that from Stow-on-the-Wold to the same town. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of John Browne, Esq., with a net income of £95: the tithes were commuted for land in 1780.

SALSEY FOREST, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of POTTERS-PURY, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 6½ miles (S. S. E.) from Northampton; containing 20 inhabitants.

SALT, with ENSON, a township, in the parish of ST. MARY and ST. CHAD, STAFFORD, union of STAFFORD, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Stafford; containing 580 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £247, payable to the trustees of the Stafford charities. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SALTASH, or ESSAY, a market-town and chapelry, and formerly a representative borough, in the parish of ST. STEPHEN, union of ST. GERMANS, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the S. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Plymouth, 21 (S. S. E.) from Launceston, and 220 (W. S. W.)

from London; containing 1541 inhabitants. This place, which is of considerable antiquity, obtained at an early period a high degree of importance; and in 1393, the assizes for the county were regularly held here. During the parliamentary war in the reign of Charles I., the town was fortified for the king, and sustained repeated assaults from both of the contending parties, by each of which it was alternately possessed, till its final abandonment by the royalists in 1646. It is pleasantly situated on a steep rocky elevation, rising from the western bank of the river Tamar, and consists principally of three narrow streets irregularly formed; the houses in general are of ancient appearance. The inhabitants are chiefly seafaring men and others employed in the fisheries, or connected with the docks of Devonport; there are still some extensive malting concerns, for which the place was formerly very celebrated. The market is on Tuesday, and there is also a market for provisions on Saturday. Fairs are held on the 2nd of February and 25th of July, mostly for cattle; and there are four quarterly cattle-markets on the Tuesdays preceding the quarter-days.

The first charter of incorporation was granted in the reign of Henry III., confirmed by Richard II., and renewed with additional privileges by Elizabeth, Charles II., and George III., under the provisions of which last the municipal body consists of a mayor and six aldermen, styled "the council of the borough," with an indefinite number of free burgesses, assisted by a recorder and other officers. The property of the oyster-fishery to the mouth of the Tamar, except between Candlemas and Easter, with river dues for anchorage, buoyage, and salvage, and a right of ferry, is vested in the corporation. The magistrates hold a court of record, and also a general court of quarter-sessions, for the borough and liberties; and the inhabitants are exempt from all church and county rates, and from serving on juries, except in their own courts. The town first returned members to parliament in the reign of Edward VI., but was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. The court of record, established by charter of the 35th of George III., for the recovery of debts to any amount, is held every week, when the mayor and aldermen, or any two of them, preside; and sessions for the division occur quarterly in the guildhall. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Executors of Sir R. S. Hawks; net income, £45; appropriators, Dean and Canons of Windsor. The chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure, with a fine massive tower, and contains in the interior a magnificent monument to the memory of three brothers named Drew. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a grammar school endowed with £6. 7. 6. per annum, and a national school.

SALTBY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 299 inhabitants. It is situated on the border of Lincolnshire, near the road from Grantham to Melton-Mowbray, about equi-distant from those towns. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Sproxton, and valued in the king's books at £7. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with some Norman details, and has a very elegant window on the south side of the nave.

SALTER, an extra-parochial district, in the union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Whitehaven; containing, with Eskat, 40 inhabitants.

SALTERFORTH, a township, in the parish of BAR-NOLDSWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Skipton; containing 676 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1139 acres, of which a considerable portion, called White moor, was inclosed in 1815. Limestone of excellent quality is quarried extensively by the Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company; and there is a large quarry of good freestone, belonging to R. H. Roundell, Esq. The village is situated on the banks of the canal.

SALTERNS, GREAT, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of PORTSDOWN, union of PORTSEA ISLAND, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 26 inhabitants.

SALTERSFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from Macclesfield. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Vicar of Prestbury, with a net income of £47: the chapel is a neat edifice, erected in 1731. Saltersford gives the inferior title of Baron to the family of Stanhope, earls of Courtown.

SALTERS-STREET, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of TANWORTH, union of SOLIHULL, Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Hockley; containing 1010 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north-east by the turnpike-road between Birmingham and Henley, and is intersected by the Birmingham and Stratford canal. Brick-making is carried on. The living is in the patronage of the Vicar of Tanworth, and has a net income of £150, paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The church was erected in 1840, at a cost of £1400, derived from land sold to the Canal Company, and is a neat building with a cupola. A boys' and girls' school is supported by subscription, aided by an endowment.

SALTERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of DURNFORD, union and hundred of AMESBURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 91 inhabitants.

SALTFLEET-HAVEN, a hamlet, and formerly a market-town, in the parish of SKIDBROOK, union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 38 miles (N. E. by E.) from Lincoln. This place, situated on the German Ocean, was anciently of sufficient note to furnish, in 1359, two ships and 49 men to the navy of Edward III., for the invasion of Brittany, and so lately as half a century since, when the market was discontinued, it was of some importance; but it is now decayed, the old town having, it is said, been destroyed by an inundation of the sea. It is, however, a coast-guard station, of which the head-quarters are at Great Grimsby. A fair is held on Oct. 3rd, and is celebrated for a show of good foals. Here is a very fine bed of oysters. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SALTFLEETBY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Louth; containing 181 inhabitants. It comprises about 1500 acres of rich marsh land, extending eastward to the sea-coast. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. 4½., and in the gift of Magdalen College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £305, and the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church is a neat structure, with a tower containing five bells. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Rev. Dr. Cholmeley, rector, in 1785, bequeathed £200, which, with accumulations, now produces £32. 16. per annum for the poor.

SALTFLEETBY (St. Clement), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Louth; containing 109 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres on the sea-coast; the surface is level, but well drained, and the soil is strong and rich. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 1., and in the gift of Earl Brownlow: the tithes have been commuted for £263. 7., and the glebe contains 3 acres. The church is a small edifice, thoroughly repaired in 1841.

SALTFLEETBY (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Louth; containing 246 inhabitants. This place, with Saltfleetby St. Clements and All Saints', forms one long and very scattered village, and is much embellished by the handsome seat called Saltfleetby House, near which is an observatory commanding pleasing and extensive prospects both of sea and land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the gift of Oriel College, Oxford: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £240, and the incumbent's for a like sum; the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is a small building, with a tower at the west end.

SALTFORD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Bath; containing 427 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east and north by the river Avon, and comprises about 823 acres, of which the surface is varied, and the soil of different qualities. On the bank of the river are some extensive brass-works. A cutting has been made for the Great Western railway through a stratum of blue lias, to the extent of 525,000 cubic yards; and an embankment has also been constructed, containing 583,400. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. 10., and in the gift of the Duke of Buckingham: the tithes have been commuted for £185, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. There is a school on the national system.

SALT-HILL, a village, partly in the parish of FARNHAM-ROYAL, hundred of BURNHAM, and partly in the parishes of STOKE-POGES and UPTON, hundred of STOKE, union of ETON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Eton. This place, situated on the road to Bath, and distinguished by two very large and elegant inns, is noted as being connected with the triennial ceremony of the Eton scholars, termed the Montem, when a procession repairs to a tumulus on the south side of the road, which probably acquired the name Salt-hill from the money collected by the boys being called "Salt-Money." The Great Western railway passes near the village, and has a station at Slough.

SALTHOUSE (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Clay; containing 266 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1559a. 2r. 8p., of which 631 acres are arable, and 905 meadow and pasture; the surface is undulated, and the higher grounds command fine views of the sea; a considerable portion is much frequented by wild fowl, and in the pools are great numbers of eels. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Kelling, and valued in the king's books at £20: the tithes have been commuted for £219. 11., and the glebe comprises one acre. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, formerly surmounted by a spire; the foundation of a former church may still be traced in the burial-ground. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists.

SALTHROP, a tything, in the parish of WROUGHTON, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 56 inhabitants.

SALTLEY, with WASHWOOD, a hamlet, in the parish and union of ASTON, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 695 inhabitants.

SALTMARSH, an extra-parochial district, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD; containing 12 inhabitants, and comprising 127 acres.

SALTMARSH, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Howden; containing 157 inhabitants. It comprises about 960 acres of a fertile soil, on the river Ouse, across which is a ferry. The Hall is a handsome stone mansion, with a well-wooded lawn and pleasure-grounds, the seat of the Saltmarsh family; the village is on the north bank of the river, and nearly opposite to Reedness.

SALTMARSH, NEW, an extra-parochial district, adjoining the parish of WALPOLE ST. PETER, county of NORFOLK, locally situated in the wapentake of ELLOE, county of LINCOLN; containing 29 inhabitants.

SALTON (St. John of Beverley), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Brawby, 371 inhabitants, of whom 153 are in Salton township, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Pickering. The parish comprises by computation 2810 acres of generally level and fertile land, extending from the river Dove to the Seven, near the former of which the village is seated. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 10. 10.; net income, £90; patron and impropiator, G. W. Dowker, Esq.

SALTWELL, or SALTWELL-SIDE, a rural district, in the parish of GATESHEAD, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 2 miles (S.) from Gateshead. This locality rises in a beautiful slope from the Team rivulet, which abounds in trout; and is formed of the side of a hill extending in an easterly direction to the turnpike-road from Newcastle to Durham. It is remarkable for the salubrity of its air, and commands fine views of Ravensworth Castle, Lamesley church, Whickham and Dunston hills, and the vale of the Tyne. Saltwell House, the residence of Thomas Cayley, Esq., is an ancient mansion, surrounded with wood, and contains a Roman Catholic chapel; Field House, a substantial modern erection, skirted with thriving plantations, is the seat of Thomas Bramwell, Esq.; and Saltwell Vale, which adjoins Gateshead Fell, is the property of Mr. Thomas Robson.

SALTWICK, a township, in the N. division of the parish of STANNINGTON, union, and W. division, of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Morpeth. This place formed a manor in the Merlay barony, and has been at various periods held by the families of Camhow, Greystock, Ogle, and Brown. It stands on the brow of a high green slope pointing to the south, and commands on every side but the north a very extensive prospect. The township comprises about 950 acres. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £116. 1. 8., and the vicarial for £3. 3. 6.

SALTWOOD (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of HAYNE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. by W.) from Hythe; containing 520 inhabitants. This place was distinguished at an early period for its castle, which is said to have been first built by the son of Hengist, the Saxon, in 448, and, in the reign of John, to have become one of the palaces of the archbishops of Canterbury: the remains, which are sufficiently considerable to convey some idea of its former magnificence, are situated on an eminence, commanding a fine view of the sea, which it is supposed formerly came up to the place. The living is a rectory, with that of Hythe annexed, in the patronage of the Archbishop, valued in the king's books at £34; net income, £784. The church is principally in the decorated English style.

SALVINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WEST TARRING, hundred of TARRING, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 114 inhabitants. The celebrated John Selden was born here in 1584.

SALWARPE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of DROITWICH, Upper division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Droitwich; containing 482 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1979*a*. 35*p*.: the Droitwich canal to the river Severn passes through it, and the principal traffic is in the conveyance of salt. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 14. 7.; net income, £520; patron, the Rev. Henry Douglas: the tithes were commuted for land in 1813; the glebe comprises 306 acres. The church exhibits portions in the Norman, and in the decorated and later English styles. A parochial school was erected a few years since by subscription, on the site of one in a ruinous state; the master receives £20 annually, the bequest of Talbot Barker, Esq. An old mansion, erected in the time of Henry VIII., is supposed to occupy the site of an ancient religious house. Richard Beauchamp, the celebrated Earl of Warwick, was born here in 1351.

SAMBOURN, a hamlet, in the parish of COUGHTON, union of ALCESTER, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Alcester; containing 662 inhabitants, a few of whom are employed in making needles. It comprises 2200 acres.

SAMLESBURY, a chapelry, in the parish and Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, union of PRESTON, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Preston; containing 1728 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 4256 acres, of which 450 are arable, 327 woodland, and the remainder meadow and pasture. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, Vicar of Blackburn; net income, £150. The chapel is dedicated to St. Leonard. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics; also a school partly supported by an endowment of £7 per annum, and another, for Roman Catholics, partly maintained by the priest.

SAMPFORD-ARUNDEL (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of MILVERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Wellington; containing 448 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1144 acres, of which 35 are common or waste land. The Great Western road from Bath and Bristol to Exeter passes through the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patron and impropriator, the Rev. Charles B. Sweet: the great tithes have been commuted for £150, and the vicarial for £125, and the glebe contains 2 acres. The church has been enlarged. A school is partly supported by subscription.

SAMPFORD-BRETT (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 15 miles (N. W.) from Taunton; containing 238 inhabitants. This place probably derived the adjunct to its name from the family of De Brett, to whom it anciently belonged, and to a member of whom the effigy of a cross-legged knight among the monuments in the church is traditionally assigned. The mail-road from Taunton to Minehead passes through the parish; and at Aller are the remains of an ancient manor-house, supposed to have been the residence of one of the Wyndham family, to whose memory there is an ancient marble monument in the church, with an elegant inscription in Latin. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 19. 7., and in the gift of the Rev. Charles Tripp, D.D.: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe comprises $36\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church, in addition to the monuments above named, contains several to the memory of deceased rectors of the parish.

SAMPFORD-COURTENAY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Oakhampton; containing 1239 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 6082 acres, of which 3160 are arable, 790 pasture and orchard, 100 wood, and about 2000 moor, chiefly covered with furze; the surface is undulated, and the low grounds are watered by the river Taw, which forms the south-western boundary, and by several rivulets. The forest of Dartmoor joins the parish on the south, and forms the most interesting feature in the scenery; the soil of the lands is partly a red loam, alternated with stiff clay. Near Sticklepath, which in the reign of Henry V. was a parish, and where is still a chapel, in which divine service is occasionally performed, a copper-mine was opened some years since, but the produce was insufficient to remunerate the adventurers, and it has consequently been discontinued. A serious commotion broke out here in 1549, in consequence of some alteration in the church service. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £47. 12. 1.; net income, £510; patrons, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church is an ancient structure of granite with a lofty tower, in the later English style. At Brightley, in the parish, a monastery of Cistercians was founded in 1136, by Richard Fitz-Baldwin de Brioniis, Baron of Oakhampton, which was afterwards removed to Ford; but the ruins of a chapel, supposed to have belonged to it, are still remaining.

SAMPFORD, GREAT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Thaxted; containing 877 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2247*a*. 2*r*. 29*p*., of which 1620 acres are arable, 426 meadow and pasture, and 104 woodland; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the scenery enriched with ornamental timber; the soil is luxuriantly fertile, and along the borders of the Freshwell rivulet are some fine tracts of meadow and pasture land. The village contains several good houses, and the straw-plat manufacture, which is of recent introduction, affords employment to several of the inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with that of Hempstead annexed, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the patronage of Sir William Eustace, K.C.H.; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, whose tithes for both parishes have been commuted for £1185. 3. 2., and those of the vicar for £360; the former have 206 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and the latter has 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, of glebe. The church, situated on an eminence, is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower strengthened by buttresses; the interior is rich in architectural details, and in the chancel are some stone stalls of beautiful design. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a national school is supported by subscription. Mrs. Catherine Riley, in 1820, bequeathed £200 to the poor, which have been invested in Bank annuities.

SAMPFORD, LITTLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of FRESHWELL, N. division of Essex, 14 miles (N. W. by N.) from Braintree; containing 470 inhabitants. It comprises 2779a. 3r. 7p., of which 500 acres are meadow and pasture, 130 woodland, and the remainder chiefly arable; the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by a stream which in its course forms the river Pant. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of New College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £700, and there are 52 acres of glebe. The church is a plain edifice of stone, with a lofty tower surmounted by a spire, and contains several interesting monuments. A national school is supported by subscription. Near the manor-house of Friars are the foundations of an ancient chapel of the Knights Hospitallers, from whom, as its possessors, the manor derived its name.

SAMPFORD-PEVERELL (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HALBERTON, Collumpton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Tiverton; containing 857 inhabitants. This place is distinguished as having been the residence of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, and mother of Henry VII.; the manor-house in which she lived, and which subsequently belonged to Sir Anias Poulett, who had the custody of Mary, Queen of Scots, at the time of her execution, was a castellated building, erected in 1337, and taken down in 1775. The woollen trade was formerly carried on extensively at this place, which is said to have been anciently a borough. The district abounds with excellent limestone, and there are several kilns for burning it, for the supply of the neighbourhood. The Grand Western canal, and the Bristol and Exeter railway, pass through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23. 8. 11½.; net income, £270; patrons and impropriators, the Pidsley family. The church, of which one aisle is said to have been built by the Countess of Richmond, contains some interesting monuments, and near the altar are two recesses, in which are a piscina and water drain. From the churchyard a fine view is obtained of the surrounding country, and of Sidmouth Gap, about twenty-five miles distant.

SAMPFORD-SPINEY, a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Tavistock and S. divisions of DEVON, 4¼ miles (E. by S.) from Tavistock; containing 443 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the verge of Dartmoor, and intersected by the Plymouth railway; it comprises 1475 acres, of which 285 are common or waste land. Here is a mine where cobalt and silver have been found. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Shaugh annexed; net income of Shaugh £107, and of Sampford-Spiney £54; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church contains thirty free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £15 in aid of the expense.

SAMPSON'S, ST., a parish, in the union of St. AUSTELL, E. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Lostwithiel; containing 311 inhabitants. The river Fowey is navigable on the east of the parish, which is situated near the sea. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £53; patron and impropriator, W. Rashleigh, Esq. Here was anciently a castle of the earls of Salisbury, the site of which is called Castle-Dore.

SANCREED (St. CREED), a parish, in the union of PENZANCE, W. division of the hundred of PENWITH and of the county of CORNWALL, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Penzance; containing 1248 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4600 acres, of which 1700 are common or waste; granite of excellent quality is found, though not regularly quarried, and there are some old tin-works on Beacon Hill, and a stream-work on Trevenyan Moor, which is nearly exhausted. The road from Penzance to the Land's End passes on the south, and to St. Just, on the north side of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of the appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for £509. 10. 7., of which £95. 10. belong to the vicarage in right of the manor, and three-fifths of the remainder also, together amounting to £344. The glebe comprises 152 acres, of which 50 are arable and pasture, and the remainder common; a new glebe-house has been erected, at an expense of £650. Besides the church, there were formerly three chapels, of which some remains still exist. The Baptists, Bryanites, and Wesleyans have places of worship; and a national school is supported by subscription. In the churchyard is a fine ancient cross; at Drift are two rude upright stones, and there are some other antiquities in the parish.

SANCTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK; containing 505 inhabitants, of whom 431 are in the township of Sancton with Houghton, 1½ mile (S. E.) from Market-Weighton. The parish, including the township of North Cliffe, comprises about 4890 acres; the surface is hilly, the soil sand and chalk, and the scenery varied and picturesque. The village is situated on the road from Market-Weighton to South Cave, in a deep valley and on its acclivities. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 10½.; net income, £49; patron and impropriator, the Hon. Charles Langdale: the great tithes were commuted for land in 1769. The church is a handsome structure, and has an elegant octagonal tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a Roman Catholic chapel at Houghton Hall. A free school is endowed with a rent-charge of £20, and another for Roman Catholics is supported by the Hon. C. Langdale.

SANDALL, GREAT (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGBRIGG, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Crigglestone, Sandall, Walton, and part of West Bretton; and containing 3482 inhabitants, of whom 1273 are in the township of Sandall, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Wakefield. This place is of high antiquity, and was long the baronial seat of the lords of Wakefield, of whom John Plantagenet, the last Earl of Warren, erected a strong castle here about the year 1320, which, in the reign of Edward III., was occupied by Edward Balliol, one of the competitors for the throne of Scotland. The castle, which was strongly fortified, became the property of Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, who fell in the battle of Wakefield, in 1460, and was subsequently the residence of his son, Richard, Duke of Gloucester, afterwards Richard III. During the war in the reign of Charles I., it was held for the king, but was ultimately surrendered to the republican forces in 1645, and in the following year demolished by order of parliament; the remains are very inconsiderable, scarcely serving to point out the site. The township comprises by computation nearly 1700 acres; the district abounds with coal, of which some mines are wrought, and there are also quarries of good free-stone. Facilities for conveyance are afforded by the Barnsley canal, the river Calder, and the North-Midland railway, which pass through the parish. There are several handsome seats, of which the principal are, Castle Grove, the residence of G. Westerman, Esq.; Belle Vue, that of Joseph Holdsworth, Esq.; and Sandall Park, of Mrs. Armytage. The village is pleasantly situated on the south side of the Vale of Calder, and on the road from Wakefield to Barnsley. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 7. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £157; impropiators, Sir William Pilkington and others. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. Richard Taylor, in 1686, bequeathed houses producing an income of £18, of which £10 are paid for teaching children, and £6 to two widows, for whom he gave houses. A school is supported by subscription. There are two other almshouses for women, founded by George Grice, and rebuilt in 1813; and Alderman Scholey, of London, who was a native of the parish, bequeathed, in 1839, £5000 for the establishment and endowment of a school, and £5000 to the poor, who attend the parish church, or Chapel-Thorpe chapel, which is in the parish. The Rev. Dr. Zouch, prebendary of Durham, was born here during the incumbency of his father.

SANDALL, KIRK or LITTLE (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster; containing 187 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1550 acres, of which the surface is varied, and the scenery enriched with wood. Streetthorpe, the seat of Mrs. Parker, is a handsome residence here, inclosed with thriving plantations; and Sandall Grove is a well-built mansion, in the occupation of William Godson, Esq. The village is pleasant, on the east bank of the river Don; and the Don canal passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Crown; net income, £393. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1806. The church is a neat structure with a tower, and contains a curious monument to the memory of John Rokeby, a native of this place, and Archbishop of Dublin, who directed his body to be buried here, and his heart and bowels at Halifax. A free school was founded in 1626, by the Rev. George Wood, who endowed it with thirty acres of land and two houses, now producing an income of £75.

SANDALL, LONG, with WHEATLEY, a township, in the parish, union, and soke of DONCASTER. W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Doncaster; containing 279 inhabitants. The township is situated upon the eastern bank of the Don, and comprises by computation 2500 acres, of which more than 200 are wood and plantation, formed about thirty years since, by the corporation of Doncaster, who are lords of the manor, and have expended considerable sums on the inclosure and improvement of the lands.

SANDBACH (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, partly in the union of NORTHWICH and hundred of NANTWICH, but chiefly in the union of CONGLETON and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 9299 inhabitants, of whom 4587 are in the township of Sandbach, 26 miles (E. by S.) from Chester, and 162 (N. W.) from London. The town occupies a pleasant eminence near the small river Wheelock, which falls into the Dane, and in the midst of a fertile tract commanding, from certain points, extensive views of a rich landscape embracing the Vale Royal, the hills of Staffordshire and Derbyshire, and the distant mountains of Wales. The worsted trade once prevailed, but has been superseded by the throwing and manufacture of silk, by which the place has considerably advanced in importance and prosperity within the last thirty years: the malt trade, which was formerly carried on, has also declined. Here are some brine-springs. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the parish, and also the Manchester and Birmingham railway, in its course to join the Grand Junction line at Crewe. A market obtained in the seventeenth century is held on Thursday; and fairs occur on Easter Tuesday and Wednesday, the first Thursday after September 11th, and a statute and pleasure fair on December 27th, for cattle and for wearing apparel. In the market-place are some ancient crosses, which were repaired in 1816. A court is held occasionally by the lord of the manor; and two constables are appointed at the petty-sessions of the county magistrates.

The parish comprises the chapelries of Church-Hulme, and Goostrey with Barnshaw, and the townships of Arclid, Betchton, Blackden, Bradwall, Cotton, Cranage, Hassall, Leese, Sandbach, Twemlow, and Wheelock; and contains by measurement 15,777 acres, of which about one-fifth part is in tillage, one-tenth is wood, and the remainder pasture and meadow. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1000; patron and incumbent, the Rev. John Armistead; impropiator, Lord Crewe. The church is principally in the later English style. At Church-Hulme is a chapel, an old fabric, with a Norman steeple, and a nave of brick: the chapel at Goostrey was rebuilt about 40 years since; and an additional church has been erected at Wheelock, about a mile from the parochial edifice. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. Some benefactions have been made at different periods for instruction, the principal of which are, a school-house, erected in 1694, at the expense of Francis Wells; and a bequest of £200, for teaching three boys, and preparing them for the University. There are also some very extensive charities originating in benefactions to the amount of £420, laid out in 1790, in the purchase of land in the neighbourhood of Burslem, under which some valuable strata of coal have been discovered, and which produces about £1200 per annum.

SANDERINGHAM (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Castle-Rising; containing 53 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1172*a. 1r. 23p.*, of which 413 acres are arable, 174 meadow and pasture, 71 woodland, and 490 heath and rabbit-warren; the surface is varied, and the scenery enriched with wood. The Hall, the seat of John Motteux, Esq., lord of the manor, is a neat mansion. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Babingley annexed, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of Mr. Motteux: the tithes have been commuted for £90, and the glebe comprises 15 acres, with a handsome house erected by the Rev. J. B. Muxon. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later English styles, and contains in the windows some remains of stained glass.

SANDERSTEAD (All Saints), a parish, in the union of CROYDON, First division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Croydon; containing 264 inhabitants. This was the seat of a collegiate establishment founded by Reginald, Lord Cobham, in the reign of Henry VI., and the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £79. 15. 10. The parish is pleasantly situated, and intersected by the London and Brighton railway, and comprises by measurement 2195 acres, of which 310 are meadow and pasture, 270 woodland, and the remainder arable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £352; patron, A. D. Wigsell, Esq. The church is an ancient edifice, with a low tower surmounted by a spire, and contains some interesting details; the chancel was nearly rebuilt in 1832, at the expense of the Rev. J. Courtney, and there are numerous monuments. A parochial school is supported by subscription. Purley House, here, was the residence of John Horne Tooke, author of the treatise on English Grammar called from that circumstance The Diversions of Purley.

SANDFIELD, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 15 inhabitants.

SANDFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of St. Helen's, ABINGDON, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Abingdon; containing 123 inhabitants, and comprising 720*a. 3r. 3p.*

SANDFORD, with WOODLEY, a liberty, in the parish and hundred of SONNING, union of WOKINGHAM, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Reading; containing 823 inhabitants.

SANDFORD (St. Swithin), a parish, in the union and hundred of CREDITON, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Crediton; containing 1998 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded by the small river Creedy, comprises 6605 acres, whereof 422 are common or waste land; the surface is varied, and there are some quarries of stone of good quality for building. The village is situated on the road from Exeter to South Molton; and a fair for bullocks and sheep is held in it on the Monday after St. Swithin's-day. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £205; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Governors of the Crediton Charity, whose tithes have been commuted for £1150. The church, formerly a chapel of ease to that of Crediton, is a neat structure in the early English style, with a low square tower. Sir H. P. Davie, Bart., in 1825, erected a national school, which was incorporated with a school that had been founded in 1677 by Sir John Davie, and endowed by him with a rent-charge of £16; and there are also two other charity schools, with small endowments by the Rev. Robert Ham and Mary Lock.

SANDFORD (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of BULLINGDON, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Oxford; containing 304 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the east bank of the river Isis, and on the road from Oxford, through Henley, to London, and is a favourite place of resort for aquatic excursions of the collegians. On the Isis is a paper-mill, affording employment to fifteen men and thirty women. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Marlborough, with a net income of £15. The church was built in the twelfth century, and is in various styles, with a circular font at the west end. Some years since a stone was dug up, which had been used as a common flag-stone; on the reverse was found a very rich carving, representing the Assumption, surrounded by a wreath of angels; it is now erected over the north end of the chancel, near the altar. There was anciently a preceptory of Knights Templars, the brethren of which had the management of most of the estates belonging to that order in the neighbouring counties.

SANDFORD (St. Martin), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Neat-Enstone; containing 515 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1850 acres, of which the surface is diversified with hills of no great elevation, and the soil is a strong clay, alternated with sand. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 5.; net income, £180; joint patrons, the Duke of Marlborough and the Rev. Edward Marshall; impropiators, various proprietors of land. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1767. Some children are educated for a bequest of six guineas a year.

SANDFORD, a township, in the parish of PREES, union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Wem; containing 76 inhabitants.

SANDFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of WARCOP, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Brough. There are several ancient intrenchments and tumuli in the vicinity, the largest of the latter of which was opened in 1766, and found to contain calcined human bones and some military weapons. Near them was formerly a circle of stones, about 50 yards in diameter.

SANDFORD-ORCAS (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of SHERBORNE, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Sherborne; containing 370 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1100 acres of land in the south-eastern part of the county, on the border of Dorsetshire. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. $9\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of John Hutchins, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £260, and the glebe comprises 45 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SANDGATE, a chapelry, partly within the liberty of the town of FOLKESTONE, and partly in the parish of CHERITON, union of ELHAM, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (W. by S.) from Folkestone, and 8 miles (W. S. W.) from Dover; containing 979 inhabitants. The name of the village is derived from its situation in one of those openings from the sea between the hills formerly called gates, and the sandy nature of the soil on which it stands: it emerged from obscurity about 60 years since, when two yards were established for ship-building, and six 28-gun frigates were built, of about 800 tons each. A castle similar to those at Deal and Walmer, was erected by Henry VIII., in 1539, on the site, it is supposed, of a more ancient one which stood here in the reign of Richard II.; it was formerly an object of much curiosity, but has undergone considerable alterations of late years, the large circular tower, forming the centre, having been converted into a martello tower. During the late war with France there was a summer camp on Shorncliff, a hill at the north side of the village; where, also, some extensive barracks were erected about 40 years since. At the bottom of the hill commences the New Military canal, cut in a zigzag line along the coast, and, following the course of the hills for 23 miles, terminating at Cliff End, in Sussex. The situation of the village on the shore, with hills rising immediately behind, is in the highest degree salubrious and pleasant; it consists principally of irregularly-built houses, forming one long street, and possesses machines and every requisite for hot and cold bathing, with a circulating library and reading-rooms. It is rising into estimation as a watering-place; there are some elegant villas, and the South-Eastern railway passes within a short distance. A fair for toys is held on July 23rd. The fourth Earl of Darnley, in 1822, erected a neat cruciform chapel, which was enlarged after his decease, by subscription, aided by a grant of £200 from the Incorporated Society: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £192; patron, Hon. J. D. Bligh. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. On the summit of a hill in the neighbourhood is an ancient camp of elliptic shape, comprising nearly two acres, the formation of which is attributed to King Ethelbert.

SANDHOE, a township, in the parish of St. JOHN LEE, union of HEXHAM, S. division of TINDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Hexham; containing 273 inhabitants. The township contains some fine mansions, commanding prospects of a richly-diversified country; and the village is pleasantly situated about two miles north-west of Corbridge. Near the gardens of Beaufront is a Roman Catholic chapel, now in disuse. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £95. A small school is partly supported by two gentlemen.

SANDHOLME, with HIVE and OWSTROP, a hamlet, in the township of GILBERDIKE, parish of EASTRINGTON, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK; containing 278 inhabitants, of whom 151 are in Sandholme. The village is situated about half a mile north of Gilberdike, and about a mile and a half east of Eastrington.

SANDHOLME, with STORKHILL, a township, in the parish of St. JOHN, union, and liberties of the borough, of BEVERLEY, E. riding of YORK; containing 61 inhabitants. This place, which adjoins Hull-Bridge, comprises about 300 acres. There is a meeting-house for Wesleyans.

SANDHURST (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of EASTHAMPSTEAD, hundred of SONNING, county of BERKS, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Wokingham; containing 562 inhabitants. It comprises 4413a. 30p., of which 1812 acres are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £72; patron and appropriator, the Dean of Salisbury, whose tithes have been commuted for £150, and who has a glebe of $39\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There is a national school. In this parish is the Royal Military College for the scientific instruction of cadets intended for the army, and of officers already possessing military commissions. The two branches of this national institution were first temporarily placed at High Wycombe in 1799, and transferred to Great Marlow in 1802, by their founder, the late Duke of York, on a plan furnished by Major-General J. G. Le Marchant, who fell gallantly fighting at the battle of Salamanca. In 1812, the establishment was removed to the present magnificent structure, which had been erected at the national expense, and where, since the year 1820, both divisions of the institution have been concentrated. The senior department is a school for the staff, where officers of all ranks already in the service are admitted to study; and the junior branch is appropriated to the professional education of young gentlemen intended for the cavalry and infantry. Since its foundation the college has afforded instruction to above 3000 young men for the service, besides qualifying above 450 other officers for the staff. It is controlled by a board of commissioners under the presidency of the commander in chief, consisting of the secretary-at-war, the master-general of the ordnance, and the principal general officers on the home staff of the army; but the immediate government is vested in a general, a colonel as lieutenant-governor, and other officers. The college stands in the midst of extensive and picturesque grounds, with a fine sheet of water in front, and surrounded by many thriving and beautiful plantations. The edifice, which has a fine Doric portico of eight columns, is of a simple but majestic character, calculated for the reception of 400 gentlemen cadets, and 30 students of the senior department; the length of the main building is 434 feet, and that of the whole principal façade not less than 900. The house of the governor stands detached in its own grounds; that of the lieutenant-governor closes the western extremity of the front range; and the quarters of the officers of the establishment form, with the main building, a square in its rear; while the masters' houses, at the distance of about a quarter of a mile in front, are built on a terrace overlooking the high western road. A well-situated observatory, and a spacious riding-house, 110 feet by 50, are detached; and the principal edifice, besides the halls of study, dining-halls, dormitories, and servants' offices, contains a handsome octagonal room, in which the public examinations are held, and a very neat and chastely decorated chapel.

SANDHURST (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S BARTON, union, and E. division of the county, of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Gloucester; containing 540 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the eastern bank of the Severn, between that river and the road from Gloucester to Tewkesbury, and comprises 2227*a. 1r. 1p.* The living is a discharged vicarage; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The great tithes have been commuted for £480, and the vicarial for £205; the glebe comprises 12 acres of land, with a house.

SANDHURST (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CRANBROOKE, hundred of SELBRITTENDEN, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Tenterden; containing 1402 inhabitants. The river Rother separates this extensive parish from the county of Sussex. A fair for cattle and pedlery is held on May 25th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the tithes have been commuted for £880, and the glebe comprises 9 acres. The church is principally in the later English style. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a national school, and two other schools, partly supported by subscription.

SAND-HUTTON.—See HUTTON, SAND.

SANDIACRE (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 9½ miles (E.) from Derby; containing 996 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Erewash, and on the road from Derby to Nottingham, and comprises about 1100 acres, chiefly arable and pasture, with a very small portion of woodland. The village is in a valley, nearly surrounded with hills; and the inhabitants are partly employed in a starch manufactory, and in the manufacture of lace by power-looms. The Erewash and Derby canal, communicating with the Grand Junction, passes through the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Sandiacre in the Cathedral of Lichfield, the appropriator; net income, £120. The church, which is noticed in the Domesday survey, and is of very great antiquity, the more ancient portion being probably Saxon, exhibits an admixture of various styles, though the decorated predominates: it is on an eminence, and forms a conspicuous feature in the landscape. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SANDON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Danbury; containing 531 inhabitants. This place, shortly after the Conquest, belonged to the descendants of Hardwin de Scales, a Norman warrior; and among subsequent owners, occur the families of de Valence and Beauchamp. The lands afterwards passed to the crown, and in the time of Henry VIII. were given to Cardinal Wolsey; on his fall, they reverted to the crown, and they have since been possessed by various families, including those of Goodey, Everard, Maynard, Abdy, Wiseman, and Collins. The parish of Sandon, which is partly skirted by the Chelmer and Blackwater navigation, takes its name from the sandy quality of the elevated ground on which it is partly situated; it comprises by computation 1943 acres, of which the soil in the lower parts is chiefly a stiff wet loam, on a substratum of clay. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 8., and in the gift of Queen's College, Cambridge, with a net income of £607: the church is a small edifice with a tower, and near it is the rectory-house, a neat residence. A national school is supported by subscription. The learned Dr. Brian Walton, author of the Polyglot Bible, was rector.

SANDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BUNTINGFORD, hundred of ODSEY, county of HERTFORD, 4¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from Buntingford; containing 804 inhabitants. It is situated in the northern part of the county, west of the road from Buntingford to Royston. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £227; patron and appropriator, Dean of St. Paul's, London. Here is a national school.

SANDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STONE, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 4½ miles (N. N. E.) from Stafford; containing 586 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 3376 acres, of which the surface rises gradually from the north bank of the river Trent, and the scenery is beautifully diversified: stone of good quality for building is found, and in Sandon Park is an excellent quarry. The Hall, the seat of the Earl of Harrowby, who bears the inferior title of Viscount Sandon, of this place, is a handsome mansion, on the south side of which is a fine Doric pillar, 75 feet high, erected by the earl in 1806, to the memory of William Pitt; and in the grounds is an elegant structure in the later English style, with a richly-groined roof, on which are two tablets inscribed to Spencer Perceval. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the parish; and fairs, chiefly for cattle, are held on the Thursday in Easter-week, and the 14th of November. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7. 10.; patron, and owner of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, Earl of Harrowby. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £366, and the vicarial for £356; the glebe comprises 8 acres. The church, situated in the middle of the park, is an ancient and venerable structure, restored in strict harmony with its original character, and contains an elegant monument to the memory of the well-known genealogist and antiquary, Sampson Erdeswicke, the last of the Erdeswicke, formerly proprietors of the manor, who was born here, and died in 1603. There is a place of worship for Methodists. An elegant national school, erected in the park by its noble owner, is supported at the sole expense of the earl and countess; and there is a society for clothing the poor, among whom garments of the value of £100 are annually distributed. In a meadow near the boundary of the Sandon estate, is a petrifying spring.

SANDON-FEE, a tything, in the parish and union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 1¾ mile (S. W. by S.) from Hungerford; containing 718 inhabitants, and comprising an area of 1261*a. 3r.*

SANDRIDGE (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of St. ALBAN's, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN's, county of HERTFORD, 2¾ miles (N. E.) from St. Alban's; containing 851 inhabitants. The parish is tolerably extensive, stretching in a north-easterly direction from the town of St. Alban's for about five miles and a half. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £200; patron and impropriator, Earl Spencer.

SANDWICH, a cinqueport, borough, and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, in the union, and locally in the hundred, of EASTRY, lath of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 39 miles (E.) from Maidstone, and 68 (E. by S.) from London; containing 2913 inhabitants. This place, which appears to have risen into reputation upon the decline of the Portus Rutupensis, derived its Saxon name Sondwic, signifying "a town on the sands," from its situation on a point of land which had been gained from the sea, on its retiring from that ancient port. It is by most antiquaries supposed to have been also the Lunden-wic, noticed in the Saxon Chronicle as the principal resort for merchants trading with the port of London, and to have been at a very early period of considerable importance. In 851, Athelstan defeated a large party of the Danes, who had landed on this part of the coast, and destroyed nine of their ships; soon after which an army of those invaders landed from 350 ships, and plundered this place and Canterbury; and in 993, Anlaf, another Danish chieftain, arrived with a fleet of 90 sail, and laid waste the town. In 1011, a Danish fleet having landed here, ravaged the coast of Kent and Sussex, besieged Canterbury, massacred the inhabitants, and set fire to that city. In 1014, Canute, on leaving England, touched at Sandwich, and sent on shore his English hostages, whom he had barbarously mutilated: after being established on the throne of England, he granted the port, and all its revenues, to Christ Church, Canterbury, for the support of the monks, and partly rebuilt the town. From this period the place began to flourish, and subsequently attained such eminence as to be made one of the principal cinque-ports of the kingdom by Edward the Confessor, who resided here for some time, and, in 1052, fitted out a fleet to oppose Earl Godwin and his sons, who in the same year entered this harbour, whence they sailed for London.

In the Norman survey Sandwich is described as a borough, held by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and as a fort rendering to the king the same services as Dover, yielding then a rent of £50, and 40,000 herrings for the monks' food. In the reign of Henry III., the French having effected a landing, burnt the town, which, from the opulence of the inhabitants, was soon rebuilt in a more substantial manner, and obtained from that monarch the grant of a weekly market and other privileges. Edward I. fixed the staple of wool here for a short time; and in the same reign, the monks of Canterbury, in exchange for other lands in Kent, surrendered to the king all their rights and customs in the town, with the exception only of their houses and quays, a free passage across the ferry, and the privilege of buying and selling in the market free of toll, which reservations were afterwards abandoned in exchange for lands in Essex, in the reign of Edward III. At this time Sandwich contributed to the armament destined for the invasion of France 22 ships and 504 mariners, and was the general place of rendezvous for the fleets of Edward, who usually embarked here on his several expeditions against that country. Richard II., in the seventh year of his reign, issued an order for inclosing and fortifying the town, which, from its naval importance, had become a principal object of attack with the French, who, preparing to invade England, had constructed a wall of wood, 3000 paces in length and 20 feet in height, with towers at short intervals, to protect their troops from the English archers, which it was their intention to fix upon the coast after they had effected a landing; parts of this wall, being found on board of two large ships which were taken in the following year, were used in strengthening the fortifications of the town. In 1416, Henry V., while waiting to embark for Calais, took up his residence in the monastery of the Carmelite friars. In the 16th and 35th of Henry VI., the French plundered the greater part of the town, which, however, in the reign of Edward IV., was in a very prosperous state, its trade having greatly increased. In 1456, the French made another attempt on the place; and in the following year, Marshal de Brèze landed a force of 5000 men, and, after a sanguinary battle, succeeded in obtaining possession of the town, which they plundered, and, after setting it on fire, returned to their ships and escaped: it was soon afterwards pillaged by the Earl of Warwick, in his insurrection against the king. To guard against similar assaults, Edward IV. fortified the town with a wall strengthened with bastions, and surrounded it with a fosse, appropriating £100 per annum of the custom-house dues towards its restoration, which, together with the advantages of its haven, soon enabled it to regain its former prosperity; and its trade so much increased, that the net amount of the customs was £16,000 per annum, and there were 95 vessels belonging to the port.

The harbour soon after this began to decay, from the quantity of light sand which was washed into it by the sea; and this detriment was further increased by the sinking of a large vessel at its mouth. In 1493, a mole was constructed; and many attempts were made, during the time of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, to remove the obstructions and improve the harbour, but they were not attended with success, and so much had the trade declined in consequence, that in the 8th year of the latter reign only sixty-two seamen belonged to the port. The persecutions on account of religious tenets in the Netherlands drove away many artisans, who, with their families, sought an asylum in England; and Elizabeth encouraged the refugees, of whom not less than 400 were settled here, by letters-patent, dated at Greenwich, in 1561, to whom she granted two weekly markets for the sale of their manufactures. They introduced the weaving of silk, and the manufacture of baizes and flannels, bringing them in a short time to a great degree of perfection; and, by their industry and good conduct, they soon became a flourishing and opulent community. Among them were some gardeners, who, finding the ground favourable for the production of esculent plants, employed themselves in their cultivation, to the great benefit of the landholders, and also introduced the cultivation of flax, teasel, and canary-seed, which, shortly after their introduction, were propagated with success in every part of the Isle of Thanet. Elizabeth paid a visit to the town, in 1573, and was hospitably entertained by the corporation for three days; and, in 1670, Queen Catherine, with a large retinue, was entertained by the mayor. In the reign of James I., the trade of the port had revived in some degree, and the amount of the customs was £3000 per annum; the descendants of the Flemish refugees had laid aside their original employment, and were intermingled with the rest of the inhabitants in the general occupations of the town.

The town is situated on the navigable river Stour, about two miles from its influx into the sea, near the commencement of the Roman Watling-street, and is surrounded on all sides by a considerable extent of low ground. The houses, many of which are of very ancient appearance, are irregularly built, and the streets are narrow, though some improvements have been effected under the provisions of an act passed in 1787; it has been recently lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. Considerable portions of the walls are still remaining, and till the year 1784, five of the ancient gates were entire, but the only one now standing is Fisher's gate, a plain structure, facing the quay. The foreign trade is principally with Norway, Sweden, and the Baltic, for timber and iron; and the home trade with London, Wales, Scotland, and the north, to which parts corn, coal, flour, seeds, hops, malt, fruit, &c., are shipped. There are several large establishments of fell-mongery and wool-stapling, extensive breweries, malt-houses, and tan-yards; and the manufacture of coarse towelling and sackcloth is also pursued. The importance of forming a great harbour at this place has at various periods attracted the attention of government, but this important national and local object has not been carried into effect, and the harbour is at present so choked up with sand that only vessels of very small burthen can enter it with safety. The market-day is Wednesday, for corn, with which it is abundantly supplied; a large cattle-market is held every alternate Monday, and a fair takes place on December 4th, which generally continues a week.

By a succession of charters conferred by succeeding monarchs, of which the last was granted by Charles II., in the 36th year of his reign, plans were laid down for the government of the town; but since the passing of the Municipal act, the corporation has consisted of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, and the number of magistrates is eight. Among the privileges possessed by Sandwich, as a cinque-port, is that of sending three barons to assist in supporting the canopy over the king at coronations; and when a queen consort is crowned, six are present, who enjoy the favour of dining at the feast, at a table placed on the right of their Majesties. The borough first exercised the elective franchise in the 42nd of Edward III., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament, who are styled barons: in 1832, the right of election was extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, including Deal and Walmer, comprising by estimation an area of 2867 acres; the mayor is returning officer. The old corporation had the power of inflicting capital punishment, which formerly was by drowning, and a document of the date of 1315 is extant, in which a complaint is preferred against the prior of Christ-Church, "for that he had diverted the course of a certain stream called the Gestling, so that the felons could not be executed for want of water." The recorder holds quarterly courts of session for the trial of all offences within the town and liberties, extending to the town of Ramsgate, the ville of Sarr, and the parish of Walmer; and he also presides at a court of record every three weeks, for debts to any amount. A court of requests, for debts not exceeding £5, is held every second Tuesday in the month by commissioners. The guildhall, usually called the court-hall, was erected in 1579, and contains, on the basement story, the several rooms for holding the courts, and on the first story, the council-chamber, and offices in which the public business of the corporation and liberties is transacted; in the upper story are kept the ancient cucking-stool and wooden mortar, for the punishment of scolds, and arms for the train bands. The old borough gaol and house of correction, a small and inconvenient building, having been found inadequate for the classification of prisoners, a larger and more appropriate edifice was erected in 1831, at an expense of £6000.

The town comprises the parishes of St. Clement, containing 879 inhabitants, St. Mary the Virgin with 886, and St. Peter the Apostle with 1094, and the extra-parochial liberty of the hospital of St. Bartholomew, containing 54. The living of St. Clement's is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £13. 16. 10½.; net income, £310; patron, the Archdeacon of Canterbury. The church is an ancient and spacious structure, combining various styles, with a massive central tower of Norman character, enriched with several series of arches of very fine composition; the interior has portions in the early and later English styles, and contains some monuments, and an octagonal font. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged vicarage, also endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued at £8. 1.; net income, £117; patron, the Archdeacon. The church, an ancient building, consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, in which are some interesting remains of the early style. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, valued at £8, and in the alternate patronage of the Crown and the Corporation; net income, £144. The south aisle of the church was destroyed by the fall of the steeple in 1661, but the latter was rebuilt with the materials of the former as high as the nave, and finished with bricks made from the mud in the harbour. There was once a chapel dedicated to St. James, the cemetery of which is still used.

The Calvinists, Independents, and Wesleyans have places of worship. The free grammar school was established by subscription, in the reign of Elizabeth, and, in 1563, endowed with lands by Sir Roger Manwood, then recorder of the borough; the revenue is about £43. 16. per annum. Mrs. Joan Trapps, of London, in 1568, founded four scholarships in Lincoln College, Oxford, of which two are in the appointment of the governors of this school, and two in that of the college; and Sir Roger Manwood, in 1581, founded four in Caius College, Cambridge, in the alternate nomination of the governors and the college. A charity school established in 1711, and principally supported by subscription, has rents amounting to £25, besides some bequests. St. Thomas' Hospital was instituted about the year 1392, by Thomas Ellis, a wealthy draper of the town, who endowed it for eight aged men and four women, each of whom receives £25 per annum. St. Bartholomew's was founded prior to 1244, when Sir Henry de Sandwich made a considerable addition to its original endowment; the gross annual income is £766, and the buildings occupy a spacious triangular area, and include a small neat chapel. St. John's Hospital, supposed to have been erected about the year 1287, has been taken down, and six small houses have been erected on its site, for the reception of six aged men and women; the gross income is £139. 10. Sir John Manwood, chief baron of the exchequer, and author of the Forest Laws; and Richard Knolles, master of the grammar school, and author of the History of the Turkish Empire, were natives of the place. Sandwich gives the title of Earl to the family of Montagu.

SANDWICH, a township, in the parish of St. BEES, union of WHITEHAVEN, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Whitehaven; containing 316 inhabitants. It extends to St. Bees' Head, where is a lighthouse; and upon the adjacent cliffs grow an abundance of samphire. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £255. 10., and the appropriate for £5, which latter sum is divided in equal portions between the perpetual curates of St. Nicholas', St. James', and Trinity chapels, Whitehaven. Here is a national school.

SANDY (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, partly in the hundred of WIXAMTREE, but chiefly in that of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Biggleswade; containing, with the hamlet of Girtford, and part of Beeston, 1906 inhabitants, of whom 921 are in the township of Sandy. The parish is situated on the river Ivel, and comprises 4026 acres, of which 1838 are arable; the soil is various, and, from its sandy nature, cucumbers are cultivated in the open air in such abundance that Covent-Garden market, London, is almost wholly supplied with that vegetable from this place; carrots and other vegetables are also grown. The timber is chiefly elm and fir. The substratum contains a curious coarse sandstone, resembling in some degree a conglomerate, and containing a considerable portion of iron and fossil wood, with small pebbles, in which yellow quartz predominates, some of which is beautifully transparent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 2. 11.; net income, £769; patron, F. Pym, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments, under acts of inclosure, in 1789 and 1798; the glebe comprises 323 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style. Two national schools are supported by subscription. Galley hill, here, is the site of the Roman station Salina, which commanded another at Chesterfield, a piece of ground still so called near the village, through which passed the great road from Baldock, Herts, across this county, into Cambridgeshire. The ramparts, which inclose an area of 30 acres, are surrounded by a deep fosse, and in the centre is a mount, probably thrown up for the prætorium. At some distance, on the other side of the valley, are the remains of Cæsar's camp. Several Roman urns, coins, and fragments of beautiful red pottery, have been discovered at Chesterfield; and the latter, which was ornamented with figures, has been deemed the ancient Samian ware.

SANDYFORD, or SANDYFORD-STONE, a suburb and hamlet, comprising 30 acres of land, within the borough of NEWCASTLE, locally in the county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile from Newcastle. This place is bounded by the Ouse burn on the east, and is the property of Ralph Naters, Esq., who has a large mansion here, commanding a good view of the Ouse burn viaduct of the Newcastle and North Shields railway. There is an excellent brewery, also the property of Mr. Naters.

SANKEY, GREAT, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESCOT, union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Warrington; containing 567 inhabitants. The first canal navigation in modern times originated here, in 1755. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £103; patron, Lord Lilford; impropriators, Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge, whose tithes have been commuted for £130, those of the rector of Warrington for £65, and those of the vicar of the parish for £75. The chapel was built by subscription about a century since.

SANTON, a township, in the parish of IRTON, union of BOOTLE, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Raven-glass; containing 173 inhabitants. This place is supposed to derive its name from the drifting sands which abounded in the vicinity and laid waste most of the adjoining district. A Roman pottery was discovered in these sands, with numerous fragments of urns, and at the bottom of one of the furnaces a large cross of brass, on which probably the urns were placed for baking or drying them. Several Roman coins have also been found; and opposite to the village are the remains of a Roman road, on the east of which are the foundations of an Augustine priory, said to have been established by King Stephen, but of which nothing further has been recorded.

SANTON (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Thetford; containing 27 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the Lesser Ouse, separating it from the county of Suffolk, and contains 1500 acres, of which 800 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged rectory, in the patronage of the Mayor and Corporation of Thetford: the tithes have been commuted for £80. The church is a small ancient structure.

SANTON-DOWNHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of LACKFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Brandon Ferry; containing 68 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the navigable river Ouse, which separates it from the county of Norfolk; it suffered greatly in the 17th century by the sands, which overspread a considerable portion of the soil. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £59; patron, Lord William Poulett. The church, which is situated in the demesne of Downham Hall, is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and southern porch of Norman character; the chancel is divided from the nave by an oak screen finely carved, and there are monuments to Earl Cadogan and his son Lieut.-Col. Cadogan.

SAPCOTE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Hinckley; containing 773 inhabitants. This place was formerly the property of the family of Bassett, whose mansion was built on the site of an ancient castle, of which the only remaining vestige is the moat that surrounded the eminence whereon it stood. The parish comprises 1465*a. 2r. 18p.*; the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by the river Soar; the soil is chiefly adapted for dairy-farms, and cheese of fine quality is made in large quantities. A spring of water called Golden Well, has been found efficacious; and, in 1806, baths were erected at an expense of £600, by J. F. Turner, Esq. About 200 frames are employed in the manufacture of hosiery. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £485; patron, Mr. Turner. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778; the glebe comprises 270 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A house of industry, and a common mill for grinding corn, were built by subscription, in 1806, the expense of each amounting to £1300. A school was endowed by the Rev. Mr. Burroughs, formerly rector, and is further supported by Mr. Turner; and there are various bequests for distribution among the poor. In a field called Black Piece, a curious tessellated pavement was discovered in 1770.

SAPEY-PRITCHARD (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bromyard; containing 252 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the border of Herefordshire, and consists of 1606 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Francis Rufford, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £228. 10., and there are 67 acres of glebe.

SAPEY, UPPER (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Bromyard; containing 338 inhabitants, and consisting of 2161 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Sir T. F. Winnington, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £287. 10., and the glebe comprises 41 acres. A school is endowed with £10 per annum. In the neighbourhood are the remains of a single intrenched Roman camp.

SAPISTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ixworth; containing 255 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Thet, and comprises by measurement 1195 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron, Duke of Grafton. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains some remains of Norman architecture.

SAPLEY, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 2 miles (E.) from Huntingdon; containing 8 inhabitants.

SAPPERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of CHURCH-BROUGHTON, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 12 miles (W.) from Derby; containing 83 inhabitants.

SAPPERTON (ST. KENELM), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; comprising 3710 acres, and containing, with Frampton tything, 585 inhabitants, of whom 315 are in the tything of Sapperton, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Cirencester. The Thames and Severn canal, in its course through the parish, is conducted by a tunnel 4180 feet long, underneath Hagley wood. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £367; patron, Earl Bathurst. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778. Two schools are supported by endowment. At Frampton, two urns filled with denarii and copper coins were discovered in 1759, by a waggon passing over and breaking them; and near the same spot are vestiges of an ancient camp, and south-east of it was a beacon. Sir Robert Atkyns, lord chief baron of the exchequer in the reign of William III., was born here in 1621, and died here in 1709.

SAPPERTON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Grantham; containing 62 inhabitants. It comprises about 700 acres, the property of Sir W. E. Welby, Bart., lord of the manor: the village is situated on a bold eminence. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £190; patron, Sir W. E. Welby: the tithes were commuted for land and a money-payment in 1780. The church is a small edifice, formerly much larger than it is at present, the north aisle having been taken down.

SAREDON, GREAT and LITTLE, a township, in the parish of SHARESHILL, union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Wolverhampton; containing 289 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1113 acres, of which two-thirds are arable land, of a gravelly soil.

SARISBURY, a chapelry, in the parish of TITCHFIELD, union of FAREHAM, hundred of TITCHFIELD, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 1063 inhabitants.

SARK, or SERK, a small island about 6 miles eastward of Guernsey, upon which it is dependent, and within the jurisdiction of which it is situated; containing 785 inhabitants. This district, which is supposed to be mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus under the name Sarnica, was early noted for the convent of St. Maglorius, a British Christian, who, fleeing with many others from the persecutions of the Pagan Saxons into Armorica, was made Bishop of Dol, and first planted Christianity in these parts, about the year 565. Queen Elizabeth granted the island in fee-farm, by letters-patent under the great seal, dated in 1565, to Hilary de Carteret, Esq., by the twentieth part of a knight's fee. The surface of Sark is a table land, rising a little towards the west, but nowhere having a declivity to the sea, except a trifling descent at the northern extremity. At one part called the Couplé, it is nearly divided into two portions, connected only by a high and narrow ridge not many yards wide. The surrounding cliffs, from 200 to 300 feet in height, are so very abrupt on the western side, that the largest ship may approach very near them without danger; but the eastern shore is beset with rocks running far out into the sea. The rocky scenery is very grand and picturesque; and that of the Port du Moulin in particular, the descent to which is through a narrow pass, is uncommonly wild and romantic. Such is the natural strength of the island, that although there are five landing-places, yet, except at what is called the Creux, where a tunnel was cut through the rock in 1588, by one of the De Carterets, scarcely any entrance is to be found without the difficulty of climbing. The high ridge, or isthmus, which joins the main island to the smaller portion of it called Petit Sark, is about 100 yards long, with a precipice immediately overhanging the sea on the eastern side; the passage on the western being in some places only three or four feet wide, and over broken rocks of terrific aspect. To the south of Petit Sark is an isolated rock called Etat, much resembling in shape the Mew-stone at Plymouth; and on the coast is a funnel, 200 feet deep, and 100 feet in diameter at the surface, named Creux Terrible, similar in appearance to the Buller of Buchan, or Tol Pedn, Penwith, and near which is a spring of water, whereof the specific gravity is one-eighth less than that of any other water found in the island. There are also numerous picturesque caverns excavated in the cliffs along the seashore. The air is remarkably salubrious; and the soil, which is extremely fertile, affords every necessary article of produce for the inhabitants, particularly apples, from which excellent cider is made; also turnips, parsnips, potatoes, and other vegetables, together with most kinds of grain. The only branch of manufacture is the knitting of stockings, gloves, and waistcoats called Guernsey jackets, which are exported to Bristol and some other western ports of England, and various articles of domestic consumption brought back in return. In 1835, a mine was opened, containing copper, lead, and silver ore, and has since that period been wrought at a cost of more than £30,000, but the returns are very small, and scarcely remunerate the trouble and expense of the adventurers. A feudal court is held three times in the year, for the purpose of enacting by-laws for regulating the affairs of the island, which are in force when carried by a majority of the 40 tenants, and confirmed by the consent of the seignor. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected in 1820, and consecrated by the Bishop of Winchester in 1829. The monastery founded by St. Maglorius, was existing in the reign of Edward III., but it long since went to decay. In 1719, an earthen pot, bound with an iron hoop, was discovered, containing eighteen Gallic coins of silver gilt.

SARNESFIELD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WEOBLEY, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HERE-

FORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Weobley; containing 108 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1186 acres, of which the substratum contains stone quarried for the roads. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £203; patron, Thomas Monnington, Esq.: the glebe comprises 46 acres, with a house. The church is a small ancient structure.

SARR, a ville, in the union of the ISLE of THANET, cinque-port liberty of SANDWICH, locally in the hundred of RINGSLOW, or ISLE of THANET, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Canterbury; containing 215 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from an ancient ford at low water, leading from the Isle of Thanet to the main land, and, previously to the arrival of the Saxons, forming a communication with Chislet on the opposite bank, was formerly a separate parish, in old documents designated St. Giles at Serre, but is now united with St. Nicholas, Sandwich. It is situated on the road from Canterbury to Ramsgate and Margate, and once carried on a considerable trade; but on the failure of the river Wantsune, it declined, and the inhabitants removing to other places, the church fell into decay. In Archbishop Parker's visitation, in 1561, the living is returned as "Vicaria Sarre Dissoluta."

SARRATT (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of WATFORD, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Rickmansworth; containing 542 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1250 acres, of which 50 are common or waste land; the surface is hilly, and the soil chiefly gravelly. The village is situated on a ridge of land forming the western boundary of a vale watered by a small river, commonly called the Sarratt stream. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of J. A. Gordon, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe comprises 50 acres. The church, a cruciform structure having a square tower, is built with a mixture of brick, stone, and flints, and contains a piscina beneath an embattled cornice ornamented with roses, and two stone seats. Three schools are chiefly supported by private charity. John Baldwin, in 1700, founded six almshouses; and Henry Day, in 1816, two others, which are occupied by poor families, who receive clothing from a bequest of £500 by Ralph Day, in 1828.

SARSDEN, a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 179 inhabitants. It is said to have been the scene of a battle in 1016, in which Canute was defeated by Edmund Ironside. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £262; patron, J. H. Langston, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1787. Ann Walker, in 1705, gave £600, now producing an income of £52. 10., for which twenty-four girls are educated.

SARSON, a tything, in the parish of AMPORT, union and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 118 inhabitants.

SARUM, OLD, formerly a representative borough, in the parish of STRATFORD-UNDER-THE-CASTLE, union of ALDERBURY, hundred of UNDERDITCH, S. division of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Salisbury; containing 7 inhabitants. This place was originally a British settlement of some importance prior to the time of the Romans, who, on their establishment in the island, fixed here their station Sorbiodunum, situated on the Via Iceniana, or Ikeneld-street. By the Saxons, who, under their leader Kenric, son of Cerdic, second king of Wessex, took the town from the Britons in 552, it was called Searesbyrig, from the dryness of its situation; and it was a residence of the West Saxon kings till the union of the heptarchal provinces under Egbert, after which time it still continued to be a royal castle. Alfred issued an order to the sheriff of Wiltshire to strengthen the place with a trench and palisades; and the present remains of the fortifications are evidently of Saxon character. In 960, Edgar convoked a wittenagemot, or great council of the state, here, the especial object of which was to deliberate upon the best mode of defending the northern counties against the incursions of the Danes, by whom this part of the kingdom was particularly infested. In 1003, Sweyn, King of Denmark, having landed on the western coast, to retaliate for the massacre of his countrymen in the reign of Ethelred, pillaged the town and burnt the castle. Soon after the Norman Conquest, pursuant to a decree of a synod held in St. Paul's Cathedral, in 1076, for removing episcopal sees from obscure villages into fortified cities, the seat of the bishopric of Wiltshire was, by Bishop Herman, transferred from Sherborne (which had fallen into decay) to this place, where he laid the foundation of a cathedral, which was finished by his successor, Bishop Osmund, in 1092.

On the completion of the Norman survey, in 1086, William summoned all the bishops, abbots, barons, and knights of the kingdom, to attend him at Sarum, and do homage for the lands which they held by feudal tenure. In 1095, or 1096, William Rufus assembled a great council here, in which William, Count of Eu, was impeached of high treason against the king, in conspiring to raise Stephen, Earl of Albemarle, to the throne. Henry I. held his court here several months during the year 1100, where he received Archbishop Anselm, on his arrival in England, whom he required to do homage and swear fealty to him, and to accept from his hands the investiture of his see. This demand gave rise to a dispute between the king and the pope, which was at length compromised, the pope allowing the prelates to do homage to the king, and reserving to himself the right of investiture, which was the first attempt to establish papal supremacy in the island. Henry I. again fixed his residence here in 1106, and in 1116 assembled the prelates and barons of the realm, to swear allegiance to his son William, as his successor on the English throne, previously to his embarkation for Normandy, on his return from which place that prince was unfortunately drowned. In the reign of Stephen, Bishop Roger held the castle for the king; and soon after the instalment of his successor, Joceline, in 1142, the partisans of the Empress Matilda took possession of the town, which, in the course of the contest, was alternately occupied by both parties. On the accession of Henry II., in 1154, the castle was found to be in a dismantled state, and a considerable sum was expended in putting it into repair.

From the time of Stephen, disputes had arisen between the castellans and the clergy, which became so violent that, in the reign of Richard I., Herbert, then bishop, induced by these annoyances, and other inconveniences attending the situation of his church, among which was the difficulty of obtaining water, which could not be accomplished, except by permission of the governor, obtained licence from the king to remove the see, and to erect a new church in the valley, at the distance of nearly two miles from the castle. This design was carried into execution by his successor, who, having obtained a special indulgence from the pope, laid the foundation of the present cathedral of Salisbury, to which place the episcopal chair was transferred. From that period the town of Old Sarum began to decay, and was gradually deserted by its inhabitants, who established themselves in the more immediate vicinity of the new church. Of the old town there is scarcely a single vestige, except a few fragments of foundation walls of some of the houses, on the declivity of an eminence rising from the western side of a valley, and forming the extremity of a ridge which extends towards the east. The vast ditches and ramparts of the ancient city, and the site of the castle, may be traced, and, as they constitute the only remains of this once flourishing city, are among the most interesting objects of antiquarian research: there were houses remaining in the time of Henry VIII., and service was performed in the old chapel of the cathedral until nearly the same period; but the place, now deemed extra-parochial, contains only one house. Old Sarum, a borough by prescription, first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., but made no other return till the 34th of Edward III., from which time it continued to send two members to parliament until the 2nd of William IV., when it was disfranchised. John of Salisbury, one of the most eminent scholars of his time, and celebrated as an historian and biographer, was born at Old Sarum, in the early part of the twelfth century.

SATCHELL, with HOUND, a tything, in the parish of HOUND, union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MAINSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 127 inhabitants.

SATLEY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Wolsingham; containing, in the ancient chapelry, 132 inhabitants. In 1221, Philip de St. Helena, rector of Lanchester, granted to this place, as a separate chapelry, a general release from all tithes and oblations within it and Butsfield, on the condition of supporting a curate, in lieu of which the proprietors of land have paid from time immemorial £1. 10. per annum. It afterwards fell from its slender endowment, into a mere chapel of ease to the parochial church; but it was again severed about 1731, on receiving an augmentation from Queen Anne's Bounty, which was expended in the purchase of Hunter's field, in the parish of Wolsingham; and a further augmentation was made from the same fund in 1768. In 1834 the Bishop of Durham annexed to it the townships of Butsfield, Cornsay, and Hedley Hope, together with the whole of some out-allotments lying within the district and belonging to other places. The ancient chapelry, situated on the road from Wolsingham to Lanchester, comprises 902 acres of land: the village, which is small and straggling, stretches along a narrow vale. In Butsfield township is Broomshields, the seat of John Greenwell, Esq., skirted with plantations. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Bishop, with an income of £210, and a commodious glebe-house, built in 1834 by the Rev. Joseph Thompson, incumbent: the chapel, seated on a hill to the north of the village, is a modern edifice with Elizabethan windows, rebuilt about 50 years since, and to which a square tower and a gallery were added in 1829. A parochial school was built by subscription in 1816.—See BUTSFIELD, &c.

SATTERLEIGH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from South Molton; containing 61 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 0. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of James Gould, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £67, and the glebe comprises 28 acres.

SATTERTHWAITE, a chapelry, in the parish of HAWKSHEAD, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Hawkshead; containing 420 inhabitants. This place is overspread with coppice wood, from the abundance of which the smelting of iron-ore was formerly carried on to a considerable extent: at present, the principal manufacture is that of bobbin, for which a large mill has been recently erected at Cunsey. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Incumbent of Hawkshead, with a net income of £71: the chapel was, in 1837, repaired, and enlarged by 50 additional sittings, through the exertions of the Rev. H. Baines, the minister.

SAUGHALL, GREAT, a township, in the parish of SHOTWICK, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Chester; containing 480 inhabitants.

SAUGHALL, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of SHOTWICK, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Chester; containing 47 inhabitants.

SAUGHALL-MASSEY, a township, in the parish of BIDSTONE, union, and Lower division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 9 miles (N. N. W.) from Great Neston; containing 152 inhabitants.

SAUL (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WHEATHENHURST, Upper division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 8 miles (N.) from Dursley; containing 477 inhabitants. The parish comprises 500 acres, including 25 common or waste, and is bounded by the river Severn, into which the Frome discharges itself at this place; on the banks of the latter were formerly some tin-plate manufactories. The Gloucester and Berkeley canal and the Severn and Thames canal both pass through the parish. An inclosure act was obtained in 1839. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £125; patron, Vicar of Standish; appropriator, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol: the great tithes have been commuted for £115, and the incumbent's for £42, and the glebe comprises 3 acres. The church has been enlarged. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is supported by subscription. Here is an ancient house, once belonging to the Earl of Leicester, surrounded by a moat.

SAUNDBY (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Gainsborough; containing 107 inhabitants. It comprises 1345a. 3r. 2p., and is pleasantly situated on elevated ground overlooking the river Trent; the soil is rich, and the lands are in good cultivation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. $6\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Viscount Middleton: the tithes have been commuted for £325. 15., and the glebe comprises two acres, with an excellent house. The church is in the later English style, with portions of an earlier date, and a very handsome tower, rebuilt, according to an inscription on one of the stones, in 1500.

SAUNDERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of DESBOROUGH, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S.W.) from Prince's-Risborough; containing 232 inhabitants. It comprises 1920a. 26p., the greater portion of which is arable; the soil is a rich loam, alternated with clay, and the surface is partly hilly, and partly level. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 19. 7.; net income, £377; patrons, President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land in 1806; the glebe comprises 406 acres. This place formerly constituted two parishes, but coming into the possession of one individual, they were united in the year 1457, and a church dedicated to St. Nicholas was suffered to go to ruin.

SAUSTHORPE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Spilsby; containing 259 inhabitants. It comprises about 750 acres of land, chiefly the property of the Rev. F. Swan, who is lord of the manor, and patron and incumbent of the benefice, and whose residence, New Hall, is a handsome mansion with an embattled parapet. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. $6\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for £212. 14. 6., and the glebe consists of $9\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a neat edifice. There is a national school.

SAVERNAKE-FOREST, or SOUTH SIDE, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (S.) from Marlborough; containing, with Brimslade and Cadley, 187 inhabitants.

SAVERNAKE-PARK, or NORTH SIDE, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of SELKLEY, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Marlborough; containing 112 inhabitants.

SAWBRIDGEWORTH (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Hertford; containing 2394 inhabitants. The Northern and Eastern railway crosses the river Stort near this place. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17; patron, Bishop of London; appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The great tithes have been commuted for £1479. 12., and the vicarial for £391; the appropriate glebe comprises 128 acres. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans.

SAWDON, a township, in the parish of BROMPTON, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 9 miles (W. S. W.) from Scarborough; containing 142 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1200 acres, near the head of a small stream flowing southward to Wykeham: the village is north of the high road from Wykeham to Snainton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SAWLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY; containing, with the chapelry of Long Eaton, and the hamlet of Wils-thorpe, 1933 inhabitants, of whom 1018 are in Sawley township, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Kegworth. This place had anciently a market and a fair, of which the former, having fallen into disuse, was revived about 1760, but was again discontinued before 1770; the market-house still remains. The parish is situated on the rivers Trent and Derwent, and comprises about 4000 acres; the surface is generally flat, and the soil a red-dish clay, alternated with gravel. The village is neatly built, and many of the population are employed in frame-work knitting, lace-running, and the spinning and weav- ing of cotton. The Trent and Mersey navigation and the Erewash canal pass through the parish, and there is an intermediate station here on the Midland-Counties' railway. A fair, chiefly for horses, is held on the 17th of November. The living is a vicarage, with the per- petual curacy of Wilne annexed, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Sawley in the Cathedral of Lichfield, the appropriator; net income, £266. The tithes were com- muned for land, under inclosure acts, in 1765 and 1797. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and Methodists of the New Connexion; and a national school is supported by subscription.

SAWLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of RIPON, wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Ripon; containing 527 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 3190 acres, of which about one-third is arable; the soil is various, in the high lands light, and in the valleys a heavy loam; the surface is varied, and in some parts attains considerable elevation, and the scenery is generally of pleasing character. There are quarries of good building-stone, from which was obtained part of the material for the erection of Trinity church, Ripon. The chapel is dedi- cated to St. Michael: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £66; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school was endowed in 1770, by Ralph Lowther, Esq., with £100, which sum, together with £400 belonging to the curacy, was invested in land, from the proceeds of which, the curate pays £6 per annum to the master for teaching six scholars. Bequests from the Norton family, producing £14. 15. per annum, are appropri- ated for distribution among the poor.

SAWLEY, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of CLITHEROE, W. division of the wapentake of STAIN- CLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. E.) from Clitheroe; containing, with Tosside, 479 inhabitants. The district comprises by computation 2250 acres of land, formerly belonging to a Cistercian abbey in honour of the Blessed Virgin, founded here in 1146, by William de Percy, and the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £221. 15. 8.; the site is now the property of Earl de Grey. There are some remains of the nave and transepts of the church, and the gate-house has been converted into a cottage. A school is partly supported by the earl.

SAWSTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of WHITTLESFORD, county of CAM- BRIDGE, 5¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Linton; containing 992 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Lon- don to Cambridge, and comprises by measurement 1817 acres. The ancient manor-house here of the Huddles- ton family was visited by Queen Mary, who spent some time in it. An extensive paper-mill affords employ- ment to 60 persons, and the manufacture of parchment to about 20. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 10. 2½.; net income, £118; patrons and impropiators, John Gosling and R. Hud- dleston, Esqrs. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SAWTRY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 3½ miles (S.) from Stilton; containing 628 inhabitants. It is situated on the road to York, and comprises 1334a. 1r. 34p., of which the soil is a strong clay, producing excellent crops of wheat, and the meadows are rich. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 7½.; net income, £189; patrons, the Duke of Devonshire, who has two turns, and M. M. Middleton, Esq., who has one. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1804. The church is an an- cient structure in the early English style, with a tower and a low spire, and has three stalls on the north side of the chancel. National schools were erected in 1840.

SAWTRY (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 3½ miles (S. by E.) from Stilton; containing 371 inha- bitants, and consisting of 1026a. 35p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 0½.; net income, £169; patrons, the family of Annesley. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1804; the glebe comprises 200 acres. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wes- leyans.

SAWTRY (ST. JUDITH), an extra-parochial liberty, and formerly a parish, in the hundred of NORMAN- CROSS, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Stilton; containing 264 inhabitants. A monastery for Cistercian monks was founded here in 1146, by Servin, Earl of Northampton, who placed in it brethren from the abbey of Warden, in the county of Bedford; it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £141. 3. 8. The liberty comprises about 3000 acres, the property of the Hon. Charles Compton Cavendish, who is lord of the manor; about 1000 acres are woodland, chiefly oak, and are called Monks Wood. The church has long been demolished.

SAXBY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. divi- sion of the county of LEICESTER, 4½ miles (E. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 163 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1366a. 39p., of which the soil is fertile, the surface gently undulated, and the scenery pleasingly varied; the lower grounds are watered by a brook, and the substratum is a fine gravel at no great depth from the surface. The Melton and Oakham canal passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Stapleford consolidated, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £168; patron, the Earl of Harborough: the glebe comprises 38 acres, with a house. The church is a neat structure, erected in 1789, by the grandfather of the present earl. The neighbourhood presents the appearance of having been the scene of some sanguinary contest, and skeletons, urns, weapons, &c., have been discovered.

SAXBY (St. HELEN), a parish, in the E. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. E.) from Spital; containing 140 inhabitants. This place, which has long been in the possession of the Saundersons, now represented by the Earl of Scarborough, is pleasantly situated on an eminence. The parish is bounded on the west by the ancient Roman road from Lincoln to the Humber, and by two inconsiderable streams, which, uniting at the north-eastern extremity, form the river Ancholme; it comprises about 1400 acres, of which the substratum abounds with stone, quarried for inferior kinds of building, and for repairing the roads. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Firsby united, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 1.; net income, £46; patron and impropiator, Earl of Scarborough. The glebe contains 14 acres. The church, a neat edifice in the Grecian style, is the place of interment for the family of the earl: near it some foundations have been discovered, supposed to be the remains of a Roman villa.

SAXBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, N. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (S. W.) from Barton-upon-Humber; containing 287 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2341*a. 1r. 11p.*; the soil is light, resting on a substratum of chalk, and there are several chalk-pits, from which stone is raised for mending the roads, and also for manure; the surface is elevated, and the scenery of pleasing character, being embellished with some thriving plantations. Saxby Hall is a neat mansion, and the village is agreeably situated on a declivity of the wolds, overlooking the vale of the Ancholme. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 18. 6½., and in the gift of J. W. Barton, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £432. 17., and the glebe comprises 8 acres. The church, rebuilt, with the exception of the chancel, many years since, is ornamented by a tower on the south side of the nave, and contains, over the altar, a beautiful painting of Our Saviour restoring sight to Bartimeus, presented by the patron. A parochial school is supported by subscription.

SAXELBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 112 inhabitants. It comprises about 2600 acres, of which the soil is clay, alternated with sand and gravel; the surface is hilly, and the low grounds are watered by a brook. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £215, arising from a glebe of 160 acres; patron, Earl of Aylesford. The church is an ancient structure. A parochial school is supported by subscription; and £7 per annum, the rent of land, are distributed among the poor.

SAXELBY (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Lincoln; containing, with the hamlets of North and South Ingleby, 1058 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the lower road from Lincoln to Gainsborough, comprises by admeasurement 4240 acres of land, having for the most part a strong clayey soil, and is intersected by the Foss dyke, which is navigable for sloops and barges; the village is large and well built, and a statute-fair is held in it in May. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln, with a net income of £167, and a glebe-house newly erected: the tithes were commuted in 1806, for land, of which 245 acres were awarded to Lord Monson, the impropiator, 126 to the vicar, and 22 to the lord of the manor. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a good tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SAXHAM, GREAT (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 13. 11½., and in the gift of William Mills, Esq., who has a seat here: the tithes have been commuted for £369, and the glebe comprises 13 acres.

SAXHAM, LITTLE (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3¾ miles (W.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 230 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 11. 5½.; net income, £300; patron, Marquess of Bristol. The tower of the church, which is round, is remarkable for the elegance of the design; this and the south door are the chief Norman features remaining. A school is chiefly supported by the Marchioness of Bristol.

SAXLINGHAM (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 3¾ miles (W. by N.) from Holt; containing 147 inhabitants. It comprises about 1500 acres, chiefly arable, with 120 acres of pasture and woodland; the surface is varied, and the views from the higher grounds are beautiful, extending over the richly-wooded vale of the Glaven. The living is a rectory, with that of Sherrington annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 3½.; net income, £589; patron, Sir R. P. Jodrell, Bart., who is lord of the manor. The glebe comprises 28 acres, with a handsome house, built by the Rev. S. Jodrell, incumbent. The church is a cruciform structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains a large and costly monument in the form of an Egyptian pyramid, ornamented with numerous hieroglyphics, erected by Sir Christopher Heydon to the memory of his lady, who died in 1593.

SAXLINGHAM-NETHERGATE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Stratton St. Mary; containing 650 inhabitants, of whom about 50 are employed in weaving. The parish, with that of Saxlingham-Thorpe, comprises 2111 acres, of which 107 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged rectory, with Saxlingham-Thorpe united, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 8. ; net income, £699 ; patron, Rev. J. H. Steward. The church contains monuments to the Rev. John Baron, Dean of Norwich, and the Rev. J. Gooch, Archdeacon of Sudbury, and his lady. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SAXLINGHAM-THORPE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Stratton St. Mary ; containing 131 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Saxlingham-Nethergate, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The church has fallen into ruins.

SAXMUNDHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a market-town and parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 20 miles (N. E. by N.) from Ipswich, and 89 (N. E.) from London ; containing 1097 inhabitants. This town, supposed to be of Saxon origin, is situated in a valley, on the road to London, and near a small stream which flows on the eastern side into the Ore ; it consists chiefly of one street in a direction north and south, comprising modern and newly-fronted houses of neat and respectable appearance, and there is an assembly-room, in which balls and concerts are occasionally held ; the inhabitants are plentifully supplied with water from springs. The only branch of business is that in malt : the market is on Thursday, and is noted for corn, which is shipped in large quantities from Snape and Iken wharfs, for London ; and fairs take place on Whit-Tuesday, and the first Thursday in October, for toys, &c. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 10., and in the gift of W. Long, Esq. : the tithes have been commuted for £275, and the glebe comprises 29 acres. The church is embosomed in trees, a little southward of the town ; a gallery has been erected, and the building contains several monuments to the family of Long, who have their seat at Hurt's Hall, in the parish. There is a place of worship for Independents ; also a national school. A chantry was founded here by Robert Swan, about 1308.

SAXONDALE, a township, in the parish of SHELFORD, union, and S. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E.) from Nottingham ; containing 121 inhabitants.

SAXTEAD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 13 miles (N.) from Woodbridge ; containing 447 inhabitants, and comprising by survey 1202 acres, of which 23 are common or waste. The living is annexed to the rectory of Framlingham : the tithes have been commuted for £340. The church is in the decorated English style ; the steeple fell down in 1806, and has not been rebuilt.

SAXTHORPE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of AYLSHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Reepham ; containing 342 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2111 acres, of which 1889 are arable, 123 pasture, and 94 woodland ; the surface is undulated, and the higher grounds command some fine views. The village is situated on the north side of the river Bure, and on the road from Norwich to Holt. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4. ; patrons and impropiators, Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. The great tithes have been com-mutated for £290. 10., and the vicarial for £87 ; the glebe comprises $43\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and there are 19 acres of land at Wood-Dalling, belonging to the living. The church is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower. There was anciently a chapel, founded by Aymer de Valence in 1313, and the site of which is still called Chapel Close.

SAXTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK ; containing, with Towton township, 573 inhabitants, of which number 427 are in the township of Saxton with Scarthingwell, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tadcaster. The parish comprises by computation 4030 acres, chiefly the property of the daughters and coheiresses of R. O. Gascoigne, Esq. ; the land is generally in good cultivation, and there are some quarries of stone for building. Scarthingwell Hall was formerly the residence of Lord Hawke, who is also a considerable landowner here ; it is now in the occupation of John Kendell, Esq., and is a neat mansion, pleasantly situated, and surrounded with a park of 160 acres. The village is built on an acclivity, and the North-Midland railway passes on the east. The living is a perpetual curacy ; net income, £76 ; patrons and impropiators, the family of Gascoigne, who partly support a school. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, and contains several monuments of the Hungate and Hawke families. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans ; and a parochial school is supported by subscription, and an annual donation of £10 from the family of Gascoigne. Lords Dacre and Westmorland, with a vast number of the slain in the sanguinary battle of Towton, fought on March 29th, 1461, between the houses of York and Lancaster, were interred here.

SCACKLETON, a township, in the parish of HOVINGHAM, union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 10 miles (W. by N.) from Malton ; containing 189 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1460 acres of land, of which a portion is wood. The village is on the road from Wiganthorpe to Coulton. A school is supported by William Garforth, Esq.

SCAFTWORTH, a township, in the parish of EVERTON, union of EAST RETFORD, liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from Bawtry ; containing 100 inhabitants, and comprising 1049*a. 3r. 34p.* The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1772. During the inclosure of the common, several Roman antiquities were found.

SCAGGLETHORPE, a township, in the parish of SETTRINGTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Malton ; containing 249 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the navigable river Derwent, and comprises 1220 acres, of which 700 are in tillage, and the rest in grass ; the soil runs through several varieties between a strong clay and a sandy loam. The slope on which the village stands commands fine and extensive views towards the south-west, and the residence of John Coulson, Esq., is situated here. The tithes were commuted for 43 acres of land, and a modus of £60 a year, in 1725. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyans ; and a school is supported by Lady Middleton and the rector.

SCALBY, a township, in the parish of BLACKTOFT, union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSHERE, E. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Howden; containing 131 inhabitants. It comprises about 1100 acres, partly on Walling fen. The village, which is small and scattered, is on the road from North Cave to Howden.

SCALBY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelry of Cloughton, and the townships of Burniston, Newby, Stainton-Dale, and Throxenby, 1886 inhabitants, of whom 612 are in Scalby township, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Scarborough. The parish comprises by computation upwards of 12,000 acres, of which the township contains 2485. A small rivulet winds through the village, which is picturesquely situated in a dell of the eastern moorlands, and discharges itself into the sea near Scalby mill, where are tea-gardens resorted to by the company that visit Scarborough during the bathing season. Timothy Harcastle, Esq., banker, Scarborough, has a beautiful seat here, from which are fine views of the sea and Scarborough Castle. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, with a net income of £302, and a neat parsonage-house: the tithes, with the exception of those for Stainton-Dale, were commuted for land in 1771. There is a chapel of ease at Cloughton; and schools are supported by subscription. A girdle of pure gold, 35 inches in length, weighing $2\frac{1}{2}$ ounces, and twisted like a cord, each end forming a hook, supposed to have been a fastening to an outer garment, was lately found on the estate of Mr. Harcastle.

SCALDWELL (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BRIKWORTH, hundred of ORLINGBURY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Northampton; containing 416 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1152 acres: the manufacture of parchment, and the combing of wool, afford employment to a small number of persons. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 0. 10.; net income, £357; patron, Duke of Buccleuch. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1775; the glebe comprises 150 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure. SCALEBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing 584 inhabitants, of whom 230 are in East Scaleby, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and 354 in West Scaleby, $5\frac{1}{2}$ (N. E. by N.) from Carlisle. Richard Tilliol, called Richard the Rider, received a grant of this territory from Henry I., and built a castle upon it with materials brought from the Picts' wall. In the early part of the civil war, Scaleby Castle was garrisoned for Charles I.; in 1645 it surrendered to the parliamentarians; in 1648 it again fell into the hands of the royalists, but it was soon after recaptured, and kept for the parliament. It is an interesting monument of antiquity; the more ancient part is in ruins, but a portion has been rebuilt and is inhabited. The parish comprises 3100 acres, of which 136 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 1.; net income, £107; patron, Bishop of Carlisle. The church was repaired in 1827. The Rev. William Gilpin, author of the Lives of the Reformers, Forest Scenery, &c., was born in the castle in 1724.

SCALES, with BROMFIELD and CROOKDAKE, a township, in the parish of BROMFIELD, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wigton; containing 364 inhabitants, of whom 94 are in the hamlet of Scales.

SCALES, with NEWTON, a township, in the parish of KIRKHAM, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Kirkham; containing 324 inhabitants.

SCALFORD (St. EGELWIN THE MARTYR), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 517 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2420 acres of land, of which the soil is clay, alternated with sand; the surface in some parts is hilly, and the lower grounds are watered by a brook; the substratum abounds with stone, which is quarried for building and for the roads. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £255; patron and improprator, the Duke of Rutland. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765; the glebe comprises about 200 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported from the proceeds of land for the use of the poor, amounting to £13. 16. per annum.

SCAMBLESBY, a parish, in the union of HORNCASTLE, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Horncastle; containing 500 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £71; patron and improprator, Lord Yarborough.

SCAMMONDEN, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Huddersfield, and the same distance from Halifax; containing 972 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 1711a. 13p., of which 10 acres are woodland, one-third uncultivated, and the remainder principally meadow and pasture. There are two manors, Scammonden and Deanhead; the former belonging to the Duke of Leeds, and the latter to Thomas Thornhill, Esq. The surface is mountainous and wild; it is bounded on the west by the lofty ridge of Blackstone Edge, and commands from several parts extensive views over a country abounding with romantic scenery. About 900 acres were inclosed in 1820, and have been brought into profitable cultivation; but many of the hills are still uncultivated, affording only rough pasturage. There are excellent freestone quarries. The road from Elland, and that from Huddersfield, both to Manchester, pass through the chapelry. The chapel, a neat edifice, rebuilt in 1813, at a cost of £1000, is situated on an acclivity, in a romantic dell watered by a small rivulet called Black Brook, and contains 350 sittings, of which some are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, about £170; patron, the Vicar of Huddersfield. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A national school was established in 1826, and a late meeting-house for Wesleyans is now used as a Sunday school. George Woodhead bequeathed £5 per annum, and there are some other small benefactions for distribution among the poor.

SCAMPSTON, a chapelry, in the parish of RILLINGTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from New Malton; containing 251 inhabitants. This place is bounded on the north by the navigable river Derwent, and comprises in its township 2382 acres, of which 1199 are arable, 1026 pasture, and 157 woodland; the surface is level. Scampston Hall is a handsome mansion in an extensive park, in which is a fine sheet of water, crossed by a bridge, and supplied by a rivulet running northward to the Derwent. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to the vicarage of Rillington: the chapel is a small ancient edifice, and was repaired in 1837.

SCAMPTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Lincoln; containing 224 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2147 acres of profitable land, and the substratum contains limestone, which is quarried for building and for the roads, and burnt also into lime. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 16. 8.; net income, £82; patron, Sir George Cayley, Bart.: the glebe comprises an acre of ground, with a residence. Two schools are partly supported by the rector and curate. There are some remains of a Roman villa, discovered about the year 1800. The parish was formerly the residence of Archdeacon Illingworth, author of a curious and excellent work on the antiquities of Scampton.

Corporation Seal.

SCARBOROUGH (St. MARY), a borough, market-town, and parish, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 39 miles (N. E.) from York, and 216 (N.) from London; containing, with the township of Falsgrave, 10,060 inhabitants, of whom 9515 are in Scarborough township. The origin of this town has not been satisfactorily ascertained: it is supposed to have derived its name from the Saxon Seear, a rock, and Burgh, a fortified place. The earliest authentic record of it is a charter of Henry II., conferring certain privileges on the inhabitants; and in the reign of Henry III., a charter was granted for making a new pier at Scardeburch, as it was then called. Prior, however, to the construction of the pier, the town had begun to rise into importance, and was defended by walls and a fosse, of which some vestiges may still be traced. In the reign of Stephen, a castle had been erected by William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle and Holderness, which that nobleman was compelled to surrender to Henry II., who made considerable additions to it. Here Piers Gaveston took refuge from the attacks of the confederate barons, and for a considerable time maintained the fortress against their assaults, till a scarcity of provisions obliged him to surrender. In this reign the town was burnt by the Scottish forces, which, headed by Robert Bruce, their king, made an irruption into England. Robert Aske, the leader of the insurrection called the Pilgrimage of Grace, made an unsuccessful attempt to gain possession of the castle in 1536; and during Wyatt's rebellion in 1553, it was surprised and captured by a party headed by Thomas, second son of Lord Stafford, who had disguised themselves as peasants; but it was soon retaken by the Earl of Westmorland, and Stafford and three of his accomplices being made prisoners, were sent to London, and executed for high treason.

During the civil war in the reign of Charles I. the parliamentary forces, commanded by Sir John Meldrum, besieged the castle, which held out under its brave governor, Sir Hugh Cholmley, for more than twelve months. At length, however, on the death of Meldrum, who fell in the assault, the command devolved upon Sir Matthew Boynton, to whom, after the exhaustion of its military stores, the fortress was surrendered in 1645, upon honourable terms. Colonel Boynton, who succeeded Sir Matthew in the command of the castle, having declared for the king, it came again into the possession of the royalists; but it was finally surrendered to the parliament in 1648, and soon afterwards dismantled. George Fox, founder of the Society of Friends, was confined in it in 1665. During the rebellion in 1745, the building was put into a state of temporary repair; since which time batteries have been erected for the protection of the town and harbour; and within the inclosure are barracks for the accommodation of 120 men. This once formidable fortress comprised within the boundary walls an area of more than nineteen acres, and occupied the summit of an eminence 300 feet above the level of the sea, which surrounds it on all sides except the west, by which it is connected with the town; on the north, east, and south is a vast range of perpendicular rocks. The entrance is through an arched gateway, on the summit of a narrow isthmus, flanked by bastions, and formerly defended by two drawbridges within the gates, and a deep fosse. The principal parts remaining are, the keep, a square tower, the walls of which are twelve feet thick, and some portions of the semicircular towers that defended the ramparts, now falling rapidly to decay; some slight remains of the chapel, also, are still discernible within the walls. The castle and its precincts are extra-parochial.

The town is beautifully and romantically situated in the recess of a fine open bay, on the coast of the North Sea, and consists of numerous streets, rising in successive tiers from the shore in the form of an amphitheatre; the beach, of firm and smooth sand, slopes gradually towards the sea. Belvoir Terrace, and the Crescent, form elegant ranges of mansions; and on the cliff are numerous handsome private residences, and lodging-houses for the accommodation of visitors, who repair hither, either for the convenience of bathing, for which the sea here, unimpaired in its quality by the influx of any stream of fresh water, is peculiarly favourable; or for the benefit of the mineral springs, the efficacy of which has been for more than two centuries in high repute. These springs, which are saline chalybeates, varying in the proportions of their several ingredients, were for some time lost by the sinking of a large mass of the cliff in 1737, but were recovered after a diligent search. The water was analysed in 1840, by Sir Richard Phillips, and one imperial gallon of the north spring was found to contain, of chloride of sodium 26.64 grains, crystallized sulphate of magnesia 142.68 grains, crystallized sulphate of lime 184 grains, bicarbonate of lime 48.26 grains, and bicarbonate of protoxide of iron 1.84 grains, with 6.3 cubic inches of azotic gas. Of the south spring, a gallon was found to contain, chloride of sodium 29.63 grains, crystallized sulphate of magnesia 225.33 grains, crystallized sulphate of lime 110.78 grains, bicarbonate of lime 47.80 grains, and bicarbonate of protoxide of iron 1.81 grains, with 7.5 cubic inches of azotic gas. The old spa-house was washed away during a tremendous storm in 1836, and in 1839, a new building, in the castellated style, was erected from a design by Henry Wyatt, Esq.; the saloon is 75 feet in length, and 17 feet wide, and is approached by beautiful walks cut in the cliff, and surrounded by plantations. A fine terrace, one hundred feet above the level of the sands, forming a pleasant promenade, and, by a handsome iron bridge of four arches on stone pillars, connecting the dis-severed cliffs, in the chasm between which runs the stream called Millbeck, affords facility of access to the spas. This bridge, which was erected in 1827, is 414 feet in length and 75 in height, and constitutes one of the principal ornaments of the town. There are several large bathing establishments; and a general sea-bathing infirmary is supported by subscription, for the use of poor invalids. The theatre, which was patronized by the late Stephen Kemble, is open during the season; the Agricultural and General Library, on King-street Cliff, was established in 1801, and has a collection of more than 3000 volumes. The environs are beautifully diversified with hill and dale, and include much picturesque and romantic scenery: Olivers' Mount, about a mile from the town, approached by a gradual ascent, forms a magnificent natural terrace, 500 feet above the level of the sea, commanding an interesting view of the castle, town, harbour, and piers on one side, and overlooking the ocean on the other. The rides on the sands and in the vicinity are pleasant; and the salubrity of the air, and the numerous objects of interest with which the neighbourhood abounds, render Scarborough a favourite place of fashionable resort. The town is supplied with fresh water by pipes from the hill, two miles distant, and likewise by a reservoir, capable of containing 4000 hogsheads.

The port, to which the privilege of bonding was granted in 1841, is a member of that of Hull, and its limits extend from the most easterly part of Flamborough Head, in a direction northward, to Peasholme Beck, including all the sea-coast to fourteen fathoms of water at low-water mark. The foreign trade is principally with France, Holland, and the Baltic, from which it imports wine, brandy, geneva, timber, deals, hemp, flax, and iron; and it carries on also a considerable coasting trade in corn, butter, bacon, and salt fish, with Newcastle, Sunderland, and other places on the coast, and with the port of London for groceries. The number of vessels of above 50 tons' burthen registered at the port, is 157, and their aggregate tonnage 31,010. The harbour, though confined at the entrance, is easy of access, and safe and commodious within; it is protected by two piers, of which one, enlarged by act of parliament obtained in the 5th of George II., is 1200 feet in length, and 42 feet broad at the extremity, and in the intermediate lines varies from thirteen to eighteen feet in breadth. This pier having been found insufficient to prevent the accumulation of sand in the harbour, an act was procured for the construction of a new one, of which the breadth at the foundation is 60 feet, and at the curvature, where it is most subject to the action of the waves, 63; it is 40 feet high, 42 in breadth at the top, and 1200 in length, and was designed by Smeaton, the celebrated engineer. In 1843, an act was passed for the further improvement of the harbour. Several steam-packets touch at the port every week, on their passage between London and Edinburgh. The fishery, formerly carried on to a considerable extent, and a source of great profit to the town, has for some years greatly declined, but there are still many boats employed; the principal fish taken are turbot, soles, ling, cod, plaice, lobsters, and crabs. A very extensive herring-fishery is also now carried on; and near the town is an establishment for curing the fish, which are quite equal, if not superior, to the Yarmouth bloaters. There are an establishment for ship-building, and several manufactories for cordage. The market-days are Thursday and Saturday, the former for corn; the fish-market is held on the sands near the harbour. The fairs are on Holy-Thursdays and Nov. 23rd, chiefly for cattle. Scarborough, a borough by prescription, received its first charter from Henry II., in 1181, which was subsequently confirmed and extended by various sovereigns; but the corporation now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and 18 councillors, by the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76. The borough is divided into two wards; the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those for parliamentary purposes, and the number of magistrates is eight. The town first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election was, by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, extended to the £10 householders; the mayor is returning officer. The corporation hold quarterly courts of session, for all offences not capital; a court of pleas, for the recovery of debts to any amount; and manorial courts. Petty-sessions, also, take place. The borough gaol was rebuilt in 1842.

The parish comprises about 2160 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13.6.8.; gross income, £243; patron, Lord Hotham: the impropriation once belonged to the Corporation, who allowed the tithes to be redeemed by individual proprietors, so that the parish is now nearly tithe-free. The church, which was formerly connected with a Cistercian monastery here, and was a spacious and magnificent cruciform structure with three noble towers, sustained considerable damage during the sieges of the castle, in the time of the parliamentary war, and retains but few portions of its ancient character; the present steeple stands at the eastern end, and occupies the site of the original transept tower, which fell down in 1659. Christ-church, a handsome edifice in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, was erected in 1828, at an expense of £5000, by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, exclusively of a local subscription of £3000, and the stone, which was the gift of Sir John V. B. Johnstone, Bart.: the living has a net income of about £200; patron, the Vicar of St. Mary's. Another church, called St. Thomas', was erected in 1840, by private subscription, aided by a grant of £300 from the Incorporated Society; it is a neat edifice in the later English style, and contains 440 sittings, of which 320 are free. There is also a chapel called the Bethel, formerly the town-hall, which is attended chiefly by fishermen; and there are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and a Roman Catholic chapel. The grammar school is of very remote origin: in 1648, the corporation ordered the south transept of St. Mary's church to be fitted up and appropriated to its use, the expense of which was defrayed by the sale of the Charnel Chapel, or old school-house; the income, arising from donations of land and money, is about £12 per annum. A national school is supported; and an Amicable Society, established in 1729, under the patronage of Robert North, Esq., for clothing and educating children, is maintained by weekly contributions and general subscription. The Seamen's hospital, erected in 1752, by the ship-owners of the town, for the support of aged seamen, their widows, and children, is supported by a contribution of sixpence per month from the owner of every vessel belonging to the port, for each person on board during the time the vessel is at sea, or in actual service; it is under the superintendence of a president and trustees, annually elected, and the income, arising from donations, is about £200 per annum. The building consists of a centre and two wings, with a court in front, and contains 25 apartments for poor seamen, or seamen's widows. The Trinity-house, originally established by subscription, for similar purposes, in 1602, was rebuilt in a neat and substantial manner in 1832. Wilson's Mariners' Asylum, a beautiful range of buildings in the Elizabethan style, for the reception of 14 married persons, was erected and endowed in the lifetime of the donor, in 1837. Taylor's free dwellings for the poor were built in 1810. St. Thomas' hospital was founded by Hugh de Bulmer, in the reign of Henry II., for aged and infirm persons; the buildings are low and of ancient appearance. There are also several charitable bequests for distribution among the poor; and the union of Scarborough comprises 33 parishes or places, and contains a population of 21,305. To the north of St. Sepulchre's-street is the site of a Franciscan convent, supposed to have been founded about the 29th of Henry III.; and among other monastic establishments anciently existing here, were, a monastery of Dominicans, established in the reign of Edward II. by Adam Say, Knt., or by Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland; and a house of Carmelite friars, instituted by Edward II., in 1319. Scarborough gives the title of Earl to the family of Lumley.

SCARCLIFF (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 6 miles (N. N. W.) from Mansfield; containing 582 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £68; patron, the Duke of Devonshire; improPRIATOR, Earl Bathurst. The glebe comprises 14 acres. The church contains a monument of the eleventh century, representing a lady in robes, with a coronet on her head, which tradition asserts to be that of a lady, who, dying in childbirth in the village, to which she was attracted by the sound of the curfew, bequeathed her rich jewels to purchase land for the poor. A national school is supported by subscription, aided by an endowment of £6 per annum from Mrs. Vaughan.

SCARCROFT, a township, in the parish of THORNER, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Wetherby; containing 218 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 950 acres, and the village is pleasantly situated on the new road to Wetherby. Near the village is a large mound supposed to have been the site of a Roman camp; and from the discovery of various relics, the Romans are thought to have had works here for the smelting of iron.

SCARGILL, a township, in the parish of BARNINGHAM, union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Greta-bridge; containing 106 inhabitants. It comprises about 4880 acres of land, of which a considerable portion is high moor, containing lead-ore, though none is at present wrought. The village is situated on the south side of the Greta, near Rutherford-bridge.

SCARISBRICK, a township, in the parish and union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county palatine of LANCASTER, 2 miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk; containing 1957 inhabitants. The township comprises 8216 acres, of which 80 are common or waste land. The tithes have been commuted for £1064, of which £970 are payable to an improPRIATOR, and £94 to the rector of Halsall. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel.

SCARLE, NORTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (W. S. W.) from Lincoln; containing 490 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded by the river Trent, comprises about 1600 acres; the surface is flat, and the soil clayey, and clay of good quality for making bricks is obtained in abundance. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 17. $3\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £259. 10., and the glebe consists of 32 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SCARLE, SOUTH (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Newark; containing, with Besthorpe chapelry, 525 inhabitants, of whom 198 are in the township of South Scarle. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Girton annexed, valued in the king's books at £5. 2. 5., and in the gift of the Prebendary of South Scarle in the Cathedral of Lincoln; improPRIATORS, G. Hutton, Esq., and others. The great tithes have been commuted for £190. 11., and the vicarial for £54. 18.; the impropriate glebe comprises 112 acres.

SCARNING (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from East Dereham; containing 613 inhabitants. It comprises 3300 acres, and is situated on the road from Dereham to Swaffham. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a moiety of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £9. 19.; net income, £389; patron and improPRIATOR of the remainder of the rectorial tithes, E. Lombe, Esq. There is a glebe of 10 acres, with a house. The church is in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains some curious relics. A free school was founded and endowed by William Secker, in 1604; the income is £150 per annum.

SCARRINGTON, a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Nottingham; containing 230 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with that of Thoroton, to the vicarage of Orston: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1780. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SCARTHINGWELL, with SAXTON, a township, in the parish of SAXTON, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Tadcaster; containing 427 inhabitants. The township comprises about 2673 acres, chiefly the property of the Gascoigne family.

SCARTH (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S.) from Great Grimsby; containing 199 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; net income, £231; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Jesus' College, Oxford. A school is partly supported by subscription.

SCATHWAITERIGG, with HAY and HUTTON-I'-TH'-HAY, a township, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N. E.) from Kendal; containing 408 inhabitants.

SCATTERGATE, a township, in the parish of APPLEBY ST. LAWRENCE, EAST ward, county of WESTMORLAND; containing 156 inhabitants. It adjoins the town of Appleby on the south, and within the township are the venerable remains of Appleby Castle. Dr. Waugh, Bishop of Carlisle, was a native of the place.

SCAWBY (St. HIBALD), a parish, in the union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing, with Sturton township, 1050 inhabitants. This place, which is of considerable antiquity, and has from a remote period belonged to the family of Nelthorpe, comprises about 4000 acres, whereof small portions are moorland and plantations; the soil is fertile, and easily convertible, and the surface is generally level. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £170; patron and impropiator, Sir John Nelthorpe: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1770. The church contains a monument to John Nelthorpe, the first baronet, who died in 1669. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Calvinists, and Primitive Methodists; also a free school, founded in 1705, by Sir Henry Nelthorpe, who endowed it with land now producing £30 per annum. At Weston, a hamlet in the parish, are evident remains of a Roman station; and in the garden of Henry Grantham, Esq., are two tessellated pavements, one about 16 feet square, and the other 12 long and 8 wide, communicating by a narrow passage; the latter seems to have been used as a dressing-room, and at the south end is a semicircular bath. Several coins of Constantine have been found; and at a farm-house about 300 yards distant, are vestiges of a fortified camp, where a religious house appears to have been erected, in the walls of which some heads sculptured in stone are still visible. There is a mineral spring.

SCAWSBY, a hamlet, in the parish of BRODSWORTH, union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Doncaster; containing 31 inhabitants. This was a place of some importance in the Saxon times, and after the Conquest formed part of the honour of Tickhill, and was held under the lords of that district by a family who took their name from the spot. At a subsequent period there was a chapel here, as it is recorded that in 1303 the archbishop granted a license to Walter de Harum for the celebration of divine service in his chapel or oratory at Scawsby. The hamlet is on the road from Doncaster to Marr, and comprises by computation 620 acres. Scawsby Lees was the ground on which the insurgents in the "Pilgrimage of Grace" encamped.

SCAWTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HELMSLEY-BLACKMOOR, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W.) from Helmsley; containing 139 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2768 acres, of which 985 are common or waste; it is situated upon Hambleton, in the midst of open and wild moorland scenery, and has about two-thirds of its area under tillage, and the remainder in pasture. Stone of good quality is quarried for building, and for burning into lime. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 19. 2., and in the gift of Sir William Worsley, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £148, and the glebe comprises 32 acres: The church is in the early English style.

SCHOLES, a hamlet, in the parish of BARWICK-IN-ELMETT, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds. The population is principally employed in the making of cards for machinery. The substratum abounds with coal, but no mines are in operation. A district church, dedicated to St. Catherine, was erected in 1841. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is supported by subscription.

SCILLY ISLANDS. These Islands, of which there are 17, varying in extent from 1640 acres to 10, besides 22 smaller islets, and numerous naked rocks, form a cluster lying off the south-west coast, and annexed to the Western division of the county of Cornwall, about 17 leagues due west from the Lizard Point, and 10 nearly west-by-south from the Land's End. By the Greeks they were called Hesperides and Cassiterides; by the Romans, Sellinæ and Siluræ Insulæ; but their present name, anciently written Sully, or Sulley, appears to be British, and they are reported to take it from a small island, containing only one acre, which is called Scilly. Except what relates to their trading intercourse with the Phœnicians and the Romans, and the circumstance of their having been occasionally appropriated by the latter as a place of banishment for state criminals, the first mention we find of them in history is in the tenth century, when they were subdued by King Athelstan. From this period there is no record of any remarkable historical event, until the reign of Charles I., when the islands became of considerable importance as a military post, and were one of the last rallying points for the royalists. In 1645, they afforded a temporary asylum to Prince Charles and his friends, Lords Hopton and Capel; and in 1649, Sir John Grenville being governor of the Scilly Islands, fortified and held them for Charles II. The parliament, finding their trading vessels much annoyed by Sir John's frigates, fitted out an expedition for the reduction of the islands, under the command of Admiral Blake and Sir George Ascue, and they were delivered up to the parliament in the beginning of June of the same year.

The total surface of the islands is about 4700 acres, and the number of inhabitants 2582. The extent of St. Mary's Island, the largest, including the garrison, which is joined to it by an isthmus, is 1640 acres, and the population amounts to 1545: its principal village, called Hugh or Heugh Town, was much damaged by inundation during the great storm in 1744; the pier was finished in 1750, at the expense of Lord Godolphin, and vessels of 150 tons' burthen may ride here in safety. Near this place are the ruins of an old fortress, with a mount, and the remains of several block-houses and batteries, supposed to have been constructed in the civil war. About two furlongs to the eastward is a bay called Pomellin, or Porthmellin, where a fine white sand, composed of crystals and talc much esteemed as a writing sand, and for other purposes, is procured in abundance. About a mile from Hugh-town is the Church-town, consisting of a few houses and the church, in the chancel of which are interred Sir John Narborough, Bart., son of the celebrated admiral of that name; Henry Trelawney, son of a bishop of Winchester; and Captain Edmund Loades, of the Association man-of-war, all of whom shared the fate of Rear-Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel, who was lost on the Gilston rock, October 22nd, 1707. Two furlongs further, bordering on the sea, is Old-town, formerly the most important place of the island. On a promontory, called the Giant's Castle, are traces of an ancient fortress, thought to be of remote origin. On the west side of the island are St. Mary's garrison, with the barracks and several batteries, and Star Castle, the latter built by Sir Francis Godolphin, in 1593. The island next in magnitude is Trescoe, anciently called Iniscaw, and St. Nicholas, which contains 430 inhabitants, and comprises 880 acres. In it are some remains of the conventual church of St. Nicholas, the ruins of Old-castle, and Oliver's Battery. Old-castle, which appears to have been built in or about the reign of Henry VIII., is spoken of by Leland as "a little pile, or fortress;" but seems to have been afterwards enlarged, as its ruins show it to have been a considerable building. Oliver's Castle, as it is called, from its having been built by the parliamentarians, was repaired in 1740; but is described by Borlase, in 1756, as being then already much decayed. St. Martin's Island, though next in size to St. Mary's and Trescoe, containing 214 inhabitants, and comprising 720 acres, was uninhabited until the reign of Charles II.: Mr. Ekins, in 1683, built a tower on it, as a landmark, 20 feet high, with a spire upon it of the same height. On St. Agnes' Island, which has 243 inhabitants, is a lighthouse. Bryer, or Brehar, contains 121 persons, and consists of 330 acres; and Sampson has a population of 29.

The principal employment and trade of the islanders consist in fishing and making kelp: the quantity annually made varies from 100 to 200 tons. The number of vessels of above 50 tons' burthen, registered at the port, is 37, and the aggregate tonnage 3751; about 100 boats are used for fishing, piloting, &c. Tin is found in several of the islands, and in some, lead and copper; but no mines are now worked. Others produce grain, chiefly barley, peas, and oats, with a small portion of wheat; a few acres are sown with the pillas, or naked oat; and potatoes are cultivated in great quantities in St. Mary's. Cattle are fed on most of them, and though not very abundant, are sometimes sold to masters of vessels. Samphire, for pickling, is collected in abundance in the isle of Trescoe. The tamarisk and lavatera arborea grow plentifully in that of St. Mary. The property and temporal jurisdiction of the islands were anciently attached to the earldom, as they now are to the duchy of Cornwall, excepting those of St. Nicholas (now Trescoe), St. Sampson, St. Elid, St. Teon, and Nullo, and some lands in other islands, which were given, in or before the reign of Edward the Confessor, to certain monks or hermits who had their abode in St. Nicholas, and were subsequently granted by Henry I. to the abbot of Tavistock. The present lessee of the whole is the Duke of Leeds, representative of the Godolphin family, to whom they appear to have been first leased in the 13th of Elizabeth. The lord proprietor appoints a court, or council of twelve, consisting of some of the principal inhabitants, which generally sits monthly, for the trial of complaints, suits, &c., between the islanders, excepting such causes as affect life and limb, and such as are cognizable by the court of admiralty.

The islands are under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, and form part of the archdeaconry of Cornwall. In early times the abbot of Tavistock held the tithes of the whole, and certain lands, by the title of finding two monks to reside there, and to provide for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants; but since the Reformation the tithes have been vested in the lord proprietor, who is patron of the donative, and pays the minister an optional salary. Until of late years the minister of St. Mary's was the only clergyman, officiating constantly at St. Mary's; at Trescoe, on the Sunday after Easter; and at St. Martin's on Trinity-Sunday. There are chapels at Trescoe, St. Martin's, St. Agnes', Bryer, and St. Sampson's, for the most part built by the Godolphin family, since the Reformation; and the Wesleyans have four places of worship. The Earl of Godolphin, in 1747, established a school for instructing twelve boys; and the Rev. R. Corbet Hartshorne, rector of Broseley, in Shropshire, about the year 1753, gave the sum of £250 towards the support either of a minister or schoolmaster at Trescoe, under the direction of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The only considerable benefaction which the society has received towards the religious instruction of the islanders, since that time, is the sum of £500, given by Charles ETTY, Esq.; but about £300 per annum are expended by the society, on the missions and schools, chiefly out of their general funds. On St. Helen's Island, now uninhabited, are the ruins of houses, and of an ancient chapel.

SCISSETT, an ecclesiastical district, in the parishes of HIGH HOYLAND and EMLEY, wapentake of STAINCROSS and ABBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 9 miles (S. E. by E.) from Huddersfield; containing 2000 inhabitants. This district comprises about 2000 acres of land in a fertile valley, and abounds with coal and freestone, which are sold at a low price. The inhabitants are mostly employed in the woollen and worsted manufactures, chiefly of fancy goods, for which there are two large establishments belonging to Messrs. Joseph and George Norton, affording occupation to nearly 3000 persons; there is also an extensive mill for spinning worsted, belonging to Messrs. Wood and Walker, of Bradford, and in which a large number of persons are engaged. The river Dearne flows through the district, in a direction parallel with the Wakefield and Manchester road, usually called the Denby-Dale road. The church, dedicated to St. Augustine, was erected in 1839, at an expense of £2000, raised by subscription, to which Wentworth Beaumont, Esq., largely contributed; the site was given by the late Joseph Kaye, Esq. It is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mr. Beaumont, who endowed it with £1300 three per cents., and built a parsonage-house. A national school is supported by subscription.

SCOFTON, a township, in the parish and union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 35 inhabitants.

SCOLE, or OSMONDISTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of DEFWADE, hundred of DISS, E. division of NORFOLK, 19½ miles (S. S. W.) from Norwich; containing 685 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Waveney, and comprises about 800 acres. The village is a great thoroughfare on the road from Ipswich to Norwich and Yarmouth, and contains a very good inn, built in the seventeenth century. There is a fair on Easter-Monday for cattle. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of Sir E. Kerrison, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe contains 25 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower.

SCOPWICK (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, Second division of the wapentake of LANGOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8¼ miles (N.) from Sleaford; containing 388 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Lincoln to Sleaford; the soil is principally sandy, with a substratum of limestone, which is quarried for buildings of every kind. The village is situated in a pleasing valley, watered by a clear rivulet, and to the west of it is an extensive and elevated heath, sheltered on the east by some oak woods. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £185; patron and appropriator, Bishop of Lincoln: the glebe comprises 16 acres. The church, with the exception of the tower, has been rebuilt, and is of comparatively modern date. There are several tumuli, which are fast disappearing under the progress of cultivation.

SCORBROUGH (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (N. N. W.) from Beverley; containing 81 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1310 acres, of a level surface, and very rich alluvial soil, principally in pasture for fattening stock, with a portion of wood, and much ornamental fence. Scorbrough Hall, the seat of James Hall, Esq., is a modern mansion in the cottage style, round which are the remains of a moat that inclosed the ancient residence of the Hotham family. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the gift of the Earl of Egremont: the tithes have been commuted for £306. 6. The church is an ancient edifice, with oak stalls.

SCOREBY, with WEST STAMFORD-BRIDGE, a township, in the parish of CATTON, union of YORK, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, 6½ miles (E. by N.) from York; containing 150 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1940 acres of land: the village is situated on the west side of the river Derwent.

SCORTON, a township, in the parish of CATTERICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Catterick; containing 477 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 2610 acres of land, chiefly the property of the Earl of Tyrconnel, who is lord of the manor. The village is round a spacious green, and the buildings on the east side are occupied by a religious community of thirty nuns, of the order of St. Clair, who arrived in this country from Normandy, in 1795; there is a neat chapel belonging to the establishment. On the north side is a free grammar school, erected in 1760, and endowed with £200 a year, the bequest of Leonard Robinson, Esq. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £242. 15., and the vicarial for £114. Within the township is St. Cuthbert's well, the water of which is efficacious in cutaneous and rheumatic disorders.

SCOSTHORPE, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-IN-MALHAM-DALE, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Settle; containing 48 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1350 acres, held by various proprietors, of whom the Earl of Thanet is lord of the manor; the soil is rich, and altogether in grass.

SCOTBY, a township, in the parish of WETHERAL, CUMBERLAND ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Carlisle; containing 383 inhabitants. The railroad from Carlisle to Newcastle, which has a station in the village, passes through the township. There is a meeting-house, with a burial-ground, for the Society of Friends; and a school is endowed with land producing £16 a year.

SCOTFORTH, a township, in the parish and union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 1½ mile (S.) from Lancaster; containing 643 inhabitants. A school is partly supported by subscription.

SCOTHERN (St. German), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 5¼ miles (N. E. by N.) from Lincoln; containing 611 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 5. 2½.; net income, £102; patron, Earl of Scarborough, who, with the rector of Sudbrook, is impropiator. Thomas Grantham, in 1616, bequeathed a rent-charge of £16 for distribution to ten men annually; and there is a charity school.

SCOTSWOOD, a manufacturing village, in the townships of EAST DENTON and BENWELL, chapelry of BENWELL, union of NEWCASTLE, W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (W.)

from Newcastle. This place, which derives its name from the encampment of a Scottish army in its vicinity at the period of the rebellion, is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the Tyne, and on the road from Newcastle to Ryton and Hexham. It comprises between 300 and 400 acres, chiefly in the hands of small occupants, and producing tolerably good crops of corn and hay; the scenery is beautiful, especially in Scotswood dene, which runs from Denton burn to the Tyne, studded all along with hanging woods, and affording charming walks. On one side is a rich mine of very superior fire-clay, leased by William Ord, Esq., M.P., to Messrs. Robert Lister and Sons, who have formed a tramroad for conveying the clay to their works, where it is formed into fire-bricks for blast and other furnaces, and into crucibles, gas-retorts, copings, gas-mains, pipes for heating churches, vases, pedestals, &c. The Scotswood fire-brick works were established by Mr. Thomas Carr in 1827, and employ about 50 hands in making bricks used in blast-furnaces for smelting. Mr. Nathaniel Grace, in 1805, erected an extensive mill for brown and other papers; Messrs. Ralph Ramsay and Brother have also a large paper-mill, and there are, besides, a lamp-black and a coal-tar manufactory. The place is convenient for the shipment of its various produce, and the river is here crossed by a magnificent suspension bridge. Mr. Grace has a beautiful villa, with ornamental gardens, from which are fine views of the country, of the Tyne, and the suspension and railway bridges; and Mr. William Ridley Carr, Mr. Lister, Jun., Mrs. Ramsay, and others, have also neat residences with similar prospects. An excellent inn, built by Mr. Ord, and overlooking the Tyne, is a favourite resort for fishing parties, and the inhabitants of Newcastle. About seven years since, a chapel of ease was erected at Bell's Close, where divine service is performed on Sunday in the afternoon; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Traces of ancient military works exist; cannon-balls, swords, &c., have been found, and immediately above the village are the remains of an encampment in the form of a crescent, where it is supposed the Scottish army took its bold position.

SCOTTER (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Gainsborough; containing 1172 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 5000 acres, of which the soil varies from a light sand to gravel, loam, and clay; the surface is generally flat, with some alternation of hilly ground, and the river Eau runs through the parish, and falls into the Trent, which forms its north-west boundary. A charter for a market on Thursday, and a fair on July 10th, was granted by Richard I.; the former has been discontinued, but there is a fair for horses and cattle on July 6th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 4. 2.; net income, £814; patron, Bishop of Peterborough. The tithes were commuted for land, under an act of inclosure, in 1808, when, also, 57 acres were allotted for the repair of the church. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; likewise a national school.

SCOTTLETHORP, a hamlet, in the parish of EDENHAM, union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 137 inhabitants.

SCOTTON (St. GENEWYS), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Gainsborough; containing, with part of the hamlet of East Ferry, 490 inhabitants, of whom 363 are in Scotton township. The parish is bounded on the west by the Trent, and comprises 4358 acres, of which 2030 are uninclosed common, chiefly moor and peat; the soil of the cultivated lands is a rich loam. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £23, and in the gift of Sir Richard Frederick, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £650, and the glebe comprises 71 acres. At East Ferry is a chapel of ease; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SCOTTON, a township, partly in the parish of CATTERICK, and partly in that of BROMPTON-PATRICK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W.) from Catterick; comprising an area of 1166 acres, and containing 139 inhabitants.

SCOTTON, a township, in the parish of FARNHAM, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Knaresborough; containing 298 inhabitants. This place is situated in a vale of the same name, watered by the small river Nidd, and was formerly the residence of the Percy and Pulleyn families, whose ancient mansions are partly remaining, and have been converted into farm-houses. The township comprises by computation 1083 acres of rich land, about half of which is arable, and the rest pasture. There are some quarries of good building-stone; and a bleaching ground and works are situated here. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1828. There are a place of worship for Wesleyans, and a burial-ground belonging to the Society of Friends.

SCOTTOW (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of AYLHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 10 miles (N. by E.) from Norwich; containing 539 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Norwich to North Walsham, and comprises 2120a. 3r., of which 1785 acres are arable, 201 pasture and meadow, and 115 woodland and plantations. Scottow Hall, the seat of Sir T. H. E. Durrant, Bart., is beautifully situated. A fair is held on Easter-Tuesday. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Belaugh, and valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 6½.; appropriator, Bishop of Norwich. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £492. 10., and the vicarial for £228; the appropriate glebe is 27 acres, and the vicarial 19, the latter with a handsome house, erected by the Rev. John Lubbock, incumbent. The church is in the decorated English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and has in the chancel some monuments to the Durrant family; it was repewed and beautified in 1833, at the expense of Sir T. H. E. Durrant. A school is supported by subscription; and the poor have 21 acres of land allotted on the inclosure of the parish in 1829.

SCOTT-WILLOUGHBY.—See WILLOUGHBY-SCOTT.

SCOULTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Hingham; containing 360 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Norwich to Watton, and comprises 2193a. 36p., of which 1488 acres are arable, 494 meadow and pasture, 29 water, and 153 woodland and plantations. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 2., and in the gift of John Weyland, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe comprises 53 acres. The church has a low tower, of which the upper story is octangular. A very handsome school, with a house for the master, has recently been erected by Mr. Weyland.

SCRAFTON, WEST, a township, in the parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Middleham; containing 156 inhabitants. At this place, in which the family of Forster have for a very considerable time possessed property, the abbot of Coverham anciently held a carucate of land, and also pasture for 24 head of cattle; and Scrafton Grange, now a farmhouse, was once connected with the abbey. The township is situated on the east of the river Cover, and comprises 3040 acres; chiefly uncultivated hills; coal and lead are found.

SCRAPTOFT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Leicester; containing 89 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10.; net income, £161; patrons and improprators, the family of Hartopp. A national school has been established. Here is a curious and ancient stone cross.

SCRATBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of EAST FLEGG, county of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Caistor; containing 131 inhabitants. This place, also called Scroteby, is the property of Lady Hamilton; the manor comprises about 300 acres, and an act for inclosing the lands was passed in 1842. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1548 to that of Ormsby St. Margaret. The church has been long in ruins.

SCRAYFIELD (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Horn-castle; containing 33 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 677 acres, appears, from the remains of various earthworks, to have shared in the hostilities of the parliamentary war, when a battle took place in the immediate vicinity. The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Hameringham, and valued in the king's books at £4. 10. $4\frac{1}{2}$.: the tithes have been commuted for £135, and the glebe comprises 36 acres. The church is in ruins.

SCRAYINGHAM (ST. PETER), a parish, partly in the union of POCKLINGTON, and partly in that of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Howsham and Leppington, 515 inhabitants, of whom 186 are in Scrayingham township, 11 miles (N. E. by E.) from York. The parish, anciently called Skeringham, is bounded on the west by the navigable river Derwent, and comprises about 4780 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder, with the exception of 300 acres of woodland, meadow and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 11. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, about £750; patron, the Crown. The tithes were commuted for land, under an act of inclosure, in 1825. The interior of the church, an ancient structure, was repaired in 1801; its register bears the date of 1648. There is a chapel of ease at Leppington.

SCREDINGTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Sleaford; containing 364 inhabitants, and consisting of about 2593 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 4.; net income, £80. The tithes were commuted for land in 1796; the glebe comprises 150 acres. The church is a plain edifice, in a state of partial dilapidation. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. An allotment of land was given to the poor at the time of the inclosure, and produces £20 per annum.

SCREENWOOD, a township, in the parish of ALNHAM, union of ROTHBURY, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. W.) from Rothbury; containing 40 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile south from Alnham, and not far from the river Aln, which has its source in the immediate vicinity. The township comprises about 1000 acres, of which 800 are arable, and 200 pasture, the property of Thomas Riddell, Esq., of Felton Park, and occupied by Mr. Thomas Forster; the surface is mountainous, and the soil various, resting upon a whinstone substratum. There are ruins of an old keep.

SCREMBY (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Spilsby; containing, with the hamlet of Grebby, 217 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1300 acres, of which the substratum is principally chalk, quarried for dressing the land, and also burnt into lime. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £250; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. Brackenbury: the glebe comprises 36 acres. The church is a neat modern structure.

SCREMERSTON, an ecclesiastical district, in the parochial chapelry of ANCROFT, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, ISLANDSHIRE, county of DURHAM, but locally to the north of the county of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Berwick; containing 692 inhabitants. In 1386, the village here was destroyed by the Scots, previously to which time it was held of the bishops of Durham by the family of Swinhowe; it subsequently belonged to the unfortunate Earl of Derwentwater, and is now the property of Greenwich Hospital. A large colliery is worked, employing many hands. The living is endowed with £100 per annum, and is in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham: there is a glebe-house. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, and consecrated 23rd August, 1843, is in the early English style, with a square tower and spire, and contains 350 sittings, of which 280 are free; it has been erected, together with a national school-room, and a master's house, on a site of two acres given by the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, who also contributed the stone for the buildings out of their quarries; the expense of erection, £1420, was defrayed by subscription. The commissioners have assigned £10 yearly towards the support of the school.

SCREVETON (ST. WINIFRED), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S.

division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Newark; containing 315 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1000 acres, of which the soil is chiefly clay, alternated with sand; the surface, though generally flat, rises in some parts to a considerable elevation, and the lower grounds are watered by a rivulet called the Car Dyke. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 1.; net income, £252; patrons, the Trustees of T. Hildyard, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1776. The church contains an altar-tomb and effigy to the memory of Gen. Whalley, the supposed executioner of Charles I., who commanded under Cromwell; figures of his three wives and twenty-two children are represented on the same monument. Dr. Thoroton, the antiquary and topographer, was born in an ancient mansion here belonging to his family.

SCRIVELSBY (St. BENEDICT), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, S. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Horncastle; containing 130 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 3110 acres, of which the soil is chiefly a rich sandy loam, alternated with strong clay, and the surface in some parts flat, and in others elevated, but not hilly. The living is a rectory, with that of Daldery united in the year 1731, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 6.; net income, £562; patron, Sir Henry Dymoke, Bart. This gentleman's family hold the manor by "the service of grand serjeantry, that, whenever a king of England is to be crowned, the lord for the time being, or, in case of sickness, some one for him, shall come well armed for battle, on a good horse, into the presence of the monarch, at his coronation, and make proclamation that, if any will say that the king has not a title to his kingdom and crown, he shall be ready and prepared to defend the right of the king and his kingdom, and the dignity of his crown, in his own person, against him and any other whatsoever."

SCRIVEN, with TENTERGATE, a township, in the parish of KNARESBOROUGH, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 1 mile (N. by W.) from Knaresborough; containing 1435 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1350 acres, and includes the villages of Scriven and Tentergate, which latter forms part of the town of Knaresborough. Scriven Park, the residence of Sir Charles Slingsley, Bart., is a handsome residence. The tithes have been commuted for £212. 1. 4., of which £60. 1. 4. are payable to the vicar, and £152 to the prebendary of Beechill and Knaresborough.

SCROOBY (St. WILFRID), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, and within the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Bawtry; containing 297 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Idle, and comprises 1523*a.* 3*r.* 36*p.*, of which the commons were inclosed in 1775; the soil is light and sandy. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Sutton: the church is a small ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The parish contains some remains of a palace of the archbishops of York, who had free warren of the lands here in the time of Edward II.; in the reign of Henry VIII., the palace was the occasional residence of Wolsey, but the small remains are now converted into a farm-house. In the garden is a mulberry-tree, said to have been planted by the cardinal.

SCROPTON (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Derby; containing, with the township of Foston, 523 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3280 acres; of which the surface is flat, and the lands are watered by the river Dove. An allotment of Needwood forest in Staffordshire, on which houses have been erected, was, under an inclosure act, awarded to Scropton. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £49; patron and improprator, J. Broadhurst, Esq. The glebe comprises 15 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

SCRUTON (St. RADEGUND), a parish, in the union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bedale; containing 410 inhabitants. This parish, which extends from the river Swale on the east, to the old Roman road, now called Leeming-lane, on the west, comprises about 1800 acres, chiefly the property of Henry Coore, Esq., who is lord of the manor. One-third of the land is meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable; the surface is flat, and the scenery unmarked by any features of interest, but the soil is fertile, and the arable lands produce abundant crops. Scruton Hall, the seat of Mr. Coore, is a handsome spacious mansion, situated in a demesne embellished with plantations. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 0. 5., and in the patronage of Mr. Coore: the tithes have been commuted for £422. 6., and the glebe comprises 81 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, with a tower. A parochial school is supported; and there are some small charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. The Rev. Thomas Gale, Dean of York, known for his literary and antiquarian researches, was born here in 1636.

SCULCOATES (St. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, in the borough of HULL, E. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N.) from Hull; containing 16,682 inhabitants. This place is noticed in Domesday book as one of the lordships granted to Ralph de Mortimer, a follower of the Conqueror. Its population, less than a century ago, did not exceed 100, but the southern part of the parish, since the construction of a dock on the western bank of the river Hull, in 1774, has been extensively built upon, and now forms a large and populous part of the environs of Hull. The petty-sessions for the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill are held here, in a hall recently erected. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £295. The parochial church, a small neat structure, was rebuilt in the year 1760; and an act was obtained in 1814, for the erection of an additional edifice called Christ-church, which was consecrated in 1822, and is a handsome building of white brick and Roche-abbey stone, erected at a cost of upwards of £7000, partly defrayed by subscription: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Trustees; net income, £169. There is a new burial-ground of seven acres, with a sacristy attached. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics have places of worship; and five schools, of which three are on the national system (two boys' and one girls'), are supported by subscription. The poor law union of Sculcoates comprises 18 parishes or places, and contains a population of 36,207.

SCULTHORPE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. W.) from Fakenham; containing 591 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the gift of Sir J. T. Jones, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £550, and the glebe comprises 71 acres, with a house, nearly rebuilt by the Rev. Edward Marsham, incumbent. The church, a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, was erected by Sir Robert Knollys, K.G., who, from a common soldier, rose to rank and eminence under Edward III., and acquired an immense fortune; he died at the manor-house here, in the 92nd year of his age. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SCUNTHORPE, a township, in the parish of FRODINGHAM, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8½ miles (W. N. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 289 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SEABEACH, a hamlet, partly in the parish of BOXGROVE, and partly in that of EARTHAM, union of WEST-HAMPNETT, hundred of BOX and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 31 inhabitants.

SEA-BOROUGH, a parish, in the union of BEAMINSTER, hundred of CREWKERNE, W. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Crewkerne; containing 84 inhabitants. It comprises 587a. 3r. 16p., of which 213 acres are arable, 332 meadow and pasture, 19 woodland, and 14 garden and orchard grounds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the gift of James Gear, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £130, and the glebe comprises 28 acres.

SEABRIDGE, a township, in the union of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, partly in the parish of SWINNERTON, but chiefly in that of STOKE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, and of the county of STAFFORD, 1½ mile (S. by W.) from Newcastle; containing 166 inhabitants.

SEABROOK, a hamlet, in the parishes of CHEDDINGTON and IVINGHOE, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 1½ mile (W. N. W.) from Ivinghoe; containing 62 inhabitants.

SEACOMBE, with POULTON, a township, in the parish of WALLASEY, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 11¾ miles (N. N. E.) from Great Neston; containing 2446 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the river Mersey, and situated opposite to the termination of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SEACOURT, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 29 inhabitants.

SEACROFT, a township, in the parish of WHITKIRK, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK,

W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Leeds; containing 1020 inhabitants. This place was the scene of a great battle during the heptarchy, which occurred on Win Moor; and in the reign of Charles I. there was an engagement between the parliamentarians under Fairfax and the royalists commanded by Lord Goring, in which the latter obtained a complete victory. The township comprises by computation 1750 acres of fertile land, and the substratum abounds with coal, of which there are several mines in operation. The village is on the road from Leeds to York, and has a cheerful aspect. A tithe rent-charge of £357 is paid to Trinity College, Cambridge, and one of £22 is received by the vicar. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A national school is supported by subscription, and the schoolroom is licensed by the bishop for divine service.

SEAFORD (ST. LEONARD), a cinque-port and parish, and formerly a representative borough and market-town, in the union of EAST BOURNE, locally in the hundred of FLEXBOROUGH, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 42 miles (E. by S.) from Chichester, and 59¼ (S. S. E.) from London; containing 953 inhabitants. This place, supposed to have been the Civitas Anderida of the Romans, is situated on the road from Newhaven to East Bourne, and is bounded on the east by the Cuckmere river, and on the south by the English Channel. It was a considerable town, with four churches and chapels, until burnt by the French in one of those invasions to which the whole of the southern coast was anciently exposed; it has also declined greatly in extent from frequent encroachments of the sea, and in 1824 an irruption, breaking through the barrier of shingle by which it was defended, greatly damaged the town and neighbourhood. The cliffs, which are of singular formation, are in some parts 300 feet in height, and on the summit are the remains of a circular camp. The river Ouse, the estuary of which formerly constituted its harbour, now empties itself into the sea at Newhaven, about three miles westward. Prawns of large size and of fine flavour are found in abundance; and fairs are held on March 15th and July 25th. Seaford was originally a member of Hastings, but was made a port by charter of Henry VIII., who incorporated the inhabitants, under the style of "the Bailiffs, Jurats, and Commonalty of the town, parish, and borough of Seaford." The bailiff and other officers are chosen on September 29th; the jurats are eight in number, of whom four are resident magistrates, and hold quarter-sessions for the borough, and petty-sessions occasionally. The town-hall is a small edifice under which is a temporary prison. The place first sent barons to parliament in the 26th of Edward I., and continued to the 21st of Richard II., from which time there was a suspension until the reign of Edward IV., when the privilege was restored; but the borough was entirely disfranchised in the 2nd of William IV. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Sutton, and valued in the king's books at £11. 15.: the tithes have been commuted for £240. The church is the nave of one of the old churches, with a tower, and a small chancel of later date; and although the modern repairs and additions do not harmonize with the original style, the building still retains several vestiges of grandeur and beauty. A school is partly supported by subscription. Seaford gives the title of Baron to the family of Ellis.

SEAFORTH, a chapelry, in the township of LITHERLAND, parish of SEPTON, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N.) from Liverpool; containing 925 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £87; patron, John Gladstone, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas, and containing about 800 sittings, is a neat edifice, erected in 1815, at the expense of the present patron. Attached is a good house, with about two acres of land.

SEAGRAVE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Mountsorrel; containing 451 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2405 acres; the substratum contains limestone of excellent quality, but not much wrought. A few of the population are employed in frame-work knitting. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 8. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Queen's College, Cambridge, with a net income of £404, arising from land assigned in commutation of tithes, in 1760: the glebe comprises 380 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the early English style. £11 per annum, the bequest of William Richards in 1799, and the produce of an allotment at the inclosure, are paid for teaching children; and there is a national school.

SEAGRY, LOWER and UPPER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPENHAM, hundred of MALMESBURY, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Malmesbury; containing 231 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the improprator, the Earl of Carnarvon: the great tithes have been commuted for £163, and the vicarial for £159. 16. The church is an irregular structure, combining portions in the Norman and early English styles; it contains a very ancient font, and under a niche in one of the walls is a recumbent effigy of a female.

SEAHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EASINGTON, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Sunderland; containing, with the township of Seaton with Slingley, 327 inhabitants, of whom 153 are in Seaham. The parish comprises 2871a. 37p., on the coast of the German Sea, by which it is bounded on the east, and is separated from Seaham Harbour, in the parish of Dalton-le-Dale, by a rivulet, over which is a neat wooden bridge; the surface is varied, commanding some fine views, and the scenery abounds with interesting features. Seaham Hall, formerly the manor-house of the Milbank family, and now the property of the Marquess of Londonderry, is a stately mansion occupied occasionally by his lordship as a marine residence, and is beautifully situated in tastefully-ornamented grounds, with prospects of the sea, Redcar, and the mouth of the Tees. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 5.; net income, £666; patron, the Marquess. The church is an ancient structure with a square embattled tower, and is on rising ground, conspicuous in the landscape; it contains an elegant font, and in the register of the parish is the signature of Lord Byron, whose marriage was solemnized at Seaham Hall. The parsonage-house is a handsome building in the Elizabethan style, the residence of the Rev. Richard Moorsoom, who was inducted to the vicarage in 1843. The place gives the inferior title of Baron to the Marquess of Londonderry.

SEAHAM-HARBOUR, a sea-port, and an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of DALTON-LE-DALE, union of EASINGTON, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Sunderland; containing 2011 inhabitants. This place was formerly the property of Sir Ralph Milbank Noel, Bart., from whom it was purchased in 1822 by the Marquess of Londonderry, its present owner. The peculiar advantages of its situation on the coast of the German Sea, had suggested the formation of a harbour to Mr. Taylor, the steward of Sir Ralph, and some plans for its construction had been drawn out by Mr. Chapman, engineer, of Newcastle, in 1820; but the transfer of the property delayed the commencement of the works till 1823, when the marquess employed Mr. Chapman to carry into execution part of the original design. After great perseverance, and a vast outlay of capital, one of the safest and most commodious harbours on this portion of the coast was completed; and thus was laid the foundation of the present importance and increasing prosperity of the town. Being on a prominent part of the shore, the harbour has an easy outlet to the south, enabling vessels sailing in that direction to clear the Yorkshire coast in north-easterly winds, when those from the river Tees are too deeply embayed to sail in either direction. The outer harbour to the north, which is more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres in extent, forms an entrance to the inner harbour, which is of like size; and the harbours to the south, of which the outer is nearly of the same dimensions as that to the north, together comprise an area of $11\frac{1}{2}$ acres. Spacious quays, with wharfs and various jetties for facilitating the shipping of coal and other produce, have been erected, and every requisite arrangement has been made for the safe anchorage and protection of vessels entering the port. The foundation-stone of the harbour was laid by the marquess, on the 28th of November, 1828; the first stone of the first house in the town was laid by the marquess's second son, Viscount Seaham, on the same day, and the first shipment of coal was made on the 25th of July, 1831.

The town, which, from the opening of additional mines, almost annually, in the adjacent districts, is rapidly increasing in importance, is well adapted to the trade of the port; an extensive pottery has been established, and there is a large corn-mill, driven by steam. Railways from the various collieries to the harbour meet here; there are several inns, and the place is abundantly supplied with provisions of every kind, and with stores for the use of vessels. The amount of export duty on coal shipped from the port, during the year ending on the 5th of January, 1843, was £573. 7. The ecclesiastical district comprises the whole township of Dawdon: the church, dedicated to St. John, was erected in 1837, chiefly through the instrumentality of the Rev. J. H. Brown, vicar of Dalton, at an expense of £1668, raised by subscription, aided by grants from the Incorporated and other societies. It is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and contains 400 sittings, of which half are free; the interior is neatly arranged, and the windows are embellished with the armorial bearings of the Marquess of Londonderry and of the several families with which his lordship is connected by birth or alliance. The insertion of the stained glass, the erection of a small gallery, and the purchase of a clock and a good barrel organ, were effected by aid of the surplus proceeds of a bazaar held under the patronage of Lady Londonderry, for the liquidation of a debt of £433 due for the erection of the church. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Marquess; net income, £250. An infirmary was erected in 1844, under the auspices of the marchioness, with funds arising from the publication of a volume of travels by her ladyship.

SEAL (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1618 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 4000 acres, of which the surface is partly hilly, and partly level; the soil is chiefly sand and clay, and the substratum abounds with ragstone, which is quarried, and with layers of sand of various quality, some of which, consisting almost entirely of crystals of pure siliceous earth, are well adapted for the manufacture of glass; these layers are intersected in several instances by veins of iron-stone. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Kemsing: the tithes have been commuted for £152 and £458, payable to the impropriator and the vicar respectively. A school for eight girls is endowed, and there is a national school supported by subscription. A handsome school-house has been erected at Golden-Green, by the Countess Amherst.

SEAL, a parish, in the hundred of FARNHAM, W. division of SURREY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Farnham; containing, with the hamlet of Tongham, 428 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2967 acres, of which 1258 are arable, 236 woodland, 43 hop-grounds, and 691 waste: there are some very extensive chalk-pits, and the district is intersected by a high ridge called the Hog's Back, commanding a fine view over the surrounding country. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £44; patron and appropriator, the Archdeacon of Surrey, whose tithes have been commuted for £377. The church, an ancient structure in the early English style, has been within the last few years enlarged by the addition of a north chancel, in which are several monuments of the Long and Woodroffe families. A school is supported by subscription, for the benefit of the children of the poor.

SEAL, NETHER and OVER (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of ASHBY, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ashby; containing, with part of the chapelry of Blackfordby, and part of the hamlet of Donisthorpe, 1281 inhabitants, of whom 535 are in Nether Seal, and 513 in Over Seal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £950; patron and incumbent, the Rev. William N. Gresley. The Incorporated Society granted £100, in 1841, towards the erection of an additional church. Two schools are partly supported by subscription.

SEAMER (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Stokesley; containing 247 inhabitants. The manor at the time of the Conquest was held by Gospatric, Earl of Northumberland, till that nobleman joined in rebellion against the king, and his estates were forfeited, when a grant was made of the place to the Earl of Morton. Afterwards, it appears to have passed to the Meinelles; and among other families that have held lands here, occur those of D'Arcy and Wyndham. The parish, which is in the district of Cleveland, and separated on the south from the parish of Stokesley by the river Tame, comprises 3232 acres, of which 2178 are arable, and the remainder pasture and meadow; the surface is varied; the soil around the village is a rich sandy loam, and in other parts of inferior quality. The village, which is neatly built, occupies an elevated situation, and from the churchyard is obtained a distant view of the German Ocean. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron and impropriator, Col. Wyndham: the great tithes have been commuted for £367. 13., and the perpetual curate's for £16. 10. The church, a neat edifice in the later English style, with a square tower, was rebuilt in 1822, and contains a marble font presented by Sir Cuthbert Herring, by whom it was brought from Alexandria. A parochial school was built in 1841, by Col. Wyndham.—See NEWBY.

SEAMER (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of East Ayton and Irton, 1121 inhabitants, of whom 625 are in Seamer township, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Scarborough. An insurrection headed by the parish-clerk and two others, broke out here in the reign of Edward VI., in 1549, and had for its objects the restoration of the Roman Catholic religion, and the abolition of monarchy. The rebels, to the number of 3000, after committing great excesses, laid down their arms, upon being offered the king's pardon; but the ringleaders were taken and executed at York, in September of the same year. The parish is situated on the wold road to Driffield and York, is bounded by the river Derwent on the north-west, and comprises about 7760 acres, a level champaign country, chiefly of a gravelly soil: good stone is obtained for building and for making lime. A fair, the grant of Richard II., is held on July 15th, and a market on the first Monday in every month, for cattle and sheep. The living is a vicarage, with Cayton annexed, valued in the king's books at £18. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £243; patron and impropriator, W. J. Denison, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1809. The church is a handsome cruciform structure; the tower was struck by lightning, and taken down, in 1710. At East Ayton is a chapel of ease. The Wesleyans have a place of worship; and there is a school, built and endowed by the lord of the manor, in 1814. There are ruins of a Cistercian monastery which was connected with the abbey of Whitby.

SEARBY (St. NICHOLAS), with OWMBY, a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 234 inhabitants, of whom 126 are in Searby. The parish comprises by measurement 4600 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the vicarage of Owmbly annexed, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £200. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under acts of inclosure, in 1764 and 1795; the glebe comprises 227 acres. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and schools are partly supported by subscription.

SEASALTER LIBERTY (St. ALPHAGE), a parish, in the union of BLEAN, hundred of WHITSTABLE, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 5½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Canterbury; containing 1064 inhabitants. On the sea-shore is an extensive oyster-bed called the Pollard, belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, who let it to the Whitstable company of free dredgers. Four annual fairs were held here, but they have been long discontinued. The parish comprises 1320a. 3r. 33p., whereof 308 acres are arable, 983 meadow, nearly 19 woodland, and 11 gardens, &c. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £160, and the appropriate for £225, payable to the Dean and Chapter, who are also patrons, and have a glebe of 39 acres. There is a place of worship for Independents. Mrs. Frances Fagg, in 1794, bequeathed £800 three per cents. for the support of a school.

SEASONCOTE, or SEZINCOTE (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of STOW, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Moreton; containing 67 inhabitants, and comprising 1432 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Longborough, and valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 11. The church was demolished about 80 years since.

SEATHWAITE, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-IRELETH, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 17 miles (N. by W.) from Ulverstone; containing 202 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises about 2000 acres, of which 500 are arable and meadow in nearly equal portions, 35 wood, and the remainder pasture. There is also a considerable portion of waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patrons, the Devises of the late R. Towers, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £40, payable to the Dean and Chapter of York, and £1. 0. 3., payable to the incumbent of the chapelry; and there is a glebe of about three-quarters of an acre.

SEATON, a township, in the parish of CAMMERTON, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 1¾ mile (N. E.) from Workington; containing 787 inhabitants. Here are extensive collieries and iron-works, near which the Derwent is crossed by a stone bridge, opposite to Workington. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £295. 0. 6., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle; and there is a glebe of nearly 7 acres.

SEATON (St. GREGORY), a parish, in the hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 2½ miles (S.) from Colyton; containing, with Beer tything, 1996 inhabitants, of whom 765 are in the town. This place, situated on the sea-coast, is supposed to have been the Moridunum of Antoninus, and a landing-place of the Danes: Leland speaks of it as having been "a notable haven," and of the unsuccessful attempts of the inhabitants "to make a waul within the haven." The town has been much improved of late years, and is now a bathing-place: a pleasure-fair is held on Whit-Tuesday. The parish comprises 2532 acres, of which 65 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 0. 7½.; patron and improprator, Lord Rolle: the great tithes have been commuted for £300, and the vicarial for £260, with a glebe of 12 acres. At Beer is a chapel of ease; and there are places of worship for Independents and Primitive Methodists; also three schools, one endowed with £30 per annum, another with £15, and the third supported by a lady.

SEATON, with SLINGLEY, a township, in the parish of SEAHAM, union of EASINGTON, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 5½ miles (S. by W.) from Sunderland; containing 175 inhabitants. At an early period, Seaton seems to have formed but one integral manor with Seaham: the principal families that once held lands here, are those of Hadham, Blakiston, Middleton, Hebborne, and Wilson. The Durham and Sunderland railway has one of its fixed engines here, of 42-horse power, for working the trains up the ascending plane from Ryhope, which is 4480 yards in length. The village is cheerful, and situated on an easy swell of country, surrounded by green inclosures.

SEATON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Uppingham; containing, with the hamlet of Thorpe-by-Water, 446 inhabitants, of whom 362 are in Seaton hamlet. The parish comprises 1395a. 1r. 21p.; the soil is chiefly a red mould, alternated with blue clay, and of great fertility. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 7. 6.; net income, £649; patron, the Earl of Harborough. The church is a neat structure in the later English style.

SEATON, a township, in the parish of SIGGLES-THORNE, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 10½ miles (N. E. by E.) from Beverley; containing, with the hamlet of Wassand, 338 inhabitants. This place, in Domesday book Setton, at an early period gave name to a resident family; and in the thirteenth century, the abbey of Meaux received a grant of some property here. The township comprises about 1000 acres of land: the village is pleasantly situated on an eminence near Hornsea mere, which is on the east. The tithes have been commuted for £260. There are two places of worship for dissenters; and an infant school has been established, through the benevolence of Lady Strickland.

SEATON-BURN, a village, in the township of WEETSLEET, parish of LONG BENTON, union of TYNE-MOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on the road to Morpeth. Here is an extensive colliery, leased by Lord Ravensworth and Partners, from the Rev. Ralph Henry Brandling, and employing about 300 men and boys; Nicholas Wood, Esq., is viewer, and Henry Isaac Ayton, Esq., resident viewer. Seaton-Burn Hall, skirted by plantations, is one of the residences of the Rev. Mr. Brandling. There is a school-house, built by Henry Hewitson, Esq.

SEATON-CAREW, a township and ecclesiastical district, in the parish of STRANTON, union of STOCKTON, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, and S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Hartlepool, and 10 (N. E. by N.) from Stockton-on-Tees; containing 588 inhabitants. The township comprises 2870 acres, of which 590 are common or waste; the surface is generally level, but with fine views of the Cleveland hills, the towns of Redcar and Hartlepool, the mouth of the Tees, and the bold headlands of Huntcliffe and Rowcliffe, and in clear weather the eye can reach nearly as far as Whitby. The village is considerably resorted to during the bathing season, and contains respectable public, as well as private, accommodation for the visitors; the beach is smooth, and the sands are firm and level to an extent of several miles, affording great convenience for bathing. The Stockton and Hartlepool railway passes through the vicinity by an embankment of puddled clay, which has effectually resisted the inroads of the sea, that frequently washes over it: there is a station a quarter of a mile from the village. Here was a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, long since demolished, though the site is still called Chapel-opening. The present church was built in 1831, and a chancel added in 1842, with a burial-ground, the whole cost being £1600; it is in the early English style, with a square tower and pinnacles, and the interior, which is very neat, has an eastern window of stained glass, executed by Wales, of Newcastle, after one in York cathedral. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £120; patron and incumbent, the Rev. John Lawson. The tithes have been commuted for £242. 10. 11., of which £131. 8. 11. are payable to the impropiator, and £105 to the vicar of Stranton. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and the Society of Friends; and a school is supported by subscription, aided by £5 per annum from Lord Crewe's trustees.

SEATON-DELAVAL, a township, in the parish of EARSDON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from North Shields; containing 1568 inhabitants, and comprising 2676a. 2r. 1p. The surface is undulated and well wooded, and the soil, which is generally a strong clay, and partly arable, produces good crops of wheat and beans. The township abounds with steam coal, which is extensively wrought, under Lord Hastings, mostly by the Seaton-Delaval Company, who commenced the sinking of the pits in 1838: a railway communication to the Tyne facilitates the shipment of the produce. Mr. Robert Thomas Atkinson, the head viewer, has a commodious house, and Mr. John Brown, agent to his lordship, is resident here: the village is neat and uniform. Here are the ruins of one of the most magnificent mansions in the north of England, erected from a design by Sir John Vanbrugh, in 1707, by Admiral Delaval, of freestone supplied from the quarries of the place, and destroyed by fire on January 3rd, 1822; one roof was saved, and portions are about to be restored; around are extensive gardens, and the views of the sea and adjacent country are very beautiful. Near the ruins is the site of the ancient castle of Seaton-Delaval, of which little remains except the chapel, which is a fine specimen of Norman architecture, containing two noble arches, and monuments of a Knight-Templar and his lady, and is ornamented with numerous escutcheons, banners, and pieces of armour: divine service is performed in it every Sunday, for which Lord Hastings presents £40 annually to the minister. The inappropriate tithes, including those of Hartley, have been commuted for £416. 1. 11. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SEATON-HOUSE, with BOULMER, a township, in the parish of LONG HOUGHTON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBROUGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (E.) from Alnwick; containing 153 inhabitants. It is situated on the coast of the North Sea, near that part where the Aln river falls into the ocean; and in the vicinity the waters appear to have overwhelmed a forest of oaks, the enormous roots of which have been occasionally discovered by the removal of the sand. The township consists of farmland and a few cottages.

SEATON, NORTH, a township, in the parish of WOODHORN, union and E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Morpeth; containing 157 inhabitants. This place appears to have been at an early period in the possession of the Seaton family, and in the thirteenth century part was owned by the priory of Tynemouth and the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Since that date the families of Widdrington, Thornton, Ogle, Lumley, and Rogers have all held lands; and the township is now exclusively the property of William Watson, Esq., who has an elegant mansion here, surrounded by scenery of pleasing character. The township comprises about 1431 acres; the soil is strong, well adapted for the growth of wheat, and under profitable cultivation. There is a quarry of gritstone, of good quality for grindstones. The village is situated about half a mile from the sea; and on the sea-shore was formerly an hospital.

SEATON-ROSS (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Pocklington; containing 540 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3252a. 33p., of which 135 acres are woodland, and the remainder arable and pasture, in nearly equal portions. The village, which is long and straggling, is pleasantly situated about a mile and a half north of the road from Holme to Harlthorpe. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of W. C. Maxwell, Esq., the impropiator, and has a net income of £93. The church is a neat, modern, brick edifice, rebuilt at the expense of the parishioners and W. H. M. Constable, Esq., in 1789. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists.

SEATON-SLUICE, or HARTLEY-PANS, a sea-port, in the township of HARTLEY, parish of EARSDON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N.) from North Shields; containing 744 inhabitants. This place is situated at the mouth of a rivulet called Seaton-burn, where Sir Ralph Delaval, with great difficulty and expense, formed a harbour, and constructed a sluice upon the brook, with flood-gates to retain the water from the flow of the tide till the ebb: when a sufficient quantity is collected, it is discharged at low water, to cleanse the bed of the harbour, and remove from it every impediment to its navigation. Considerable improvements upon the original plan were subsequently made by the late Lord Delaval, who also formed a second entrance, by cutting a channel through the solid rock to the sea, by which larger vessels can enter with facility, and which is crossed by a drawbridge. From fifteen to twenty vessels, of 300 tons' burthen each, can now ride in safety at the port, and sail in or out with any wind. Coal is shipped for the London and other markets, from the Hartley colliery, of which the produce is in much request for the use of steam-vessels: here, likewise, are the extensive glass-bottle works of Messrs. Jobling and Company, of which the lofty cones form conspicuous features as seen from sea; and there are also some malt-kilns, and a brewery. A blockhouse and battery were erected during the late war, for the defence of the port, which is subordinate to that of Newcastle. Salt was formerly made here in huge pans; hence the affix to one of the names of the place.

SEAVINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (E.) from Ilminster; containing, with the tything of Seavington-Abbott, 374 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £50: tithes belonging to Earl Poulett, the patron, have been commuted for £350, and others, annexed to the prebend of Ilton, for £40.

SEAVINGTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Ilminster; containing, with the chapelry of Dinnington, 506 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the gift of Earl Poulett: the tithes have been commuted for £132, and the glebe comprises 26 acres.

SEAVINGTON-ABBOTT, a tything, in the parish of SEAVINGTON ST. MARY, union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 95 inhabitants.

SEBERGHAM (Virgin Mary), a parish, in the union of WIGTON, ward, and E. division of the county, of CUMBERLAND; containing 853 inhabitants, of whom 495 are in the division of High bound, and 358 in that of Low bound, the former $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles, and the latter $6\frac{1}{4}$ (S. E. by E.) from Wigton. The parish is situated on the river Caldew, of which the south branch becomes subterraneous at Haltcliffe bridge, where it disappears under the high land for nearly three miles, and re-issues at Hives-Hill mill. Near the church it is crossed by a bridge erected in 1689, by Alexander Denton, one of the justices of the court of common pleas; and about a mile below is another bridge of one arch, built in 1772, near the site of a structure destroyed by a great flood the year before. A considerable quantity of limestone is quarried and burnt into lime; and there are extensive mines of coal, and a powerful mineral spring. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £139; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church, a very neat structure, occupying the site of an ancient hermitage, was repaired in 1774, and in 1785. A national school has been lately rebuilt.

SECKINGTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Tamworth; containing 118 inhabitants. This parish, which was of some note at the period of the heptarchy, comprises by measurement 816 acres, exclusively of roads, 450 acres being arable land, producing wheat and barley, and the remainder pasture; the soil is chiefly clay, and the scenery is diversified with wood, principally oak, ask, and larch. The Derby Junction railway passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Sir R. Burdett, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £193, and there are 28 acres of excellent glebe, with a good parsonage-house. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, and contains an ancient monument in fine preservation to an ancestor of Sir R. Burdett, a branch of whose family formerly resided here. Near the church are vestiges of a large encampment; and in the neighbourhood is the site of a small priory, founded by William Burdett, in the reign of Henry II.

SEDBERGH (St. Andrew), a market-town and parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelries of Dent and Garsdale, 4836 inhabitants, of whom 2268 are in the township of Sedbergh, 77 miles (W. N. W.) from York, and 260 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place occupies a secluded vale, in a mountainous district, and contains two cotton-mills and one cloth-mill, in which several persons are employed. Coal is obtained from a mine rather more than two miles distant, near the river Rother. The market is on Wednesday; fairs are held on March 20th, the Wednesday in Whitsun-week, and October 29th, chiefly for live stock; and a court for the recovery of small debts has been recently instituted. The parish is situated between the rivers Rother and Lune, and comprises by computation 50,000 acres, of which more than 30,000 are uninclosed and mountainous moorland; in the township are 21,402 acres, whereof 14,550 are common or waste. The surface is boldly varied, and the scenery abounds with features of romantic grandeur; in the vale of the Rother, about four miles to the north of the town, is a picturesque cascade called Cautley Spout, the water of which falls from a height of sixty feet. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 8.; net income, £184; patrons and impropriators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church appears, from its Norman arches and piers, to be of ancient date, but to have been partially rebuilt, the windows being all of a debased character. A chapel at Howgill, originally founded by John Robinson, Esq., in 1688, was rebuilt in 1838, at an expense of £450, raised by subscription. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Methodists. The free grammar school was instituted in the 5th of Edward VI., by Roger Lupton, D.D., Provost of Eton College, who endowed it with lands now producing a rental of £500. Exhibitions to two fellowships and eight scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge, were founded in favour of the school, by Dr. Lupton; one fellowship and two scholarships, in the same college, were also established for boys from the school, by Henry Hebblethwayte, citizen and draper of London; and a further exhibition for one of the scholars, being a native of Sedbergh, to either of the universities, is given by the governors, in appropriation of three bequests at their disposal. A national school for boys and girls is supported by subscription; and at Howgill is a school, the income of which is £30 per annum. The remains of a camp are still visible, round a conical hill called Castle Tower.

SEDBURY, a hamlet, in the parish of TIDENHAM, union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 173 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the Severn, and on the west by the river Wye, by which it is separated from Chepstow.

SEDEBERROW, a parish, in the union of EVESSHAM, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Evesham; containing 318 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1014 acres, chiefly arable; the soil is a strong reddish clay, producing good wheat and beans; the surface is generally level, and the lands are watered by the river Isporne. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 15. 7½.; net income, £228; patrons, Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1810; the glebe comprises about 200 acres, with a house. The church has a small octagonal tower surmounted by a spire, and exhibits portions in the decorated and later English styles. A school is supported by subscription.

SEDEBROOK (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Grantham; containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, in mediety, with East Allington united, one valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 9., and the other at £7. 4. 7.; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the net income is £638. Lady Margaret Thorold, in 1718, gave land now producing £347 per annum, for the foundation of schools at various places; £25 are paid to this parish.

SEDEFIELD (St. EDMUND), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; comprising the chapelry of Embleton, and the townships of Bradbury, Butterwick, Fishburn, Foxton with Shotton, Mordon, and Sedgfield; and containing 2015 inhabitants, of whom 1345 are in the town, 5 miles (E.) from Rushyford, 11 (S. E. by S.) from Durham, and 255½ (N. by W.) from London. This place occupies an eminence commanding an extensive prospect to the south and south-east, and is remarkable for the peculiar salubrity of its atmosphere, and the longevity of its population, attributable, in a great degree, to the openness of its site, and the fine gravel soil on which it stands; the inhabitants are supplied with water from springs. The centre of the town forms a spacious square, where a market, granted in 1312 by a charter of Bishop Kellaw, is held every Friday; and a fair takes place on the first Friday in each month, for the sale of hogs. A halmote court is held here once in eighteen months, in rotation with Cornforth and Bishop's-Middleham, for the recovery of debts under 40s., at which the bishop's steward presides. The parish comprises 17,471 acres, of which the greater part is arable, but there is fine pasture land all round the town. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £73. 18. 1½., and in the gift of the Bishop of Durham: the tithes have been commuted for £1481. 7., with a glebe of 385 acres in Sedgfield township; and the glebe of Bradbury comprises 60 acres, that of Fishburn 69, and of Embleton 2. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, combining the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles; the interior has many features of interest, including a fine old organ. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school here has an income of about £50 per annum, for which eight children are instructed; and six are educated and clothed at another school, from a benefaction of £400 three per cent. Bank annuities, by Richard Wright, Esq., in 1790. The grammar school and master's house were lately rebuilt, partly from the accumulated funds of a school at Bishop-Auckland, and partly by subscription, towards which £600 were given by the trustees of Bishop Barrington, £100 by the Rev. Viscount Barrington, and £150 by the trustees of Lord Crewe. In 1782, John Lowther, Esq., bequeathed £600 three per cent. Bank annuities, for the instruction and clothing of girls; and there is a national school. An almshouse for ten men and women was founded, and endowed with £44 per annum, arising from land, by Thomas Cooper; and additional benefactions were made by William Wrightson and Thomas Foster, the latter of whom bequeathed the interest of £3435 three per cent. consols., for the inmates. Upwards of ninety-one acres of land belong to a charity instituted by Lady Frevill, in 1630, for purposes of benevolence; in addition to which there are several minor benefactions. The poor law union of Sedgfield comprises 23 places, containing a population of 6113. Mrs. Elizabeth Elstob, the celebrated Saxon scholar, who died in 1756, was a native of Foxton; and the pious and erudite Bishop Lowth was rector of Sedgfield, prior to his elevation to the see of London.

SEDEFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Snettisham; containing 669 inhabitants. It comprises 4181a. 1r. 37p., of which 3892 acres are arable, 151 meadow and pasture, and 86 plantations, with about five of osier beds; the surface is undulated, and the views from the high grounds extensive and richly diversified. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £8: the great tithes have been commuted for £385, and the vicarial for £330, and the glebe consists of about 3½ acres, with a house, recently built. The church is a handsome structure in the early and later English styles, with a circular tower surmounted by an octagonal turret, and was thoroughly repaired in 1842; on cleaning the south wall, a painting of St. Christopher was discovered. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school, with a house for the master, erected in 1839. At the inclosure of the parish, thirty acres were allotted to the poor. On the road to Docking is an ancient building, now a cottage, which was used as a magazine in the reign of Charles I.; and near the church, according to tradition, was a Roman camp.

SEDGHILL (St. CATHERINE), a parish, in the union of MERE, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Hindon; containing 198 inhabitants. It comprises about 1015 acres, of which the soil is clay, alternated with sandy loam, and the surface is undulated. The living is annexed to the rectory of Berwick St. Leonard: the tithes have been commuted for £250.

SEDGLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DUDLEY, N. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N.) from Dudley; containing 24,819 inhabitants. This populous parish is divided into nine hamlets or villages, viz., Brierley, Coseley, Cotwallend, Ettingshall, Lower and Upper Gornall, Gospelend, Sedgley, and Woodsetton; it is situated in the midst of a country abounding with coal, iron-stone, and limestone, the working of which furnishes employment to most of the inhabitants. There are by measurement 7360 acres, of which 3860 are arable, 2000 pasture, 560 woodland, and 500 gardens; the soil is for the greater part a strong rich loam, well adapted for wheat; the surface is very hilly, and the lower grounds are intersected by numerous rivulets and canals leading to the different mines. The parish is in the centre of England, and the scenery from the heights is beautifully picturesque and panoramic, including the Malvern and Abberley hills, in Worcestershire, the Wrekin, in Salop, the Black mountains, the peaks of the Montgomery mountains, and Admiral Rodney's monument, in North Wales. The village is supposed to occupy one of the highest sites in the kingdom, and the waters divide on the eminence, one portion running into the Trent and the other into the Severn, and flow into the sea at two opposite extremities of the island. The iron is manufactured in a variety of ways, both into pig-iron in furnaces, and into wrought or malleable in mills or forges, which latter is again converted into bars, rods, hoops, hurdles, nails, coffee-mills, locks, &c.: one of the largest manufactories is the Wednesbury-Oak works, established in 1814, by Philip Williams and Sons. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal intersects the parish in various directions. A court leet is annually held by Lord Ward, as lord of the manor, at which two constables and four deputies are chosen. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £503; patron, Lord Ward, who, with others, is impropiator of the remainder of the rectorial tithes. The church, a beautiful edifice standing on an eminence and seen in all directions, is in the purest English style, with side aisles, vaulted nave, and clerestory windows, and was completed in 1829, at the expense of £10,800, entirely defrayed by the late Earl of Dudley. The eastern window is of richly-stained glass, representing ten of the Apostles and the coat of arms of the earl; it cost £300. At Coseley, Lower and Upper Gornall, and Ettingshall, are district churches. There are places of worship belonging to Particular Baptists, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics; also a national school erected by the late earl. The encrinite, and the singular fossil called the trilobite, or "Dudley locust," are found chiefly at Woodsetton, the latter only in an isolated limestone rock termed the Wren's Nest Hill.

SEDGWICK, a township, in the parish of HEVERSHAM, union and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Kendal; containing 240 inhabitants. The township comprises 350 acres, all arable land; and the river Kent and the Lancaster canal pass through it. A mill for the manufacture of gunpowder was established about 1770. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SEDLSCOMB (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BATTLE, hundred of STAPLE, rape of HASTINGS, E. division of SUSSEX, 3 miles (N. E.) from Battle; containing 668 inhabitants. Iron-stone is obtained in the parish, and formerly there were furnaces for smelting the ore. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 2., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £267. The church is principally in the early English style, and was enlarged in 1838, by the erection of a south aisle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The Rev. George Barnsley, in 1723, bequeathed £150 for education, which sum, with subsequent gifts, was laid out in the purchase of a house and garden, and an estate now producing £25 per annum. A handsome school was erected in 1837, by the Misses Pratt, and is supported by the rector's family. There are some mineral springs, of which the water has properties similar to that of Tonbridge-Wells. Here was formerly a preceptory of Knights Templars.

SEDRUP, a hamlet, chiefly in the parish of HARTWELL, but partly in that of STONE, union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 63 inhabitants.

SEEND, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of MELKSHAM, Melksham and N. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Melksham; containing 992 inhabitants. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the chapelry. The chapel is dedicated to the Holy Cross. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school partly supported by subscription.

SEER GREEN, a hamlet, in the parish of FARNHAM-ROYAL, union of AMERSHAM, hundred of BURNHAM, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Beaconsfield; containing 281 inhabitants.

SEETHING (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Brooke; containing 449 inhabitants. It comprises 1615*a.* 2*r.* 4*p.*, of which 1160 acres are arable, 413 pasture, and 39 woodland. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £140; patrons and impropiators, the Trustees of the Great Hospital, Norwich, whose tithes have been commuted for £458. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the decorated English style, with a circular tower, and contains an elaborately-sculptured font. A national school is supported by subscription.

SEFTON (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union and hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing, with the townships of Aintree, Great and Little Crosby, Ince-Blundell, Litherland, Lund, Netherton, Orrell with Ford, and Thornton, 6164 inhabitants, of whom 430 are in Sefton township, 7 miles (N.) from Liverpool. This parish, bounded on the west by the bay of Liverpool, and intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, contains Great Crosby, a fashionable and much frequented bathing-place. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30. 1. 8.; net income, £1378; patron and incumbent, the Rev. R. R. Rothwell. The church, originally erected in 1111, and partly rebuilt in the reign of Henry VIII., by the Rev. Anthony Molyneux, a distinguished preacher, then rector, is partly Norman, and partly in the later English style, with a lofty spire. The interior is remarkably elegant; and the chancel, separated from the nave by a magnificent screen, contains sixteen richly-sculptured stalls, with numerous monuments of the family of Molyneux, of whom Sir William performed signal acts of valour under the banner of the Black Prince, at Navaret, as did Sir Richard in the battle of Agincourt, and another Sir William in that of Flodden Field. A district church has been erected and endowed by subscription, at Litherland, and the patronage vested in certain Trustees. A school is supported for the benefit of the children of the poor, by the Earl of Sefton, who derives his title from this place.

SEGHILL, a township, in the parish of EARS DON, union of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (N. N. E.) from Newcastle; containing 1672 inhabitants. The township is on the roads from Newcastle to Bedlington and from North Shields to Morpeth; and comprises 1403a. 17p., of which 1124 acres are arable, 276 grass land, and 3 plantation. The soil is in general a strong red and yellow clay, and in some places of a light gravelly quality; it has been much improved by furrow draining, and now grows good wheat, turnips, &c. In this township and the district to the north of it, is produced the celebrated steam coal known as Carr's and the West Hartley. The mine was commenced in 1823, but was abandoned a few years afterwards, a considerable capital having been involved; in 1832, however, the shaft was sunk twenty fathoms deeper, and the Low-main seam, or Hartley-main, "won." A private railway runs to the bank of the river Tyne for the conveyance of coal, and a passengers' train proceeds three times a day, Sundays excepted, to Percy-Main, one of the stations on the Newcastle and North Shields railway: the Seaton-burn rivulet, also, flows through the place. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £263. 4. 6. There are two meeting-houses, one for Primitive Methodists, and the other for Wesleyans, both built by the proprietors of the mines; and during the week they are used as schools for the workmen's children.

SEIGHFORD (St. CHAD), a parish, in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stafford; containing, with the hamlets of Great and Little Bridgeford, 903 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Grand Junction railway. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £119; impropiator, F. Eld, Esq.

SEISDON, a township, and the head of a union, in the parish of TRY SULL, S. division of the hundred of SEISDON and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Wolverhampton; containing 213 inhabitants. This place gives name to the hundred, and also to a poor law union which comprises 12 parishes or places, 11 whereof are in the county of Stafford, and 1 in that of Salop, the whole containing a population of 13,097. Near Seisdon Common is a large triangular stone called the War Stone, and at a short distance is a small square camp.

SELATTYN (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of OSWESTRY, N. division of SALOP, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Oswestry; containing 1128 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5553a. 34p. of land, of which the soil is various; the substratum abounds with limestone, which is burnt for manure, and sandstone of good quality for building is extensively quarried. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of William Lloyd, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £800, and the glebe comprises 83 acres. The church, an ancient structure, has within the last thirty years been greatly enlarged, and is now a handsome cruciform building. A chapel of ease was erected at Hengoed in 1825. There are two free schools with small endowments; one forming a part of the premises devised by Bishop Hanmer, in 1628, for the poor; and the other erected in 1812, in a more distant part of the parish, on land given by G. H. Carew, Esq. A national school has also been built. Offa's Dyke forms part of the western boundary of the parish; and here formerly stood the ancient Castle Brogyntyn, of which there are now scarcely any remains. James Wylding, one of the assembly of divines during the Interregnum, and the noted Dr. Henry Sacheverell, were rectors here.

SELBORNE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ALTON, hundred of SELBORNE, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Alton; containing 1052 inhabitants. In the time of the Saxons, Selborne was held in royal demesne; and in 1233 a priory of Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here, by Peter de Rupibus, Bishop of Winchester, but it was subsequently suppressed, and became part of the endowment of Magdalen College, Oxford. The parish comprises 8506 acres, of which 3097 are common or waste land. A fair is held on May 29th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 1., and in the gift of the College. The church is principally in the early English style; the altar-piece is ornamented with a fine painting by Albert Durer, representing the Offerings of the Magi, presented by the Rev. Gilbert White, author of The Natural History of Selborne, and similar works, who was born here in 1720, where he chiefly resided. Gilbert White, in 1719, bequeathed £100, now producing an annual income of £9. 10., for teaching children. At Temple, in the parish, resided Sir Adam Gurdon, the celebrated freebooter in the time of Henry III.

SELBY (St. MARY AND St. GERMAN), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, 14 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from York, and 177 (N. by W.) from London; containing 5376 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Salebeia, and supposed to have been a Roman station, was selected by William the Conqueror, in 1069, as the site of a magnificent abbey for Benedictine monks, which was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Germanus, who had so vehemently opposed the Pelagian heresy. The establishment acquired, in process of time, such extensive possessions and immunities as to render it equal in rank to the church of St. Peter at York, and the superior of this place, with the superior of St. Mary's in that city, were the only mitred abbots north of the Trent. When the Conqueror came to Selby, accompanied by his queen, to settle the endowment of the abbey, she was here delivered of a son, subsequently King of England by the title of Henry I. The monastery continued in a flourishing state till the Dissolution, when its revenue was valued at £819. 2. 6. Part of the abbey came afterwards by purchase into the hands of Sir Ralph Sadler, who shortly alienated it, with the park and the manor, to Leonard Beckwith and his heirs, the Walmesleys of Dunkenhalth, from whom, by the marriage of the heiress, it came into the family of Lord Petre, with whom it still remains. In the early period of the great civil war, the town appears to have been held for the parliament, and, although subsequently taken by the royalists, it was eventually recaptured by Sir Thomas Fairfax, when the majority of the king's party were made prisoners, with several horses, pieces of ordnance, and a large quantity of ammunition.

The town is situated on the river Ouse, and upon the great road from London to Edinburgh; the streets are well paved, and lighted with gas; the houses are in general well built, and many changes have been recently made by widening the thoroughfares, erecting new houses, and laying down pavement. About fourteen years since a considerable alteration was effected by the lord of the manor, by opening a continued view of the west front of the church at a large cost, and by enlarging the market-place and roads down to the wharfs; and more recently a new street has been formed called the Crescent, which consists of commodious houses, and adds considerably to the improved appearance of the town. The fertility of the surrounding district, also, has been greatly increased by a process of irrigation by which the water of the rivers Ouse and Aire is detained upon the land until a sediment has been deposited, forming excellent manure. A large quantity of woad, for the use of dyers, is produced in the vicinity, and formerly flax was cultivated and prepared to a considerable extent; this branch of trade, however, has greatly declined, owing to the importation of that article from France and the Netherlands, but flax-spinning is still carried on to some extent. The general trade has been much improved by means of a canal connecting the navigable rivers Ouse and Aire, thus opening a more direct communication with Leeds and the West riding of Yorkshire, so that the greater quantity of the goods sent to that district is disembarked here. There are two large flax-mills, several rope, sail-cloth, and sacking factories, an iron-foundry, two tanneries, some breweries, &c. A new road from Doncaster, by Askerne, through Selby, to York, was opened in 1834; and the Leeds and Selby railway was completed in 1840, and has its terminal station a little to the south of the town, a neat and spacious building, covering an area divided by two lines of cast-iron pillars into three compartments, with seven lines of way extending throughout its whole length, and continued to a jetty for steam-vessels projecting into the Ouse; the line is twenty miles long. Almost contiguous is the terminal station of the Hull and Selby railway, which is carried over the Ouse by a handsome swivel bridge that opens with great facility for the admission of vessels to the quay here; this line communicates with the Leeds and Selby, in conjunction with which, and with the Manchester and Leeds railway, it opens a direct communication between the Irish Sea and the German Ocean. A bridge of timber across the Ouse was completed in 1795, and is remarkable for the ease with which it can be turned round, being opened and closed within the space of a minute, though weighing 70 tons. A branch custom-house has been established, belonging to the establishment at Goole. The chief article exported is stone, which is sent coastwise: ships of 150 to 200 tons' burthen navigate to Selby; steam-boats pass daily to and from Hull, and there are daily communications with London, and every port on the coast. Here is a shipyard, in which many steam-packets and sailing-vessels are built. The market is on Monday; and fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday, Monday after June 22nd, and on Michaelmas-day, for cattle, horses, cloth, &c.: in the centre of the market-place is a handsome cross, in the ancient English style. A petty-session for the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash occurs every alternate Monday in the town-hall, a neat brick building, erected in 1825; and courts leet and baron are held twice a year, by the lord of the manor.

The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £97; patron, the Hon. E. R. Petre. The church, formerly belonging to the abbey, was made parochial by letters-patent of James I., dated March 20th, 1618. The ancient monastery stood on the west side of the river Ouse, and the principal buildings were on the west and south side of the church; the barn and granary are yet remaining, but the gateway was taken down about thirty years since: over it was the abbot's court-house, with two rooms on the sides for the jury and the witnesses; on one side was the porter's lodge, and on the other a room in which to serve the poor. The appearance of this venerable pile is strikingly impressive; and the magnificence, yet comparative simplicity, of the west front renders it deserving of particular notice, as its proportions and decorations merit remark from their singularity and elegance. The entrance is by a large and richly-adorned Norman doorway, supported by six columns, with simply-ornamented capitals; the triple arches above the doorway are in the English style, and the embellishments partake in character with many found on the north and west doorways, and internal parts of the church; the central arch forms the west window, and is considerably larger than those at the sides, and filled with tracery. The walls of the nave and north transept are Norman, though few exterior arches of that date now remain, having been mostly replaced by windows, &c., in the English style, at different periods. The most striking feature on this side is the porch, which has circular and pointed arches indiscriminately introduced, composed of similar mouldings; and under it is a Norman doorway less enriched, but more elegantly proportioned, than that at the west end. The nave is of massive and simple design; and the choir, of which the east window is highly enriched with tracery, is a perfect and splendid example of the early English style; on both sides of the choir are several stalls of wood, enriched with tabernacle-work. The upper part of the central tower fell down, destroying the south transept and the roof of the western part of the south aisle, on March 30th, 1690; and the present tower was probably rebuilt about the year 1700, but in a style by no means corresponding with the original. The chapter-house is a beautiful building attached to the south side of the choir, and the room used for that purpose, now the vestry-room, appears, from its style and simplicity, to be of a very early date; over it is an apartment now appropriated as a school. Among the other striking architectural peculiarities which this magnificent edifice exhibits, are two clusters of columns, or piers, supporting arches in the gallery, on the north side of the nave: the font is simple, with a beautiful and lofty cover of carved wood suspended from the second arch, on the north side of the nave. In 1826, a fine-toned organ was erected by private subscription, which adds considerably to the elegance of the choir. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; and a Roman Catholic chapel. A Blue-coat school for boys is supported by voluntary contributions, augmented by legacies and donations amounting to £615; £13 per annum are paid to the master by the trustees under the will of Joseph Rayner, who, in 1710, bequeathed £100 to be vested in land for instruction; and £22. 10. a year are given for 20 children on the foundation of Leonard Chamberlain (1716), who also endowed an almshouse for seven widows. A school for girls is supported by an endowment of £10 per annum, aided by subscription; and in another, 50 children are paid for by an allowance of £35 per annum. Here is likewise an estate of Feoffees for pious and charitable uses, bequeathed by various individuals in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I., and now consisting of houses and lands, yielding together about £150 a year; and there are several other considerable bequests. The poor law union of Selby comprises 24 parishes or places, of which 16 are in the West, and 8 in the East, riding, and contains a population of 15,100. Thomas Johnson, a botanist, who published the first local catalogue of plants in the kingdom, and an improved edition of Gerard's Herbal, and who fell in a skirmish with a body of the parliamentary forces, in 1644, was a native of this place.

SELBY'S-FOREST, a township, in the parish of KIRK-NEWTON, union, and W. division of the ward, of GLENDALE, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 61 inhabitants. This district comprises 11,709 acres, of which 11,630 consist of moors and mountains, including the Cheviot, from which the celebrated range of hills so called derives its name, and on the summit of which is a large lake, occasionally frozen in the summer.

SELHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of MIDHURST, hundred of EASTBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Petworth; containing 121 inhabitants. The Rother, or Arundel, navigation passes through the parish, of which part is within the boundary of the parliamentary borough of Midhurst. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. $11\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £150; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is in the early English style; the chancel is separated from the nave by a circular arch supported by slight columns with ornamental capitals.

SELLACK (St. TESILIAH), a parish, in the union of ROSS, Upper division of the hundred of WORMELOW, county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Ross; containing 335 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1565 acres, of which 40 are common or waste land; the scenery is diversified, and the village lies in a deep valley watered by the navigable river Wye. The living is a vicarage, with that of King's-Capel annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 6. 8.; net income, £420; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The great tithes have been commuted for £320, and the vicarial for £140; there is a glebe of 95 acres, with a house. The church is a handsome structure with a spire, and is beautifully situated on the bank of the Wye. A school is supported by subscription.

SELLING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of FAVERSHAM, hundred of BOUGHTON-UNDER-BLEAN, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. S. E.) from Faversham; containing 590 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2420 acres, of which 1619 are arable, 199 pasture, 257 woodland, and the remainder garden and orchard ground. A fair is held on Whit-Tuesday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4., and in the gift of the improprator, Lord Sondes: the great tithes have been commuted for £810, and the vicarial for £357. The church is in the early English style. On Shottendon Hill, here, is an ancient fortification of irregular form, thought to be a Roman work, an extensive Roman intrenchment being still visible in a wood two miles to the south-east of it. There is also a tumulus in the neighbourhood.

SELLINGE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of STREET, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Hythe; containing 476 inhabitants. It comprises 2056a. 2r. 9p., of which area about 800 acres are arable, 700 pasture, 200 wood, and of the remainder about 100 marshy land. The South-Eastern railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, have been commuted for £400, and the vicarial for £191; the glebe comprises 19 acres. The church has an admixture of the various styles of English architecture.

SELMESTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST FIRLE, hundred of DANEHILL-HORSTED, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Lewes; containing 228 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1140 acres, and was annexed to that of Aleiston, in 1840. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 8., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Chichester, and the Prebendary of Heathfield in the Cathedral, the former having one turn, and the latter two: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £140, with a glebe of 3 acres; and the prebendary's for £290, with 22 acres of land. The church is in the early English style, with a spire, and contains in the chancel an altar-tomb under a canopy, inscribed to Lady Bray, who died in the year 1532.

SELSEY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 8 miles (S.) from Chichester; containing 879 inhabitants. The name of this place, according to Bede, is derived from the Saxon Seals-ey, signifying the island of Seals, for the resort of which it was anciently noted. The Saxons, on their first expedition to take possession of the south-western region of Britain, landed upon this peninsula, where they soon afterwards founded a colony; and in the earliest annals mention is made of Selsey as among the more ancient of the Saxon establishments. A monastery dedicated to the Blessed Virgin was founded here about 681, by St. Wilfrid, who, having previously converted many of the South Saxons to Christianity, and obtained of King Ædilwac the lands of this peninsula for its endowment, placed therein some religious, who had been his companions in exile, and of whom Eadbercht, abbot in 711, was consecrated first bishop of the South Saxons, and fixed his episcopal residence at this place. It remained a see till 1075, when William the Conqueror removed the seat of the diocese to Chichester, and Stigand, the last bishop of Selsey, was appointed the first of Chichester. Vestiges of the ancient city are mentioned in old records, as being plainly visible at ebb-tide; and bones of large animals, trunks of trees, and fossil shells are occasionally found by the fishermen when dredging for oysters. The parish is bounded on the east and south by Pagham harbour and the English Channel, and, including the beach to low-water mark, comprises 3494 acres, of which 600 are pasture, and 133 common or waste land, the soil is chiefly a hazel mould, well adapted for wheat. The western division is flat and low, and is frequently overflowed by the sea, from which it suffered very severely in the great storm of November 23rd, 1824, when nearly half the parish was under water. The village, consisting principally of one street of neatly-built houses, occupies a dry gravelly site. There is an extensive fishery for prawns, lobsters, and crabs; and on the coast, oysters in great quantities are taken in the winter season; also cod. A court baron is held annually; and there is a fair for toys, &c., on July 14th. The living comprises a discharged vicarage and sinecure rectory united, the former valued in the king's books at £8, and the latter at £11. 3. 4.; patron, the Bishop of Chichester. The tithes have been commuted for £896. 13., and the glebe comprises 52 acres. The church is a stately edifice, principally in the early English style; in the middle aisle are several coffin-shaped gravestones, with crosses and various other devices, and against the north wall of the chancel is a mural monument of Caen stone, with carved effigies of John and Agatha Lews, of the time of Henry VIII. There is a place of worship for Bryanites; also a national school. Near the church is an intrenched mound, supposed to be a Roman military station. Selsey gives the title of Baron to the family of Peachey.

SELSIDE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Kendal; containing, with Whitwell, 335 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £94; patrons, the Landowners; impropiators, Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The chapel, dedicated to Christ, was erected in lieu of a more ancient edifice, about 1720, by the inhabitants, on a site given by William Thornburgh, Esq., and was rebuilt and enlarged in 1837, at an expense of about £600. A free school is supported from several sources, the principal of which is an estate left by John Kitching, in 1730, and producing an income of £50.

SELSTON (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 9 miles (S. W.) from Mansfield; containing, with the hamlets of Bagthorpe and Underwood, 1982 inhabitants. The parish is situated near the source of the river Erewash, which divides it from the county of Derby. It abounds in coal and iron-stone; in the immediate neighbourhood are extensive collieries, and several of the inhabitants are employed in frame-work knitting, and in the manufacture of lace. The Mansfield and Pinxton railway intersects the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £109; patron and impropiator, Sir W. W. Dixie, Bart. The church is an ancient structure, with a tower.

SELWORTHY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W.) from Minehead; containing, with the tything of Allerford, the manor of Blackford, and the hamlets of Brandy-street, Buddle-hill, Holnucote, Knowle, Lynch, and Tivington, 505 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2218 acres, of which 358 are common or waste land; it is intersected by two ridges from east to west, and from east to south, respectively. The soil is various, light and stony in the higher grounds, and fertile in the valleys; considerable plantations of larch, fir, and of forest trees add much beauty to the scenery, and a fine trout stream winds its course through the lower lands. The substratum contains limestone, which is burnt into lime for agricultural uses. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 15. 5., and in the gift of Sir T. D. Acland, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe comprises 54 acres. The church is a neat edifice in the decorated style, with a plain embattled tower. A national school has been established. There are remains of two chapels; one at Tivington, now used as a schoolroom, and the other at West Lynch, converted into a barn; and on a hill to the north-west of the church are vestiges of an ancient encampment called Bury Castle, of an elliptical form, with a rampart of earth and stones, inclosing an area of about an acre and a half.

SEMER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of COSFORD, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Bildeston; containing 370 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 7. 1., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. J. Young Cooke: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises 65 acres. A house of industry here, erected in 1799, has been converted into a workhouse for the union, which comprises 28 parishes or places, and contains a population of 18,237.

SEMINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of STEEPLE-ASHTON, union of MELKSHAM, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Melksham and N. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Trowbridge; containing, with Littleton tything, 570 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. George. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £180, and the vicarial for £145. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SEMLEY (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, forming a detached portion of the hundred of CHALK, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Hindon; containing 736 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2947*a. 2r. 13p.*, of which 298 are common or waste land; the surface is undulated, and towards the south rises to a considerable eminence called Semley Hill, in which the small river Sem has its source. There is a quarry of soft green stone, of which the houses are generally built. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 2. 8½; patrons and appropriators, Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £492. 10., and the glebe comprises 101 acres. The church is a very ancient structure, greatly dilapidated. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a national school has been built. Dr. William Thorn, a celebrated divine and Hebrew scholar, was born here towards the close of the sixteenth century.

SEMPERINGHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Folkingham; containing, with the chapelries of Bir-thorpe and Pointon, 556 inhabitants, of whom 54 are in the township of Semperingham. The parish comprises 1867*a. 2r. 18p.*, of which about one-half is pasture, and the other arable; the soil is good, but part of the land is in the fenny district; the substratum abounds with stone, quarried chiefly for repairing the roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £2. 15. 8.; net income, £131; patron and impropiator, Earl Fortescue. The church appears to have been originally a larger structure, and is principally in the Norman style, with a plain tower of later date crowned by eight crocketed pinnacles. Gilbert de Sempringham, rector of the parish, and founder of the Gilbertine or Sempringham order, built a priory here about 1139, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, for nuns and canons, whose revenue, at the Dissolution, was valued at £359. 19. 7.; it was the superior establishment of the order, where their general chapters were held, and stood a little to the northward of the church, but the site only is discernible, surrounded by a moat.

SEND (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, Second division of the hundred of WOKEING, W. division of SURREY; containing, with the chapelry of Ripley, 1538 inhabitants, of whom 687 are in the hamlet of Send. A church and priory of Black canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Thomas à Becket, was founded in the time of Richard I., at Newark, in the parish, by Ruald de Calva, and Beatrix his wife, and at the Dissolution possessed a revenue of £294. 18. 4.: there are some remains. The parish comprises 4391*a. 20p.*, of which 2516 acres are arable, 1421 pasture, and 452 woodland. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 18. 1½.; net income, £260; patron, Earl Onslow. The church is principally in the early English style. At Ripley is a chapel of ease, supposed to have been originally built by the monks of Newark Abbey, as an hospital for their sick. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SENNEN (St. SENAN), a parish, in the union of PENZANCE, W. division of the hundred of PENWITH and of the county of CORNWALL, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Penzance; containing 659 inhabitants. This place is situated at the extreme western point of England, and includes the Land's End, a promontory 150 feet above the level of the sea, Whitsand Bay, and Sennen Cove. King Stephen landed at Whitsand Bay on his first arrival in England, as did also King John, on his return from the conquest of Ireland, and Perkin Warbeck in the reign of Henry VIII. The parish comprises 2050 acres, of which 800 are common or waste; the surface is varied with valleys and hills, though none of the latter rise to any considerable height, and the low lands are watered by a few brooks. The scenery along the coast is strikingly bold and magnificent; the Scilly Islands, about nine leagues west-by-south from the Land's End, are distinctly seen in clear weather; and off the coast are several rocks called the Longships, on one of which a lighthouse was erected in 1797, under the direction of the Trinity House. A pilchard-fishery is carried on at Sennen Cove, and great quantities of ling are cured and dried for the London and other markets. The living is a rectory, united, with that of St. Levan, to the rectory of St. Burian: the tithes have been commuted for £230. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school. Near Sennen Cove are the remains of an ancient chapel, and the site of Castle Mayon; and in the village of Mayon is a large flat stone called Table Maen, on which, according to Hals, seven Saxon kings dined together, when they came to visit the Land's End, towards the close of the sixth century. In 1807, 400 Roman coins of copper and plated metal were found between two flat stones under a large projecting rock.

SERLBY, a hamlet, in the parish of HARWORTH, union of EAST RETFORD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bawtry; containing 89 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Harworth.

SESSAY (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of THIRSK, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Easingwold; containing 437 inhabitants, of whom 323 are in Sessay, and 114 in Hutton-Sessay. The parish comprises about 3039 acres of fertile land, mostly the property of Viscount Downe; the soil is generally clay, alternated with sand, the surface is undulated, and the scenery varied. The Great Northern railway has one of its stations here. The village, which is on the north side of a stream, a tributary of the Swale, is long and scattered, and consists of neat houses and gardens. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 0. 2½.; net income, £574; patron, the Viscount. The church is a very ancient structure, but has undergone so many alterations and repairs that it now presents a modern appearance; the porch, the tower (which is of brick), and the Ionic columns on each side of the altar, were erected about 1713. Viscount Downe partly supports a school. The poor have several parcels of land and some money benefactions.

SETCHEY, a parish, in the union and hundred of FREEBRIDGE-LYNN, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S.) from Lynn; containing 100 inhabitants. The parish comprises 734 acres, of which 57 are arable, 647 pasture, and 30 common. Here was formerly a market; but it has been removed to Lynn, within the last few years. The river Nar, which is navigable, flows through the parish. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of North Runcton. The church has long been demolished; but a school-house, erected by Daniel Gurney, Esq., of North Runcton Hall, has been licensed for the performance of divine service.

SETMURTHY, a chapelry, in the parish of BRIGHAM, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Cockermouth; containing 181 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 2579a. 24p., of which about 1690 acres are pasture, 763 arable, and 124 woodland. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patrons, the Inhabitants. A rent-charge of £16 has been awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes. The chapel, a plain neat edifice, was built by the landed proprietors in 1794; and a school-house was erected in the following year, for the endowment of which about 60 acres of land were allotted at the inclosure, in 1812.

SETTLE, a market-town, and the head of a union, in the parish of GIGGLESWICK, wapentake of STAINCLIFFE WEST, W. riding of YORK, 59 miles (W. by N.) from York, and 234 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 2041 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have derived its name from the Saxon Setl, a seat descriptive of its singular situation at the base of an almost perpendicular limestone rock called Castlebergh, which rises immediately behind it, to the height of 200 feet. It appears to have attained to some importance in the reign of Henry III., who granted to the inhabitants a charter for a weekly market and an annual fair; and in the reign of Henry VII. it had become a populous and flourishing place. The town is on the eastern bank of the river Ribble, and consists of two principal streets, which are partially paved, and of some smaller avenues; the houses are well built, chiefly of stone obtained in the neighbouring quarries, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from wells and numerous springs. In the market-place, which is spacious and well adapted to its use, a handsome town-hall was erected in 1832, at an expense of £5500, by a proprietary of £10 shareholders; the building is in the Elizabethan style, and contains a court-room, assembly-rooms, a subscription library and newsroom, apartments for a literary institution established in 1770, which has a good library, and also a savings' bank, in which are deposits to a considerable amount. The cotton manufacture is carried on to some extent, and there are several roperies, and a paper manufactory. The market, which is amply supplied with provisions of all kinds, is on Tuesday; and great markets for fat cattle are held every alternate Monday, and for milch cows and lean stock every alternate Friday from the fortnight preceding Easter till Whitsuntide. Fairs, chiefly for sheep and cattle, take place on the 26th of April, 19th of August, and on the first Tuesday after the 27th of October; a pleasure-fair, also, occurs on Whit-Tuesday. A constable is appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor, who also holds a court baron.

The township, which includes the hamlets of Meerbeck-Lodge and Anley, comprises 4370 acres of grazing land; the pastures extend along the eastern acclivities of the vale, which is inclosed on each side by a continuous range of rugged limestone rocks, of mountainous elevation, terminated by the lofty eminences of Pendle Hill on the south, Pennigant on the north, and Ingleborough on the north-west. The scenery, especially on the hills near Attermire, is strikingly romantic, and in some parts beautifully picturesque; the pastures are rich, and of those near the town, some are rented at from £5 to £8 per acre. A district church, dedicated to the Ascension, was erected in 1839, at an expense of £3000, raised by subscription, towards which William Wilkinson, Esq., contributed £500; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, and contains 700 sittings, of which 250 are free. The living, which was endowed with £1000 by Mrs. Swale, is a perpetual curacy; net income, £160; patrons, the Vicar of Giggleswick, the Master of Giggleswick grammar school, and three other Gentlemen, as trustees. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. A national school, for which an appropriate building was erected in 1814, and also a large girls' school, are supported by subscription. The poor law union comprises 31 parishes and townships, containing a population of 14,096, and the workhouse is at Giggleswick. Thomas Proctor, an eminent sculptor who died in his youth, was born here.

SETTRINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Scagglethorpe, 741 inhabitants, of whom 492 are in Settrington township, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Malton. The parish comprises about 4300 acres, chiefly the property of Henry Willoughby, Esq., lord of the manor, to whom it was bequeathed by the late Lord Middleton, of Bird-sall Hall, who had purchased it after the death of Henry Masterman, Esq., to whom it had passed, in 1822, on the death of Sir Mark Sykes, Bart., who occasionally resided at the Hall. The village is situated in the narrow vale of a rivulet at the foot of the wolds, and is chiefly of modern erection, the greater portion of it having been rebuilt by Lady H. M. Sykes, who died in 1813. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £42. 12. 6., and in the patronage of the Countess of Bridgewater; net income, £1045. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1797, when the township was inclosed. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, comprising a nave, chancel, and aisle, with a square embattled tower at the west end; the east window of the chancel is embellished with beautiful stained glass, and the interior is very neatly fitted up, the whole of the edifice having been thoroughly repaired in 1824. It had formerly two chantries. There are three schools, two at Settrington, and one in the township of Scagglethorpe, all of which are supported by the lord of the manor, and the rector, the Rev. Henry John Todd, M.A., who is also archdeacon of Cleveland, in the diocese of York. Rents arising from land were bequeathed by will dated February 3rd, 1735, by Christopher Topham, Esq., for apprenticing children; and a small sum, charged on the manor, and entitled "the Lady's dole," is payable to the poor. In the parish are remains of some military intrenchments, and there are tumuli. The manor gives the title of Baron of Settrington to the Duke of Richmond.

SEVENHAMPTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4½ miles (S.) from Winchcomb; containing 471 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3290 acres, of which 2980 are arable, and 270 meadow and pasture; the soil is generally light, resting on a substratum of stone; the surface is hilly. The river Colne, which is here considerable, flows through the parish; and one of the most distant sources of the river Thames rises within its limits, issuing from seven different springs. There are some extensive quarries of freestone, which is raised for building. The living is a perpetual curacy, net income, £49; patrons, F. Craven and W. Morris, Esqrs.: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1814. The church is a venerable cruciform structure, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and was built by John Camber, who was buried in the chancel in 1447. Here is a place of worship for Baptists.

SEVENHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of HIGHWORTH, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Highworth; containing 254 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Andrew.

SEVEN-OAKS, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Northwich; containing 149 inhabitants.

SEVEN-OAKS (St. NICHOLAS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Maidstone, and 24 (S. E. by S.) from London; containing, with the chapelry of Riverhead, and the liberty of Weald, 5061 inhabitants. This place, which in the Textus Roffensis is written Sevan Acca, is supposed to have derived its name from seven large oaks that stood upon the eminence on which the town is built: the period of its origin is uncertain, and the only historical event connected with it is the defeat and death of Sir Humphrey Stafford, by Jack Cade and his followers, when sent to oppose the rebels by Henry VI., in 1450. The manor, formerly an appendage to Otford, and as such belonging to the see of Canterbury, was conveyed, about the time of the dissolution of the monastic establishments, by Archbishop Cranmer to Henry VIII., and subsequently became the property of the dukes of Dorset. The town is situated on the ridge of hills which crosses the county, separating the Upland from the Weald or southern part, near the river Darent, in a fertile and beautiful portion of the country; it consists of two principal streets, and is well built and very respectably inhabited. There were formerly some silk-mills in the neighbourhood, but they have been recently taken down. The market is on Saturday, mostly for corn; and there is also a market on the third Tuesday in every month, for cattle, which is very numerous attended: fairs take place on July 10th and Oct. 12th, of which the latter is likewise a statute-fair. A bailiff, high constable, and several inferior officers, are chosen annually at a court leet. Petty-sessions for the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, and a court of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, are held here; and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth the assizes took place in the ancient market-house, near the middle of the High-street, and also two or three times at subsequent periods.

The LIVING comprises a sinecure rectory, and a vicarage, the former valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and the latter at £15. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, incumbent, and improprator, the Rev. Thomas Curteis. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £543. 10., and the vicarial for £744. 10.; the impropriate glebe comprises 15 acres. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice, at the southern end of the town, and on so elevated a site as to be a conspicuous object many miles round. Two additional churches, with houses for the ministers, have been erected by Earl Amherst and the late Multon Lambard, Esq., with the consent of the vicar: one, situated in the Weald, and built in 1821, contains about 200 sittings, and is endowed with 10 acres of land, and a parliamentary grant of £1800; the other at Riverhead, erected in 1831, contains about 600 sittings, and is endowed with £220 Queen Anne's Bounty, and a rent-charge of £45 on the vicarial tithes, granted by the vicar: the livings are perpetual curacies, in the patronage of the vicar, after the decease of the founders. The Baptists have two places of worship, and the Supralapsarians and Wesleyans one each. The free grammar school was founded and endowed in 1432, by Sir William Sevenoake, usually written Sennocke, who, being deserted by his parents, was brought up by some charitable persons, and apprenticed to a grocer in London, from which station he rose to be lord mayor of that city, and its representative in parliament, and left a portion of his wealth to found this school and an hospital for decayed elderly tradespeople. Queen Elizabeth granted a charter to the school, placing the management in the hands of the wardens and assistants of the town, who are elected annually, and appoint the master; and it is in consequence called "The Free Grammar School of Queen Elizabeth." It has seven scholarships; namely, four of £15 per annum each, in any college at either of the universities, founded by direction of the court of chancery, in 1735, from the surplus of money received under this endowment in the hands of the trustees; two, formerly of £12 a year each, in Jesus' College, Cambridge, founded by Lady Boswell, which have greatly increased in value; and one of £4 at either university, founded by Robert Holmden, and paid by the Leather-sellers' Company. The income derived from Sir William Sennocke's endowment, including some additions to it, particularly that of Anthony Pope, in 1571, is between £700 and £800 per annum. Lady Margaret Boswell established a school in 1675, the income whereof is nearly £700 per annum, from which a deduction of about a third is made for repairing the sea wall at Burnham Level; a new school-house was erected in 1827, at an expense of about £2000, defrayed by savings from the income, and about 200 children are instructed on the national system. A school-house was erected in the Weald liberty, by the late Mr. Lambard, and another has been built at Riverhead, by Earl Amherst. In the almshouse founded by Sir William Sennocke are 32 persons; and sixteen out-pensioners receive an allowance from the endowment. Mr. Lambard also erected eight houses in the Weald liberty, for the out-pensioners of the parish. The poor law union of Seven-Oaks comprises 16 parishes or places, and contains a population of 22,210.

SEVERN-STOKE.—See STOKE, SEVERN.

SEVINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, hundred of CHART and LONGBRIDGE, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Ashford; containing 96 inhabitants. It comprises 820a. 3r. 5p., of which 229 acres are arable, 589 pasture, and about 2 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. G. Norwood: the tithes have been commuted for £230, and the glebe comprises 12 acres.

SEWARDSTONE, a hamlet, in the parish of WALTHAM-ABBAY, or HOLY CROSS, union of EDMONTON, hundred of WALTHAM, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Waltham-Abbey; containing 901 inhabitants. This place, situated within the limits of the forest, and near the river Lea, is said to have been formerly a distinct parish; and there is still in the vicinity a heap of rubbish, called "the ruins of the old church." The Wesleyans have a meeting-house.

SEWERBY, with MARTON, a township, in the parish and union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Bridlington; containing 352 inhabitants. The township is situated on the eastern coast, and its pleasant and well-built village is distant about three miles west-south-west from Flamborough-head, and commands fine views of the sea. Sewerby House is a neat mansion, the residence of Y. Greame, Esq.

SEWSTERN, a chapelry, in the parish of BUCKMINSTER, union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (E. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 292 inhabitants, and comprising about 1200 acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. A rent-charge of £300 has been awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes, and one of £4 for the vicarial. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Thomas Bury, in 1723, bequeathed £5 per annum for the poor.

SEXHOW, a township, in the parish of RUDBY-IN-CLEVELAND, union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGRAUGH, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Stokesley; containing 33 inhabitants. This place is sometimes written Saxhoc: no mention of it occurs in Domesday book, but in the reign of Edward I. it appears to have belonged to Robert de Brus, who held the estate under the king in capite, and on whose death it passed to the family of de Roos. The Thwengs were afterwards proprietors; and among subsequent owners occur the families of Gower, Layton, and Foulis, to which last the township now belongs. It comprises 540 acres, and is situated on the river Leven, to the north-west of the road between Stokesley and Thirsk. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £17. 5.

SHABBINGTON (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Thame; containing 366 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east and south by the river Thame. The living is a vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £10. 9. 7.; the patronage belongs to Mrs. M. Wroughton, and the landowners are impropriators of the remainder of the rectorial tithes. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £380; the glebe comprises 90 acres.

SHACKERSTONE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles

(N. W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing, with the hamlet of Odestone, 524 inhabitants, of whom 344 are in the township of Shackerstone. The parish comprises by measurement 1100 acres, of which two-thirds, with the exception of about 22 acres of plantation, are meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable; the surface is undulated, and the soil clay, intermixed with marl. The river Sence and the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal pass through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 2. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £150; patron and impropriator, T. S. Hall, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1769. The church is chiefly in the early English style, with some Norman details. Schools are supported by Earl Howe.

SHADFORTH (St. CUTHBERT), a chapelry, in the S. division of EASINGTON ward, union and N. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Durham; containing 2000 inhabitants. This place, consisting of the township of Shadforth and one-half of that of Sherburn, has lately been separated from Pitlington, and now forms a distinct chapelry, comprising by computation 3000 acres; the surface is varied, and long ridges of hills, with valleys intervening, terminate abruptly at their western extremity; the soil in the vales is of a productive kind, but very inferior on the higher land. The greater portion of the population is employed in collieries, the coal being abundant and of the best quality; and there are several quarries of limestone, which is used for building purposes and for the roads, and also burned into lime. The Great North of England railway, from London to Newcastle, passes near the western extremity of the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the rectorial tithes of Shadforth and Pitlington townships, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham: the tithes have been commuted for £266, and the glebe consists of about 12 acres. The church is a neat structure in the early English style, erected in 1839, through the exertions of the Dean and Chapter, at an expense of £1100, raised by subscription, and containing 500 sittings, of which all are free. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and also two schools, one at Shadforth, aided with £5 per annum from Bishop Crewe's trustees, and the other at Sherburn hill, chiefly supported by Lord Durham. One of the towers of an ancient castellated mansion which belonged to Walter de Ludworth, still remains.

SHADINGFIELD (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Beccles; containing 177 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 1369 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of Lord Braybrooke: the tithes have been commuted for £303 to the rector, and £6. 14. to an impropriator, and the glebe consists of 7 acres. The church is chiefly in the early English style. A school is supported by the incumbent.

SHADOXHURST (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of BLACKBOURNE, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Ashford; containing 243 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1943a. 29p., of which 460 acres are arable, 726 woodland, 405 pasture, 114 meadow, and 20 hop-plantations; the surface is flat. The village is situated in a deeply secluded spot: the South-Eastern railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 13., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £123. 16., and the glebe comprises 50 acres. The church is a small ancient edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription, for the benefit of the children of the lower classes.

SHADWELL (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of STEPNEY, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by S.) from London; containing 10,060 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Chadwelle, took its name from a spring dedicated to St. Chad: previously to the year 1669, it was a hamlet in Stepney, but it was then separated, and made a distinct parish by act of parliament. It is situated on the northern bank of the river Thames, and comprises several streets, which are lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the East London works. That portion lying near the river, called Lower Shadwell, is chiefly inhabited by ship-chandlers, biscuit-bakers, provision merchants, mast-makers, sail-makers, anchor-smiths, coopers, and other traders connected with the shipping interest. There are also some roperies in the parish. It is within the jurisdiction of the Thames Police-office, and a court of requests held in Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under £5. The living is a discharged rectory; net income, £352; patron, the Dean of St. Paul's. The church is a handsome modern edifice, with a tower of stone surmounted by a small elegant spire, erected on the site of the old structure. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. The parochial school, established in 1699, was rebuilt on an enlarged scale in 1837, and is now conducted on the national plan; the Protestant dissenters' original charity school, to which is attached a meeting-house, was founded in 1712, and is situated in Shakspeare's-walk. Ten almshouses were built for the widows of seamen with funds bequeathed by Capt. James Cooke, and his wife Alice, but being without endowment fell into decay. John Carr, having left property for the poor, vested in the purchase of £7300, three per cents., almshouses have been erected and endowed for 30 widows of poor seamen. Matthew Mead, a celebrated dissenting minister, was appointed to the cure of the chapel at Shadwell, by Cromwell, in 1658, and was ejected for nonconformity in 1662; his son Richard, an eminent physician, was born in the parish.

SHADWELL, a township, in the parish of THORNER, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Leeds; containing 278 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1250 acres, and includes Red Hall, an ancient mansion which was the birthplace of one of the dukes of Norfolk, and is now the property of William Simpson Atkinson, Esq., of Barrowby Hall, by whom it has been greatly improved. A church was erected in 1842. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in the year 1803. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyans.

SHAFTESBURY, or SHASTON, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of MONCTON-UP-WIMBORNE, county of DORSET, 28 miles (N. N. E.) from Dorchester, and 101 (W. S. W.) from London, on the great western road from London to Exeter; containing 3170 inhabitants. The Arms.

The origin, and derivation of the name, of this town have given rise to much conjecture. It is supposed by some to have had existence even prior to the birth of Christ, and to have been called Caer Calladur by the Britons; but that which appears to be the most probable period of its foundation is the reign of King Alfred; in confirmation of which, Camden states, that in the time of William of Malmesbury, was to be seen an old stone, brought from the ruins of a wall into the nuns' chapter-house, with an inscription purporting that King Alfred built this city (if we may so render fecit) in 880, the eighth year of his reign. Its Saxon derivation from Scaeft, signifying the point of a hill, is thought to be in allusion to the situation of the town. A Benedictine nunnery, founded here about the same period, has also been ascribed to various persons. Camden, following William of Malmesbury, attributes it to Elgiva, wife of Edmund, great grandson to King Alfred; but Leland and many other writers assert the latter monarch to have been its founder, and his daughter the first abbess. To this abbey the remains of Edward the Martyr were removed after his murder at Corfe-Castle; it appears to have been much resorted to by pilgrims, amongst whom was King Canute, who died here, and the extent of its endowments may be estimated from their value at its dissolution having been £1166 per annum: the remains, however, are very inconsiderable. The importance of the monastery naturally increased that of the town, which is reported at an early period to have contained ten parochial churches: in the time of Edward the Confessor three mints were established here, and, according to a survey made shortly before the Norman Conquest, the place contained 104 houses, and three mint-masters. The town is situated on a high hill, with a gradual rise on the east and south-east, but more precipitous on the west and south-west, and is at the extremity of the county of Dorset, bordering on that of Wilts; it commands extensive views over both counties and also Somersetshire. The streets have been greatly widened and improved of late years, by the removal of obstructions and the erection of modern dwelling-houses and good shops. The inhabitants are amply supplied with water from wells of great depth on the hill: formerly they were chiefly supplied from the adjoining parish of Motcombe, which gave rise to a curious customary acknowledgment, called the Byzant, now discontinued. The manufacture of shirt-buttons, once carried on to a considerable extent, has very much declined, but there is an extensive country trade. The market is on Saturday, and well furnished with all kinds of commodities; and there are fairs on the Saturday before Palm-Sunday, June 24th, and Nov. 23rd.

Corporation Seal.

Obverse.

Reverse.

This is a very ancient borough, and is described as such in Domesday book, but it was not incorporated till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who, according to Mr. Hutchins, granted its first charter, appointing a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, a bailiff, and common council; no charter, however, can be found prior to that bestowed by James I., in 1604, which was followed by one of Charles II. The corporation now consists of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, and the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, concurrently with the county magistrates. The town first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., and continued to do so without interruption till the passing of the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, since which time it has returned only one; an enlarged district has been added to the borough, which now comprises an area of 5644 acres, and the mayor is the returning officer. Petty-sessions for the division are held on the first Tuesday in every month. A handsome town-hall has been recently erected, at an expense of about £3000, defrayed by the Marquess of Westminster.

The town comprises the parishes of St. Peter, containing 1101; the Holy Trinity, 1145; and St. James, including the liberty of Alcester, 924 inhabitants. The living of St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 2½., and, with the ancient parishes of St. Lawrence and St. Martin, united to that of the Holy Trinity, valued at £4. 1. 10½.; it is in the gift of the Earl of Shaftesbury, and the tithes have been commuted for £171. 7. St. Peter's church, although it has undergone many modern alterations, is of considerable antiquity, and contains a curiously carved font, and a very old monument, supposed to have been removed from the abbey. The church of the Holy Trinity, an ancient structure said to have been enlarged by Sir Thomas Arundel, in the reign of Elizabeth, was taken down and rebuilt upon a larger scale, in 1841, by subscription, and contains a beautiful east window presented by the Marquess of Westminster; the churchyard is spacious, and adjoining it may be seen the remains of the wall of the abbey. The living of St. James' is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £1. 11. 0½., and in the gift of the Earl of Shaftesbury: the tithes have been commuted for £399, and the glebe comprises 4 acres. The church is a small ancient fabric. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. A free school was founded and endowed by Mr. William Lush, in 1719; and there is a national school. Spiller's hospital, for ten men, was established and endowed by Sir Henry Spiller, in 1642; and an almshouse for sixteen women was founded by Matthew Chubb, in 1611, and endowed, by him and several other benefactors. The poor law union of Shaftesbury comprises nineteen parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,106. On Castle Hill, an eminence near the town, is a small mount surrounded by a shallow ditch, which some have conjectured to be the site of a castle, but of which no mention can be found; by others it is supposed to have been a Roman intrenchment. The old city, reported by tradition to have existed prior to the time of Alfred, is said to have been near this mount. Shaftesbury is the birthplace of the Rev. James Granger, author of the Biographical History of England; it gives the title of Earl to the family of Ashley Cooper.

SHAFTO, EAST, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 11¼ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth; containing 38 inhabitants. This place is of considerable antiquity, being mentioned in records of the 13th century; and in 1378 Matthew Bolton, vicar of Newcastle, and others, were feoffees for founding a chantry in the "chapel of Shafthowe," and endowing it with 100 acres of arable and pasture: the Shaftos, Aynsleys, and Vaughans appear to have been the most important landowners. The township comprises about 570 acres. The mansion-house here is sheltered by higher grounds from the north, and by a grove of wood from the west, and though at a considerable altitude, it is agreeably situated. Behind it rises a lofty verdant hill termed Shafto Crag, adjacent to which is a spacious cave formed in the solid rock. Slight remains of the chapel are still to be seen.

SHAFTO, WEST, a township, in the parish of HARTBURN, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 12½ miles (W. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 31 inhabitants. This place, formerly the seat of the Aynsley family, is situated on a dry knoll, a little to the south of Shafto Crag. A colliery here abounds with the fossil called by the pitmen salmon.

SHAFTON, a township, in the parish of FELKIRK, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Barnsley; containing 264 inhabitants. The township comprises 810 acres of fertile land, with the exception of about 50 acres of waste called Ferry Moor; the substratum contains coal of good quality, and a shaft has lately been sunk to the depth of 100 yards to a seam about 5 feet in thickness, now wrought with success. The village is pleasantly situated on the acclivities of an eminence. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SHALBOURN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, partly in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, and partly in the hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Hungerford; containing, with the tythings of Oxenwood and Newtown, and the hamlet of Bagshot, 1043 inhabitants, of whom 620 are in the village of Shalbourn. The parish comprises about 6000 acres, principally arable; the surface is varied, and the meadows are watered by a copious stream issuing from a spring near the village, which in its course turns several mills; the substratum contains green, white, and red sandstone, and is supposed to comprise coal also, but no mines have been opened. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 17. 6.; net income, £271; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Windsor; impropiator, the Marquess of Ailesbury. The church is principally in the Norman style. In that part of the parish which is in Wilts is an ancient chapel in a dilapidated state, with a house attached to it called West-court, thought to have been a retreat for the monks of Sarum. On the edge of the down, a continuance of Salisbury plain, is a tumulus commanding very extensive prospects over several counties. Fragments of human skeletons and of horses, supposed to be the remains of those slain in the wars during the heptarchy, are often met with in the neighbourhood; and Wansdyke, the line of division between the kingdoms of Mercia and the West Saxons, runs along one boundary of the parish, on the north side of which is a chalybeate spring, formerly in great repute.

SHALBOURN, WEST, a township, in the parish of SHALBOURN, union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINWARDSTONE, Marlborough and Ramsbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Hungerford; containing 245 inhabitants.

SHALDEN (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of ALTON, hundred of ODIHAM, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Alton; containing 185 inhabitants. The surface is finely undulated: the manor-house is an ancient structure, and near it are some remains of an intrenchment. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £330; the glebe comprises 23 acres. A school is supported by the rector.

SHALDON, a hamlet, in the parish of St. NICHOLAS, in a detached portion of the hundred of WONTFORD, union of NEWTON ABBOTT, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Newton-Abbott; containing 538 inhabitants. This place, which is composed of a tract of land recovered from the sea by an embankment, contains many genteel villas, pleasantly situated on the south bank of the river Teign, across which a bridge has been erected, communicating with a new line of road from the west end of the township to Torquay; and a ferry boat is constantly passing between this and Teignmouth. A church was erected about 150 years since, by the Carews, of Haccombe; and there are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans.

SHALFLEET, a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Yarmouth; containing 1218 inhabitants. The parish extends across the island from Hamstead Ledge on the north to Hulverstone on the southern shore, and stretches along the northern coast from Yarmouth to Newton bay; it comprises by measurement 6200 acres of land, of which the soil varies greatly in quality, but is generally strong, producing good crops of wheat and beans. A stream abounding with trout intersects the parish; the navigable river Newton flows up with the tide nearly to the village, and in the bay is a quay accessible to ships of considerable burthen, at which coal is imported, and bricks, tiles, and pottery, made at the Hamstead kiln, are shipped. The substratum contains stone, of which there are some quarries at Dodpits, worked chiefly for building purposes. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 12. 1., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £127; impropiators, Sir Richard Simeon, Bart., and Miss Kirkland. The church is partly Norman and partly of later date, with a low massive embattled tower surmounted by a spire of more recent erection, and a remarkable Norman doorway having a rudely-sculptured impost or lintel filling up the head of the arch, said to represent a bishop, whose arms are extended, and his hands resting on animals resembling griffins; the interior is spacious, and the south aisle is separated from the nave by a series of columns of Purbeck marble. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a parochial school on the national plan is supported by subscription.

SHALFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Braintree; containing 832 inhabitants. The parish is supposed to have derived its name from an ancient ford over the river Blackwater, by which it is bounded on the east. It is about three miles in length, and two in breadth; the soil in some parts is a loam intermixed with sand, and in others a heavy wet loam on a substratum of brown clay. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £155; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Shalford in the Cathedral of Wells. The church is an ancient edifice, with a square embattled tower.

SHALFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HAMBLEDON, First division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Guildford; containing 996 inhabitants. It is situated on the road to Brighton, and intersected by the Wey and Arun Junction canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Bramley annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 4. $7\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £240; impropiator, Sir H. E. Austen. The church was rebuilt in 1790, chiefly at the expense of Robert Austen, Esq., to whose memory there is a mural tablet in the chancel, by Bacon. Four schools for girls are supported by four ladies.

SHALSTONE, or SHALDESTON (St. EDWARD), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Buckingham; containing 201 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres, of which 600 are arable, 500 meadow and pasture, and 100 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 5.; net income, £199; patron, G. Jervoise, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1767.

SHAMBLEHURST, a tything, in the parish and union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Bishop's-Waltham; containing 1405 inhabitants, of whom 1007 are in the south, and 398 in the north, division. The union work-house is situated in the tything.

SHANGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Harborough; containing 39 inhabitants, and consisting of about 1240 acres. Shangton Holt, comprising about 30 acres, is supposed to be one of the finest covers for foxes in the county. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Sir J. Isham, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £318. 16. 4., and there are 29 acres of glebe. About three-quarters of a mile from the church is Gartre Bush, where the hundred court was formerly held.

SHANKLIN, a parish, in the liberty of EAST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Newport; containing 462 inhabitants. The parish comprises 672*a.* 2*r.* 22*p.*, of which 341 acres are arable, 248 pasture, and 75 woodland; the substratum abounds with building-stone, which is extensively quarried. The village occupies a sequestered site, sheltered by lofty downs which nearly inclose it on two sides, yet sufficiently elevated to command a fine view of Sandown bay and the ocean; it contains several lodging-houses, and two excellent hotels, for the accommodation of visitors. At a short distance is a prodigious chasm called Shanklin Chine, which, extending a considerable way inland from the coast, and being overgrown with trees, shrubs, and brushwood, contrasted at intervals with bold masses of rock or brown earth, forms a beautifully romantic scene. The parish was anciently part of that of Brading, from which it was separated in the reign of Stephen, when the church was founded by Geoffrey de L'Isle, to whom the lands were granted by that monarch. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bonchurch. In the church, which is a small ancient edifice remarkable for the simplicity of its style, is an oak-chest curiously carved, with a Latin inscription dated 1512, the gift of Thomas Silksted, prior of Winchester.

SHAP (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 6 miles (N. W.) from Orton; containing, with the chapelry of Swindale, and part of Mardale, 996 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 51,000 acres; the soil is various, and a considerable portion of the land is peat moss; the surface is hilly, and the river Lowther flows through the parish, and the beautiful lake Hawswater bounds it on the west. The substratum contains abundance of limestone, blue slate, and a remarkably fine range of red granite, and the surrounding country is highly interesting to the geologist and antiquary. The place is much resorted to for the efficacy of its mineral spring, the water of which closely resembles that of Harrogate: the well or spa is about three miles from the town, on the bank of a rivulet separating the parish from that of Crosby-Ravensworth; and for the accommodation of the increased number of visitors, the late Earl of Lonsdale erected a spacious and handsome hotel, the grounds of which are enriched with thriving plantations. The town consists chiefly of one long street, on the road between Penrith and Kendal. In 1687, a charter was obtained for a market on Wednesday, and three fairs on April 23rd, August 1st, and September 17th, each for two days; but they have been long in disuse, and at present only a small market is held on Monday, and a fair for cattle and pedlery on May 4th. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 7½.; net income, £73; patron and impropriator, the Earl of Lonsdale: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1767. A gallery has been erected in the church, and 110 free sittings provided. Thomas Jackson, in 1703, gave a messuage and land for the erection and support of a school; the income is £25. The late Earl of Lonsdale recently erected a handsome school-house, which he endowed. About one mile west from the town are the venerable ruins and tolerably perfect tower of Shap Abbey, founded about 1150: at the Dissolution the revenue was estimated at £166. 10. 6. At Hardendale, in the parish, Dr. John Mill, the learned editor of the Greek Testament, was born in 1645.

SHAPWICK, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON; containing 26 inhabitants.

SHAPWICK (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of BADBURY, Wimborne division of DORSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 437 inhabitants. The river Stour bounds the parish on the south. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 4½.; net income, £379; patron, Lord Rivers. Here was a small Carthusian priory, a cell to that of Sheen, in Surrey.

SHAPWICK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Glastonbury; containing 402 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bath to Exeter: the substratum contains blue lias, which is quarried as occasion may require. There is a spring called Holy Well, formerly belonging to the monks of Glastonbury, and of which the water was analyzed by Dr. Beddoes, of Bristol, and found to resemble the Harrogate water. A canal from the Bristol Channel at Highbridge passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Ashcott annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 4.; net income, £215; patron, incumbent, and impropriator, the Rev. G. H. Templer. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, and contains some monuments of the Bull family. James Alexander, Esq., in 1818, gave a moiety of the dividends arising from £333. 6. 8. three per cents., for education.

SHARDLOW, a township, and the head of a union, in the parish of ASTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Derby; containing 1043 inhabitants. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the township. The poor law union comprises 46 parishes or places, 33 of which are in the county of Derby, 7 in that of Leicester, and 6 in that of Nottingham; the population of the whole amounting to 32,640.

SHARESHILL (The VIRGIN MARY), a parish, in the union of PENKRIDGE, E. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Wolverhampton; containing, with the township of Great and Little Saredon, 594 inhabitants, of whom 305 are in Shreshill township. The parish comprises about 2817 acres, of which 887*a.* 2*r.* 3*p.* are in Shreshill, and are mostly arable land; the surface is hilly, the soil gravelly, suitable for turnips and barley, and the scenery rather picturesque. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal crosses the north-western angle of the parish and the Four-Ashes second-class station of the Grand Junction railway is about two miles and a half to the north-west also. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Lord Hatherton (the impropiator), with a net income of £114: the tithes have been commuted for £470. 18. The church, with the exception of the tower, is of modern erection, and contains several curious antique monuments, preserved on the demolition of the former edifice; it was beautified in 1842. A day school is supported by Gen. Vernon, of Hilton Park, and a day and Sunday school by subscription. On the north and south sides of the village are vestiges of two encampments, probably Roman.

SHARLSTON, a township, in the parish of WARMFIELD, union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIBIGG, W. riding of York, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Wakefield; containing 221 inhabitants. The township comprises 1120 acres, of which 70 are common or waste. Sharlston Hall is occupied by the agent of the Earl of Westmorland, who is lord of the manor. The village, which is small, is pleasantly situated on the margin of a large and fertile common, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified. Coal was formerly worked extensively, but the mines are nearly exhausted. A room attached to Sharlston Hall, an ancient building, has been licensed for divine service. The Countess of Westmorland, a native of this place, bequeathed, in 1729, £20 per annum, for putting out children as apprentices, or for the relief of widows.

SHARNBROOK (St. PETER), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (N. E.) from Harrold; containing 848 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £144; impropiator, J. Gibbard, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for land and money payments, under an act of inclosure. The church is of early English architecture, with a spire. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SHARNFORD (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Hinckley; containing 624 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Soar, and comprises about 1400 acres; the soil is chiefly sand and gravel; the surface rises gradually, and the scenery is pleasing. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 9., and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £329: the tithes were commuted for land in 1764; the glebe comprises 234 acres. The church is an ancient structure.

SHARPENHOE, a hamlet, in the parish of STREATLEY, union of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Silsoe; containing 172 inhabitants. A school is endowed with a rent-charge of £10. Thomas Norton, a dramatic writer, was born here in the early part of the sixteenth century.

SHARPERTON, a township, in the parish of ALLENTON, union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Rothbury; containing 89 inhabitants. It stands on the east side of the river Coquet, and on the road to Harbottle; and contains some fertile soil. The Charity Hall estate here belongs to the poor of Rothbury parish, being the bequest, in 1719, of the Rev. J. Thomlinson.

SHARPLES, a township, in the parish and union of BOLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county palatine of LANCASTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Bolton; containing 2880 inhabitants. Here are a large power-loom factory, and a bleaching establishment, affording employment to about 1300 persons. Coal abounds in the neighbourhood; and there are reservoirs for supplying the town of Bolton with water.

SHARRINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Holt; containing 229 inhabitants. It comprises 864*a.* 1*r.* 38*p.*, of which 820 acres are arable, and about 40 meadow and pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Saxlingham, and valued in the king's books at £10: the tithes have been commuted for £299. 16., and the glebe comprises about an acre. The church is in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower.

SHARROW, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E. by N.) from Ripon; containing 185 inhabitants. The township comprises about 670 acres of fertile land, and the surrounding scenery is of pleasing character. Sharrow Lodge, the residence of Thomas Hopper, Esq., who, and Mrs. Powell, of Lucan House, and Mrs. Lawrence, are the chief proprietors of the land, is a handsome mansion, commanding a fine view over the vale of Ure. A district church dedicated to St. John, was erected for this township, with Hutton-Conyers, Hewick-Copt, Hewick-Bridge, and Nunwick, on a site presented by Mrs. Lawrence, in 1825, at an expense of £5000, of which £2000 were given by that lady, and the remainder raised by subscription, aided by a parliamentary grant; it is a neat structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 550 sittings, of which 280 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Mrs. Lawrence; net income, £51; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. A schoolroom, also, has been built by Mrs. Lawrence.

SHATTON, with BROUGH, a hamlet, in the parish of HOPE, union of CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Tideswell; containing 80 inhabitants.

SHAUGH, a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON St. MARY, hundred of PLYMPTON, Ermington and Plympton, and S. divisions of DEVON, 6 miles (N.) from Earl's-Plympton; containing 698 inhabitants. The parish is situated in a district abounding with strikingly picturesque and romantic scenery, and comprises 8773 acres, of which 6367 are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Samford-Spiny; net income, £107.

SHAVINGTON, with GRESTY, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Nantwich; containing 441 inhabitants. Here stood the old manorial seat of the Wodenoths (from whom was descended John, the celebrated antiquary, born in 1624), a mansion highly curious from its age, and the abundance of stained glass and other relics it contained. After remaining in the possession of that family for more than 500 years, the estate was sold in 1661; the old house was taken down, and a modern mansion, now belonging to Mr. Turner, built upon the site, in which some of the ancient glass is preserved.

SHAW, a chapelry, in the township of CROMPTON, parish of PRESTWICH, borough and union of OLDHAM, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. E.) from Rochdale. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £250; patron, Rector of Prestwich. The chapel was built by subscription, aided by a grant. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school.

SHAW CUM DONNINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. E.) from Newbury; containing 642 inhabitants. The ancient manor-house was usually the resting-place of Charles I., when on his route to the west of England; and in 1644, an attempt was made here by a soldier of Cromwell's army to assassinate that monarch, which event is recorded by a brass plate fixed on the spot where the ball entered: a bed on which Queen Anne reposed is also preserved. In the second battle of Newbury the mansion was garrisoned for the king, and attacked by a large body of the enemy, who were repulsed with great loss. The parish comprises 1989a. 2r. 26p., chiefly arable land, and including about 100 acres of common or waste; the soil is clay, alternated with gravel and sand; the surface is generally level, and the river Lambourne flows through the district. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 11. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. Thomas Penrose, D.D.: certain inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £13. 7., and the rectorial for £623; the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church has been rebuilt upon a larger scale, by subscription, towards which the Incorporated Society granted £100; it is a neat structure in the Norman style, and 186 of the sittings are free. A school is supported by subscription; and there are almshouses for twelve persons, founded about 1618, by Sir Richard Abberbury, Knt.

SHAWBURY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEM, partly in the hundred of PIMHILL, partly in the liberties of SHREWSBURY, and partly in the Whitechurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 1079 inhabitants, of whom 279 are in the township, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Shrewsbury. The parish comprises by measurement 7221 acres; the substrata of this and the adjoining districts contain freestone of excellent quality, of which the quarries have afforded materials for most of the public buildings of the town of Shrewsbury, and the gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Sir Andrew Vincent Corbet, Bart., who, with Lord Hill and W. Charlton, Esq., is impropiator: the great tithes have been commuted for £436. 8., and the vicarial for £394. 12.; the glebe comprises 37 acres. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, of which it contains numerous elegant details, with a handsome square embattled tower in the later English style. A school is supported partly by a small endowment of Ralph Collins; and there is a fund of £46 per annum, the rent of land devised by Dame Elizabeth Corbet in 1702, and Robert Payne in 1738, for apprenticing children, and for the poor.

SHAWDON, a township, in the parish of WHITTINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUET-

DALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Alnwick; containing 94 inhabitants. The township is intersected by the road from Morpeth to Wooler, and comprises about 1200 acres of land, mostly arable, the property of William Pawson, Esq., whose mansion is picturesquely seated, and surrounded with excellent wood: there is a stone quarry. The place lies in a valley in the midst of hills. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £53. 2. 9., and the appropriate for £1. 8., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. Two ancient urns of common earthenware were found in the neighbourhood some years since.

SHAWELL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (S.) from Lutterworth; containing 203 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1400 acres, of which the soil is partly clay, and partly a rich loam, and the surface generally level. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £345, and the glebe comprises 74 acres. A free grammar school, established by John Eckington, has an endowment of £20 per annum, with a house and garden for the master; and the founder also erected an almshouse for six men. Twelve acres of land, producing £16 per annum, were allotted to the poor on the inclosure of the parish. In a field nearly adjoining the church, numerous skeletons have been dug up, supposed to be the remains of those who were slain in the several skirmishes which took place here during the parliamentary war.

SHEARSBY, a chapelry, in the parish of KNAPTOFT, union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E.) from Lutterworth; containing 379 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. Here is a saline spring, which has been found serviceable in scorbutic affections.

SHEBBEAR (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hatherleigh; containing 1160 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Torridge, and comprises 4577 acres, of which 1955 are common or waste land; the soil is of indifferent quality, the surface hilly, and the scenery enriched with wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of Sheepwash annexed, valued in the king's books at £11. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £243; impropiators of Sheepwash, the family of Bendon, and of Shebbear, Messrs. Brent, Brand, and Snell. The church is an ancient structure, and has a Norman arch over the entrance, ornamented with foxes' heads in rough stone. There are places of worship for Bible Christians, Bryanites, and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported.

SHEEN, a parish, in the union of LEEK, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 10 miles (E. by N.) from Winster; containing 402 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £63; patrons, alternately, J. Gould, Esq., and Captain Bateman. The church was nearly rebuilt in 1829, at the cost of £1100, raised by a parochial rate. Some children are educated for £12 a year, the produce of bequests.

SHEEPHALL, HERTFORD.—See SHEPHALL.

SHEEPSHEAD (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W.) from Loughborough; containing 3872 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5171*a. 2r. 28p.*, of which the soil is chiefly marl, clay, and a mixed loam; the surface is hilly, and the substratum contains blue granite, quarried for building and for the roads. The manufacture of hosiery is carried on, affording employment to more than 500 families. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10.; net income, £350, arising from 181 acres of land; patron, C. M. Phillips, Esq. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. John Lambert, Esq., bequeathed houses and land, producing £60 per annum, for charitable uses.

SHEEPSTOR, a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Midland-Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Tavistock; containing 127 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3469 acres, of which 2550 are common or waste land. Sheepstor rock, one of the most remarkable granite heaps upon Dartmoor, is a conspicuous object from Roborough down; and at the foot of it is situated the village, on the little river Mew. At Ailsborough, in the parish, a lofty eminence on Dartmoor, are very extensive tin-mines. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bickleigh: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £31. 3., and those of the incumbent for £61. 3.

SHEEPWASH (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of TORRINGTON, hundred of SHEBBEAR, Black Torrington and Shebbear, and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Hatherleigh; containing 497 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1771 acres, of which 1360 are arable and pasture, and 230 woodland, coppice, and common; the soil is various, and the surface hilly. The river Torridge flows here, and sometimes inundates the lower grounds. The village suffered great damage from a fire in 1743; it had formerly a market and three annual fairs. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Shebbear: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £110, and the vicarial for £99. The church is a neat structure with a tower. There is a place of worship for Baptists. In the parish are the remains of a very large mansion called Upcott Avenel, to which a chapel was once annexed.

SHEEPWASH, or SHIPWASH, with ASHINGTON, a township, in the parish of BOTHAL, union, and E. division of the ward, of MORPETH, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Morpeth; containing 76 inhabitants. Shipwash was once a parish of itself, and notice of a rector occurs in the 14th century; of the church, however, which was dedicated to the Holy Sepulchre, there are no remains, nor is it known at what time it became a ruin; the only relic is the beautifully-formed basin of the ancient font. Connected with the church was an hospital for travellers passing the wash, to which Bishop Hatfield, in 1379, appointed a keeper, the office being at that time vacant. The lands are the property of the Duke of Portland and the rector of Bothal; the surface is varied, and the scenery is of pleasing character, enriched with plantations, and enlivened by the picturesque course of the river Wansbeck, which is navigable for keels and small boats as far as Shipwash-bridge, an old structure of four arches. The ancient mansion of the Bulmer family is beautifully situated here, amidst gardens, orchards, and shrubberies of great luxuriance; and the parsonage-house, surrounded by the windings of the river, is a very interesting feature in the landscape. The living is a rectory, consolidated with that of Bothal, and valued in the king's books at £3. 17. 1.

SHEEPWAY, a tything, in the parish of PORTBURY, union of BEDMINSTER, hundred of PORTBURY, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 53 inhabitants.

SHEEPY MAGNA (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ATHERSTONE, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Atherstone; containing, with the chapelry of Ratcliffe-Culey, 572 inhabitants, of whom 353 are in Sheepy Magna township. The parish comprises by measurement 1570 acres; the soil is a reddish marl, in some parts, and in others a lighter loam, alternated with gravel; the surface is undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by the rivulet Sence, which falls into the Anchor. The living is a rectory, consisting of the North and South medieties, with the rectory of Sheepy Parva annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £835; patron and incumbent, the Rev. T. C. Fell. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1810; the glebe comprises about 550 acres. The church was formerly an ancient structure in the Norman style, of which the tower only is remaining; the other portions were rebuilt about 60 years since, when the stone coffins of several Knights Templars were broken and mutilated. There is a chapel of ease at Ratcliffe-Culey; and at the Mythe, which once belonged to the monks of Merevale, are some slight remains of an ancient chapel. About £18 per annum, arising from bequests, are distributed to the poor.

SHEEPY PARVA (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ATHERSTONE, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Atherstone; containing 104 inhabitants. It comprises rather more than 700 acres, and is separated from Ratcliffe-Culey by the Bosworth-field brook. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Sheepy Magna, and valued in the king's books at £13. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.

SHEERING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EPPING, hundred of HARLOW, S. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. E.) from Harlow; containing 544 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Stort, and comprises about 1530 acres, of which 1249 are arable, 265 pasture, and 16 woodland; the soil is fertile, and the arable lands are under excellent cultivation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4., and in the gift of the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £507, and the glebe comprises 18 acres. The church is a small ancient edifice. A free chapel was endowed here by Christiana de Valvines, the site of which is still called Chapel Field. Here is a national school.

SHEERNESS, a sea-port, market-town, and chapelry, in the parish of MINSTER, union of SHEPPY, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the liberty of the ISLE of SHEPPY, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 21 miles (N. E.) from Maidstone, and 50 (E. by S.) from London. This place, which is situated at the north-western point of the Isle of Sheppy, on the river Medway, at its junction with the Thames, was a mere swamp until the reign of Charles II., when the importance of its situation being appreciated, that monarch, early in 1667, directed the construction of a strong fort, and twice personally ascertained its progress. In the same year, before the new fortifications were in a very advanced state, the Dutch fleet entered the Thames, and made their memorable attack on the shipping in the Medway, having in their passage destroyed that portion of the works which was completed, and landed some men, who took possession of the fort. In consequence of this, a regular fortification, with a line of heavy artillery, and of smaller forts higher up, on each side of the Medway, was formed, to which other works have since been added. A garrison is kept up, under the command of a governor, lieutenant-governor, fort-major, and inferior officers; and the construction of a royal dockyard, for repairing ships and building frigates and smaller vessels, has caused Sheerness to become a naval station of the first importance. In 1798, the mutiny of the fleet stationed at the Nore threatened the town with the most alarming consequences, and induced many of the inhabitants to make a precipitate retreat to Chatham and other places; but the fortunate suppression of this formidable insurrection saved it from the apprehended danger. In 1827 it suffered from a dreadful fire, which destroyed 50 houses, and property to the value of £60,000; but the buildings, which were principally of wood, have been replaced by others of brick.

Since the formation of the naval establishment, Sheerness has grown up into a considerable town, consisting of two divisions, Blue Town and Mile Town; and it has been recently much enlarged by the formation of some new streets. A pier and causeway extend from the town to low-water mark, a distance of about a quarter of a mile, and are kept in good repair; the streets are paved and lighted under the authority of acts of parliament passed in the 41st and 49th of George III., and the inhabitants are supplied with water of a very excellent quality. Sheerness has latterly become the resort of much company, attracted by the facility of sea-bathing, which, however, is practicable only at the influx and reflux of the tide; the beach, on which the machines are stationed, forms a delightful promenade; and there are warm baths, well managed. On the cliffs leading from the beach towards Minster there is, perhaps, one of the most interesting views in the kingdom: the North Sea on the east; the rivers Thames and Medway, bearing innumerable vessels of all sizes, with the town and harbour of Sheerness, to the north and west; and the fertile valleys of Kent, with the Medway winding through them, and the towns and villages interspersed, towards the south, combine in presenting a diversity of landscape rarely excelled. The harbour has of late years been much enlarged and improved, and is now safe and commodious, often presenting a splendid appearance from the number of vessels in it; passage-boats ply with every tide, and a steam-boat twice a day, to and from Chatham, and there is daily communication by steam-boats with London.

The dockyard has been greatly extended and improved within the last fifteen years, at an expense of about £3,000,000, and is now one of the finest in Europe, covering an area of 60 acres, surrounded by an extremely well-built brick wall, which cost £40,000. The docks are sufficiently capacious to receive men of war of the first class, with all their guns, stores, equipments, &c., on board; and two steam-engines, each of 50-horse power, have been erected for the purpose of pumping them dry. There is a basin, with a depth of water of 26 feet, which will hold six ships of the first class; and two of a smaller size, for store ships and boats. The storehouse, which is the largest building in the country, is six stories high, with iron joists, beams, window-frames, and doors, and will contain at least 30,000 tons of naval stores: there are also a handsome victualling storehouse, smithy, navy pay-office, masts-houses, &c. The superintendent and principal officers of the establishment have handsome houses in the yard; and a noble residence has been erected in the garrison for the port-admiral, in which are state-rooms for the reception of the royal family, the lords of the admiralty, &c. The chief establishment of the ordnance department has been removed hence to Chatham, where the stores for the fleet at the Nore, &c., are kept; and the ground formerly occupied by it has been added to the dockyard. An office connected with this department is still, however, retained here; and it is said that government contemplates the re-establishment of the department at this place on a very enlarged scale, and the extension of the present line of fortifications from the garrison point to the sea wall called Queenborough wall; for which they have purchased 200 acres of land around the town.

Considerable quantities of corn and seed, the produce of the isle, as well as oysters (of which the beds extend all along the coast, as far as Milton), are shipped for the London market. There are copperas-works within a few miles of the town; the pyrites, or copperas stones, are collected in heaps upon the beach, from the falling cliffs, and carried away in vessels. The market is on Saturday, but there is no regular market-place. A very neat chapel of ease, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been erected at Mile Town, at a cost of £3000, and contains 1070 sittings, of which 600 are free, the Incorporated Society having granted £700 in aid of the expense; it was consecrated August 30th, 1836. At the east end of the dockyard, outside the wall, is also a spacious chapel, attached to the dockyard, and the minister of which is appointed by the board of admiralty. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics, also a synagogue. Connected with the church at Mile Town are three handsome schoolrooms, erected at an expense of £650; and a school in connexion with the British and Foreign Society has been built at Sheerness at a cost of nearly £600. There are several reading societies; also a mechanics' institute, with an extensive library, where lectures are delivered during six months of the year. In sinking the wells here, the workmen, at the depth of 200 feet, discovered a complete prostrate forest, through which they were obliged to burn their way. Stones, well adapted for the composition of Roman cement, from being impregnated with copperas, are dredged up from the sea near the cliffs.

SHEET, a tything, in the parish and union of PETERSFIELD, hundred of FINCH-DEAN, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. E. by E.) from Petersfield; containing 390 inhabitants. It comprises 1549 acres, of which 276 are common or waste land.

SHEFFIELD (St. Peter), a newly-enfranchised borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, partly in the N., but chiefly in the S., division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; comprising the chapelry of Attercliffe with Darnall, and the townships of Brightside-Bierlow, Ecclesall-Bierlow, Nether and Upper Hallam, and Sheffield; and containing 111,091 inhabitants, of whom 68,186 are in the town, 55 miles (S. W. by S.) from York, and 163 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, which is of great antiquity, derived its name, originally *Sheaf*field, from its situation on the river Sheaf, near its confluence with the Don. During the heptarchy, it formed part of the large manor of Hallam, which, though subsequently dismembered, and deprived of its jurisdiction, gave name to a still more extensive territory called Hallamshire, of which the limits are not accurately defined, but of which the parish of Sheffield was the principal portion. At the Conquest, this district appears to have been divided among three Saxon lords, of whom Earl Waltheof, who afterwards married Judith, niece of the Conqueror, was alone suffered to retain possession of his lands, which subsequently, however, upon his entering into a conspiracy against his sovereign, were confiscated, and his castle, a place of great strength and splendour, supposed to have been erected on the bank of the river Riveling, was levelled with the ground. The manor of Sheffield, after the execution of Waltheof at Winchester, for this conspiracy, in 1075, was held under Judith, by Roger de Busli, a favourite of William's, and then, with other manors, by William de Lovetot, who is supposed to have erected a baronial castle, a church, and an hospital, which last was built on an eminence on the east side of the town still called Spital Hill; and thus, by rendering Sheffield the head of the manor, he laid the first foundation of the prosperity and importance of the town. On the death of William de Lovetot, the last lord without issue male, the manor and other possessions were conveyed by marriage with Maude, his sole heiress, to Gerard de Furnival, in whose family they remained for many generations. Thomas de Furnival, in the reign of Edward I., contributed greatly to improve the civil condition of his tenants; he established a municipal court, with trial by jury, and granted the inhabitants a market and fair, with many other privileges and immunities; and on the 10th of August, 1297, he bestowed on them a charter which has been called the Magna Charta of Sheffield, abolishing tyrannical exactions and services, for which he substituted fixed payments in money, and establishing a court baron for the more equitable administration of justice.

William de Furnival, the last lord, died in 1383, at the family residence in London, an ancient mansion in Holborn, the site of which is now occupied by the buildings of Furnival's Inn; and the manor was transferred by marriage with his only daughter and heiress, Joan, to Thomas de Neville, brother of Ralph, Earl of Westmorland, who was summoned to parliament by the title of Lord Furnival. On his decease, leaving only two daughters, the lordship passed by marriage with the elder, to the celebrated John Talbot, who, for his distinguished civil and military services, was created Earl of Shrewsbury; he was twice lord justice of Ireland, commanded the English forces in the battle with Joan D'Arc, the Maid of Orleans, and was killed, with one of his sons, at the battle of Chatillon, in 1453. The manor continued in the possession of his descendants, of whom George, the fourth earl, erected a splendid baronial castle in the reign of Henry VIII., in which he afterwards received Cardinal Wolsey, who was given into his custody by the Earl of Northumberland, and whom he entertained for sixteen days, previously to his removal to Leicester Abbey. George, the sixth earl, was charged by Queen Elizabeth, in 1570, with the custody of Mary, Queen of Scots, who, after being confined for some time in the castle, was removed to the manor-house, in which she was detained as a prisoner till 1584. Gilbert, the last earl of Shrewsbury who was lord of Hallamshire, died leaving only three daughters, of whom the youngest married Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, to whose descendant, on the death of the other sisters, the Countesses of Pembroke and Kent, without issue, the manor, with all its appendages, was conveyed, and has since that time been the property of the dukes of Norfolk. During the war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants embraced the cause of the parliament, and Sir John Gell, with a part of the republican army, marching from Derbyshire, took possession of the castle in 1642; but the Earl of Newcastle, in the following year, advancing into Yorkshire at the head of 8000 men, the town and castle were abandoned, and surrendered to him without an effort to defend them. The earl, on his departure for York, appointed Major Beaumont governor of the castle, of which he retained possession till the defeat of the king's army at the battle of Marston-Moor, in 1644, when the Earl of Manchester, who commanded the parliamentary forces in this part of the country, sent Major-General Crawford with a detachment to reduce it; the garrison at this time consisted of 200 infantry and a troop of horse, and the castle was strongly fortified, but, after a protracted siege, surrendered upon honourable terms, and was soon demolished. The lodge, or manor-house, was kept up for many years after the destruction of the castle, of which the sole remains are some of the vaults and foundations; but it was at length abandoned as a residence by Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, in 1706, and the park of nearly 2000 acres was divided into several farms. The remains of the mansion, which was formed into small tenements, are inconsiderable, and the only tower left which indicated its former splendour, fell down in 1823.

The town is situated on the acclivities of a gentle eminence in a spacious valley, which, with the exception of an opening towards the north-east, is inclosed by a range of richly-wooded hills, beyond which rise others of greater elevation, forming a magnificent natural amphitheatre, commanding extensive prospects over the adjacent country, and the town and suburbs, with pleasing villas, verdant fields, and thickly-wooded eminences. The rivers Sheaf, Don, and Porter, surround the town; and the mountain streams of the Riveling and Loxley form numerous reservoirs for the supply of the various factories, and appear like natural lakes, diversifying the surface, and adding variety to the scenery. An ancient stone bridge of three arches, erected across the Don in 1485, and called Lady-bridge, from a convent near it dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was widened in 1767, when the convent was taken down; over the same river is an iron bridge of three arches, and an additional stone bridge of three arches was erected in 1828, affording a readier communication between the Rotherham and Barnsley roads and the new corn and cattle markets. There is also a bridge across the Sheaf, anciently of wood, rebuilt of stone in 1769, by the Duke of Norfolk, and widened and repaired in 1806; it is a neat structure of one arch. The town, which is above a mile in length from north to south, and more than three-quarters of a mile in breadth, consists of numerous streets, which, with the exception of some of the principal thoroughfares, are narrow and inconvenient; the houses, which are mostly of brick, and intermixed with many of very ancient character, are chiefly within the angle formed by the rivers, but on the opposite banks are also several extensive ranges of buildings. Considerable improvements have taken place under an act obtained in 1818, and the town is lighted with gas by two companies, now united, namely, a company whose works, at Shude Hill, were erected at a cost of £40,000, and a new company formed in 1836 for affording a supply on more moderate terms, for which they expended £80,000 in the erection of works on Blonk Island. The inhabitants were formerly furnished with water from springs in the neighbouring hills, by works erected in 1782, by a few private individuals; but the supply becoming inadequate to the increasing demands of the town, a company was formed in 1829, with a capital of £100,000, and incorporated by act of parliament. The service reservoir of this company's works has an elevation of more than 450 feet above the town, and covers an area of nearly six acres, containing about 20,000,000 gallons, supplied by a conduit from the Redmire reservoir, near the source of the river Riveling, of which it receives the surplus water, after a sufficient quantity has been retained for the use of the mills upon its stream. The Redmire reservoir covers an area of 50 acres, and contains more than 200,000,000 gallons. The conduit is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and passes for more than three-quarters of a mile through a tunnel of 3 feet diameter: for the remainder of the distance, it forms an open channel embanked with stone, and is conveyed over the valley of Tapton by an aqueduct supported on pillars of stone nearly 30 feet in height. From its great descent towards the town, the water acquires a force sufficient to raise it to the roofs of the highest houses.

The Public Subscription Library of Sheffield was originally established in 1771, in Surrey-street, and has now a collection of more than 7000 volumes, removed in 1825 to the Music Hall, in which a convenient apartment has been appropriated to its use. The Literary and Philosophical Society was founded in 1822; the members hold their meetings in a room in the Music Hall, which contains their apparatus and a museum of fossils, shells, botanical specimens, and natural curiosities from the South Sea Islands; also a well painted full-length portrait of the poet Montgomery. The Mechanics' Library, in Watson's-walk, was established in 1824, and has nearly 5000 volumes; in the room is a marble bust, by Chantrey, of James Watt, the celebrated engineer. The Mechanics' Institution, in Surrey-street, was established in 1832, for the improvement of scientific and mechanical pursuits, for which purpose lectures are delivered, and evening classes regularly maintained under the care of stipendiary teachers. The rooms contain a museum and laboratory, with models of machinery, mechanical instruments, and a good collection of minerals; but the accommodation is totally inadequate to the number of members, and a subscription has been opened for the erection of a hall, towards which the Duke of Norfolk has contributed £100; in the mean time, the lectures are delivered in a room hired for the purpose. There are also two large subscription newsrooms, one of which is in a building specially erected in the East Parade, and the other in the Commercial-buildings. Various Newspapers have been published in the town at different times, but the only journals now extant are, the Iris, commenced by Mr. Montgomery, as a continuation of the Sheffield Register, and published every Thursday; and the Independent and Mercury, which are printed on Saturday. The Medical and Anatomical Society was established in 1829, and a handsome building in the Grecian style has been erected for its use, at an expense of £2000, after a design by Messrs. Worth and Harrison; it is supported by physicians and surgeons, who deliver lectures on those subjects to medical students in the town and neighbourhood. The Music Hall, erected in Surrey-street, in 1824, is a spacious and elegant Grecian structure, containing on the ground-floor a public library, reading-room, and saloon, with apartments for the Literary and Philosophical Society, and above them a good concert-room with a well-arranged orchestra; this is supported by an annual subscription of £1. 1., and concerts take place under the superintendence of the Philharmonic Society, which has been recently established. The Assembly-rooms, in Norfolk-street, are handsomely fitted up; and the Theatre, in Arundel-street, is a substantial building of brick, with a portico of stone surmounted by a pediment. The Circus, opposite the cattle-market, is in the Grecian style, with a stately portico of the Ionic order, rising from a rusticated basement in which are three entrances, and supporting an enriched frieze and cornice surrounding the building, and surmounted by an attic. The interior is adapted both for dramatic performances and equestrian exercises; the exterior of the building is 110 feet in length, and 77 feet in depth, and is an elegant specimen of the style, erected after a design by Mr. Harrison, in 1836, at an expense of £6000, by a proprietary of £25 shareholders.

The Barracks, situated about a mile from the market-place, on the western bank of the river Don, contain accommodation for two troops of horse, with extensive grounds for exercise; they were erected in 1794. The Public Baths, on the Glossop road, were built in 1836, by a proprietary of £20 shareholders, at an expense of £8000, including also the erection of several houses in the immediate neighbourhood for visitors. The buildings, which are fronted with Roman cement, contain an excellent establishment, consisting of two spacious swimming baths, one 60 feet long and 30 wide, for public use, and the other, 48 feet long and 36 wide, with a fountain in the centre, for the use of subscribers; also two tepid plunging baths 12 feet square, one for gentlemen, and the other for ladies; with shower, vapour, and warm baths heated to any required temperature. Attached to the baths, are commodious dressing-rooms furnished with every requisite; and the front of the building contains, on the first-floor, a spacious room for the delivery of lectures, or other public purposes. The Botanical and Horticultural Gardens, laid out in 1836, comprise 18 acres on a gentle declivity in the fertile vale of the river Porter; the principal entrance is through an elegant gateway of the Ionic order, on the model of the temple of Ilyssus at Athens, and the lower lodge, affording an entrance from the Ecclesall road, is in the style of a Swiss cottage. The range of conservatories, more than 100 yards in length, is beautifully ornamented with Corinthian pillars. A long and spacious walk leads from the central conservatory to a circular sheet of water in which is a jet d'eau; and the grounds are tastefully embellished with every variety of exotic plants, and disposed into numerous walks, parterres of flowers, shrubberies, and plantations. The land was purchased by the proprietors at a cost of £4000, and they have expended nearly £20,000 in bringing the gardens into their present state of perfection. On the opposite bank of the Porter, is the General Cemetery, occupying an abrupt acclivity of nearly 6 acres in the vale of Sharrow, and completed at an expense of £13,000, by a proprietary of shareholders, in 1836; the entrance lodge is of the Grecian-Doric order, and from it a walk on the bank of the river leads to the lower catacombs, above which is a second range, with a terrace in front, and a parapet and balustrade. The chapel, situated on a greater elevation, is a handsome structure with a stately portico of fluted Doric columns; the minister's house, which occupies a still higher portion of the acclivity, is of corresponding character, and the grounds, which are tastefully disposed, in addition to the numerous catacombs, afford space for 7000 graves.

The principal MANUFACTURE is that of cutlery ware, for which the town appears to have been distinguished at a very early period, and for which the numerous mines of coal and iron-stone in its immediate vicinity rendered its situation extremely favourable. Chaucer, in his Canterbury Tales, notices the Sheffield "Thwytel," or "Whittel," a kind of large knife worn by such as had not the privilege of wearing a sword, and for the making of which, and also of iron arrow-heads, before the general use of fire-arms, the town had become celebrated. The principal articles subsequently manufactured here, were scythes, sickles, shears, and implements of husbandry, till the middle of the last century, when considerable improvements were made, and the finer kinds of cutlery were introduced. The superintendance of the trade was, in the sixteenth century, entrusted to twelve master cutlers appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor, and invested with powers to enforce the necessary regulations for the protection of the trade. In 1570, many artizans from the Netherlands, driven from their country by the arbitrary measures of the Duke D'Alva, settled in various parts of England, under the patronage of Queen Elizabeth; such as were of the same occupation, by advice of her chamberlain, the Earl of Shrewsbury, fixed their residence in one spot; and most of them being artificers in iron, were placed on the earl's estates in Yorkshire, and contributed greatly towards improvements in cutlery, which has in Sheffield been brought to an unrivalled state of perfection.

Seal of the Cutlers' Company.

In 1624, the cutlers were incorporated by act of parliament, "for the good order and government of the makers of knives, scissors, shears, sickles, and other cutlery wares, in Hallamshire, in the county of York, and parts near adjoining." Under this act the government was vested in a master, two wardens, six searchers, and 24 assistants, being freemen. The master, wardens, and assistants are chosen annually by the whole of the corporation; the master, on retiring from office, nominates the senior warden as his successor, and if his choice is objected to, he names another, till his election is confirmed by the whole body; the wardens are chosen from among the searchers. The corporation have power to make by-laws for the regulation of the trade, and to inflict penalties for the neglect of them; and their jurisdiction, which is restricted to affairs connected with the trade, extends over the whole of the district of Hallamshire, and all places within six miles of it. Several alterations were made in the constitution of this corporation by acts of parliament, in 1791 and 1801; but on account of their unpopularity, they were repealed in 1814 by an act granting permission to all persons, whether sons of freemen or strangers, to carry on trade any where within the limits of Hallamshire, which privilege, by encouraging men of genius from every part of the country to settle in the town, has tended greatly to its prosperity, and, by exciting a spirit of competition, assisted to produce exquisite specimens of workmanship in the finer branches of the trade. The principal articles at present manufactured are table knives and forks, pen and pocket knives of every description, scissors, razors, surgical, mathematical, and optical instruments, engineers' and joiners' tools, scythes, sickles, and files, of which vast numbers are exported, and an endless variety of steel wares. Cutlery made from cast steel was added to the ancient articles from hammered steel, and has been brought to great perfection. The manufacture of silver plate in all its branches, from the most minute to the most massive articles, is also carried on to a very considerable extent, and has obtained a high degree of celebrity for elegance of pattern and beauty of workmanship. The manufacture of silver plated wares, which was introduced in 1742, has much contributed to the fame of the town, and has been applied to the making of waiters, urns, tea-pots, candlesticks, and numerous articles previously made of solid silver; the rims, mountings, bosses, and other ornamental parts, are usually of solid silver, and as the Sheffield plate has a much thicker coating of silver on the other parts than the plated wares of other towns, it possesses a decided superiority, which has long since opened for it a ready market throughout the world.

The manufacture of numerous articles of a similar kind in Britannia metal, a sort of pewter composed of tin, antimony, and regulus, has been pursued extensively, and forms an important branch of foreign and domestic trade; and within the last few years much improvement has been made in this branch by the substitution of the Albata or German silver, which is wrought into an infinite variety of useful and elegant articles. The manufacture of buttons and button-moulds, wire-drawing, and the refining of silver, are carried on to a considerable extent; and along the banks of the rivers are numerous iron and steel works, in which the heavier castings are made, and extensive mills for slitting and preparing the iron and steel for the use of the manufacturers. Among the manufactured iron goods are, stove grates in every variety of pattern, fenders, fire-irons, boilers for steam-engines, and all the different articles usually made of wrought and cast iron. A type-foundry was established in 1806, and in 1818 another on a more extensive scale, the proprietors of which purchased the business of a large house in London. There are also several factories for the weaving of horse-hair seating for chairs, and various other establishments, together affording employment to nearly 15,000 of the population. The late Hall of the Cutlers' Company, built in 1726, on the site of one erected in 1638, was, on the appointment of the master as returning officer of the borough, under the Reform act, taken down, and rebuilt in a style more adapted to the importance of the trade, in 1832; it is a handsome structure of stone in the Grecian style, with a portico of the Corinthian order, supporting a triangular pediment, in the tympanum of which are the cutlers' arms, sculptured in bold relief. There is a stately vestibule, in which is a double flight of steps, leading to an elegant saloon, above which are a banquet-room 80 feet long and 30 feet wide, lighted by a spacious and lofty dome; an assembly-room 53 feet long and 25 wide; and various other apartments for the use of the corporation. In the principal rooms are portraits of the late vicar of Sheffield, R. A. Thorpe, Esq., and Lord Wharncliffe; and also three busts, one of the late Dr. Brown, by Chantrey, and the others of the late Earl Fitzwilliam and John Rimington, Esq.

The trade of the town is greatly facilitated by its advantageous line of inland NAVIGATION. An act was obtained in 1726, for improving the river Don, and making it navigable for vessels of 20 tons' burthen to Tinsley, within three miles of the town; in 1739, another act was procured for bettering the navigation from Tinsley to Fishlake, near Thorne, whence a direct intercourse might be maintained with the river Humber and the German Ocean, which was accomplished in 1751; and in 1815, an act was passed for the construction of a canal from Sheffield to the Don at Tinsley. The head of this canal forms a basin at the eastern extremity of Sheffield, 200 yards long and 35 wide, to which there is an entrance from the town by a stone bridge over the river Sheaf, about 200 yards below the ancient bridge; adjoining the basin is a spacious wharf, where vessels can load and unload under cover, with an extensive range of warehouses, and offices for the transaction of business. The basin is capable of containing more than 40 vessels of 50 tons' burthen, which arrive from Hull, York, Gainsborough, Leeds, Manchester, and Thorne, at which last place vessels from London generally unload goods for Sheffield. Great facilities are also provided by railways to Manchester and to Rotherham, by the former of which rapid intercourse is kept up with the counties of Lancaster and Chester, and the parts to the north and south of those districts; and by the latter line, in conjunction with other lines, there is railway communication with various parts of the county of York, with the north, and with the midland counties and the southern portions of England. The Sheffield and Rotherham railway, after much opposition, was commenced under an act obtained in 1836, authorising the proprietors to raise a capital of £100,000, in shares of £25 each, and a loan of £30,000, on mortgage, and the work was completed in October, 1838. The line begins at the union of the Barnsley road with Saville-street, where the station is, a building of peculiar lightness, containing waiting-rooms for passengers, with suitable offices, and four lines of way for the carriages; it proceeds to Masbrough, where it joins the North-Midland railway, and is thence continued to its terminal station at Rotherham. The Commercial Buildings, in High-street, were erected in 1834, at an expense of £5000, by a company of £25 shareholders; they form a handsome structure of the Doric order, and contain on the ground-floor apartments for the post-office, in the rear of which are several offices for commercial purposes, and on the first story an elegant reading-room, lighted by a dome. The MARKET, originally granted in 1296, to Thomas de Furnival, is held on Tuesday and Saturday, the former chiefly for corn, and the latter for provisions of all kinds: the market-places have been enlarged and improved under acts passed in 1784 and 1827. The market for corn is held in the Corn Exchange, a spacious building with a stately portico of sixteen massive pillars in the principal front, erected on the former site of the Shrewsbury hospital, in the park, between the Sheaf and Canal bridges; behind it are the cheese, poultry, and fish markets, and at some distance to the north, is the new cattle-market. The market for butchers' meat is held near Market-street, and the shambles, which are extensive and well arranged, have a covered walk in front. Beyond the shambles, is the market for butter, eggs, and poultry, around which are shops for the sale of vegetables; the entrance is by several gateways, one of which communicates with the shoe-market, and another with the vegetable and fruit market in King-street. A market for earthenware is also held, every Tuesday, in Paradise-square. There are fairs annually on the Tuesday in Trinity-week, and the 28th of November, for cattle and toys; and a cheese-fair, held at the same time, has within the last few years been established, at which are sold many hundred tons of cheese from the counties of Derby, Stafford, Chester, and Lancaster.

The inhabitants received the Elective Franchise by act of the 2nd of William IV., with the privilege of returning two members to parliament; the right of voting is in the resident £10 householders, of whom there are about 4200 within the limits of the borough, which are co-extensive with those of the parish; the master of the Cutlers' Company is the returning officer. The Police establishment was formerly superintended by a body of commissioners comprising the town trustees, the master and wardens of the Cutlers' Company, and about a hundred of the principal inhabitants, who held their meetings in the town-hall, and whose jurisdiction extended over the town and suburbs, and all places within three-quarters of a mile round the church. But on the 24th of August, 1843, her Majesty, by royal charter, constituted the parish a municipal borough, to be governed by a mayor, 14 aldermen, and 42 councillors, and to be divided into nine wards. With regard to the administration of justice, the town is under the controul of the mayor and the county magistrates for the district, who meet also in the town-hall, for the determination of all misdemeanours, on Tuesday and Friday, weekly; and the October quarter-sessions for the West riding are held here, by adjournment. Courts baron for Sheffield and Ecclesall were formerly held, regulated by an act of the 29th of George II.; and in 1791, the latter court, after being discontinued for many years, was revived by Earl Fitzwilliam, who gave a site on which a gaol was erected by subscription. By an act obtained in 1808, however, the act of George II. was repealed, and commissioners were appointed for determining pleas and recovering debts not exceeding £5; the court for the manor of Sheffield is held every Thursday, in the town-hall, and that for the manor of Ecclesall on the Monday in every third week, at the court-house in Ecclesall. The Town-hall was built in 1808, when the ancient edifice previously appropriated to that purpose, was taken down; it is situated at the extremity of the Hay-market, and was erected on a site given by the town trustees. It is a neat substantial structure of stone, with a cupola, and was considerably enlarged in 1833, at the expense of the town; on the ground-floor are a large entrance hall and offices, and the first story contains a spacious court-room, in which the quarter and petty sessions are held, and which is also adapted for public meetings. On the basement is a watch-house once used by the commissioners; and behind the building is the town gaol, containing a house for the keeper and several cells for the temporary confinement of prisoners, who, after conviction, are committed either to the Wakefield house of correction, or to York.

The PARISH is about ten miles in length from east to west, and three in average breadth, comprising an area of more than 22,000 acres; the lands are in a high state of cultivation, and the district abounds with mineral wealth. Coal and iron-stone are extensively wrought; of the former, which is of excellent quality, there are several mines in the park and in the township of Attercliffe, and the upper strata being nearly exhausted, new pits have been opened for procuring coal from the lower beds. The iron-stone is not usually of a kind adapted for the general purposes of the manufacturers of cutlery, and consequently, for finer works, large quantities are imported from Sweden, Germany, and Russia; sandstone and gritstone are quarried in several parts of the parish, and in others grey slate of good quality is found. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 15. 2½; net income, £1285; patron, the Duke of Norfolk; impropriators, P. Gell, Esq., and another. The tithes were commuted for land and annual payments in 1791. The vicarage-house is at the corner of St. James'-street, and the glebe-land in its vicinity is covered with buildings. Three stipendiary clergymen, who are in possession of an income of £400 per annum each, are appointed to assist the vicar by twelve burgesses of the town and parish, called the "Twelve Capital Burgesses," incorporated by charter of Queen

Seal of the Twelve Capital Burgesses.

Mary, who hold certain lands and estates in trust, for the payment of the assistant ministers, for the repairs of the church, bridges, &c., and the relief of the needy poor. The church, erected in the reign of Henry I., is a spacious cruciform structure, with a central tower and spire, most probably in the Norman style; but the edifice has been so altered by repairs, that, with the exception of part of the tower and spire, and a few small portions of the interior, very little of its original character can be distinguished. The chancel contains the first production from the chisel of Chantrey, a mural tablet, with the bust of the Rev. James Wilkinson, late vicar, canopied with drapery, in Carrara marble, erected at the public expense, as a tribute of respect to his memory. Many illustrious persons have been interred in the church, among whom were Mary, Countess of Northumberland; Elizabeth, Countess of Lennox, mother of the unfortunate Lady Arabella Stuart; Lady Elizabeth Butler; four earls of Shrewsbury; and Peter Rofet, French secretary of Mary, Queen of Scots. St. Paul's chapel was erected in 1720, by subscription, towards which Mr. R. Downes, silversmith, contributed £1000: it is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style, with a tower surmounted by a well-proportioned dome, and a cupola of cast-iron; the interior is light, and elegantly ornamented, and contains a bust by Chantrey of the Rev. Alex. Mackenzie, with emblematical sculpture finely executed. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £136; patron, the Vicar. St. James' chapel, a neat structure in the Grecian style, with a campanile turret, was erected by subscription in 1788; the interior is well arranged, and the east window is embellished with a beautiful painting of the Crucifixion, by Peckett. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £160; patron, the Vicar; impropriator, the Duke of Norfolk. St. George's church, on an eminence at the western extremity of the town, erected in 1824, by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £14,819, is a very handsome structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower at the west end, rising to the height of 139 feet, and crowned with pinnacles: the interior is handsomely finished, and contains about 2000 sittings, 1000 of which are free; the large altar-piece is an admirable representation of Christ blessing little children, painted and presented by Mr. Paris, in 1831. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £365; patron, the Vicar. St. Philip's church, near the infirmary, was erected in 1827, by grant from the commissioners, at an expense of £13,970, and is a neat edifice in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £135; patron, the Vicar; impropriator, the Duke of Norfolk. St. Mary's church, in Brammall-lane, of which the first stone was laid by the Countess of Surrey, in 1826, is a very handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and a porch of elegant design; the exterior is enriched with a profusion of grotesque heads and other ornaments; the nave is separated from the aisle by ranges of light clustered columns, which support the lofty and richly-groined roof. It was erected by grant from the commissioners, at an expense of £12,650; and the site and the cemetery were given by his grace the Duke of Norfolk. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £350; patron, the Vicar. St. John's church, on Park-hill, was erected by subscription in 1837, on a site of three acres presented by the duke, at a cost of nearly £4000; it is a neat edifice, with a tower surmounted by a slender spire, and contains 1200 free sittings. There are also a large Episcopal chapel attached to Shrewsbury Hospital in the Park, and other churches in the townships belonging to the parish, which are noticed under their proper heads. There are eleven places of worship for various denominations of Methodists, six for Independents, and one each for Baptists, Quakers, Roman Catholics, and Arians.

The Free Grammar school was founded in 1603, by Thomas Smith, who endowed it with £30 per annum; and in the following year, letters-patent were obtained from James I., incorporating the church burgesses and the vicar, as governors: the old school occupied a low situation in Townhead-street; the present handsome edifice, in Charlotte-street, was built in 1825, at a cost of £1600, of which £1400 were raised by subscription. By augmentation of the original bequest, the endowment now consists of a farmstead and 61½ acres of land at Wadsley, yielding a rental of £140 per annum; and two houses with ten acres of land at Gilberthorpe, bequeathed by James Hill, in 1709, and let for £20. 10. The Boys' Charity school, at the north-east corner of the parochial churchyard, was established in 1706; and the present school-house, a neat and commodious edifice of stone, was erected in 1825, on the site of the original building, at the cost of £3000. The school has an income arising from a benefaction of £5000 by Mr. Parkins, in 1766, aided by other donations, including one from Mr. T. Hanby, which maintains six boys on the establishment, at an expense of upwards of £60 per annum: the whole yearly revenue is above £600, with which, and annual subscriptions, 90 boys are maintained, educated, and apprenticed. At the opposite corner of the churchyard is a similar school, in which 70 girls are maintained and educated, and afterwards placed out in service: a convenient house was erected in 1786, at an expense of £1500, by subscription. A school has also been established, in pursuance of the will of Mr. W. Birley, who, in 1715, bequeathed £900 in trust for the purchase of an estate, of the rental of which, one-third was to be appropriated to the foundation of the school, one-third towards the maintenance of indigent tradesmen, or their widows, and the remainder towards the support of a minister to officiate in the chapel of the hospital. The school is situated in School-croft, a little below the site of the old grammar school, and was rebuilt in 1827: the entire income of the charity is about £200 per annum. The Church of England Collegiate school, situated near Broom Hall, and the Ecclesall New Road, was founded by a company of proprietors, in 1835, with a capital of £3000, in £25 shares; it is an elegant building in the later English style, to which are attached about 3½ acres of ground. There are four exhibitions of £25 each, for four years, to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and an annual prize of £25 to the first boy of his year, not intended for the university. The Wesleyan Proprietary Grammar school, in Glossop road, instituted for 300 boys, is on a very large scale, and has six acres of land.

Shrewsbury's Hospital was projected by Gilbert, Earl of Shrewsbury, in 1616, and completed in pursuance of his will, by the Earl of Norfolk, earl-marshal of England, and the buildings erected in 1673; it is amply endowed for eighteen men and eighteen women. The original buildings were recently taken down to make room for the market-place, and the erection of the corn-exchange; and a neat range in the later English style has been erected on the southern side of the town, in the centre of which is a chapel. Hollis' hospital was founded in 1703, by Mr. Thomas Hollis, a native of the town, who, with some of his descendants, endowed it for sixteen aged women, widows of cutlers, or of persons connected with the trade. The General infirmary was first opened for the reception of patients in 1797, and has been deservedly regarded as an object entitled to the most liberal patronage and support. The premises, occupying a site about a mile to the north-west of the town, and guarded against the too near approach of other buildings by the purchase of 31 acres of surrounding land, were erected by subscription, at an expense of nearly £20,000, including the cost of the land; they are handsomely built of stone, and form a conspicuous ornament in the principal approaches to the town.

Seal of the Town's Trust, or Sheffield Free Tenants.

Several extensive charitable benefactions have been made for the benefit of the inhabitants. The Town's Trust has arisen from a grant made by a member of the ancient family of Furnival, about the year 1300, and consists of property in lands and tenements, shares in the Don navigation, &c., producing about £1400 per annum, which sum is applied to the maintenance of Lady's-bridge, the keeping in order of Barker pool, the repair of the church and highways, the payment of the stipendiary clergy, &c. Mr. Thomas Hanby left £8000, of which the interest of £3000 was for the benefit of the Boys' charity school, and that of the remaining £5000 for distribution among housekeepers, members of the Church of England, and not under fifty years of age, two-thirds of the number to be men, and one-third women; the nomination is in the master and wardens of the Cutlers' Company, the past masters, the vicar and churchwardens, and the Town's Trust. Mrs. Eliza Parkins bequeathed £10,000, one-half of which is appropriated to the support of the Boys' charity school, and the interest of the remainder divided annually among such persons as the vicar, the three assistant ministers, and the churchwardens, shall select. Mrs. Mary Parsons bequeathed £1500 to be invested in the funds, and the proceeds annually divided among 48 aged and infirm silver-platers; Mr. John Kirby left £400, the interest of which is annually divided between two widows; and Mr. Joseph Hudson, of London, gave £200 in trust to the Cutlers' Company, to divide the proceeds annually among sixteen of the most needy file-makers. There are also several other charitable bequests for distribution among the indigent, and various benefit societies. The workhouse for Sheffield township is on a very extensive scale, and was erected in 1811 as a cotton-mill, but converted to its present use in 1829, at a considerable expense. The poor law union of Sheffield comprises three townships of the parish, together with the parish of Handsworth, the whole containing a population of 85,076. On Spital Hill, near the town, was an hospital founded in the reign of Henry II. by William de Lovetot, and dedicated to St. Leonard, but there is no vestige remaining; and of the ancient manor-house also, in which Cardinal Wolsey and Mary, Queen of Scots, were confined, the ruins can but faintly be traced. In 1761, two thin plates of copper were ploughed up on a piece of land called the Lawns, each with an inscription commemorating the manumission of some Roman legionaries, and their enrolment as citizens of Rome. From the prevalence of iron-ore, the waters of Sheffield have a slight chalybeate property. The Rev. Dr. Robert Sanderson, regius professor of divinity in the university of Oxford, and Bishop of Lincoln; and the Rev. Mr. Balguy, prebendary of North Grantham in the Cathedral of Salisbury, and an eminent disputant in the Bangorian controversy, were natives of this place; and Chantrey, the celebrated sculptor, was born at Norton, a village about three miles from the town. Sheffield gives the title of Baron and Earl to the family of Holroyd.

SHEFFORD, a chapelry, and formerly a market-town, in the parish of CAMPTON, union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bedford; containing 889 inhabitants. The river Ivel has been rendered navigable to Biggleswade, by the assistance of a canal recently cut. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.—See CAMPTON.

SHEFFORD, LITTLE or EAST, a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Hungerford; containing 59 inhabitants. It comprises about 1130 acres, of which 30 are pasture, and the remainder arable; the soil is light, resting on a substratum of chalk; the surface is diversified with hills, and the lower grounds are watered by the river Lambourne. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 3.; net income, £400; patron, R. Harbert, Esq. The church contains some interesting monuments.

SHEFFORD - HARDWICKS, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD; containing 13 inhabitants.

SHEFFORD, GREAT or WEST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HUNGERFORD, hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, county of BERKS, 5 miles (N. E. by N.) from Hungerford; containing 562 inhabitants. It comprises 2246a. 22p., of which 2100 acres are arable, 50 pasture, and 60 woodland. Charles I. took up his quarters here on November 19th, 1644. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 3. 4., and in the gift of Brasenose College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £833. 18., and the glebe comprises 110 acres. The church is principally in the Norman style, with a circular tower at the west end; near the north door is a niche for the Virgin, adorned with pinnacles, &c., and the font is curiously carved with foliage.

In the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by the Marquess of Downshire and the rector.

SHEINTON (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of STOTESDEN, though locally in that of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Much Wenlock; containing 154 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Severn, which forms its western boundary; the soil is generally fertile, the surface undulated, and the prevailing scenery of pleasing character. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 2.; net income, £288; patron, John Hodgson, Esq.

SHELDING, county of YORK.—See SKELDING.

SHELDON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (W.) from Bakewell; containing 180 inhabitants. There are lead-mines in the neighbourhood. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £99; patron, Vicar of Bakewell; impropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield and the Duke of Devonshire. The chapel is dedicated to All Saints. Mary Frost, in 1756, gave £200 for apprenticing boys.

SHELDON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Cullompton; containing 190 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1570 acres, of which 292 are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of E. Simeon Drewe, Esq., with a net income of £250: the tithes have been commuted for £140; there are 2 acres of glebe. The church contains 70 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £20 in aid of the expense.

SHELDON (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Birmingham; containing 487 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Birmingham to London, and comprises by computation 2497a. 2r. 28p., of which 1446 acres are arable, 475 pasture, and 576 meadow, with some wood, of which the prevailing kind is oak; the soil is various, partly marl, and partly of a gravelly quality; the chief agricultural produce is wheat, barley, beans, and turnips. The London and Birmingham railway passes through the parish, and the Birmingham and Warwick canal within about two miles. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 10., and in the gift of Earl Digby: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe comprises 38 acres. The church is a small edifice, principally in the decorated English style, with a fine tower of later architecture, and a curious wood porch, parts of which have had good carvings, now nearly obliterated by time; in the north aisle is a beautiful piece of stone tabernacle-work, consisting of three canopied niches; of about 340 sittings, 100 are free. An endowed school has an income of about £35 per annum.

SHELDWICK (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union and hundred of FAVERSHAM, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Faversham; containing 547 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8.; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and

Chapter of Canterbury. The great tithes have been commuted for £530, with two acres of glebe; and the vicarial for £200, with one acre. The church is principally in the decorated English style. Here is a national school.

SHELF, a township, in the chapelry of COLEY, parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Halifax; containing 3050 inhabitants. This township, which is supposed to have derived its name from its situation under the eastern acclivities of North Ofram, comprises about 1350 acres; the soil is generally fertile, and the district abounds with coal, of which there are three separate seams, called respectively the one-foot, the black, and the better bed. Iron-stone is found in abundance, and is wrought in a smelting-furnace and foundry belonging to the Low Moor Company; and there are also extensive quarries of freestone of excellent quality. The village is on the New Bradford road; a few of the inhabitants are employed in agriculture, but the principal part in the manufacture of an article in great request, called the fancy-figured Orleans, a texture consisting of mohair, worsted, and cotton, in various patterns, for which very extensive works have been established by Messrs. Moses Bottomley and Son, by whom more than 1000 persons are constantly employed. A new article composed of alpaca, worsted, and cotton, for dresses, is also manufactured by Messrs. Bottomley, to a great extent, for the London market. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and a Lancasterian school established in 1816.

SHELFANGER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GUILTCROSS, hundred of DISS, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Diss; containing 445 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1663 acres, of which 1134 are arable, and about 500 meadow and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £440; patron, the Duke of Norfolk. The church is an ancient structure in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

SHELFORD (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, S. division of the wapentake of BINGHAM and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham; containing, with the township of Saxondale, and part of Newton, 808 inhabitants, of whom 547 are in Shelford township. The parish comprises by measurement 3598 acres, and forms part of the vale of Trent, which river bounds it on the west and north, and the Fosse-road touches its south-eastern boundary. The manor-house was garrisoned by Col. Stanhope, son of the first earl of Chesterfield, for Charles I., and was taken by storm by Col. Hutchinson, for the parliament, after a gallant resistance, during which Col. Stanhope and most of his men were slain. A considerable number of persons are employed in framework knitting. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron, the Earl of Chesterfield. The church, a handsome structure in the later English style, is the burial-place of the noble family of Stanhope, and contains the remains of Philip, the accomplished earl of Chesterfield, who died in 1773. A priory in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary was established here in the time of Henry II., by Ralph Hanselyn, and, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £151. 14. 1. An hospital called the Bede Houses, was founded and endowed in 1694, by Sir William Stanhope, for the reception and support of six of his decayed tenants. The place gives the inferior title of Baron to the family.

SHELFORD, GREAT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of THRIFLOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Cambridge; containing 803 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Cambridge, and contains some very extensive flour and oil-cake mills, driven by the stream of the Granta, and employing about twenty persons. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £102; patron, the Bishop of Ely; impropiators, the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge. The church is said to have been built by Bishop Fordham, who died in 1425; the steeple was blown down by a great storm in 1703, and again in 1798, but has been rebuilt by subscription; in the chancel is a monument to Dr. Redman, Bishop of Norwich. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and a school is supported by subscription. On a farm called Grannams, the property of St. John's College, are some remains of a Roman intrenchment. The late Rev. Robert Hall, the eminent dissenting minister, was for three years a resident in the parish.

SHELFORD, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of THRIFLOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Cambridge; containing 527 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Granta, separating it from Great Shelford, and on the road from London to Cambridge, which forms a junction with the old road at Chesterford. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 9. 7.; net income, £370; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. Finch. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under acts of inclosure, in 1798 and 1813. In the chancel of the church is a monument to Sir John de Treville, a Knight Templar and lord of the manor, with his figure in a recumbent position; and near the altar, a skeleton encased in lead was dug up in 1824, the hair of which was in a perfect state. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a small school for girls is supported by subscription. Near the bridge over the Granta was anciently a hermitage.

SHELL, an extra-parochial district, in the union of DROITWICH, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 57 inhabitants, and comprising 240 acres.

SHELLAND, a parish, in the union and hundred of STOW, W. division of SUFFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stow-Market; containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a donative; net income, £40; patron and impropiator, C. Tyrrel, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £125. The church was appropriated to that of Haughley in the 3rd of Edward III.; the present building bears date 1767.

SHELLEY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N.) from Chipping-Ongar; containing 209 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by a small stream, on the banks of which are luxuriant meadows; and the general beauty of the surrounding scenery renders it a desirable place of retirement. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 15., and in the gift of J. Tomlinson, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £180, and the glebe comprises 35 acres. The church is a neat edifice of brick, erected in 1811, on the foundation of a former structure. The parsonage, a handsome ancient mansion of timber frame-work and plaster, was for some time the retreat of Dr. Thomas Newton, Bishop of Bristol, and author of a dissertation on the Prophecies. The Rev. H. Soames, historian of the Reformation, and author of other theological works, is the present rector. Here is a national school.

SHELLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Hadleigh; containing 139 inhabitants, and comprising 928*a.* 28*p.* The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £72; patrons and improprators, Heirs of Sir W. B. Rush, Knt., whose tithes have been commuted for £62. The steeple of the church is in a very unusual situation, on the north side of the nave, serving for a porch.

SHELLEY, a township, in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (S. E.) from Huddersfield; containing 1772 inhabitants, and comprising rather more than 1400 acres. The village is situated on an acclivity, near the source of the river Dearne, and on the road to Penistone; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen-cloths and fancy goods. There are places of worship for Independents and Methodists of the New Connexion; and a school, built by subscription in 1806, is endowed with an-allotment of common land now producing £12 per annum.

SHELLINGFORD.—See SHILLINGFORD.

SHELLOW-BOWELS (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of ONGAR, hundred of DUNMOW, N. division of ESSEX, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Chipping-Ongar; containing 134 inhabitants. This parish, which is supposed to have been formerly much more extensive, comprises 456*a.* 8*p.*, whereof 366 acres are arable, 80 pasture, and 9 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Willingale-Doe, and valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.: the tithes have been commuted for £120, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church is a handsome edifice of brick, erected on the site of a former structure in 1752.

SHELSLEY-BEAUCHAMP (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, partly in the Lower, and partly in the Upper, division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Stourport; containing 519 inhabitants, of whom 275 are in the hamlet. The parish is situated on the left bank of the river Teame, and consists of 2156 acres, of which 1261 are in the hamlet. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 4. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £376; patron, Lord Foley. A free school was founded, and endowed with £100, by the Rev. Owen Plwy, in 1681, and subsequently received benefactions in land from Caleb Avenant and others, yielding in the whole £60 per annum. The Rev. Thomas Webb, in 1703, bequeathed an estate called Hay-Oak Farm, for apprenticing children.

SHELSLEY, KING'S, a hamlet, in the parish of SHELSLEY-BEAUCHAMP, union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Stourport; containing 244 inhabitants, and comprising 895 acres.

SHELSLEY-WALSH (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 9 miles (S. W.) from Stourport; containing 49 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the right bank of the river Teame, and comprises 490 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 8. 9.; net income, £90; patron, Lord Foley.

SHELWELL (ST. EBBE), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Bicester; containing 43 inhabitants, and comprising 846*a.* 3*r.* 2*p.* The living is a rectory, annexed to Newton-Purcell, and valued in the king's books at £4. The church is in ruins.

SHELTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT'S, hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Kimbolton; containing 128 inhabitants. It comprises about 940 acres, of which the soil is principally clay, and the surface uniformly level. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £190; patron, Lord St. John.

SHELTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWADE, E. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Long Stratton; containing 215 persons. This place was formerly the property of the Sheltons, who were possessors of the soil and owners of the Hall, an ancient castellated structure once standing in the parish, but long since pulled down; and from that family the estate passed to Sir Robert Houghton, one of the justices of the king's bench. The parish is a little to the east of the road from Norwich to Ipswich, and comprises 1301*a.* 2*r.* 6*p.*, of which 1024 acres are arable, and 267 pasture. The living is a rectory, with that of Hardwick annexed, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of F. B. Frank, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £640, and there is a glebe of 43 acres, with a neat parsonage-house. The church, an exceedingly interesting edifice, built by Sir Ralph Shelton about the year 1487, is in the later English style, consisting of a nave, chancel, and aisles, with a square embattled tower, and possesses an interior of rich and handsome appearance.

SHELTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Newark; containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £322; patron, the Rev. R. Ffarmerie. The church, a small edifice, was partly rebuilt in 1831.

SHELTON, a township and chapelry, in the parish, union, and newly-erected borough of STOKE-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Newcastle-under-Lyme; containing, with the hamlet of Etruria, and part of the village of Cobridge, 11,955 inhabitants. This place, which adjoins the township of Hanley, has arisen, like many other towns in the county, from the very extensive potteries carried on in the vicinity. It is amply supplied with water; the footpaths are paved with brick, and it is lighted with gas under the superintendence of commissioners appointed by an act of parliament obtained in 1815, and amended in 1828, for its better management, jointly with Hanley. An act for the establishment and regulation of the market, and for the improvement of the market-place, was procured in 1813, under the provisions of which the rents, tolls, and duties are vested in trustees; and the surplus is directed to be appropriated from time to time to the promotion and aid of any public works or institutions within the townships of Hanley and Shelton. A mechanics' institute was founded in 1826, for the potteries at large, under the patronage of the Marquess of Stafford, Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., and others. Concerts, mostly for the benefit of some charity, take place occasionally; and races, which are in general well attended, have been lately established in the neighbourhood. The principal articles of manufacture are porcelain and earthenware, affording employment to more than 3000 men, women, and children. Several of the manufactories are situated on the banks of the Trent and Mersey and the Caldon canals, which pass through the township, and near which are also some gas-works. In the hamlet of Etruria are the extensive potteries and handsome mansion of Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., the latter remarkable for the beauty of its situation and style of architecture, and for the many splendid Etruscan vases with which it is ornamented. These specimens of art, produced here under his own superintendence, are imitations of original vases found in Italy, to the discovery of which that gentleman was chiefly indebted for the elegance of form and purity of taste that he introduced into the manufacture of porcelain, china, and stone ware. For this manufacture the place is deservedly celebrated; and by the use of flint in the composition of the articles, also introduced by Mr. Wedgwood, it has, under his auspices, been progressively brought to its present state of perfection. The coal and iron-stone mines, in this and part of the township of Hanley, belong to the crown, and are extensively worked by Earl Granville, the lessee. Shelton is in the honour of Tutbury, duchy of Lancaster, and within the jurisdiction of a court of pleas held at Tutbury every third Tuesday, for debts under 40s.

Under the provisions of an act passed in 1827, relating to the rectory of Stoke, this chapelry is to be separated from that parish, and to be made a distinct district rectory, to be endowed with not less than £10,000, nor more than £15,000, at the option of the patron, from the proceeds of tithes authorized to be sold and invested in land. A handsome and spacious district church in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, has been erected by her Majesty's Commissioners, at an expense of £9311, towards defraying which George IV. gave £250 from the revenues of the duchy of Lancaster; it was consecrated on the 19th of June, 1834, and dedicated to St. Mark. In the chancel is a beautiful painted window representing the Nativity and Ascension. The late rector, Dr. Woodhouse, gave £1000, which, with its accumulations, he appropriated to the erection of a parsonage-house, besides allotting funds for the support of a national school, which has also a permanent endowment from land given by Mrs. Hannah Bagnall. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans of the Old and New Connexion, and Unitarians; and a British and Foreign school, established in 1821. In this township, also, is the North Staffordshire Infirmary, a noble institution erected in 1816, and since very much enlarged; including the fever wards, which occupy one of the wings, it is capable of accommodating more than 100 patients, and the charity has received donations and bequests to a very liberal extent, and is further supported by annual subscriptions. Elijah Fenton, the poet, was born here in 1683.—See HANLEY.

SHELVE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CLUN, hundred of CHIRBURY, S. division of SALOP, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing 69 inhabitants. The parish is situated on an eminence nearly 500 feet above the level of the sea, and contains numerous veins of lead-ore, which is considered to vie in richness with any in England: one of the mines was worked by the Romans in the time of Adrian, as is evident from an inscription on a pig of lead found in the vicinity. A market on Friday, and a fair on the festival of the Invention of the Cross, were granted by Henry III. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 4., and in the gift of Robert Bridgeman More, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £42, and the glebe comprises 18 acres. The church, a small ancient structure, with a square tower, has been repaired.

SHELWICK, a township, in the parish of HOLMER, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, union and county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hereford; containing 236 inhabitants.

SHENFIELD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BILLERICAY, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Brentwood; containing 983 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2417 acres, of which 95 are common or waste land: the village is pleasantly situated on the road to Colchester, and contains several well-built houses, and a fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held in it on Whit-Monday. The Eastern-Counties' railway intersects the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 18. 4., and in the gift of Lord de Grey: the tithes have been commuted for £575, and the glebe comprises 77 acres. The church is an ancient edifice with a shingled spire, and contains a much admired monument to Mrs. Robinson. Here is a national school.

SHENINGTON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Banbury; containing 463 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded by the counties of Oxford and Warwick, and is several miles distant from any other part of the county of Gloucester, has for electoral purposes been annexed to the county of Oxford, under the Reform act. It comprises 1434a. 3r. 8p., chiefly arable; the soil is fertile, producing good crops of wheat, barley, and turnips; the surface is hilly, and the scenery in some parts beautifully romantic. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 3. 4.; net income, £321; patron, the Earl of Jersey. The church, previously a handsome structure in the decorated English style, was partly rebuilt in the last century, without due regard to the preservation of its original character.

SHENLEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT PAGNELL, partly in the hundred of COTTESLOE, but chiefly in that of NEWPORT, county of BUCK-INGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing, with the hamlet of Brookend, and township of Churchend, 491 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 9. 7.; net income, £424; patron and incumbent, the Rev. P. Knapp. Some tithes were commuted for land, under an act of inclosure, in 1762, and others, under the recent Tithe act, for a rent-charge of £267. 15.; the glebe comprises 67 acres. The chancel of the church is a fine specimen of the transitional style from the early to the later Norman: in the south transept is a handsome monument to Sir Thomas Stafford, who lived in the reign of James I., and founded, in 1626, an almshouse here, with an endowment of £35 per annum, for four widowers and two widows.

SHENLEY (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of BARNET, hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, 6 miles (N. W.) from Chipping-Barnet; containing 1220 inhabitants. This parish, of which the name, anciently Sheenley, is descriptive of its beautiful pasture lands, comprises 4056 acres, of which 119 are common or waste; the scenery is generally of pleasing character, enlivened with several handsome seats and numerous picturesque villas, among the former of which is Porters, once the property of the gallant Admiral Earl Howe, situated in a fine park. The substratum is principally chalk, which is extensively used for dressing the land; and flints and gravel are abundant, and used for repairing the roads. The village is on an eminence; some few of the cottagers are employed in the straw-plat manufacture. A small fair is annually held, chiefly for pleasure. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the rector, the Rev. T. Newcome, in whose family the patronage and incumbency have remained in direct succession from the 1st of the reign of Elizabeth: the tithes have been commuted for £1189, and the glebe comprises 30 acres, with a rectory-house. The church is built with flints, but has a wooden tower on the south side; being incommodiously situated in a distant part of the parish, the present rector built a chapel of ease in the village, in 1840, at his own cost. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school, erected by the incumbent, is partly maintained by subscription; and three schools are supported by ladies. Sir Richard Cox, in 1633, bequeathed property now producing £24. 10. per annum, distributed to the poor. A chapel is supposed to have formerly stood on a moated site in the park belonging to the house called Colney Chapel. Nicholas Hawksmoor, an architect employed under Sir Christopher Wren, in the erection of St. Paul's Cathedral, lived and died at Shenley in 1727; and the Rev. Peter Newcome, rector of the parish, and author of the History of the Abbey of St. Alban's, was interred here in 1797.

SHENSTONE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Lichfield; containing 1962 inhabitants. The parish comprises 8451*a.* 2*r.* 35*p.*, of which 30 acres are common or waste land; the soil is fertile, producing crops of wheat and barley, and there are extensive and luxuriant pastures; the surface is undulated, and watered by several rivulets abounding with trout. The scenery is enlivened with some gentlemen's seats and pleasant villas; the village is neat, and the parish is intersected at one end by the Wyrley and Essington canal. Limestone is brought hither from Rushall to be burnt at Sandhills, by Messrs. George and James Brawn, who have wharfs on the canal. A considerable fair for cattle is held on the last Monday in February. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. John Peel: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £500, and the vicarial for £435; the glebe comprises 38 acres. The church exhibits specimens of the various styles of English architecture, and has an enriched Norman arch at the south entrance; a gallery has been lately erected. There is a chapel of ease at Upper Stonall, containing 180 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £200 in aid of the expense of its erection; and national schools are supported, both at Shenstone and Stonall. There was once a castle or fortification at Stonall, of which the remembrance is preserved in the name of Castle Field.

SHENTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 190 inhabitants. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal crosses the north-eastern angle of the chapelry.

SHEPHALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Stevenage; containing 265 inhabitants. It comprises about 1150 acres, of which 795 are arable, 244 pasture, and 110 woodland. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 10., and has a net income of £193; the patronage and impropriation belong to the Crown. A fund of £24. 16. per annum, arising from bequests, is distributed among the poor.

SHEPLEY, a township, in the parish of KIRK-BURTON, union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. E. by S.) from Huddersfield; containing 1088 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1250 acres of land. The population is engaged in the manufacture of cloth-blankets, flannel, and knitting-yarn; and the village, now connected, though sometimes called Over and Nether Shepley, is situated in a deep valley, on the road from Huddersfield to Penistone. There is a place of worship for Methodists of the New Connexion.

SHEPPERTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Chertsey; containing 858 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1435*a.* 2*r.* 36*p.*, of which 125 acres are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26; net income, £499; patron, S. H. Russell, Esq. Here is a national school.

SHEPRETH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of WETHERLEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Royston; containing 353 inhabitants. The river Cam runs through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 1.; patron and impropiator, James Wortham, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £306, and the vicarial for £91; the impropriate glebe comprises 185 acres, and the vicarial 12. A school is supported by subscription.

SHEPSCOMB, a chapelry, in the parish of PAINSWICK, union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N.) from Stroud; containing 676 inhabitants. This place is situated in a retired vale remarkable for the variety of its scenery. To the east of the village, on the road from Stroud, is Shepscomb House; and on the acclivity of a wood-crowned hill, at the distance of a mile to the west, is Esworth Park, from which is a beautiful view of a chain of hills stretching in the form of an amphitheatre, and richly clothed with beech-trees of luxuriant growth. Extending along the eastern side of the vale is Loncheridge wood, comprising about 400 acres of beech and other trees. The manufacture of woollen-cloth is carried on to a considerable extent; there are two establishments, affording employment in the making of Saxony broad-cloths, for which the place has been celebrated for some years. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £45; patron, the Vicar of Painswick. The chapel was built in 1819. A school is supported by subscription.

SHEPTON-BEAUCHAMP (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Ilminster; containing 637 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the families of Nash and Clark: the tithes have been commuted for £365; there are 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe. £10 a year, arising from certain land bequeathed by Thomas Rich in 1723, and the interest of £100, the gift of Elizabeth Morgan in 1763, are applied in aid of a national school. Mrs. Morgan also bequeathed £200, the interest to be applied in apprenticing children.

SHEPTON-MALLET (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of WHITESTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 14 miles (N. E.) from Somerton, and 125 (W. by S.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Charlton-Woodlands, and part of Oakhill, 5265 inhabitants. The origin of this town is not, comparatively, very remote, the charter for its market having been granted by Edward II., in the 11th year of his reign. The manor, at the time of the Norman survey, was subordinate to that of Pilton, which had been conferred by King Ina upon the abbot of Glaston; and its pastures, from the sheep fed on which it is supposed to derive its name, are noticed in that record: the additional and distinguishing appellation, Mallet, was received from the barons Mallet, lords of Shepton in the reigns of Henry I. and II. The consequences of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion were severely felt in this part; and thirteen persons of the town, having been convicted at the "bloody western assizes," suffered here for their participation in that enterprise. The town is situated chiefly on the southern bank of a deep valley, and consists of a number of streets and lanes, the principal of which crossing the valley from north to south is spacious and well built, but the others are mostly narrow and irregular: the recent erection of a bridge, and the opening of a new road, have materially improved the place. It is adequately supplied with water, and a stream runs through the bottom of the valley, turning several mills in its course. The manufacture of woollen goods, silk, lace, stockings, sail-cloth, and hair-seating, is carried on to a considerable extent. The parish comprises a portion of the Mendip range of hills, prior to the inclosure of which lead-ore was obtained in it. The market-days are Tuesday and Friday, the latter a very large one for all kinds of agricultural produce. The market-cross, a fine old structure, erected by Walter and Agnes Buckland, in 1500, originally consisted of only five arches, but it has lately undergone a thorough renovation, funds having been left to keep it in repair by the founders, and a sixth arch has been added: elevated above two rows of steps is an hexagonal pillar, supporting a flat roof surmounted by a pyramidal spire, and ornamented with niches. The fairs are on Easter-Monday, the 18th of June, and 8th of August. The management of the local affairs is vested in a high constable and subordinate officers, who are chosen at a court leet held in October, by the householders generally; and a court for the recovery of debts under £2 has been held from time immemorial. The county bridewell, or house of correction, capable of receiving from 200 to 300 prisoners, is in the town.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 12. 1., and in the alternate patronage of the Queen, in right of the duchy of Cornwall, and the Rev. Provis Wickham; net income, £533. The church is a venerable cruciform pile of building, to which are attached two small chapels; the roof of the nave is curiously wrought, and the pulpit and font, which are of stone, are much admired. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics; and the nuns of the order of the Visitation have a convent here, containing about 30 inmates. The free school, established by Sir George Strode and others, in 1639, is endowed with property, producing about £75 per annum. Four boys are educated, and an apprentice-fee of £7 given with each, by means of a charity founded by Mr. John Curtis, in 1730, now yielding about £20 per annum; and sixteen girls are clothed and educated from the produce of a bequest made by Mrs. Mary Gapper, in 1783. There is also a national school; and a school belonging to dissenters is supported by subscription. Almshouses for four men were founded and endowed in 1699, by Mr. Edward Strode, with property now worth about £360 a year, of which £80 are appropriated to the repair of the houses, and allowances to the inmates, and about £200 to the purchase of bread for distribution among the indigent, for whose benefit there are several other small benefactions. The poor law union of Shepton-Mallet comprises 25 parishes or places, containing a population of 17,805. The Roman Fosse-way to Ilchester passes through the parish, to the eastward of the town; and in 1840 some Roman urns were discovered in digging over a tumulus on Lapwing Farm, by Mr. Rugg, who, in prosecuting the search, found several others, in all about fourteen. Shepton-Mallet is the birth-place of Hugh Inge, chancellor of Ireland, who died in 1528; and of Walter Charlton, an eminent physician, author of a work on Stonehenge, and other productions.

SHEPTON-MONTAGUE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S.) from Burton; containing 407 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2428 acres, divided in nearly equal portions into arable and dairy farms; the surface is undulated, and the scenery pleasing. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. ; net income, £62; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Ilchester, whose tithes have been commuted for £223. The church is an ancient structure in various styles.

SHERATON, a township, in the parish of MONK-HESLETON, union of EASINGTON, S. division of EASINGTON ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 11½ miles (N.) from Stockton; containing 147 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1660 acres, of which 50 are wood and plantations, and the remainder arable and pasture; the soil is generally of a clayey texture, and of great fertility in parts, with some small tracts of good turnip land. The Stockton and Sunderland road passes through the township; and at Castle-Eden, about 2½ miles to the north, is a post-office. The tithes, including those of Hulam, have been commuted for £199. 0. 11., of which £84. 9. 7. are payable to the vicar, £88. 17. 4. to the sixth canon, and £25. 14. to the tenth canon, of Durham.

SHERBORNE (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SHERBORNE, Sherborne division of DORSET, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Dorchester, and 117 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 4758 inhabitants. This place, though of remote antiquity, does not appear to have emerged from comparative insignificance until the Saxon era; the name, anciently Schiraburn, Schireburn, and Scyreburn, of which its present appellation is a corruption, is derived from the Saxon words Sirce clear, and Burn, a spring, or fountain, and was usually written in old Latin records Fons clarus. In 670, a house was founded here for Secular canons, by Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, and others; and in 704, Sherborne was made the head of an episcopal see, which included the counties of Dorset, Somerset, Wilts, Devon, and Cornwall, by Ina, whose kinsman, Aldhelm, was the first bishop. About 998, the Secular canons were displaced, and a society of Benedictines established, under licence from Ethelred, by Wlsin, bishop of the see, who also rebuilt the monastery, and dedicated it to St. Mary; the institution became richly endowed, and at the Dissolution its revenue was valued at £682. 14. 7. The remains are considerable, though in a state of gradual decay: they consist chiefly of the refectory, a noble room now appropriated as a silk manufactory; the grand entrance of the abbey, which still displays traces of its original magnificence; and the granary at a short distance to the north of the abbey, which has within the last few years been converted into a private residence, but of which the ancient gateway and other characteristic features are carefully preserved.

About 1103, Sherborne is stated to have been burnt by a detachment of the Danish invaders, and the entire destruction of the town and its ecclesiastical buildings, although doubtful, is a matter of great probability. The see continued for more than three centuries, when it was removed first to Wilton, afterwards to Old Sarum, and finally to New Sarum, or Salisbury; this event contributed much to depress the prosperity of Sherborne, and for a long period afterwards it was in comparative obscurity. It is evident that a castle stood here at a very early period, but the founder and the time of its erection and demolition are unknown. Previously to the time of Henry I., however, another had been built by Roger, the third bishop of Salisbury, and became an episcopal palace; it was an octagonal structure, situated on a hill eastward of the town, and fortified by a moat and several drawbridges: having been seized by Stephen, it remained in the possession of the crown for some time, but about 1350 was recovered by Bishop Wyvil, and reverted to the bishopric. During the civil war in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned in the royal interest, and, although gallantly defended and one of the last that yielded, it was eventually taken by the forces under the command of Fairfax, and was demolished in 1645. Considerable portions of the ruins are remaining: the present mansion, called Sherborne Castle, the seat of Earl Digby, and standing in a very fine park, was built by Sir Walter Raleigh. The town is situated principally on a gradual slope near the border of the White Hart Forest, and the vale of Blackmore, and is divided by a small stream into two parts, of which one is called Castle Town; it is well paved, lighted, and amply supplied with water. The woollen trade, which formerly flourished, was succeeded by the making of buttons, haberdashery, and lace; in 1740 the first silk-mill was erected, and the various branches of this manufacture, especially the making of silk twist and buttons, now afford employment to a great number of the working class. Markets are held on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, the principal day being Thursday; and there are fairs on May 22nd, July 18th and 26th, and the first Monday after Oct. 10th.

The parish comprises 6467*a.* 31*p.*, chiefly arable, with due proportions of pasture and woodland, and about 120 acres of waste. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 4. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £258; impropiator, Earl Digby. The church, erected most probably on the site of the ancient cathedral, is a magnificent cruciform structure of various dates, with a central tower 154 feet in height. The lower part of the tower, the south porch, and the south transept are of Norman character, exhibiting beautiful and perfect specimens of that style; the choir and the arch leading into the Lady chapel, with the east end of the old vestry, are early English; the south aisle of the nave is in the decorated style, and the other portions of the church, and the upper stages of the tower, are in the later English style. The roofs, with the exception of that of the south transept, are all of stone, elaborately and richly groined; and the roof of the north transept is one of the most beautiful specimens extant. The large bell in the tower weighs 3 tons, and was the gift of Cardinal Wolsey. The Saxon kings, Ethelbald and Ethelbert, and many Saxon nobles, bishops, and abbots, were interred here; and the church contains some very ancient monuments, including a handsome one of the Digby family. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded by Edward VI., who endowed it with property belonging to the several dissolved chantries in the counties of Dorset and Somerset, producing at present an income of about £850 per annum, and who placed it under the controul of twenty of the inhabitants, whom he incorporated. By a recent statute, the governors are empowered to grant four exhibitions of £60 per annum each to either of the universities; tenable for four years by boys on the foundation. A Blue-coat school was established in 1640, by Richard Foster, who gave land for the instruction and clothing of ten boys and ten girls, directing £5 per annum from the surplus rents to be applied towards maintaining one of the boys at the university, if required. A charity school for boys was founded in 1717, by John Woodman, who gave £250, which sum was vested in land. In 1743, William, Lord Digby, gave land for teaching and clothing thirteen girls; and a Lancasterian and a national school are supported by subscription. The almshouse here, originally an hospital of the order of St. Augustine, was, by licence from Henry VI., refounded and dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, for twenty brethren, twelve poor men, four poor women, and a chaplain, and was governed by a master and trustees; it now contains sixteen men and eight women, under the superintendence of a master and nineteen brethren, and a chaplain officiates daily. One of the principal benefactors to the town was Mr. Benjamin Vowell, who by will gave the dividends of £1000 three per cent. consols., to be distributed in clothing, besides two sums of £300, and one of £400, to various benefit societies; and there is a very considerable fund for the poor arising from land and houses given for that purpose, in 1448, by Robert Neville, Bishop of Sarum, and others. The union of Sherborne comprises 30 parishes or places, 23 of which are in the county of Dorset, and 7 in that of Somerset, altogether containing a population of 12,242.

SHERBORNE (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Burford; containing 637 inhabitants, and supposed to contain about 2000 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Windrush united, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; net income, £194; patron and impropiator, Lord Sherborne. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777. A national school is supported. James Bradley, D.D., regius professor of astronomy, and astronomer-royal, was born here in 1692. Sherborne gives the title of Baron to the family of Dutton.

SHERBORNE ST. JOHN or EAST (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Basingstoke; containing 718 inhabitants. The living comprises a sinecure rectory and vicarage, the former valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, W. L. W. Chute, Esq.; and the latter valued at £7; patron, the Rector. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £407, and the vicarial for £193; the rector's glebe comprises 62 acres, and the vicar's one acre. There is a private chapel at the Vine, the seat of Mrs. Chute, containing a tomb in memory of Chaloner Chute, Esq., speaker of the house of commons in Richard Cromwell's parliament, and the purchaser of this noble mansion, which was erected in the reign of Henry VIII., by the first Lord Sandys.

SHERBORNE, MONK or WEST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union, and partly in the hundred, of BASINGSTOKE, but chiefly in the hundred of CHUTELY, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Basingstoke; containing, with the tythings of Chineham and Woodgarston, 559 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3087a. 4p., of which 2318 acres are arable, 270 meadow and pasture, and 416 woodland; the soil is partly chalk, and partly clay; the surface is undulated, and the scenery pleasingly diversified. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £50; patrons and impropiators, the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style. A national school was built in 1831, with some aid from the Society, by the vicar, who chiefly supports it. The chapel of a Benedictine priory still remains, and service is performed in it every Sunday; it contains an altar-tomb with the recumbent figure of a Knight Templar, carved in solid oak, supposed to be the effigy of Sir John de Port, the founder. The priory was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John, and was a cell to the abbey of Cerasey, in Normandy; at its suppression it was given by Henry VI. to Eton College, but was subsequently granted by Edward IV. to the hospital of St. Julian, in Southampton, and finally to the provost and fellows of Queen's College, as masters of that hospital.

SHERBOURNE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WARWICK, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Warwick; containing 209 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Avon, comprises about 1500 acres, chiefly arable and pasture; the soil is light, and the scenery of pleasing character, and enriched with wood, principally elm, with some fine oak-trees. The road from Warwick to Stratford-upon-Avon passes through the village. The living is a perpetual curacy, with the rectory of Fulbrook united; net income, £110; patron, Samuel Ryland, Esq. The church is an ancient structure.

SHERBURN, a township, partly in the parish of PITTINGTON, and partly in that of SHADFORTH, S. division of EASINGTON ward, union, and N. division of the county, of DURHAM, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Durham; containing 1946 inhabitants. This place derives its name from a clear streamlet which joins the Pidding, and reaches the Wear near Old Durham. In the record called Boldon book, in the 12th century, it is included in Queringdonshire, and divided into North and South, a distinction now obsolete, as the latter, which was probably the more ancient because it stood almost immediately on the brook that gave it name, is swallowed up in the possessions of the Hospital described in a subsequent article. The township comprises about 740 acres: the population is chiefly employed in collieries and lime-works, which are in operation in the neighbourhood. The Durham and Sunderland railway has one of its termini in the township, whence passengers are conveyed by coach to Durham; here, also, is a fixed engine of 85 horse-power for working the coal-waggons and passengers' trains up an ascending plane 3712 yards in extent. Rent-charges, as commutations for the tithes, have been awarded, amounting to £274, of which £150 are payable to the vicar of Pittington, and £124 to the prebendary of Durham. A national school has been established.

SHERBURN (ST. HILDA), a parish, in the union of SCARBOROUGH, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from New Malton; containing 623 inhabitants. The parish is situated partly on the wolds, and on one of the roads from York to Scarborough, and comprises by measurement 4200 acres, of which about 3670 are arable, 400 meadow and pasture, and 30 woodland; it is mostly the property of the Hon. Marmaduke Langley, lord of the manor. The Derwent forms part of the northern boundary. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 0. 2½.; net income, £120; patron, Sir George Strickland, Bart.; impropriator, the Hon. M. Langley. The church is ancient; the arch between the chancel and nave, which is elliptical, is especially indicative of great antiquity, and is most probably early Norman; it is supported on short massive pillars. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is partly supported by subscription.

SHERBURN (ALL SAINTS), a market-town and parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; comprising the townships of Barkstone, Huddlestone with Lumby, Lotherton with Aberford, South Milford, Newthorpe, and Sherburn, and the chapelry of Micklefield; and containing 3757 inhabitants, of whom 1328 are in the town, 15 miles (S. W. by S.) from York, and 184 (N. by W.) from London. This place derives its name from the Saxon Scire, pure, and Burn, a stream, in reference to the rivulet on which it is situated; it was of considerable importance during the heptarchy, and the residence of King Athelstan, who had a palace here, which was subsequently given to the see of York, and afterwards exchanged by Archbishop Holgate for property at Cawood and Bishopthorpe. Of the ancient structure nothing remains but a few inequalities on the surface of the land, which indistinctly mark the site; the materials are said to have been used in the erection of the present church. During the war in the reign of Charles I., an engagement took place here between the parliamentarians under Colonel Copley, and the royalists commanded by Lord Digby, lieutenant-general of the king's forces north of the Trent. The latter were at first triumphantly victorious, but Copley's retreat being mistaken for a royalist flight by that part of Lord Digby's forces not on the field, they instantly dispersed, and some fresh republican troops coming up at the moment, the victory was turned into a defeat; the army of Lord Digby was entirely discomfited, and all his baggage and cabinet papers fell into the hands of the enemy. The town is situated on the direct road from Tadcaster to Ferrybridge; and the York and North-Midland railway has one of its intermediate stations in the township, from which a branch diverges to the east, and joins the Leeds and Selby line, which passes through the parish, and has stations at Micklefield and South Milford. The vicinity abounds with fine orchards: flax is cultivated to some extent, and is sent to the Leeds market; and teasel also, which is largely grown in the neighbourhood, forms a prominent article of trade. The market, which is on Friday, had grown almost into disuse, but has, since the construction of the Leeds and Selby railroad, very much revived, and is numerously attended by dealers in corn, with which it is plentifully supplied. A fair for pedlery and various kinds of merchandise is held on the 25th of September, and a statute-fair on the Friday preceding and the Friday following Martinmas. There are petty-sessions every alternate Wednesday.

The parish comprises by computation 11,700 acres of fertile land; a considerable portion is laid out in gardens, and a plum of peculiarly fine flavour for preserves, is grown in great perfection; the surface is varied, and on a stream called Bishop Dyke are several corn-mills. The substratum abounds with excellent freestone, of which great quantities were raised for the repair of York Minster and Westminster Abbey; it was pronounced by Chantry to be the most durable in the kingdom. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 1.; net income, £135; patron, the Archbishop; appropriator, the Prebendary of Fenton in the Cathedral of York. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1770. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, the nave presenting a rare and beautiful specimen of ancient architecture. There are chapels of ease at Lotherton and Micklefield; and the Wesleyans and Roman Catholics have places of worship. The free grammar and hospital school was founded in 1619, by Robert Hungate, Esq., who endowed it with a rent-charge of £120 for the education and maintenance of twenty-four orphan boys, £13. 6. 8. for the master of the hospital, £30 for the schoolmaster, £13. 6. 8. for the usher, £26. 13. 4. for exhibitions for the poor scholars, and £2. 10. for an apprentice-fee with one of the orphans. These funds being found inadequate for all the purposes, the number of orphans was reduced to eight, the apprentice-fee increased to £7. 10., and the schoolmaster's salary to £80, without an usher; the school has an exhibition every fifth year for one scholar, on Lady Hastings' foundation, and is under the visitation of the Dean of York. A charity school for the maintenance and education of six female orphans was established and endowed in 1731, by the Rev. Samuel Duffield, with certain land, and the sum of £1450, now producing an income of £114 per annum. A rich and elegant cross was found some years since, in the churchyard, when digging amongst the foundations of an old chapel. Traces of a Roman road to Aberford are yet visible.

SHERBURN HOUSE or HOSPITAL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the S. division of EASINGTON ward, union, and N. division of the county, of DURHAM, 2½ miles (E. by S.) from Durham; containing 86 inhabitants. An hospital for lepers was founded here previously to 1181, by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham; it was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and its revenue, in the reign of Henry VIII., was certified as of the value of £142. 0. 4., the society consisting of a master, several priests, and sixty-five lepers. It is yet in being, having been incorporated in 1585, by Queen Elizabeth, for a master and thirty brethren, and is still subject to the regulations then adopted: the Bishop of Durham appoints the master, who must be in holy orders, and of the degree of M.A. at least; and the master nominates the brethren, who each receive a handsome yearly stipend, besides being comfortably maintained. At present this is one of the most richly-endowed charitable foundations in the north of England, its income amounting to several thousand pounds per annum. The hospital was enlarged in 1819, by fifteen additional lodging-houses, for the accommodation of as many out-brethren, before which period there were only fifteen inmates. The building, to which is attached a chapel and apartments for the master, is of a quadrangular form, and situated in an agreeable vale on the eastern side of Sherburn water.

SHERE (St. James), a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, Second division of the hundred of BLACKHEATH, W. division of SURREY, 6 miles (E. by S.) from Guildford; containing 1347 inhabitants. It is pleasantly situated on the road from Guildford to Dorking, and comprises about 6300 acres, of which 3900 are under cultivation, and 2400 waste; the soil of the inclosed land is fertile, and the surface is varied, and the scenery of pleasing character. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 1. 5½., and in the gift of the Rev. Mr. Delafosse. The church is principally in the early English style, with a tower and spire rising from the centre; in the windows are some fine remains of ancient stained glass, and several brasses also adorn the edifice. There are two places of worship for Independents. Thomas Gatton, Esq., in 1758, bequeathed £400 for teaching children, who are sent to the school at Albury: Edward Woods, Esq., in 1837, left £500 to widows. William Bray, Esq., the antiquary and county historian, was born and is buried here.

SHEREFORD (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 2¼ miles (W.) from Fakenham; containing 89 inhabitants. It comprises about 830 acres, of which 678 are arable, 128 pasture and meadow, and 16 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of the family of Townshend: the tithes have been commuted for £192, and the glebe comprises 58 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, with a circular tower.

SHERFIELD-ENGLISH (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of ROMSEY, hundred of THORNGATE, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4¾ miles (W. N. W.) from Romsey; containing 328 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1774 acres; the soil is partly light, and partly of stronger quality, producing excellent crops of barley and potatoes; the surface is undulated, commanding views of the New Forest and the Isle of Wight. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 2½., and in the gift of R. Bristow, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £284. 16., and the glebe comprises 39 acres of land.

SHERFIELD-UPON-LODDON (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of ODIHAM, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Basingstoke; containing 640 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. 6½., and in the gift of the Rev. W. Eyre: the tithes have been commuted for £674. 10., and the glebe comprises 36 acres. Besides the church, there are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. James Christian, in 1735, gave £100 to build a school-house, and £25 a year for education.

SHERFORD (St. Martin), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 3¼ miles (E.) from Kingsbridge; containing 450 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2267 acres, of which 26 are common or waste land. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Stokenham. The church contains some good screenwork. Attached to an old farm-house at Kennedon are some remains of the manorial seat of Justice Hals, who lived in the reign of Henry V.

SHERIFF-HALES (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, partly in the Newport division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, but chiefly in the W. division of the hundred of CUTTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Shiffnall; containing, with the chapelry of Woodcote, 1019 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 8.; net income, £614; patron and proprietor, the Duke of Sutherland. The church is a neat stone edifice, seated on an eminence above a small stream that parts it from Shropshire. There is a chapel of ease at Woodcote; also a place of worship in the parish for Wesleyans, and a school supported by subscription. A milky vitriolic water is found among the iron-mines in the neighbourhood.

SHERIFF-HUTTON, county YORK.—See HUTTON, SHERIFF.

SHERINGHAM (All Saints), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (W.) from Cromer; containing 1134 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2177a. 22p., of which 1300 acres are arable, and 700 woodland and heath; the surface is undulated, and the scenery in some parts beautiful. Sheringham Hall is a handsome mansion of white brick, finely situated in a well-wooded park, commanding some extensive views. The villages of Upper and Lower Sheringham are about a mile and a half apart, and in the former is the parochial church; the latter is on the cliffs, which are divided by a narrow ravine, through which a rivulet flows into the sea. On the beach are six curing-houses, and thirty herring-boats are usually employed in the fishery, besides many smaller craft engaged in taking cod, skait, whiting, lobsters, and crabs, of which great quantities are sent to London; on the banks of the rivulet is a small paper-mill. The living is a vicarage; net income, £82; patron and proprietor, the Bishop of Ely, whose tithes have been commuted for £361. The church is in the early and later English styles, with a lofty square embattled tower; on the north side of the chancel is the mausoleum of the Upcher family. At Lower Sheringham was anciently a chapel dedicated to St. Nicholas. There was also a monastery of Black canons, a cell to Nutley Abbey, in the county of Buckingham.

SHERMANBURY (St. Giles), a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of WINDHAM and EWHURST, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 8 miles (N. E. by N.) from Steyning; containing 411 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Adur, and comprises about 2000 acres, of which 30 are common or waste; the soil is clay and loam, the surface gently undulated, and the meadows and pastures luxuriantly rich. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Challen family: the tithes have been commuted for £381. 15., and the glebe comprises 14 acres. The church, which is beautifully situated in Shermanbury Park, close to the mansion-house, is a handsome structure, of which the windows are embellished with stained glass inserted by the late Rev. J. G. Challen, D. D. Here are the groined gateway and some other remains of a castellated mansion surrounded by a moat, called Ewhurst, and anciently a seat of the lords De la Warr.

SHERMANS-GROUNDS, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing 25 inhabitants.

SHERNBOURNE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Snettisham; containing 133 inhabitants. It comprises about 1300 acres, of which more than 1200 are arable, 50 meadow and pasture, and 10 woodland; and was for many generations the property of the Shernbourne family, whose ancient residence, the Hall, is now a farmhouse. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £69; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Ely. The tithes were commuted for land in 1767; the glebe comprises 65 acres, on which several farm-buildings have been erected by the Rev. William Leech, incumbent. The church was built by Thorpe, lord of Shernbourne, when Felix, Bishop of the East Angles, came to convert the inhabitants to Christianity, and it is said to have been the second founded in that kingdom; the nave only remains; on the north side are sepulchral brasses, with the effigies of Lord and Lady Shernbourne.

SHERRINGTON (St. LAUD), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 856 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £631; patron, the Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and a corn-rent in 1796.

SHERRINGTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, forming a detached portion of the hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Wiley; containing 194 inhabitants. It comprises 1220 acres by admeasurement, and is situated on the river Wiley. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of A. B. Lambert, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £259, and the glebe comprises 21 acres. The church is a small structure in good repair. A school is supported by subscription. There are some barrows in the parish.

SHERSTON MAGNA (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of MALMESBURY, in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury; containing 1393 inhabitants. This place, by the Saxons called Scarston or Scaurston, signifying "the town on a rock," was, from its situation near the Consular way, and from coins of Antoninus, Faustinus, Gordianus, Flavius Julianus, and others, found here, evidently occupied by the Romans; and a very perfect formation of an ancient encampment is still to be seen on the cliff, at the rear of the village, with a remarkably deep well. In the neighbourhood are the foundations and fragments of three stone crosses; and here was fought, in 1016, an obstinate battle between Edmund Ironside and Canute the Great. The parish comprises about 6000 acres, of which a considerable portion is waste; the soil is various; the surface is chiefly level, and is intersected by two small streams, which uniting form the river Avon. The village is on an eminence. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Sherston Parva and the perpetual curacy of Alderton united, valued in the king's books at £10. 2.; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester; impropiators, the Rev. H. Cresswell, J. Neeld, Esq., and the Churchwardens of Cirencester, as lessees under the Dean and Chapter. The great tithes have been commuted for £250, and the vicarial for £100; the impropriate glebe comprises 288 acres. The church exhibits portions of the Norman and of the several English styles, and is a large structure, with a lofty tower rising from the centre. A school is endowed with £10 per annum.

SHERSTON PARVA, or SHERSTON-PINKNEY, a parish, in the union of MALMESBURY, and in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Malmesbury; containing 155 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, united to the vicarage of Sherston Magna, and valued in the king's books at £3. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £159, and there are 93 acres of impropriate glebe. The church was long since demolished, and no institution has taken place since 1640, when the patronage was in the Crown.

SHERWILL (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (N. E.) from Barnstaple; containing 686 inhabitants. This parish, which is supposed to derive its name from the purity of its waters, comprises 4762a. 1p.; the substratum abounds with stone, quarried for building purposes. Near the village is a copious well of limpid water, which in the driest seasons affords an abundant supply. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30. 3. $11\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Sir Arthur Chichester, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £545, and the glebe comprises 91 acres, with a small house, recently built. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a tower at the western extremity of the south aisle. A school was built, and is supported, by Lady Chichester; and there are six almshouses for aged persons.

SHEVINGTON, a township, in the parish of STANDISH, union of WIGAN, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wigan; containing 1122 inhabitants. It comprises 1708 acres, of which 133 are common or waste land. The tithes have been commuted for £260. 4. 6.

SHEVIOCK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ST. GERMANS, S. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 3 miles (S. by E.) from St. Germans; containing 567 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the north by the river Lynher, and on the south by the English Channel, comprises 2122 acres, whereof three-fourths are arable, and the remainder woodland, with a small proportion of pasture. The surface is varied, and intersected by numerous rivulets; the soil on the north side, near the river, is a stiffish yellow clay, and on the south of much lighter quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 14. 7., and in the gift of the Right Hon. R. P. Carew: the tithes have been commuted for £335, and the glebe comprises 62 acres. The church contains a sumptuous monument to the memory of Sir Edward and Lady Courtenay, and several curious tombs of the family of Dawnay. At Wrinkle Cove is an ancient pier; and off the coast a considerable pilchard-fishery is carried on.

SHIDFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of DROXFORD, hundred, of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S.) from Bishop's-Waltham; containing 760 inhabitants. A church to which a district has been assigned, was erected by subscription in 1829, and there is a house for the minister: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of Droxford.

SHIELDS, NORTH, a sea-port and market-town, in the parish, union, and borough of TYNEMOUTH, E. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 276 (N. by W.) from London; containing 25,808 inhabitants, of whom 7509 are in the township. This place, at the commencement of the 13th century, consisted only of a few fishermen's huts or "shielings," which occupied the site of part of the present town, and from which it appears to have derived its name. In the reign of Edward I., the prior of Tynemouth began to erect houses here, established a market, and encouraged the settling of traders; but the burgesses of Newcastle, who possessed the exclusive trade of the river Tyne, jealous of this encroachment on their privileges, commenced a suit in the court of king's bench against the prior, who, by a judgment of the court, was compelled to relinquish the enterprise he had begun. Retiring therefore within the precincts of his priory at Tynemouth, he there carried his purpose into effect, and formed a harbour for his trading vessels, which from that circumstance is still called the Prior's haven; and the town of Shields consequently relapsed into its previous obscurity, in which state of insignificance it remained till about the middle of the 17th century, when Cromwell made considerable efforts to place it in that rank to which, from its advantageous situation, it was so obviously entitled. For this purpose he caused commodious quays to be built, granted a charter for a weekly market, and afforded every facility to the promotion of its trade; but it was not till about the close of the century that the restrictions to its commerce were efficiently removed, and the town began to prosper. From that period, however, its advance has been rapidly progressive, its trade has been greatly increasing, and since the commencement of the present century, its population has been nearly doubled, and it has obtained a very eminent degree of importance.

The town is situated on the north bank of the river Tyne, near its influx into the North Sea, and opposite to South Shields on the other side of the river. The older portion consists chiefly of narrow streets and lanes; but that which is of more recent origin contains numerous spacious, well-formed streets, and several handsome squares, in which are houses of elegant appearance, inhabited principally by merchants and ship-owners; and a new street leading to the market-place and the quays, which has been just completed, is 60 feet in width, forming an easy approach to the upper districts of the town. The streets are lighted with gas, partly from works constructed in the neighbourhood called the Low Lights, in 1820, at an expense of £5000; and partly from others in Hudson-street, established in 1836; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from reservoirs at Percy Main, Whitley, and Waterville, whence it is conveyed into the town by pipes, under the superintendence of a company incorporated in 1786. A subscription library, originally instituted in 1802, and for which a good building of stone was erected in 1807, by shareholders, has a collection of more than 4000 volumes; and the same proprietary likewise founded the Tynemouth Literary and Philosophical Institution, in which is an apparatus, provided at an expense of £60. A natural history society, primarily formed in 1825, and re-established in 1835, in Church-street, whence it has been removed to Tyne-street, has a valuable collection of mineralogical, geological, and ornithological specimens. In Tyne-street, also, is a handsome newsroom, and another has recently been opened in Dockwray-square; a theatre, a neat building of brick, erected in 1798, is opened during the winter months; and card and dancing assemblies are held in spacious and elegant rooms at the principal inn, in King-street.

The TRADE of the port mainly consists in the exportation of coal to London and the eastern coasts of England and Scotland, from the various staiths on the river, of which the principal are the Whitley coal and lime staiths, near the Low Light-house. Since the great extension of steam navigation within the last few years, the coal trade to France, the Mediterranean, the ports of the Baltic and Black Sea, to Spain, North and South America, the West India islands, Arabia, and recently to China, has much increased; and vessels are also employed in the Greenland and Davis' Straits fisheries. The harbour is capable of containing 2000 sail of vessels at one time, and ships of 1000 tons' burthen can safely pass the bar at its mouth, in spring tides; the entrance is defended by several forts, of which the principal are, Clifford's fort, erected in 1672; the Spanish battery, raised at the time of the threatened invasion by the celebrated Armada; and Tynemouth Castle. At Clifford's fort was formerly a light-house called the Low Light, and on an eminence to the west of it was another named the High Light, both of which, since the shifting of the bar at the mouth of the harbour, within the last thirty years, have been discontinued, and others, under the direction of the Newcastle Trinity Company, have been erected in their stead; of these, one is situated on the bank opposite Dockwray-square, and the other at the Low Light shore. The quay formed by the late Duke of Northumberland, in 1804, is spacious and commodious; several bonding warehouses have been erected here, and near it are the custom-house, the landing-place for the steam-packets, an extensive area in which the market is held, and a handsome hotel. Arrangements are in progress for the erection of a quay extending from that part called the Shepherd's quay, to the Union road on the east, adjoining the Low Lights shore, a line recommended some years since by the late Mr. Rennie. This quay will be fronted with a wall of solid stone 2365 feet in length, and the space behind it filled up with ballast from the vessels which here take in their lading of coal; a frontage of 20 feet will be left free for public use, and the remainder attached to the adjacent dwelling-houses; the estimated expense of this work is about £9000; and the houses adjoining the custom-house quay will be removed for the construction of docks for repairing vessels. Much inconvenience is sustained by ships employed in the foreign trade being compelled to clear out from the custom-house at Newcastle; but vessels trading coast-wise may clear out from the custom-house at this port.

Steam-boats ply every half-hour to Newcastle, for the conveyance of passengers and goods; and a steam ferry-boat to South Shields is in constant attendance, day and night.

The principal Manufactures in the town and immediate neighbourhood, are such as are connected with the shipping. There are two yards for ship-building, and others for smaller vessels and boats; several roperies, and manufactories for sail-cloth, tobacco, starch, hats, and gloves; some salt-works, a mill for grinding flint, and an extensive establishment for earthenware and stained glass; numerous iron-foundries, of which the largest is that of Messrs. Harrison and Company; several forges, of which one belonging to Messrs. Pow and Falcus has machinery for the manufacture of scrap iron; and manufactories for chain-cables and anchors. Patent windlasses are also manufactured by Messrs. Pow, Falcus, and Company, and by Messrs. Tyzack, Dobinson, and Company; Messrs. James and John Waite established, in 1821, a manufactory for steam-boat engines, and they have a flour-mill at Low Lights. The market is on Saturday, and is abundantly supplied with provisions of all kinds; and there are fairs, appointed by the lord of the manor, on the 1st of March and of November. Courts leet and baron are held at Easter and Michaelmas, by the steward of the manor of Tynemouth, which belongs to the Duke of Northumberland, and debts under 40s. are recoverable at them: the magistrates for the division hold petty-sessions every Tuesday. A handsome building in the Elizabethan style has been recently erected in Saville-street, in which is the office of the superintendent-registrar of the district, and in which also the board of guardians for the union of Tynemouth hold their meetings. Facilities of communication with Newcastle, from which a new line of approach has been formed by a branch of the turnpike-road, and with other towns in the district, is afforded by roads kept in good repair; and also by the Newcastle and North Shields railway, constructed at an expense of £260,000. This important line is carried over the valleys of Ouseburn and Willington by viaducts, the former 920 feet in length, 108 feet high to the railway, and each of the arches 116 feet in span; the latter 1050 feet in length, 82 feet in height to the railway, and the span of each arch 120 feet; the arches, supported on massive piers of stone, are formed of deal planks laid in laminæ, and duly prepared by chemical process to resist the influence of the weather. The line of road, which was completed and opened to the public on the 18th of June, 1839, has its terminal station in the town, occupying an area of about two acres in front of Bedford-street.

The parochial church of Tynemouth is on the north side of the town, and in the western part is a chapel of ease, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, on the 27th of October, 1836, having been erected at a cost of £3760, by subscription, aided by a donation of £350 from the Duke of Northumberland, and a grant from the Church Building Society; it is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower surmounted by an octagonal turret crowned with pinnacles, and contains 1200 sittings, of which 602 are free. At the north-west entrance of the town is a cemetery, formed in 1834, and having a gateway of four finely-sculptured columns. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists of the New Connexion, and Wesleyans, a Scottish church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. A school conducted on the Lancastrian plan was founded in commemoration of the royal jubilee, in 1810; and attached to Trinity church is a national school, for which a handsome building has been erected at an expense of £1200. A school has been established and endowed by the trustees of the late Mr. Thomas Kettlewell, who for that purpose bequeathed property which has been invested in the purchase of £2000 new four per cents., and £2000 three per cent. consols.; and there are also schools in connexion with the dissenting congregations, the Scottish church, and the Roman Catholic chapel. An asylum for decayed master mariners has been erected on a site given by the Duke of Northumberland, comprising about an acre on the Tynemouth road, and commanding a fine view of the sea. The buildings, which are of the Elizabethan style, comprise nine houses forming a semi-quadrangle, in the centre of which is a statue of the duke; they will accommodate 32 inmates, each of whom has two apartments, fitted up with every requisite, and receives an annual gratuity. There are likewise numerous benefit and friendly societies, and various bequests for distribution among the poor, among which is one by Margaret Richardson, in 1788, of £466. 13. East India annuities. In excavating the ground for the formation of the new street to the market-place, an immense boulder of mountain limestone with some specimens of copper-ore, was discovered at a depth of 20 feet from the surface.—See TYNEMOUTH.

SHIELDS, SOUTH, a sea-port, newly-enfranchised borough, and chapelry, and the head of a union, in the parish of JARROW, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of DURHAM, 20 miles (N. N. E.) from Durham, and 278 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 9082 inhabitants. This place, of which the present extent and importance are comparatively of modern date, lays claim notwithstanding to an origin of remote antiquity, and has strong indications of having been a Roman station. At the western extremity of the town is an elevated pavement, near the mouth of the Tyne, corresponding with a similar work on the opposite bank of the river, near the end of the wall of Severus; it was evidently constructed by the Romans, for the safe landing of their forces, at the ebbing and flowing of the tide; and at a place called the Lawe, between the town and the river, a hypocaust, altars, coins, and numerous other vestiges of Roman occupation, have been found, almost, in the opinion of some antiquaries, identifying the place with the ancient Segedunum, the first station on the wall of Severus. A military road branching from the Watling-street, passing over Durham and Harbrass moors, and by Lumley Castle, terminates here, and is called the Wreken Dyke by Hutchinson, who derives that name from its probable restoration by the Danes, for the more easy access to the Tyne. The importance of the place was greatly promoted by the establishment of the manufacture of salt about the year 1499, which, in the reigns of Elizabeth, James, and

Charles I., attracted many strangers, who settled in the town; and during the parliamentary war, a guard-house, with a battery of four guns, was erected on the Lawe, which was taken by the Scottish general Lesley, in 1644, and which, at the close of the late war, was dismantled.

The town is situated on the southern bank of the Tyne, at its influx into the North Sea, and nearly opposite to the port of North Shields on the other side of the river. The older portion of it consists of long and inconveniently narrow streets, extending for more than a mile and a half along the shore of the river; the more modern portion contains many handsome ranges of buildings, among which are Winchester, Saville, and Frederick streets, Ogle and Albion terraces, and numerous pleasant villas on the east side of the town. The streets are lighted with gas by a company who have erected works for that purpose, at an expense of £4000; and the inhabitants are supplied with water conveyed by pipes from springs in the neighbourhood, by a company established under an act of parliament obtained in 1788. A subscription library was established in 1803, and a literary, scientific, and mechanics' institution in 1825, which latter contains a library, and the requisite apparatus for experiments; there is a public newsroom in the town-hall, and a theatre was erected at Bank Top in 1791. The chief TRADE of the port is the shipping of coal from the various mines in the surrounding districts; and in addition to what is brought down the river in keels, two collieries in the immediate vicinity of the town are in active operation, connected with which are staiths for facilitating the loading of vessels, which staiths are also used by the Stanhope and Tyne, or Pontop and South Shields, Railway Company. This company, which was established in 1833, in the course of two years completed a railway from the town of Stanhope, in the western part of the county, to South Shields, a distance of thirty-four miles, at a cost of about £250,000. The staiths here are constructed on the most scientific and improved principles, and are capable of loading a vessel of 700 tons' burthen from each of the eight drops of this railway, in a period of six hours; 100,939 tons of coal were shipped at these staiths from the company's mines, in 1836, and about 166,500 tons are annually shipped from other collieries. Considerable quantities of superior lime are brought by the railway, and distributed through a very extensive agricultural district; and a portion of it is shipped from the staiths for Scotland. The Brandling Junction railway connects Shields with Monk-Wearmouth on the south, and Gateshead on the west; with the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, by the inclined plane from Gateshead to Redheugh; and with the Great North of England railway, by the Durham Junction line.

The number of vessels registered as belonging to the port is about 350, of the aggregate burthen of 77,000 tons, of which by far the greater number are employed in the coal trade; a few are also engaged in the American, Baltic, and Indian trades. The insurance of vessels is conducted by mutual assurance societies, of which one of the largest in the kingdom is established at this place, with a capital of more than a million sterling. The PORT is capacious, the river here expanding into a wide bay capable of affording secure shelter to more than 2000 sail of merchant vessels; but the entrance into the Tyne is extremely dangerous. On the north of the channel are clusters of rugged and elevated rocks, and on the south a treacherous sand-bank with a great bar, which, in easterly, north-easterly, and south-easterly winds, raises breakers to a most tremendous height; and vessels attempting to enter the harbour in a gale, are often by a single sea precipitated on the rocks or driven on the sands, and almost invariably wrecked. In 1789, the "Adventure" of Newcastle was wrecked on the sands, and the whole of the crew perished in the sight of thousands of spectators, who could afford no assistance. Upon this, a number of gentlemen formed themselves into a committee to devise some means, if possible, for the prevention of the loss of life from these melancholy catastrophes, and in the same year, with the aid of Mr. Henry Greathead, constructed the life-boat, which, on the 30th of January 1790, rescued a crew from destruction which no other means could have saved. This important discovery was duly appreciated by government; parliament voted a present of £1200 to Mr. Greathead, the Royal Humane Society presented him with their gold medal, and the Empress of Russia with a diamond ring; and in commemoration of the event, the device of a life-boat has been adopted in the public seal of the borough. In 1826, James Mather, Esq., of this place, invented the life-boat for ships, which is at present generally used for packet-vessels and steamers.

Ship-building was formerly carried on here to a vast extent, for which there are fifteen dry docks for large vessels, with spacious building-yards attached to each. During the late war, not less than 30 ships were annually launched, but the number is now much reduced, and the trade chiefly confined to the repairing of vessels, for which there are two patent-slips. The manufacture of salt, also, to the introduction of which the town owed its earlier increase, was once very extensive; and in 1696, there were 200 salt-pans, affording employment to many hundred persons; it is now conducted on a very reduced scale, and not more than five tons of salt are produced weekly. The principal MANUFACTURES at present, are, plate, flint, crown glass, and bottles; alkali, salts, soda, soap, and oil of vitriol; anchors and chain-cables, and boilers for steam-engines. The plate-glass works were established in 1827, and the glass is polished at Newcastle, and chiefly sent to London; there are nine glass-houses in constant operation, with mills for glass-grinding, in which about 800 persons are employed, and previously to the reduction of the duty, the amount for glass manufactured here exceeded £120,000 per annum. The Jarrow alkali-works, established in 1823, by Messrs. Cookson and Co., are situated on the margin of the river near the entrance to the town; and under the superintendence of Mr. Anthony Harrison, who was appointed sole manager in 1827, they have rapidly increased, and now extend over a site of nearly 14 acres. They are unrivalled for the production of alkalis, soda, alum, Epsom-salts, oil of vitriol, bleaching-powders, sulphates of copper, and other chemical substances, for which they are supplied with common salt from their works at East Howden, in Northumberland: from 700 to 800 persons are employed. There are also, a paint manufactory, worked by steam; five roperies, in some of which patent cordage is made; six public breweries, and various other establishments. The market is on Wednesday; a customary market is also held on Saturday, and there are fairs, granted by charter of Bishop Trevor, in 1770, annually on the 24th of June and the 1st of September. The markets are held in a large area in the centre of the town, in which is the town-hall.

The MUNICIPAL regulations are managed by commissioners under a local act of Geo. IV. cap. 40, who exempt the docks, manufactories, and other important works, from one-half of the rates charged on other property. The petty-sessions for this part of the Eastern division of Chester ward are held here every Wednesday; and courts leet and baron for making presentments, and for the recovery of small debts, are held in the town-hall, under the Dean and Chapter of Durham, as lords of the manor. The town-hall, situated in the market-place, was erected in 1768, by the Dean and Chapter, and is a neat and commodious structure, supported on a colonnade, within the area of which the market for butter, eggs, and poultry is held; it is used by the merchants for the purpose of an exchange, and contains the public news and reading-rooms. The borough returns one member to the Imperial parliament; the elective franchise is vested in the £10 householders of the townships of South Shields and Westoe, together comprising a population of 23,072, and the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff. A large portion of the land within the borough belongs to the Dean and Chapter, under whom it is held on building leases of 21 years, renewable every seven years on payment of a fine; and the old tenants are acknowledged to hold a beneficial interest in their leases, which are objects of sale, mortgage, or settlement, as freeholders. The chapelry comprises an area of 89a. 2r. 20p.

The ancient chapel of St. Hilda, with the exception of the tower, was, in 1810, almost entirely rebuilt, at an expense of £5000, and retains but little of its original character, though it still contains some fine monuments: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £330; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The incumbent receives a rent-charge of £249 out of the tithes of Harton, in the parish. A church was erected in 1818, in that part of the town which is in the township of Westoe, at an expense of £2400, raised by subscription, towards which £1000 were contributed by the Dean and Chapter, and £500 by the trustees of Lord Crewe. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £220; patrons, the Trustees. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in the Western Commercial-road, in 1834, at a cost of £3350, chiefly defrayed by the Dean and Chapter, and is a handsome structure with a square embattled tower, containing 1200 sittings, of which 800 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £350; patrons, the Dean and Chapter. There is an oratory at Harton, which is a curacy in the patronage of the incumbent of South Shields; and an additional church is about to be erected at the east end of the town, within the chapelry of St. Hilda, at an estimated cost of about £2000. The design is of the early English style, with a tower surmounted by a spire, and the building is to contain 800 sittings, including 500 free; the living will be a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter, by whom it will be endowed. There are three places of worship belonging to the Wesleyans; two each to the Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists of the New Connexion; and one each to the Independents, Primitive Methodists, and members of the United Secession Church.

A school was founded in 1769, by bequests of Christopher Maughan in 1749, and Anne Aubone in 1760, which, augmented by subsequent benefactions from Ralph Redhead and others, produce an income of £82 per annum; the building contains three rooms, of which the lowest is for girls, the second for boys, and the uppermost appropriated as a public library. The Union school was established in 1835, and is supported by subscription; attached to the churches are national schools in which large numbers of children are instructed, and there are Sunday schools in connexion with the Establishment and with the dissenting congregations. The Dispensary, in East King-street, established in 1821, affords extensive medical aid to the indigent poor; and there is also a society for the relief of the sick by visiting them at their dwellings, under the direction of a committee of ladies. Numerous benefit societies have likewise been founded, one of which was established by Mr. Harrison, of the Jarrow Alkali-works, and is supported by small weekly contributions of the workmen. The poor law union of South Shields comprises six parishes or places, containing a population of 28,907. In the chapelry is a saline spring, of which the water, on analysis, was found to contain, in one gill, of muriate of lime 2 grains, muriate of magnesia 1·6, muriate of soda 3·9, carbonate of lime and magnesia 10, and of sulphate of lime 3: this water, which contains neither any particle of iron nor of free acids, is used by some poor families instead of yeast, in making their bread. Near Marsden Rock, on the coast, is found elastic limestone, which does not occur elsewhere in England; it is perfectly flexible to the touch, and is regarded as a singular curiosity. The frequent fatal accidents in the mines in this neighbourhood, of which a very calamitous instance occurred in the St. Hilda pit in June, 1839, when 52 persons were killed by an explosion, lately led to the formation of a committee, consisting of Robert Ingham, Esq., M.P., Richard Shortridge, James W. Roxby, Thomas M. Winterbottom, John Clay, E. Bell, W. K. Eddowes, R. W. Swinburne, A. Harrison, James Mather, and Thomas Salmon, Esqrs., of whom the two last acted as hon. secretaries. After a minute investigation of the causes of these accidents, and persevering endeavours to find the best means of preventing them, the committee published their valuable report in 1843, which cannot fail to effect great improvements in the practice of mining, and materially diminish the hazard with which it is attended.

SHIFFNALL (St. Andrew), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP; containing, with the townships of Hatton and Woodside, and the chapelry of Prior's-Lee, 5244 inhabitants, of whom 1872 are in the town, 17½ miles (E. by S.) from Shrewsbury, and 143 (N. W.) from London. This place, formerly called Idsall, appears to have been of greater note than it is at present, although the origin of its name and history is involved in obscurity. It belonged to Earl Morcar prior to the Conquest, and, at a period considerably later, was the property of the family of Dunstanville, one of whom, Walter de Dunstanville, by the special command of Henry III., resided in the marches of Wales, to protect them against the ravaging incursions of the Welsh. It afterwards came into the possession of the Badlesmeres, who obtained from Edward I. a market for two days in the week, and two yearly fairs. Bartholomew de Badlesmere having been executed for his participation in the battle of Boroughbridge, it subsequently became the property of various persons of distinction, among whom were the families of Bohun, Tiptoft, Ab Rees, Mortimer, and Talbot. The town is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, and then built on its present site to the eastward of the church, having been, prior to its destruction, situated to the westward; and a book printed towards the end of the fifteenth century, entitled The Burnynge of the Town of Idsall, alias Shiffnall, is said to be in existence, though very scarce. It is on the road from London to Holyhead, in a country abounding with coal and iron-ore, and the inhabitants are supplied with good water from wells. A subscription library has been established. The market is on Tuesday; and there are fairs on the first Monday in April, August 5th, and November 23rd, for hops, horses, and cattle of different kinds. A petty-session for the division is held monthly by the magistrates, and a court leet annually. The coal and ironstone, with which the substratum abounds, are worked on a very extensive scale, by a company at Prior's-Lee; and the coal is consumed in numerous blast-furnaces for the manufacture of iron, which is made into pig-iron, and into bars of all sizes for general use, and into sheet-iron; for which purpose there are rolling and slitting mills, foundries, and other works, in which more than 2000 persons are employed.

The parish comprises 11,433*a.* 28*p.*, chiefly arable; the soil is fertile, and produces excellent crops of wheat, barley, beans, and peas. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; net income, £450; patron, George Brooke, Esq. The church is a large cruciform structure, with a tower in the centre; the prevailing character is the later Norman, with many alterations of more modern date, and the four pointed arches supporting the tower are good specimens of that style. The chancel, in which are two round-headed windows (now blocked up), with slender-shafted columns and decorated capitals, is evidently of earlier date, and is separated from the tower by a large semicircular arch, a fine specimen of the early Norman style. The roof of the chancel, which is of a high pitch, is supported by frame-work of oak, of elegant design, richly carved, and springing from corbels on the walls; but the roof of the nave, which is of similar character and equally beautiful, is hidden by a plaster ceiling added in 1810, when the church underwent a thorough repair. There is a chapel at Prior's-Lee, rebuilt in 1837, by subscription, aided by grants from the Incorporated and Diocesan Societies; and the Baptists and Independents have each places of worship. A free school established in 1595, by John Aron, had, from endowments, a sum of £13. 7. 4., which was paid until 1816, when an addition was made from a fund raised by subscription, making the income £30 per annum, and the national system was adopted. There is an exhibition to Christ-Church College, Oxford, founded in 1689, by Edward Careswell; but the course of education now pursued not qualifying the scholars for the university, the benefit of it is enjoyed by a private school, the master of which is nominally classical master of the free school. Several small sums called Dole charities, have been left by different persons for the benefit of the poor. The union of Shiffnall comprises 15 parishes or places, of which 11 are in the county of Salop and 4 in that of Stafford, the whole containing a population of 11,050. In a field near the vicarage are the remains of a military station, consisting of a circular mound with a ditch. Shiffnall is the birthplace of Dr. Beddoes, a physician eminent as well for his literary attainments as for professional skill.

SHIFFORD, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of Bampton, union of WITNEY, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (S. E.) from Witney; containing 52 inhabitants. The chapel is an ancient structure.

SHILBOTTLE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing, with the several townships of Hazon, Newton-on-the-Moor, Whittle, and Woodhouse, 1208 inhabitants, of whom 549 are in Shilbottle township, 4½ miles (S. by E.) from Alnwick. The parish comprises 5921*a.* 3*r.* 20*p.*, of which 4400 acres are arable, 1255 pasture and meadow, and 140 woodland; the soil is a strong clay, producing grain of all kinds, and great numbers of cattle and sheep are reared and fattened for the markets. The substratum abounds with coal of good quality, of which mines are in operation. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £4. 14. 8.; net income, £222: it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation of the remainder of the rectorial tithes belongs to various persons. The church, thoroughly repaired about 1793, retains a portion of its original Norman character. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has a small endowment.

SHILDON, a township, in the parish of St. ANDREW AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bishop-Auckland; containing 2631 inhabitants. Here is an extensive dépôt for goods, on the railway from Witton Park to Darlington and Stockton. The station is 124 yards in length, and contains more than 1000 coal-waggons and numerous lines of way; four locomotive-engines are generally kept, and there are extensive shops and warehouses for the use of the railroad. A church was recently erected in a conspicuous situation on the rising ground east of the old village, and contains 600 sittings, 450 of which are free: a district has been assigned, comprising the townships of Shildon, Midridge, Eldon, and East Thickley; and a parsonage-house built, towards which the Earl of Eldon subscribed 100 guineas. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £43. 3. A national school is supported at Old Shildon, where also is a school, endowed by a member of the Society of Friends; and at New Shildon is a British and Foreign school.

SHILLINGFORD (St. FAITH), a parish, in the union of FARRINGDON, hundred of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, 2¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Farringdon; containing 280 inhabitants. It comprises about 1680 acres, of which 460 are arable, 1109 pasture, and 84 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 8. 11½.; net income, £497; patron, T. M. Goodlake, Esq. The church, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, contains some ancient and curious monuments, particularly an altar-tomb to the memory of John de Blewberry, a priest, who died in 1372, and one to the late Lord Ashbrook and his father, who resided and were interred here.

SHILLINGFORD (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, hundred of EXMINSTER, Wonford and S. divisions of the county of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Exeter; containing 72 inhabitants. It comprises 397*a. 2r. 25p.*, of which 131 acres are arable; 62 pasture, 15 woodland, and 15 garden and orchard ground. The living is a discharged rectory, recently consolidated with that of Dunchideock, and valued in the king's books at £9; net income of Shillingford, £191. The church contains an old monument to one of the Courteney family. Here is a national school.

SHILLINGFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of WARBOROUGH, union of WALLINGFORD; hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD; containing 200 inhabitants.

SHILLINGSTONE, or SHILLING-OKEFORD (HOLY ROAD), a parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of CRANBORNE, Sturminster division of the county of DORSET, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 512 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the river Stour, and comprises 2223 acres, of which 745 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory in mediety, the first mediety valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$., and the second at £6. 16. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, J. Thompson, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £370, and the glebe comprises 71 acres. The church has an embattled tower crowned with pinnacles, and contains a small altar-tomb erected, it is said, to the memory of the founder.

SHILTON, a parish, in the union of WITNEY, partly in the hundred of FARRINGDON, county of BERKS, and partly in that of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Burford; containing 305 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 5.; patron, the Rev. Thomas Neate; impropiator, J. Gwynne, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, under an act of inclosure, in 1794; and under the recent Tithe act, were further commuted for a rent-charge of £6. The church is in Oxfordshire, the greater part of the parish in Berks, and the vicarage-house upon the boundary of the two counties.

SHILTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of FOLESHILL, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Coventry; containing, with part of the hamlet of Barnacle, 453 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1100 acres, and was formerly the residence of a branch of the Denbigh family, whose ancient mansion is still remaining. The village is pleasantly situated on the road from Coventry to Wolvey, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the ribbon manufacture. The Oxford canal skirts the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £76; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropriation belongs to Mrs. Gunman. The church is an ancient structure in the early and decorated English styles, with a handsome tower; the chancel is separated from the nave by an enriched screen, presented by Matthew Bloxham, Esq., and contains a piscina and some old monuments. A school was built in 1725; and is now conducted on the national plan.

SHILTON, EARL.—See EARL-SHILTON.

SHILVINGTON, a township, in the parish of MORPETH, union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 92 inhabitants. It was a manor in the Merlay barony, and was once the property of the knightly families of Gubium and Ogle, the connexion of the latter of whom with the place was revived in 1830, by the Rev. J. Savile Ogle, who then purchased the estate. The township is in the southern part of the parish, and comprises 1426 acres, of a good soil. The village is small, but pleasantly situated on the road from Saltwick to Whalton; there was a mill here in the time of Henry III., and it is pretty certain that the village also had a chapel, though no remains of it exist.

SHIMPLING (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of DEPWADE, hundred of DISS, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Diss; containing 230 inhabitants. It comprises 788*a. 3r. 19p.*, of which 520 acres are arable, 225 meadow and pasture, and the remainder roads and waste. Shimpling Place, anciently the residence of the Shimpling family, is now a farm-house. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 4.; net income, £222; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. Harrison. The church, mostly in the decorated English style, with a circular tower of older date, was chiefly erected early in the thirteenth century, but the steeple appears to be more ancient; a representation of St. George and the Dragon, and the arms of the Shimplings, are carved on the front of it.

SHIMPLING (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (S.) from Bury St. Edmunds; containing 517 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2698*a. 2r. 6p.*, and includes several estates with manorial rights. Chadacre Hall, the principal, was the seat of the family of Plampin, of which the late admiral was the last descendant; it is now owned by Mr. Halifax, banker in London, who has built an elegant mansion on the site. Shimpling Thorn is a good mansion-house, late the property of the ancient family of Fiske; and Shimpling Hall, with 400 acres of land, and Gifford's Hall, belong to Melford Hospital. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 17. 1., and in the gift of the Heirs of the late Rev. Thomas Fiske: the tithes have been commuted for £600, and the glebe comprises 83 acres. The church, a commodious edifice, contains monuments to the Plampins.

SHINCLIFFE, a chapelry, in the parish of St. OSWALD, union of DURHAM, S. division of EASINGTON ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Durham; containing 1137 inhabitants. This place, once called Syneclive, was given, under that appellation, to the convent of Durham by Bishop Carilepho, in 1035; and nearly the whole vill is at this day held under the Dean and Chapter of that city. The village is considerable, and lies on the south of the Wear, sheltered on three sides by the rising grounds that skirt the river-valley, and open only on the south-west to the rich level grounds on the Wear. A bridge existed here so early as the year 1200, and mention occurs of its repair twice in the 14th century; it was rebuilt by Bishop Skirlaw, who raised a noble stone structure of three arches, and it was again rebuilt in 1826. The produce of a colliery here is shipped at Sunderland. The living is a vicarage; net income, £98; patrons, the Dean and Chapter; appropriator, the Prebendary of Shincliffe in the Cathedral, whose tithes have been commuted for £191. 18. 9., and those of the perpetual curate for £4. 9. 7. The chapel was built and endowed in 1826, by the Dean and Chapter; and a burial-ground was consecrated in September same year. A national school has been established.

SHINETON, county of SALOP.—See SHEINTON.

SHINFIELD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WOKINGHAM, partly in the hundreds of CHARLTON and THEALE, county of BERKS, and partly in the hundred of AMESBURY, county of WILTS, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Reading; containing, with the liberty of Hartley-Dummer, 1125 inhabitants, of whom 991 are in Berkshire. The parish is situated on the road from Reading to Basingstoke, and comprises 4514 acres, of which 421 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, with that of Swallowfield annexed, valued in the king's books at £20. 3. 1½.; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The great tithes have been commuted for £930, and the vicarial for £200; the appropriate glebe comprises 15 acres, and the vicarial 29. There is a place of worship for Independents. A free school was founded in 1707, by Richard Piggot, who endowed it with land and houses producing at present £57. 16. per annum; and there is another school, endowed by Mary Spicer in 1697, which has £11 a year, arising from a house and land.

SHINGAY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ROYSTON, hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Royston; containing 137 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Wendy. A commandery of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem was founded here in 1140, the revenue of which, at the suppression, was estimated at £175. 4. 6.

SHINGHAM (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, partly in the hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, but chiefly in that of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 4¾ miles (S. W. by W.) from Swaffham; containing 59 inhabitants. It comprises about 1304 acres, of which the soil is chiefly sandy and light, and the surface generally flat. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Beechamwell All Saints, and valued in the king's books at £4. 6. 8.: the tithes have been commuted for £105, and the glebe comprises 24 acres.

SHIPBORNE (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of WROTHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3¾ miles (N.) from Tonbridge; containing 451 inhabitants. A fair is held on Sept. 1st, the festival of St. Giles the Abbot, to whom the church is dedicated. The living is a donative, in the patronage of John Simpson, Esq. A school is supported by subscription. Christopher Smart, the poet, was born here in 1722.

SHIPBROOK, a township, in the parish of DAVENHAM, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. E.) from Northwich; containing 89 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes through the township. Tithe rent-charges have been awarded amounting to £58. 18., of which £53 are payable to the rector of the parish, and £3. 18. to an impropiator.

SHIPDEN, formerly a parish, in the N. division of the hundred of ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, adjacent to Cromer. The living was a rectory; but the church, dedicated to St. Peter, having been destroyed by an inundation of the sea, the parochial rights of Shipden have, for a very long period, been lost.

SHIPDHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of MITFORD, W. division of NORFOLK, 17 miles (N. N. E.) from Thetford; containing 1861 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4561a. 1r. 23p., of which 3405 acres are arable, and 1110 meadow and pasture: the village is situated on the road from East Dereham to Thetford, and is about a mile in length. A stock-fair is held on the 29th of June, for which the Bishop of Ely, who built a large Hall here, obtained a charter in the 29th of Henry III., as well as for a market on Thursdays: the former was originally held on St. Peter's and St. Paul's-day; the latter has been discontinued. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 7. 6.; net income, £1120; patron and incumbent, the Rev. B. Barker. The church, which is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, is a stately edifice with a lofty square embattled tower crowned by a handsome turret; over the porch is a library bequeathed by the Rev. Thomas Townshend, a late rector, for the use of his successors. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have places of worship. Thomas Bullock, in 1735, bequeathed land which, with an allotment awarded at the inclosure, comprising together about 47 acres, produces £60 per annum, for the support of a school. At the inclosure, also, about 126 acres were allotted to the poor for fuel, the proceeds of which amount to £150 per annum; and the rent of houses and land producing about £145 per annum, is applied to the repair of the church, and other parochial uses. There was anciently a hermitage, with a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, for the repair of which the Bishop of Ely, in 1487, granted 40 days' indulgence to all who might contribute.

SHIPHAM (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (S. by E.) from Churchill; containing 707 inhabitants. It comprises 766a. 3r. 29p.; the substratum is rich in minerals, and lead and calamine works are in operation. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 13. 11., and in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £132. 17., and the glebe comprises 14 acres. Here is a national school for the instruction of the poor.

SHIPLAKE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of HENLEY-UPON-THAMES, hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, 2¾ miles (S.) from Henley; containing 565 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2693 acres, of which 256 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 1.; net income, £147; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is in the early English style, with a tower at the west end of the north aisle, covered with ivy; it contains monuments to the families of Blundell and Plowden, and in the south aisle is a memorial of the Rev. James Grainger, author of the Biographical History of England, and vicar of the parish.

SHIPLET, or SHIPSLADE, a hamlet, in the parish of BLEADON, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 71 inhabitants.

SHIPLEY, a township, in the parish of HEANOR, union of BASFORD, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Derby; containing 671 inhabitants. The Nutbrook canal and several railways communicate with the coal-mines here.

SHIPLEY, a township, in the parish of EGLINGHAM, union of ALNWICK, N. division of COQUETDALE ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Alnwick; containing 124 inhabitants. The township includes the southern parts of the parish, and the road between Eglington and Alnwick passes through it.

SHIPLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of HORSHAM, hundred of WEST GRINSTEAD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S. S. W.) from Horsham; containing 1187 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 5656 acres, of which 3915 are arable, 648 pasture and meadow, and 195 woodland; the soil is generally clay, producing remarkably large oak-trees, and excellent wheat. The ancient castle of Knap situated here, which appears to have been founded in an early period of the Norman era, was visited by King John in 1206 and 1215, and was garrisoned during the parliamentary war. Part of the keep, with a fine Norman arch, is still remaining in the grounds of Sir Charles M. Burrell, Bart., who has erected a magnificent castellated residence within half a mile of the old ruin; the mansion contains a good collection of paintings and many stately apartments, and the grounds are enriched with much beautiful scenery, and enlivened with a lake of 100 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £98; patron and improprator, the Rev. L. Vernon Harcourt. The church is principally in the Norman style, and was repaired and enlarged in 1831; in the chancel is a monument of variegated marble to Sir Thomas Caryll, his lady and family. A national school has been established, which has an endowment of £40 per annum by Mrs. Sarah Andrews, in 1825; two other schools are partly supported by subscription, and the union workhouse for children is in the parish.

SHIPLEY, with HEATON (St. PAUL), a district parish, in the union of BRADFORD, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Bradford; containing 4043 inhabitants. This place, comprising the townships of Shipley and Heaton, originally part of the parish of Bradford, was formed into an ecclesiastical district by the Church Commissioners, in 1828, and, since the death of the Rev. H. Heap, vicar of Bradford, has, under the 58th of George III. cap. 45, become a separate district parish. It is situated at the junction of the valleys of Bradford and Airedale, and comprises about 2030 acres, of which 516 are arable, 1217 pasture, and 297 wood and plantations. The surface is finely varied; the scenery in the less elevated grounds, opening into the richly-wooded and romantic valley of Lower Airedale, is beautiful, and the higher lands command extensive prospects; on the north side of the eminence on which the church is built is a magnificent view of Airedale, embracing Hawkesworth and Guiseley on the east, Harden and Bingley on the west, and extending over the vale to Hope Hill and Baildon Moor on the north. The soil is fertile, and the substrata are chiefly coal, of which there are three mines in operation, and freestone, of which there are several quarries; limestone is also found, and there are some kilns on the canal. Shipley Grange, the seat of Thomas Aked, Esq., is a handsome mansion beautifully situated; and Gothic Cottage, recently erected by John Outhwaite, Esq., M.D., a considerable proprietor of houses and land in the parish, is an elegant residence at the entrance of the village, and at present in the occupation of the Misses Horsfall. Shipley Hall, the property of William Wainman, Esq., of Carr Head, and the residence of Mr. Fawcett; and Shipley House, in which the Lascelles family resided during the erection of Harewood, and which is the property of Charles Walker, Esq., of Ludlow Hall, Shropshire, and the residence of G. N. Semple, Esq., are both spacious mansions; and Canal Cottage, the property of Mr. Rhodes, and at present occupied by Mr. James Hepper, is a pleasant residence. There are also, in the village, two large and ancient family mansions, the one the property of Mr. Wainman, and the other of the Earl of Rosse; but both have been converted into farm-houses.

The village extends for nearly a mile along the south bank of the river Aire; at the western extremity are several well-built houses, commanding a prospect over Airedale, and at the eastern are numerous neat houses of various dimensions; and the township comprises also the hamlets of Moorhead and Shipley-Fields. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the worsted and woolen manufactures, for the former of which there are five, and for the latter, three, mills; the manufacture of paper for pressing is carried on by Messrs. Wright and Son, and there is a whiting manufactory in the village. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the parish, and is met here by the Bradford Branch canal. A fair, chiefly for cattle, is held on the first Monday after the 20th of October. The living is in the patronage of the Trustees of the late Rev. Charles Simeon, who have, however, consented to transfer it to the Vicar of Bradford; the first and present incumbent is the Rev. T. Newbery, M.A. The church was erected by grant of the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £7688, on a site given by the late John Wilmer Field, Esq., lord of the manor; the foundation-stone was laid by the vicar of Bradford, on the 5th of Nov. 1823, and the building was consecrated by the Archbishop of York on the 5th of November, 1826. It is a spacious handsome structure in the later English style, with a square tower of four stories, embattled, and crowned with pinnacles, and contains 1488 sittings, of which 332 are free. There are places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. On the western slope of Baildon Moor is a remarkably strong chalybeate spring, containing no particle of saline matter, and producing ochre of beautiful colour, fit for paint; the water is thought to be far superior to that of Harrogate. A chalybeate spring in a field called the Harrisons, near the Hirst, has lately been lost by the sinking of a coal-pit in its vicinity.

SHIPMEADOW (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Bungay; containing 265 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Waveney, and comprises by measurement 800 acres: the village is on the road from Beccles to Bungay. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of the Rev. A. Suckling: the tithes have been commuted for £220, and the glebe comprises 27 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower.

SHIPPON, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. HELEN, ABINGDON, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, 1 mile (W. N. W.) from Abingdon; containing 198 inhabitants, and comprising 370*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.*

SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR (St. EDMUND), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, forming, with the parishes of Tidmington and Tredington, a detached portion of the Upper division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Blockley and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, locally in the Kington division of the hundred of KINGTON, county of WARWICK, 16 miles (S. by W.) from Warwick, and 83 (N. W. by W.) from London; containing 1846 inhabitants. This place was formerly a township in the parish of Tredington, from which it was separated by an act of the 6th of George I. The town, said to derive its name from having formerly had one of the largest markets for sheep in the kingdom, is situated on the river Stour, in a fertile and rather hilly country, about two miles from the Stratford and Moreton railroad, to form a communication with which, by means of a branch railway, an act was obtained in 1833. There was once a large manufacture of shag, which has quite declined, and the place has now little trade of any description. The Dean and Chapter of Worcester, who possess the manorial rights, hold a court annually, at which a constable is appointed. The market is on Saturday; and there are fairs on the third Tuesday in April, June 22nd, the last Tuesday in August, and the Tuesday after October 10th. The parish comprises 1159*a.* 36*p.* of land. The living is a rectory, with that of Tidmington annexed, valued in the king's books at £33. 5. 10.; net income, £700; patrons, the Dean and Chapter, and Jesus' College, Oxford, the former presenting to every third vacancy. The Baptists, Society of Friends, and Wesleyans have each a place of worship; and there is a Roman Catholic chapel at Foxcote, in the parish. A national school is endowed with about £130 per annum; and various small bequests are distributed among the indigent. The poor law union of Shipston includes 37 parishes or places, 20 of which are in the county of Warwick, 13 in that of Gloucester, and 4 in that of Worcester; and contains a population of 19,685.

SHIPTON, a hamlet, in the parish and union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM; containing 101 inhabitants.

SHIPTON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of CHURCH-STRETTON, liberties of the borough of WENLOCK, S. division of SALOP, 7 miles (S. W. by S.) from Much Wenlock; containing 153 inhabitants. This was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Wenlock. The living is a donative curacy; net income, £3; patron, Thomas Mytton, Esq., who, with others, is improPRIATOR. A school is partly supported by the clergyman.

SHIPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of MARKET-WEIGHTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 1¼ mile (N. W. by W.) from Market-Weighton; containing 322 inhabitants. This township, which has a pleasant village, comprises by computation 1570 acres of land. The chapel is a handsome structure consisting of a nave, chancel, aisles, and embattled tower. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; and a school is endowed with about £8 a year.

SHIPTON, a township, in the parish of OVERTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (N. W. by N.) from York; containing 418 inhabitants. The township comprises about 2130 acres of land, chiefly the property of Viscount Downe, who holds a court leet and baron here for the manors of Overton, Shipton, and Benningbrough. The village is pleasant, on the road between York and Easingwold, and one of the stations of the Great North railway is situated here. The tithes were commuted for land in 1812. There are places of worship for Calvinistic Methodists and Wesleyans; also a free grammar school, founded in 1655, by Ann Middleton, who endowed it with £40 per annum.

SHIPTON-BELLINGER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ANDOVER, hundred of THORNGATE, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 9 miles (W.) from Andover; containing 278 inhabitants. It comprises about 2400 acres, chiefly arable. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patrons and improPRIATORS, Joseph Gilbert and George Potheary, Esqrs. The great tithes have been commuted for £118, and the vicarial for £167, and there is a glebe of 3 acres.

SHIPTON-GEORGE, a parochial chapelry, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of GODDERTHORNE, Bridport division of DORSET, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Bridport; containing 406 inhabitants. The living is a curacy, attached to the rectory of Burton-Bradstock. The chapel, dedicated to St. Martin, and situated on high ground, is a small edifice with a low embattled tower; and near it, on the south-west, are slight remains of the ancient manor-house.

SHIPTON-LEE, a hamlet, in the parish of QUAIN-TON, union of AYLESBURY, hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, 5½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Winslow; containing 115 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel.

SHIPTON-MOYNE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of TETBURY, hundred of LONGTREE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2¼ miles (S. by E.) from Tetbury; containing 353 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 1. 10½., and in the gift of T. G. B. Estcourt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £345, and the glebe comprises 173 acres. Here is a national school.

SHIPTON-OLLIFFE (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Northleach; containing 222 inhabitants. The parish, including that of Shipton-Sollers, united by act of parliament, in 1776, comprises about 3000 acres; the surface is very hilly, and the soil thin, resting on a substratum of limestone rock, but under good management producing favourable crops. The parishes adjoin each other, but none of the inhabitants can precisely ascertain the boundary; they are both situated to the north of the road to London. The living is a discharged rectory, with Shipton-Sollers, valued in the king's books at £7. 5. 9.; net income, £412; patrons, alternately, W. G. Peachey, Esq., lord of the manor of Sollers, and W. P. Chapeau, Esq., lord of that of Olliffe. The tithes were commuted for 453 acres of land in 1792. The church has undergone a thorough repair, and the service, which was previously once on every Sunday alternately at each of the churches of the united parishes, has since that improvement been solely performed here.

SHIPTON-SOLLERS (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Northleach; containing 126 inhabitants, and comprising 1160 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, united to Shipton-Olliffe in 1776, and valued in the king's books at £7. 3. 4.

SHIPTON-UNDER-WYCHWOOD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Burford; containing, with the chapelries of Langley, Leafield, Lyneham, and Ramsden, and the township of Milton, 2624 inhabitants, of whom 546 are in Shipton township. At Langley was anciently a royal seat, and the remains of what is said to have been King John's palace may still be traced in the walls of one of the houses. From its proximity to Wychwood forest, it continued till the time of Charles I. to be the residence of the royal family, while taking the diversion of the chase. The township of Shipton comprises 2342 acres, of which 500 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £335; patron and impropriator, the Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with some Norman portions, and a lofty tower surmounted by a spire; the south porch is enriched with niches containing mutilated statues, and there is a fine Norman doorway with zigzag mouldings; the pulpit is of stone exquisitely sculptured, and the font, which is octagonal, is ornamented with the arms of the Warwick family and with tracery; at the west end of the nave is a painting of the Resurrection, and in the north aisle an altar-tomb, with the recumbent effigy of a female, rudely sculptured. A national school is supported by subscription. There are remains of three religious houses, which have not been noticed by any writer; and another ancient building has long been converted into the Crown inn. Three singular stone vessels were found in digging the quarries at Milton.

SHIPTON-UPON-CHERWELL (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Woodstock; containing 123 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the east by the river Cherwell, and intersected by the Oxford canal, comprises by measurement 1062 acres, of which 305 are pasture, and the remainder arable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £310; patron, William Turner, Esq., of Shipton House. The tithes were commuted for land in 1768. The church, rebuilt in 1832, at the cost of Mr. Turner, is a neat edifice in the later English style, with a square embattled tower.

SHIRBURN (All Saints), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Tetsworth; containing 338 inhabitants.

This place was originally the property of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, but passed to Alice, wife of Warine de L'Isle, whose descendant of the same name obtained from Edward III. licence to embattle his house here. Shirburn Castle, the seat of the Earl of Macclesfield, is surrounded by a moat, over which is a drawbridge; the interior contains a noble hall, an armoury, and a suite of splendid apartments, and there is also a fine collection of paintings, including a portrait of Catherine Parr, wife of Henry VIII. The parish comprises about 2300 acres; the soil is partly gravel, alternated with chalky loam; the surface is generally flat, except towards the south, where it extends over a portion of the Chiltern hills, and the scenery is enriched with wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £112; patron and impropriator, the Earl. The tithes were exchanged for land and corn-rents, under an act of inclosure, in 1805; and, recently, tithes belonging to the vicar have been commuted for a rent-charge of £80, and great tithes for £14. 10. A school is partly supported by the vicar.

SHIREBROOK, a chapelry, in the parish of PLEASLEY, union of MANSFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Mansfield. The living is annexed to the rectory of Pleasley.

SHIRE-HALL-YARD, an extra-parochial district, in the borough and union of IPSWICH, E. division of SUFFOLK; containing 94 inhabitants.

SHIREHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of WESTBURY-UPON-TRYM, union of CLIFTON, Lower division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Bristol; containing 671 inhabitants. The tything comprises 1436 acres, of which 34 are common or waste land. King-road and Hung-road, two noted anchorages for ships, are within the precincts of the chapelry. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael. A rent-charge of £334. 5. has been awarded, as a commutation for the impropriate tithes. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SHIREHEAD, a chapelry, in the parish of COCKERHAM, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (N. W. by N.) from Garstang. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £93; patron, the Vicar of Cockerham; impropriators, the several Proprietors of land. The chapel contains eighty free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £70 in aid of the expense.

SHIRE-NEWTON (St. Thomas à Becket), a parish, in the division and union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 4 miles (W.) from Chepstow; containing 895 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Chepstow to Usk, and comprises 3544*a.* 3*r.* 23*p.*, of which 1125 acres are arable, 1162 pasture and meadow, 264 woodland, 522 common, 119 cottages and gardens, and 76 roads and waste. The surface is a good deal undulated, and the soil sandy and loamy, on a substratum of red sandstone; the views are fine and extensive, especially from Shire-Newton House, the seat of William Hollis, Esq., whence the Irish coast opposite Lundy Island may be seen on a clear day. There are some paper-mills. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the Prince of Wales: the tithes have been commuted for £375. 5. 6., and there is a glebe of about two acres, and a good parsonage-house, with a small rectory manor. The church, which, with the village, is situated on an eminence, is in the early style, and has a central tower. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans.

SHIREOAKS, a chapelry, in the parish and union of WORKSOP, wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Worksop; containing 100 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron, the Duke of Norfolk.

SHIRLAND (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Alfreton; containing, with the hamlet of Higham, 1381 inhabitants, of whom 930 are in Shirland township. The parish comprises about 3000 acres, of which 1000 are arable, and the remainder pasture and meadow, with a considerable portion of woodland; the soil is tolerably fertile, and the substratum generally clay, with some seams of coal. The village had formerly a market, which has been discontinued since 1785; but a fair for cattle is still held on the Wednesday after the 1st of January. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 15. 5., and in the gift of the Earl of Thanet: the tithes have been commuted for £175, and the glebe comprises 60 acres: there is also a rent-charge of £19, payable to the rector of Morton. The church contains several ancient monuments of the De Greys. At Hatfield-gate is a charity school, endowed by Edward Revell, Mr. Stocks, and others, with about £25 per annum.

SHIRLEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERNY, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Ashbourn; containing, with the townships of Stydd and Yeaveley, 599 inhabitants, of whom 320 are in Shirley township. The parish comprises 1598*a. 3r. 29p.*, and was formerly the property of the Shirley family, earls Ferrers, whose ancient hall, now converted into a farm-house, still retains features of its original character, and the moat by which it was surrounded is yet remaining. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with the chapelry of Yeaveley, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron, Earl Ferrers. The tithes have been commuted for £153. 17., and the glebe comprises 9 acres. The church is a small building, with a tower, and is about to be enlarged by rebuilding one of the aisles. There is a chapel at Yeaveley, erected in 1840. A school is supported by subscription.

SHIRLEY, a township, in the parish of AYMESTREY, union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD; containing 40 inhabitants.

SHIRLEY, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of MILLBROOK, union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. N. W.) from Southampton; containing 2500 inhabitants. This district includes the village of Shirley, part of the village of Hill or Four Posts, on the shore of the Southampton water, the hamlets of Cocksford and Alder Moor, and Shirley Common, a spacious tract recently inclosed; the soil in the upper portions is generally gravel and light mould, and in the lower gravel, alternated with clay and sand. The surface is boldly varied, extending chiefly over two hills on the Southampton and Salisbury road; the higher grounds command fine views of the Isle of Wight, the Southampton water, and the New Forest; the air is remarkably salubrious. A vineyard has been planted by Mr. Clement Hoare, on Shirley warren, where that gentleman hopes to bring vines of every kind to the greatest perfection. Part of the common has been appropriated for building, and several handsome houses have been already erected; there are a brewery, and a manufactory of agricultural implements in the village. The church was erected and endowed in 1836, by the Rev. W. Orger, at an expense of £3800; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 1080 sittings, of which 432 are free. A neat parsonage-house has been erected in a beautiful situation. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and schools connected with the Church are supported by subscription. Robert Pollok, author of the Course of Time, died here in September, 1827.

SHIRLEY, a tything, in the parish of SOPLEY, union and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 149 inhabitants.

SHIRLEY-STREET, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of SOLIHULL, Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (S.) from Birmingham; containing 1009 inhabitants. The church, dedicated to St. James, was erected in 1832, at a cost of £1500, raised by subscription; it is a neat structure with a campanile turret, and contains 506 sittings, of which 306 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector of Solihull; net income, £120, of which £45 are derived from the mother church, and £72 granted by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. Attached to the church is a good parsonage-house; and there is also a national school for boys and girls, supported from the proceeds of the parochial charity estates.

SHITLINGTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of AMPHILL, partly in the hundred of CLIFTON, and partly in that of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Silsoe; containing, with the hamlets of Holwell and Lower Stondon, 1411 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Lower Gravenhurst united, valued in the king's books at £18; net income, £128; patrons and improPRIATORS, the President and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802. The church is a large and handsome edifice, of which the tower was rebuilt by the parishioners in 1750.

SHITLINGTON, a township, in the parish of THORNHILL, union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of ABBRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Wakefield; containing 2164 inhabitants. The township is situated on the road from Wakefield to Huddersfield, in the fertile and picturesque valley of the Calder, and comprises about 3280 acres, of which the soil is rich, and the substratum abounds with excellent coal, extensively worked. Coke is made in abundance, for the supply of the railways; and there are some quarries of good building-stone, the produce of which, and of the collieries, is sent to the East riding and to London, by the Calder and Hebble navigation. The woollen manufacture is carried on at Middle, Over, and Nether Shitlington. There are places of worship for Wesleyans at Middle and Nether Shitlington.

SHITLINGTON, HIGH, a township, in the parish of WARK, union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3 miles (W.) from Wark; containing 106 inhabitants. This place and Low Shitlington form the northern division of the parish.

SHITLINGTON, LOW, a township, in the parish of WARK, union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Wark; containing 72 inhabitants.

SHITTERTON, a tything, in the parish and hundred of BEER-REGIS, union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, Wareham division of DORSET; containing 225 inhabitants.

SHOBDON (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, in the union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (E. S. E.) from Presteign; containing 491 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road between Ludlow and Kington, and comprises 3491 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 11.; net income, £764; patron, Lord Bateman. The church, which is the burial-place of the Bateman family, was partially rebuilt in 1757, by John, Viscount Bateman. A school is supported by Lady Bateman; and the rent of several acres of land, and the proceeds of some minor benefactions, are distributed among the poor. Near the church is a mount called Castle Hill, encompassed with a moat, supposed to be the remains of a Roman or Danish fortification.

SHOBROOKE, a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (E. N. E.) from Crediton; containing 787 inhabitants. Some of the females are employed in hand-loom weaving at their own homes. The living is a rectory, annexed to the bishopric of Exeter, and valued in the king's books at £36. The church is an ancient structure, with a handsome tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a parochial school is supported.

SHOBY, an extra-parochial place, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 35 inhabitants.

SHOCKLACH (St. EDITH), a parish, in the union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 427 inhabitants, of whom 178 are in the township of Church-Shocklach, 4½ miles (N. W. by W.), and 180 in that of Oviatt-Shocklach, 3½ (W. N. W.) from Malpas. The parish comprises 2870 acres, of which 34 are common or waste; and is bounded on the west by the river Dee, which is crossed by a bridge at Castletown, where is the moated side of Shocklach Castle. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £107; patron, Sir R. Puleston, Bart. The church is a small ancient building, with an enriched Norman door.

SHODDESSEN, LOWER and UPPER, hamlets in the parish of KIMPTON, union and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 59 and 45 inhabitants, respectively.

SHOEBURY, NORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 3¼ miles (E. N. E.) from Southend; containing 202 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the parish of South Shoebury, and the two villages are nearly contiguous. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown: the inappropriate tithes, belonging to Mrs. James, have been commuted for £347, and the vicarial for £163; the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church, a small ancient edifice, with a tower and spire, contains a handsome monument to John Ibbotson, at one time secretary to the admiralty.

SHOEBURY, SOUTH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (E.) from Southend; containing 164 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Thames, near its influx into the sea, and nearly opposite to the Nore; at its southern extremity is a small promontory called Shoebury Ness, on which is a signal station. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the gift of R. Bristow, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £410, and the glebe comprises 7 acres. The church is a small edifice, with a tower of flint surmounted by a spire.

SHOLING, a tything, in the parish of HOUND, union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MAINSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 60 inhabitants.

SHOPLAND (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (S. E.) from Rochford; containing 43 inhabitants. It comprises 1039a. 3r. 9p., of which 760 acres are arable, and 127 pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the gift of the family of Quarington: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £240. 10., and the vicarial for £85; the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church is a small edifice, consisting only of a nave and chancel.

SHOREDITCH (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX; adjoining the north-eastern portion of the metropolis, and, with Haggerstone and Hoxton (which see), containing 83,432 inhabitants. This place, in ancient records called Sordig, Soresdich, and Shordych, appears to have been so designated from the great common sewer, or ditch, which passed through it, and to have given name to the family of Sir John de Sordig, lord of the manor, and one of the ambassadors of Edward III. to Philip of France, more than a century prior to the time of Jane Shore, from whom, according to a legendary tradition, the name is supposed to have been derived. The Roman military way leading from London-wall to the ford at Hackney intersected the churchyard; and there are still some vestiges of the old artillery-ground, anciently a Roman Campus Martis, which was subsequently celebrated for archery and other military exercises practised there by the citizens of London, but is now covered with houses. The parish is very extensive, consisting of numerous streets adjoining the metropolis, and of several ranges of building on the roads to Kingsland, Hackney, and Bethnal-Green; N.

it is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are some remains of ancient houses, but by far the greater number are modern. The only branches of manufacture carried on are such as are connected with the silk factories of the neighbouring parish of Spitalfields; there are several breweries, and some foundries for church bells. The parish is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, for the recovery of debts under 40s.; and is also under the new police act.

The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17; net income, £656; patron and appropriator, the Archdeacon of London. The church, rebuilt in 1740, is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style, with a tower, from which rises an open turret surrounded with Corinthian pillars, supporting an elliptical dome surmounted by a small but well-proportioned spire; the western entrance is through a stately portico of four columns of the Doric order, above which is an enriched entablature and cornice, crowned by a triangular pediment. The interior is well arranged; the east window is embellished with stained glass, and there are numerous ancient memorials, among which may be noticed, an altar-tomb with recumbent effigies of Sir John Elrington and his lady, a monument of Sir Thomas Leigh, in a kneeling posture, and one to four ladies of the Rutland family, whose figures are represented kneeling at an altar, two on each side, in a recess. A neat district church in the Curtain-road, containing 1200 sittings, was consecrated, and dedicated to St. James, on the 4th of July, 1839; and churches have been erected in that part of the parish called Hoxton. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan and other Methodists. A charity school for boys was established in 1705, and a school-house erected in 1722; a similar institution for girls was founded in 1709, and the house was built in 1723: the former has an annual income of £100, and the latter one of £160, arising from rents and personal estates; and they are further supported by subscription. There are also national schools. On the north side of Old-street road are the Weavers' almshouses, containing rooms for twelve widows of freemen belonging to that company. Adjoining these are Walters' almshouses for eight widows of freemen of the Drapers' Company, who place in them two widows of freemen; the remaining six being appointed by the parish. Next to these are eight rooms built by Mr. Porter, and given to the parish for aged widows. On the south side of Old-street road are houses founded by Judge Fuller, in 1591, and endowed by him with £50 per annum for twelve widows. In Kingsland-road are the Drapers' almshouses, containing twelve rooms, of which six are occupied by freemen of that company or their widows, and six by aged widows chosen by the parish. Further on are the Ironmongers' almshouses, founded in 1703, by Sir Robert Geffery, for freemen of that company or their widows; the buildings form three sides of a quadrangle, of which the area is laid down in turf, and comprise fourteen houses of four rooms each, with a neat chapel in the centre of the principal range; the chaplain resides in one of the houses, and another is occupied by the matron. Beyond these, on the same road, are the almshouses of the company of Framework-Knitters, consisting of twelve tenements for freemen of that company or their widows. In Gloucesterter-street are houses founded by Mrs. Fuller, for sixteen aged widows. There are also some houses established by Egbert Guede, of Overyssele, for four men belonging to the Dutch church in Austin-friars. The Refuge for the Destitute, a spacious establishment in the parish, consists of two separate buildings, one for males, situated in Hoxton Old Town, and the other for females in the Hackney-road.

SHOREHAM (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 4½ miles (N.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1021 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 5000 acres; the soil is chiefly chalk, interspersed with small portions of clay; the surface on the east and west sides is hilly, and between them is a pleasing valley, through which the river Darent flows in its course to the Thames at Dartford. A very elegant Palladian villa was commenced about the beginning of the last century, but being left unfinished, became infected with the dry-rot, which induced the present Lord Ashburton to take it down and replace it by a mansion in the Elizabethan style. The living, a discharged vicarage, is one of the three which constitute the deanery of the Arches, and is valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 8.; net income, £371; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The rectory of Shoreham, with the curacy of Otford, is valued in the king's books at £34. 9. 9½., and is an appropriation belonging to the Dean and Chapter, who allow a certain stipend to the curate. The church is an ancient structure, containing several elegant monuments. Castle farm-house was built with the remains, and upon the site, of Shoreham Castle. There are three almshouses for aged widows.

SHOREHAM, NEW (St. Mary), a borough, market-town, sea-port, and parish, in the union of STENING, hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 23 miles (E.) from Chichester, and 56 (S. by W.) from London; containing 1998 inhabitants. This place is indebted for its origin to the decay of Old Shoreham, not far distant, which, though formerly a place of importance, is now an inconsiderable village. In ancient history it is chiefly remarkable for having been built on the spot where Ælla, the Saxon, landed with supplies from Germany, in aid of his countrymen, Hengist and Horsa. The town is situated on the road between Brighton and Worthing, and about one mile from the English Channel, on the river Adur, across which is a suspension-bridge, constructed at the western entrance into the town, at the expense of the Duke of Norfolk, and by which the distance between Shoreham and Worthing has been reduced two miles. About 6 acres of land have been laid out by Mr. Balley as a public promenade, which is much frequented by visitors from Brighton and Worthing; a Swiss cottage has been erected, containing an assembly and concert room, and theatre, and in the grounds is a sheet of water, on which is a small steamer. Shoreham is noted for ship-building, in which above 100 men are generally employed, and several vessels of more than 500 tons, remarkable for swiftness of sailing, have been launched here. From its situation about half-way between Brighton and Worthing, the trade of the port has of late rapidly increased, and its revenue, within the last 20 years, has been quintupled. The harbour, which is very commodious, in spring tides has about nineteen feet of water, and in common ones about fourteen, and not more than three feet at ebb; it was constructed in 1816, by subscription on shares, and has proved a very profitable undertaking. The river runs by the side of the town, parallel to the sea, with which it communicates about half a mile eastward, and is frequented by ships of considerable burthen. The imports consist principally of timber, deals, merchandise from France, wine, spirits, coal, cheese and butter from Holland, &c.; and much oak-timber is exported. Shoreham has lately been approved as a warehousing port for West India, Mediterranean, and other produce, for the reception of which large warehouses have been built. The custom-house, erected in 1830, under the direction of Mr. Sydney Smirke, is an elegant building in the Grecian style, situated in the centre of the town. A branch of the London and Brighton railway, having its terminal station at this place, was completed at an expense of £150,000, and opened to the public in May, 1840; and it is in contemplation to continue the line to Worthing. Cement manufactories have been established. A market for corn is held every fortnight, and a fair on July 25th.

Shoreham is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a high constable appointed by the lord of the manor. An act for the more speedy recovery of debts was passed in 1840. It has sent two members to parliament since the first of Edward I.; the right of election is in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, and the freeholders of the rape of Bramber, and the high constable is returning officer. At the election in 1791, a majority of the voters having formed themselves into a society called the Christian Club, the real object of which was to sell their votes to the best bidder, an act of parliament was passed, disfranchising every member of the association, and extending the votes to the whole rape of Bramber. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Old Shoreham, and valued in the king's books at £6. 1. 8.; net income, £127. The church is an extremely interesting specimen of Norman architecture, with a tower rising from the intersection of the transepts and nave, and contains numerous ancient monuments, among which are some to the Hooper family; it was new pewed in 1829, when 589 additional sittings were obtained, of which 465 are free. The Independents and Wesleyans have each a place of worship; and there were anciently a priory for Carmelites, or White friars, founded by Sir John Mowbray, Knt., and an hospital dedicated to St. James.

SHOREHAM, OLD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. W. by N.) from New Shoreham; containing 224 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Adur, over which is an old bridge of wood. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of New Shoreham annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 6.; net income, £58; patrons and impropriators, the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church is a very ancient cruciform structure, chiefly in the Norman style, with a central tower supported on massive Norman arches, having richly-ornamented mouldings; the northern transept is in ruins. Here was an hospital dedicated to St. James, which was valued, in the reign of Elizabeth, at £1. 6. 8. per annum.

SHORESWOOD, a township, in the parish of NORHAM, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, county of DURHAM, though locally to the northward of, and for electoral purposes annexed to, Northumberland, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Berwick; containing 315 inhabitants, chiefly employed in the adjacent coal-mines. The township, which has a straggling village situated on the road between West Allerton and Norham, belongs to the Dean and Chapter of Durham, whose tithes here have been commuted for £162. 2.

SHORNCOTT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S.) from Cirencester; containing 33 inhabitants. It comprises 485 acres, of which 52 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £92, and the glebe comprises 38 acres.

SHORNE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), with MERSTON, a parish, in the union of NORTH-AYLESFORD, hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Gravesend; containing 878 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3051 acres, of which 500 are woodland, and the remainder arable, meadow, and pasture, with 31 common or waste. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 8.; net income, £358; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church contains a fine monument to the memory of Sir Henry de Cobham. A national school is supported principally by the dividends arising from £1000 three per cent. consols., the bequest of the Rev. R. G. Ayerst in 1812.

SHORTFLATT, a township, in the parish of BOLAM, union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $10\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Morpeth; containing 33 inhabitants. The township comprises about 512 acres, the property of W. D. Hedley Dent, Esq., Sir Charles M. L. Monck, Bart., and Joseph Hepple, Esq. The mansion-house of Shortflatt, the seat of Mr. Dent, is situated on flat ground, on the south side of a reedy brook called Howburn; it is in the style of Queen Elizabeth's time, is covered with grey freestone slate, and built against an old tower of strong masonry, which is mentioned in a list of border fortresses in the beginning of the 15th century, and was then the residence of the Raymes, and afterwards possessed by the Fenwick family. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £11. 5., and the vicarial for £10. 19. 6.

SHORTHAMPTON, a chapelry, in the parish of CHARLBURY, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 287 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Charlbury: the chapel is dedicated to All Saints.

SHORWELL (St. PETER), a parish, in the liberty of WEST MEDINA, Isle of Wight division of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Newport; containing 714 inhabitants. This place was anciently an appendage of the priory of Carisbrooke, from which it was separated in the reign of Edward III., and made a distinct parish; the land, though partly consisting of down, is rich, and the scenery truly picturesque. The village is pleasant, and near it is the handsome mansion of Northcourt, erected in the reign of James I., and beautifully situated in a well-wooded demesne, in which is a spring of pure water, whence the parish takes its name. The living comprises a sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. 2½., and in the patronage of Lady Mildmay; and a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Mottiston, and valued at £17. 16. 0½. The church, erected in 1526, is a neat structure, and contains some monuments to the Leigh family and others. Here is a national school.

SHOSTON, or SHORESTON, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Belford; containing 82 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile north-west from Sunderland, which is on the sea-coast, and the estate is the property of Lord Crewe's trustees. Shoston House is an old venerable building of three stories, having, at a distance, a very imposing appearance: New Shoston is a handsome house of modern erection.

SHOTESHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S.) from Norwich; containing 557 inhabitants. There were originally four distinct parishes of this name, but the churches of St. Martin and St. Botolph being in ruins, those places have been consolidated with the parishes of All Saints' and St. Mary; and from the difficulty of ascertaining the exact boundaries, the whole has been measured as one district, comprising 3405 acres, of which 2196 are arable, 936 pasture, and 273 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the vicarages of St. Mary and St. Botolph, and the rectory of St. Martin consolidated, and is valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron, Robert Fellowes, Esq., who, with the exception of those of St. Martin's, is impropriator of the great tithes. The great tithes of the whole district have been commuted for £432, and the vicarial for £556; the glebe comprises 74½ acres, and a house. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains some ancient monuments and a curiously-sculptured font. A school is supported.

SHOTESHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (S.) from Norwich; containing, with St. Martin, 408 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the river Taas, and abounds with pleasing scenery. Shotesham Park, the seat of Robert Fellowes, Esq., is a handsome modern mansion, erected by the late Mr. Fellowes, near the site of the ancient hall, which was surrounded with a moat. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with the vicarages of All Saints and St. Botolph, and the rectory of St. Martin, and valued in the king's books at £5. The church is chiefly in the early English style, with a square embattled tower; in the chancel are the effigies, in brass, of Edward White and his lady, in good preservation.

SHOTFORD, a hamlet, and formerly a chapelry, in the parish of MENDHAM, hundred of EARSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (S. E.) from Harleston. The chapel has been converted into a malt-house.

SHOT-HAUGH, with EAST and WEST THRISTON, in the parish of FELTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of MORPETH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing 307 inhabitants, of whom 13 are in Shot-Haugh, 1½ mile (W.) of Felton, on the south side of the Coquet.

SHOTLEY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing, with the chapelry of Blanchland, 1245 inhabitants, of whom 713 are in the township of Shotley Low Quarter, 12 miles (S. E.) from Hexham, and 14 (S. W. by W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Derwent, dividing it from the county of Durham, and is intersected from north to south by the Corbridge and West Auckland road, and from east to west by the road between Newcastle and Stanhope; the surface is undulated, its altitude varying from 300 to 800 feet above the level of the sea, and the scenery is interspersed with fine plantations. Shotley Low Quarter comprises nearly 7000 acres, of which about 1000 are woodland, and the remainder arable and pasture; the geological formation consists of the lower part of the coal, and the upper part of the lead, measures, and the soil is, consequently, chiefly of a sandy clay, to which may be attributed, in a great degree, the luxuriance of the oak-tree here. A coal-mine is in operation; and by the enterprise of Messrs. Teasdale and Co., a quantity of lead and silver has been annually produced at Silvertongue for some years past. The parish also contains iron, which, however, is not now wrought, though, from the numerous heaps of the refuse of smelting in various places, the remains of furnaces near Allensford, the ruins of the Hammer mill upon Shotley burn, and the forge near the Derwent, it would appear that iron was once wrought to some extent.

Shotley Hall, said to have been built by Dr. Andrews, physician to the first royal Duke of Cumberland, and subsequently occupied by, among other residents, Thomas Walker, Esq., who much improved the estate, is a substantial and elegant mansion situated near the confluence of the Shotley burn and the Derwent; it is approached by a large avenue of trees, and gardens and pleasure-grounds have been formed by the present owner, Thomas Wilson, Esq., so distinguished for his advancement of agriculture and for ornamental planting. The beautiful park now extends into the adjoining wood. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Bishop Crewe's Trustees, with a net income of £139. The church is on an eminence, about a mile and a half north-west from the village of Shotley-Field; in the cemetery are, an elegant mausoleum of the Hopper family, and three head-stones, early specimens of the workmanship of Lough, who was born at Greenhead, in the parish. An additional church, dedicated to St. John, a neat edifice with a campanile tower, was erected in 1835; and the trustees of Bishop Crewe give the minister £60 for performing the duty. There is a place of worship at Shotley-Field, for Baptists; and near the centre of the parish is a school, built by subscription, and aided by £10 per annum from Lord Crewe's trustees, and a bequest made by Ann Young, in 1796.

SHOTLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Ipswich; containing 464 inhabitants. The parish is at the confluence of the navigable rivers Orwell and Stour, opposite to the town of Harwich, and comprises 2051*a.* 3*r.* 17*p.*, chiefly arable, with some pastures near the Orwell; the soil is various, and the surface undulated. Communication with Harwich is maintained by a ferry. The village is of remote antiquity, and was once the seat of the Filney family, of whom Frederick was knighted by Richard Cœur de Lion at the siege of Acre. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of the Marquess of Bristol: the tithes have been commuted for £570, and the glebe comprises 54 acres. The church is remarkable for its elegance, which it owes to a former incumbent, the Hon. Hervey Aston, D.D., who completely pewed and beautified it in 1745.

SHOTLEY-BRIDGE, a small town, in the township of BENFIELDSE, chapelry of MEDOMSLEY, parish of LANCHESTER, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 14 miles (S. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. This place is on the road from Durham, by Lanchester, to Hexham, and situated in the pleasant and romantic vale of the Derwent, over which is a stone bridge here of one arch, uniting the county with Northumberland. It is surrounded by ranges of hills between 700 and 900 feet in height, and the views in the neighbourhood, especially that from the bridge, are very beautiful; the road to Newcastle extends a distance of 12 miles along the banks of the river, and likewise embraces many charming prospects. The town was formerly a small retired hamlet, celebrated only for a manufactory of swords, the art of working steel having been brought from Germany by a colony of sword-cutlers, whose descendants may yet be traced, and continue to make a few knife-blades and other articles. It has rapidly increased in size within these few years, and has now a convenient hotel, several neat villas, and a number of good houses and shops, having grown into some repute from the salubrity of the air, and the discovery of saline and chalybeate springs, the medicinal properties of which are highly valuable. The spring anciently called "Hally Well," now Shotley Spa, was, even at a distant period, noted for its efficacy in the cure of scrofulous complaints; and the prevailing tradition respecting it lately induced Jonathan Richardson, Esq., the proprietor, to commence a successful search upon the spot where it was supposed to exist. Appropriate buildings, a well-room, baths, &c., have been erected in the rustic style, with beautiful effect; and that gentleman, who has a handsome mansion on an eminence overlooking the vale, has also much improved the town, and opened carriage-drives and promenades upon his estate. There are two paper-mills in operation: a market for corn is held weekly, and a fair for cattle every half year. A church is about to be erected under the auspices of the Bishop of Durham, who has subscribed £50 towards the fund; Charles Wm. Bigge and Charles J. Bigge, Esqrs., have contributed each £100, and Thomas Cargill, Esq., £50.

SHOTOVER, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Oxford; containing 177 inhabitants.

SHOTTESBROOK (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union of COOKHAM, hundred of BEYNHURST, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W.) from Maidenhead; containing 137 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the Great Western railway, and bounded on the south by a small stream which flows westward into the river Loddon; it comprises 1181*a.* 2*r.* 27*p.*, chiefly arable, with about 120 acres of meadow, and 110 woodland; the soil is fertile, in some parts a rich fine mould resting on a substratum of chalk, and in others a clay. The living is a vicarage, not in charge, endowed with a portion of the rectorial tithes, with the vicarage of White-Waltham united in 1744; net income, £513; patron, and impropiator of the remaining portion of the rectorial tithes of Shottesbrook, A. Vansittart, Esq. The church, though small, is an elegant cruciform structure, principally in the decorated style, with a tower and spire rising from the intersection; it was erected in 1337, and in the chancel lie the remains of the learned Henry Dodwell, first Camden professor of history at Oxford. A chantry or college for a warden, five priests, and two clerks, was founded here in 1337, by Sir William Trussell, Knt., the revenue of which at the Dissolution was estimated at £42. 2. 8.

SHOTTISHAM (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Woodbridge; containing 283 inhabitants. It comprises about 1000 acres, of which 40 are marsh; the soil of the remainder is chiefly light and sandy; the surface is generally flat, and a creek from the river Deben flows up into the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 16. 0*½*., and in the patronage of Mrs. Elizabeth Darby and Miss Mary Kett: the tithes have been commuted for £226, and the glebe comprises 24 acres. Crag or shell pits, supposed to be diluvial remains, abound here.

SHOTTLE, with POSTERN, a township, in the parish of DUFFIELD, union of BELPER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Belper; containing 503 inhabitants.

SHOTTON, with LANGLEY-DALE, a township, in the parish of STAINDROP, union of TRESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 185 inhabitants. This was one of the places given by Canute to the church of Durham, and, with Woodland and Langley, was parcel of the estate of the earls of Westmorland; it is now the property of the Duke of Cleveland, and that part of the township called Shotton, is in Raby Park, his grace's seat.

SHOTTON, a township, in the parish and union of EASINGTON, S. division of EASINGTON ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 9 miles (E. by S.) from Durham; containing 603 inhabitants. This place, anciently Ceatton and Scotton, has long been known, and occurs in Boldon book under the latter designation. A considerable portion of the land within the vill is held by copy of court-roll under the manor of Easington. There was a division of common in 1673. The family of Thompson have held property here, chiefly by copy of court-roll, at least since the reign of Elizabeth; and from them the estate came by marriage, in the middle of the last century, to the Brandlings. About a mile and a half north-west of Shotton is the populous colliery village of Shotton-Grange; the pit is wrought by the Haswell Coal Company. A free school was founded in 1768, in pursuance of the will of Edward Walton, and has an income of about £30.

SHOTTON, with FOXTON, a township, in the parish and union of SEDGEFIELD, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Stockton; containing 44 inhabitants. The Setons and Carrowes held property here, attached to their manor of "Foxden," in the 14th and 15th centuries; a moiety of the general estates of the Setons descended to the Sayer family; and among others who have had possessions in the place, occur the families of Hebborne and Salvin. The township comprises about 1787 acres of rather poor land, and is intersected by the Clarence railway: the hamlet of Shotton lies to the east of Foxton.

SHOTTON, with PLESSEY, a township, in the parish of STANNINGTON, union, and W. division, of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth; containing 387 inhabitants. The historical notices respecting the property are of considerable interest. The canons of Brinkburne, the monks of Newminster, and the nuns of Newcastle, all had possessions here; and among other owners of land occur the families of Shotton, Plessey, Fitz-Roger, and Paris; one of whom, Sir John de Plessey, in 1269, or 1270, founded a chapel, which had a considerable endowment, but of which nothing is now known, the last mention of it occurring in 1491. The place stands on a bold sandstone eminence overlooking the winding course of the Blyth, and having in sight Simonside, the Cheviot hills, and a broad expanse of the German Ocean.

SHOTTSWELL (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Banbury; containing 366 inhabitants. The parish is surrounded on all sides, except the north, by the county of Oxford; it consists of 1235 acres; and is intersected by the road between Warwick and Banbury. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Lady G. North; net income, £157. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1793. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school supported by Lady G. North.

SHOTWICK (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing, with the townships of Capenhurst, Great and Little Saughall, and Woodbank, 868 inhabitants, of whom 112 are in Shotwick township, 6 miles (N. W.) from Chester. The parish comprises about 4280 acres, of which one-third is arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the soil is a stiff clay, and the surface generally level. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £88; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and

Chapter of Chester. The church has a curious Norman door, and some portions in the later English style.

SHOTWICK-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Chester; containing 16 inhabitants. This was the site of a castle formerly belonging to the crown, where Henry II. is said to have lodged on his journey to and from Ireland, and which Edward I. occupied in 1278; it was standing in Leland's time, and there were some remains in 1622.

SHOULDEN (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EASTRY, hundred of CORNILO, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W.) from Deal; containing 465 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the road from Sandwich to Deal, is bounded by the sea, and comprises by measurement 1891 acres, whereof 321 are common or waste, 10 woodland, and the rest arable, pasture, and meadow. Sandon Castle, built by Henry VIII. for the defence of the coast, is in the parish. The inhabitants are within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Deal. The living is a vicarage, annexed to Northbourne. A gallery has been lately erected in the church. Fragments of Roman urns, with several coins, chiefly of the Emperor Gallienus, were found in 1832, on removing some land near Sandon Castle.

SHOULDHAM (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Downham-Market; containing 683 inhabitants. This parish comprises about 3500 acres, of which 600 are occupied by a rabbit-warren, and 100 form a fen belonging to the poor; the soil varies, but the greater portion is fertile, intermixed with light heath. The village is pleasantly situated, and consists of many neat houses, built round a green watered by a small rivulet; it appears from ancient documents to have had a market; and two large fairs for horses, sheep, and cattle, are still held on the 19th of September, and 11th of October. The living is a perpetual curacy, with those of St. Margaret and Shouldham-Thorpe united; net income, £121; patron and impropiator, Sir Thomas Hare, Bart. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and a small chapel on the south side; the chancel was rebuilt in 1839. The church of St. Margaret was standing in 1512, but after the dissolution of monasteries was suffered to go into decay. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Gilbertine priory in honour of the Holy Cross and the Blessed Virgin, was founded in the time of Richard I., by Jeffrey Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, for canons and nuns, under the government of a prior, and at the Dissolution it possessed a revenue of £171. 6. 8. When removing some of the ruins, in 1831, a painted window, two stone coffins, and a vessel containing a human head, were found. On Mr. Catton's estate is a chalybeate spring called the Silver Well, and near it another spring, both possessing properties similar to those of Tonbridge-Wells.

SHOULDHAM-THORPE (THE VIRGIN MARY), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Downham-Market; containing 314 inhabitants. The parish, anciently called Garbois-Thorpe, comprises about 1350 acres, of which 900 are arable, 350 pasture and meadow, 40 woodland, and 60 common; the soil in some parts is light and heathy, but in general well adapted for grain; the surface is elevated, though not hilly. The living is a perpetual curacy, united to that of Shouldham. The church, in the early and decorated English styles, contains a handsome font, and the entrance on the north is through a richly-decorated Norman doorway: the tower fell down in 1724, and has not been rebuilt. At the inclosure in 1794, an allotment of 60 acres was made to the poor for fuel. About a mile north of the village, on the road from Lynn to Stoke-Ferry, is the small manor of Fodderston, or Foston-Gap, anciently a separate parish, and which formerly had a church.

SHOULTON, a hamlet, in the chapelry of HALLOW, parish of GRIMLEY, union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER; containing 50 inhabitants.

SHOWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of SWERFORD, union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Chipping-Norton; comprising about 773 acres of land.

SHRAWARDINE, a township, in the parish of ABBERBURY, hundred of FORD, union of ATCHAM, S. division of SALOP, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Shrewsbury.

SHRAWARDINE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of PIMHILL, N. division of SALOP, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Shrewsbury; containing 196 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 12. 6.; net income, £380; patron, the Earl of Powis. Shrawardine Castle was built by Alan, a follower of the Conqueror, and ancestor of the celebrated Fitz-Alans, who held it under the crown for many ages to check the invasions of the Welsh. After having been the scene of many remarkable events, it was, in the reign of Elizabeth, purchased by Lord Chancellor Bromley: the site and remains, together with other estates in the parish, are now the property of the Earl of Powis.

SHRAWLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of DODDING-TREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Stourport; containing 569 inhabitants. It comprises 1830*a.* 3*r.* 10*p.*, of which the soil is gravelly, alternated with sand; the surface is hilly, and thickly interspersed with wood, and the river Severn flows through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 1., and in the patronage of the Vernon family: the tithes have been commuted for £355, and the glebe comprises 63 acres. The church is an ancient structure, situated on an eminence. A school is partly supported by the rector. Thomas Vernon, in 1711, bequeathed £1000 for providing clothing and fuel for the poor of Hanbury and Shrawley; and the portion belonging to this parish was invested in 1768 or 1770, in the purchase of an estate near Worcester, consisting of about eighty acres, now let for £100 per annum.

SHREWLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of HATTON, union of WARWICK, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. W. by W.) from Warwick; containing 322 inhabitants, and comprising 1221 acres. It is situated near the road from Warwick to Solihull.

SHREWSBURY, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the liberties of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, of which it is the chief town, 154 miles (N. W.) from London; containing 18,285 inhabitants. This ancient borough is said to have arisen from the ruins of Uriconium, now Wroxeter, a celebrated Roman station on the line of the Watling-street, which, passing through the present town in a direction from east to west, divides it into two nearly equal parts. On account of its situation on two hills, richly covered with shrubs and trees, it obtained from the Britons the appellations of Pengwerne and Smwithic, or Y Mwythig, and was by the Saxons called Scrobbes-byrig, from which, written in Domesday book Sciropesberie, its present name is derived: how it obtained the appellation of Salopesberie, as mentioned in some records, and from which it has, with the county, been denominated Salop, has not been satisfactorily ascertained. During the heptarchy, it was the capital of the district called Powysland, which comprised a portion of the Saxon and British frontier territories; and the residence of the princes of Powys, whom, in 778, Offa, King of Mercia, expelled from their possessions, which he added to his own kingdom, and, to secure his conquest, raised that stupendous barrier still called Offa's Dyke. In the reign of Alfred the Great, this place was numbered among the principal cities of Britain; it had a mint, which it retained till the reign of Henry III., and there are still extant some of the coins struck in the reigns of Athelstan, Edgar, Ethelred, Canute, Edward the Confessor, and Harold II., besides several between the years 1066 and 1272. When Canute was pursuing his conquests through the northern parts of the country, the inhabitants revolted in his favour and surrendered the town, which, in 1016, Edmund Ironside, a short time previously to the partition of the kingdom, recovered from the Danes, inflicting signal vengeance on the townsmen for their treachery. At the time of the Conquest, Shrewsbury, with nearly the whole of the shire, was bestowed by William on his kinsman, Roger de Montgomery, whom he created Earl of Shrewsbury, Chichester, and Arundel, and who built here a formidable castle for his baronial residence. In 1069, the town was besieged by Edric Sylvaticus, and Owain Gwynedd, Prince of Wales, but was relieved by King William, who advanced from York, and defeated the assailants with great slaughter. In 1102, Robert de Belesme, son of Earl Roger, having espoused the cause of Robert, Duke of Normandy, and commenced measures for raising him to the throne of England, in opposition to his brother Henry I., that monarch marched against the town with an army of 60,000 men; and the earl, although he had previously fortified it with a wall on each side of the castle, across the isthmus formed by the river Severn, submitted on the approach of the king, acknowledged his treasonable conduct, and was banished to Normandy; his estates were thus forfeited, and the castle became a royal fortress.

The importance of Shrewsbury as a frontier town has rendered it, the scene of many and various transactions of historical interest. In the year 1116, the nobles of the realm are said to have assembled here to do homage, and take the oaths of allegiance, to William, son of the Empress Matilda; but some historians state that this meeting took place at Salisbury. Stephen, in 1138, laid siege to the castle, while Fitz-Alan, the governor, was absent in forwarding the claims of the empress; and having taken it by storm, hanged several of the garrison. The frequent inroads of the Welsh induced John to assemble a council here, in order to concert measures for suppressing them; and, in 1215, Llewelyn, who had married Joan, natural daughter of that monarch, appeared before Shrewsbury with a numerous army, and seized the town and castle. Henry III. soon dispossessed him of his capture, and drove him back to his own territory; but in the war with the barons, Richard, Earl of Pembroke, retired into Wales, and, being assisted by that prince, laid waste the intermediate district, and plundered and burnt the town after having put many of the inhabitants to the sword. Simon de Montfort, whilst prosecuting the war against Henry III., took the town, which he held only for a short time. In 1241, and 1267, the same monarch assembled an army here for the invasion of Wales, but was diverted from his purpose by the submission of Llewelyn, with whom he subsequently concluded a treaty of peace. About this time the king recommended the inhabitants to complete the fortifications of the place, of which only one side was defended, but, notwithstanding the aid of royal bounty, the work was not accomplished in less than thirty years. The continued incursions of the Welsh upon the English frontier induced Edward I., in 1277, to fix his residence in Shrewsbury, to which he removed the courts of king's bench and exchequer, and in 1283, assembled the parliament here; the king and his court were accommodated at Acton-Burnell, the seat of Bishop Burnell, the lord high chancellor; the lords held their sittings in the castle, and the commons, who for the first time had any voice in the national councils, met in a building near the castle. This monarch having sent a force against the Welsh without success, took the field in person, at the head of a numerous army, and an engagement occurred at the foot of Snowdon, in which they were completely routed, Llewelyn slain, and his brother Davydd, who had instigated him to the insurrection, taken prisoner, and, after a short confinement in Rhuddlan Castle, in Flintshire, brought to Shrewsbury, where, having been tried by the parliament, he was condemned and executed as a traitor, with a degree of degradation and severity previously unknown in the country, and which, till a very late period, furnished a precedent for the punishment of treason. Edward II. was received in the town with the greatest pomp in 1322, where, in the same year, he celebrated a grand tournament, which was attended by a numerous assemblage of knights and noblemen. In 1397, Richard II. adjourned the parliament from Westmorland to Shrewsbury, gave a splendid entertainment to the lords and commons, and created several peers, who at this time first assumed their seats in parliament: this, from the number of noblemen and others who attended it, and from the importance of the state affairs transacted at it, was called the Great Parliament; but the measures enacted, though ratified by the pope's bull, were repealed during the following reign, and the king's conduct while in the town was made the subject of one of those charges which afterwards led to his deposition.

In 1403, a sanguinary battle was fought in the immediate vicinity, between the forces of Henry IV. and those of the Earl of Northumberland, who had rebelled against the king, assisted by a considerable body of Scottish troops under the command of Earl Douglas, amounting to 14,000 men. After a severe and protracted conflict, the victory was decided in favour of Henry: 2300 knights and gentlemen, among whom was Hotspur, son of Earl Percy, after performing prodigious exploits of valour, and 6000 common soldiers, were slain on both sides; the dead were interred on the spot, which has since been called Battlefield, where a church was afterwards erected by the king, in memory of his victory. Owain Glyndwr, who had raised an army to co-operate with the insurgents, marched with his advanced guard to Shelton, two miles from Shrewsbury, and on perceiving the battle terminated, retreated into Wales. During the contest between the houses of York and Lancaster, the inhabitants embraced the cause of the former; and on the defeat of Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, at the battle of Wakefield, in which he was slain, his son Edward, Earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., levied in the town and neighbourhood a powerful army, with which he avenged the death of his father at the battle of Mortimer's Cross, where he gained a signal victory. Edward, on his elevation to the throne, selected Shrewsbury as an asylum for his consort during the agitation of the times; and in the convent of the Dominican friars, in which the queen resided, the princes Richard and George were born, the latter of whom died in childhood, and the former, with his elder brother, Prince Edward, was inhumanly murdered in the Tower of London, by their uncle, the Protector, afterwards Richard III. The Earl of Richmond, on landing at Milford Haven, proceeded to this town, where he was proclaimed king, and having strengthened his army with considerable reinforcements raised in the neighbourhood, advanced into Leicestershire, where he gained the battle of Bosworth-Field, which terminated in the death of Richard III., and his own elevation to the throne, under the title of Henry VII. This monarch on his accession visited the town, with his queen and Prince Arthur; and after celebrating the festival of St. George in the church of St. Chad, granted the inhabitants several privileges, in acknowledgment of the alacrity with which they had supported his claims to the crown.

On the breaking out of the parliamentary war, Charles I. came to Shrewsbury, where he was received with every demonstration of loyalty by the inhabitants, and was soon afterwards joined by Prince Rupert, Prince Charles, the Duke of York, and several noblemen and gentlemen: the king kept his court in an ancient building, called the Council-house, and having established a mint for the supply of his exigencies, the inhabitants liberally presented their plate to be melted and coined into money for his use, of which considerable sums were expended in extending and strengthening the fortifications of the town. In 1664, Colonel Mytton made two attempts to obtain possession of the town and castle for the parliament, and was repulsed in both with considerable loss; but having received a reinforcement, he made a third effort, in which he carried the place by storm; and was appointed governor. In 1651, Charles II. summoned it to surrender, but, on the refusal of the governor, marched on to Worcester; and after the disastrous battle there he took refuge in the Royal Oak at Boscobel, on the confines of this county. During that monarch's retirement on the continent, a plan was formed by a party of royalists to besiege the castle; but their scheme was frustrated, and several of them were punished. James II. visited the town in 1687, and, attended by the nobility and gentry of the county, kept his court for several days at the council-house. During this reign the castle was dismantled, and all its ammunition and military stores removed. This castle, originally of such extent and formidable strength that, to make room for its erection, Earl Roger pulled down nearly one-fifth of the town, was a fortress of very great importance till the final subjugation of Wales, after which period it was entrusted to a constable, generally the sheriff, who made it the county prison: its utility as a frontier garrison having ceased, it fell into decay, and was repaired during the civil war as a garrison for the king: after it came into the possession of the parliament, Cromwell erected an additional fort, called Roushill, which is among the most entire of the remaining portions. The remains are situated at the northern entrance into the town, on the summit of a bold eminence overlooking the Severn, by which it is nearly surrounded, and are composed principally of the keep, a spacious modernised structure of red stone, consisting of two round embattled towers connected by a quadrangular building, 100 feet in length; the walls of the inner court; and the great arch of the interior gateway: these include a grassy area, in which, though now private property, the knights of the shire, according to immemorial usage, are girt with their swords, on their election to serve in parliament. On the south side of the court is a lofty mount rising abruptly from the river: the summit is surrounded with a wall, and in one angle of the inclosure was a barbican, which has been converted into a summer-house, called Laura Tower, after the name of Miss Pulteney, for whose use it was so perfected; it commands an extensive, varied, and picturesque view of the surrounding country. The ramparts formerly environing the town, together with the towers by which they were defended, have, with the exception of one of the towers on the south side of the town, been demolished. Adjoining the castle precinct, and formerly within its walls, are the remains of the ancient council-house, where the courts for the marches of Wales were occasionally held, and which afforded a temporary residence to several of the English monarchs.

The town is pleasantly situated on two eminences rising gently from the river Severn, which, by its windings, forms a peninsula: it consists of several streets irregularly built, and, with some exceptions, inconveniently narrow; but various improvements have been made under the provisions of an act obtained in 1821, and others are in progress, for removing numerous obstructions arising from the style of building, and widening the approaches and streets. It is well paved, lighted with gas by a company established in 1820, and supplied with water from a remarkably fine spring called Bradwell, about two miles distant, and also from the river Severn, by a company founded in 1827. Over the river are two bridges of stone, of which one, called the English bridge, is a handsome structure of Grinshill freestone, of seven circular arches, crowned with a balustrade, built in 1774, at an expense of £16,000, defrayed by public subscription, and connecting the suburb of Abbey Foregate with the town; the other, termed the Welsh bridge, is a neat plain structure of five spacious arches, erected in 1795, at a cost exceeding £8000, affording a passage into Wales. Near the Abbey Foregate is the military depôt, a brick edifice, erected in 1806, from a design by Wyatt, at an expense of £10,000; it was discontinued as a depôt several years since, and the armoury removed to Chester Castle, and the building now belongs to Lord Berwick. At the entrance into the town from the London road is a lofty column of the Grecian-Doric style, rising from a base ornamented at the angles with lions couchant, to the height of 132 feet, and supporting on its summit a well-executed statue of the late Lieut.-Gen. Rowland, Lord Hill, in honour of whose achievements in the continental war it was erected in 1814. There is a public subscription library near St. John's Hill, containing more than 5000 volumes in various departments of literature; and attached to it is a newsroom well supplied with periodical publications. A mechanics' institute was formed in 1825; and a museum was established a few years since. The ancient theatre was formerly part of the palace of the princes of Powysland, of which it retained some vestiges, though materially altered by its appropriation to dramatic uses: a new theatre has been lately built, presenting a neat and extensive front occupied by shops. Assemblies are held monthly, during the season, in a suite of rooms well fitted up; and races in September, for three days, on a course adjoining Abbey Foregate. The Severn, in addition to the salmon for which it is celebrated, and with which it formerly abounded to a much greater extent, produces trout, pike, perch, carp, eels, shad, flounders, lampreys, &c. On the south-western side of the town is a beautiful walk called the Quarry, comprising about twenty acres, and extending along the winding margin of the river for 500 yards in length, forming a noble avenue of full-grown lime-trees, from which diverge three other walks leading to the town. In the vicinity also are numerous pleasant rides, through a country abounding with picturesque scenery.

The TRADE, which was formerly of considerable extent and importance, has been materially diminished by the growth of other places; but the town has, notwithstanding, always maintained a good share of internal commerce. Its ancient traffic in Welsh cloths and flannel was once the principal source of its opulence, and at present, though not restricted to the Drapers' Company as before, produces no inconsiderable profit: the greater portion of those made in the counties of Montgomery and Merioneth, and part of Denbighshire, is sent to Shrewsbury. An extensive manufactory for thread, linen-yarn, and canvas, situated near the castle, adjoining the suburb of Castle Foregate, affords employment to a large number of persons; and on the banks of the river, in Coleham, are iron-foundries, in which the immense chains that support the stupendous bridge over the Menai straits, and the iron-work in many similar erections, were cast. The town is also noted for its brawn, and for a particular kind of sweet cakes named after the place. The river affords a convenient transit for goods of every description to Worcester, Gloucester, Bristol, and other towns; and considerable quantities of grain, in which the trade is extensive, and of lighter manufactured articles, are forwarded by a junction canal, opened some years since, the traffic on which is greatly increasing. The Shrewsbury canal, which is the great medium of supplying the town with coal, terminates near the Castle Foregate, where commodious wharfs have been constructed by the company, for the use of persons connected with the coal-works on the line of the canal, which, with the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal, has opened a new species of traffic for the town; it was constructed under an act obtained in 1793. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter for grain: the general market is held in a stone edifice, built in 1819; and that for corn in the area under a spacious building erected in 1595.

The town has received a succession of charters of INCORPORATION, from the time of William the Conqueror to the reign of James II.; the earliest preserved in the archives of the place, is dated November 11th, 1st of Richard I. The corporation now consists of a mayor, ten aldermen, and thirty councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, and the number of magistrates is eight; the borough is divided into five wards, and the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those for parliamentary purposes. The freedom is acquired by birth, or obtained by apprenticeship to a member of one of the Incorporated Companies, of which there were once sixteen, the Drapers' being the principal, but which are now much reduced in number. The borough has exercised the elective franchise from the 23rd of Edward I., and has regularly returned two members to parliament: the right of election was by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, extended to the £10 householders of an enlarged district, comprising an area of 3080 acres; the mayor is returning officer. The recorder presides at quarterly courts of session, on the Monday previous to the county quarter-sessions, for all offences not capital; and the mayor, assisted by some of the other magistrates, holds a session every week, for the determination of petty causes: the recorder, also, has a court of record every Tuesday, for the recovery of debts to any amount. A court of requests is held every third Wednesday, by commissioners appointed under an act passed in the 23rd of George III., for the recovery of debts under 40s.; a court leet occurs in May and October, at the latter of which constables and other officers for the town are appointed; and the assizes and general quarter-sessions for the county are held here. The old town and shire hall, a spacious, handsome, and commodious building of stone, erected in 1785, has recently been taken down, and a new edifice built, from a design by Mr. Smirke. The town and county gaol, and house of correction, an extensive building of brick, situated on the bank of the river Severn, was erected in 1793, at an expense of £30,000; the entrance is through a freestone gateway, over which is a bust of the celebrated Howard.

Shrewsbury comprises the PARISHES of St. Alkmond, containing 1642; St. Chad, 7625; Holy Cross, 1742; St. Julian, 3252; and part of St. Mary, with 6684 inhabitants. The living of St. Alkmond's is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £219. The church was made collegiate by King Edgar, who endowed it for the support of ten canons, one of whom acted as dean; but the society was dissolved on the establishment of Lilleshall abbey, to which its revenue was appropriated. The old edifice, a cruciform structure of great antiquity, was, with the exception of the tower and spire, which are 184 feet in height, taken down, from an apprehension of insecurity, and rebuilt in 1795; the east window is embellished with a painting by Eginton, in stained glass, emblematical of Faith. The living of St. Chad's is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £350. The church, erected in 1792, at an expense of nearly £20,000, in lieu of an edifice which fell down in 1788, while undergoing repair, is a handsome circular building in the Grecian style, with a square rustic tower, above which is an octagonal belfry, surmounted by a dome resting on eight Corinthian pillars. The body of the church forms a rotunda 100 feet in diameter, surrounded by a range of duplicated Ionic pillars between the lofty arched windows, rising from the basement, and supporting a handsome cornice surmounted by a balustrade; the entrance is through a stately portico of four Doric columns, sustaining a triangular pediment. The interior has a rich and pleasing effect; the galleries are upheld by a duplicated range of Ionic pillars, from which rise Corinthian pillars maintaining the roof; the chancel is adorned with a painting of the Resurrection, in stained glass, by Eginton, from a design by West, removed from Lichfield cathedral. The remains of the ancient church, formerly collegiate, and once a royal free chapel, consists only of the south aisle of the chancel, containing portions in the Norman, early English, and decorated styles; it was fitted up for the performance of the funeral service, and is at present appropriated to the use of the charity school.

The living of the parish of the Holy Cross is a vicarage, with the chapel of St. Giles, valued in the king's books at £8; patron and improPRIATOR, Lord Berwick: the great tithes have been commuted for £110, and the vicarial for £355. The church, occupying a low site in the eastern suburb, to which it gives name, and surrounded on the south and west by the river Rea, commonly called Meole brook, is part of the conventual church of a splendid ABBEY founded for Benedictine monks, by Roger de Montgomery, in 1083 (on the site of a religious institution established prior to the Conquest, with the revenue of which it was partly endowed), and dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. It was a mitred abbey, and the abbots exercised episcopal authority in their house, being in some respects exempt from the jurisdiction of the diocesan; at the Dissolution, in 1513, its revenue was estimated at £615. 4. 3. The king intended to make Shrewsbury the seat of a diocese, and to raise the abbey church into a cathedral, Dr. Bourchier, the last abbot of Leicester, having been actually nominated bishop; but pecuniary exigencies compelled him to abandon the design. The abbey was further distinguished by the resort of many pilgrims to the shrine of St. Winifred, whose remains had been removed hither from Gwytherin, in Denbighshire. The walls of this establishment included ten acres, and the buildings, chiefly in the Norman style, were extensive and magnificent; the principal remains are the western tower, the north porch, the nave and aisles of the abbey, now the parochial church, besides some small portions of the conventual buildings. The church retains several features of ancient grandeur, though many alterations have been made, particularly the introduction of a large window of seven lights, in the later English style, of elegant tracery, and emblazoned with armorial bearings in stained glass, over the west doorway, which was originally a handsome circular arch, within which, at a much later period, a painted one has been placed, on each side whereof are niches, one of them containing a statue of St. Peter, and the other a statue of St. Paul. The interior has a solemn effect; the roof is finely vaulted, and supported on circular arches and massive piers, and in other parts the slender clustered column and the pointed arch prevail. The east window is enriched with armorial bearings, including those of Lord Berwick, by whom it was presented; and, in the central compartment, are paintings of St. Peter and St. Paul, in stained glass, by Mr. D. Evans, of Shrewsbury. There are various altartombs and monuments, and within an arch which formerly led to the south aisle of the transept, is an ancient figure in armour, conjectured to be that of its founder, Earl Roger, who died and was buried here. Among the ruins of the conventual buildings, is a fragment thought to be part of the refectory, on which is an exquisitely beautiful octagonal structure of stone, resting partly on a corbel, projecting from the wall, and supposed to have been an oratory, or pulpit, from which one of the monks, according to their custom, read to his brethren while at dinner. It is an unrivalled specimen of the decorated English style, ornamented with lofty and finely-pointed windows, divided only by enriched mullions rising from the corbel, and crowned with trefoiled arches deeply moulded; the spaces between the three northern arches are filled up to the height of four feet with stone panels, in which are enshrined figures, and the exterior is crowned by an obtuse dome almost concealed by the ivy which has overspread the building; the interior is six feet in diameter, and the roof is elaborately groined, and adorned in the centre, where the ribs unite, with an alto-relievo of the Crucifixion. The chapel of St. Giles, which was originally attached to the hospital belonging to the abbey church, stands at the eastern extremity of the Abbey Foregate, and divine service is performed in it; it is a small ancient building, with a diminutive turret, and an elegant eastern window of stained glass, and has been repewed and fitted up, at the expense of the Rev. Richard Scott.

The living of St. Julian's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £159; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Tankerville. The church, with the exception of the tower, which is in the Norman style, was rebuilt of brick in 1750; the interior is neatly arranged, and decorated with some relics of the old structure. In the east wall of the chancel is a small female figure enshrined in rich tabernacle-work, probably representing St. Juliana, the patroness, and in the ceiling is preserved a considerable portion of the ancient fret-work; the east window is embellished with a painting of St. James, in stained glass, brought from Rouen during the French revolution of 1792, above which are some armorial-bearings; and among the monuments is a slab of coarse alabaster, inscribed with Longobardic characters. The living of St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Corporation, conjointly with the Bishop of Lichfield and others; net income, £312: the impropriation belongs to the free grammar school. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, with a western tower surmounted by a lofty spire of beautiful proportion; the lower part of the tower and the south porch are Norman. The interior is well arranged, and, from its frequent enlargement and alteration, comprises specimens of various styles; the east window is embellished with stained glass formerly in the old church of St. Chad, representing the Genealogy of Christ from the root of Jesse, and containing in each of the numerous oval compartments a king, or patriarch, of the ancestry of Joseph, the husband of the Virgin Mary. A chapel of ease to St. Mary's, dedicated to St. Michael, has been built near the Castle Foregate, by subscription, aided by a grant of £500 from the Incorporated Society: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £59; patron, the Incumbent of St. Mary's. A district church in the parish of St. Chad, called St. George's, has been erected in Frankwell: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £150; patron, the Vicar of St. Chad's. A church in the suburb of Coleham, called Trinity Church, was consecrated August 25th, 1837, having been built by subscription, aided by grants from the Diocesan and Incorporated Societies: the patronage is in the Incumbent of St. Julian's. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Welsh Methodists, Sandemanians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics.

The Royal Free Grammar School was founded by Edward VI., in 1553; its endowment, augmented by Queen Elizabeth, produces an annual income of £2740, and it is under the superintendence of the Bishop of Lichfield, as visiter, and thirteen trustees, the mayor of Shrewsbury, who presides at the several meetings, being one. The establishment has maintained for many years a distinguished rank among the public schools of the country, and is conducted by a head master appointed by St. John's College, Cambridge, a second master, an usher, and a writing-master, besides assistants who are paid by the chief master. Belonging to it are four exhibitions of £70 per annum each, and four of £15 per annum each, to St. John's College, Cambridge; four of £60 a year each, to Christ-Church College, Oxford; and two of £25 a year each, and one of £23 per annum, to either of the universities; four scholarships of £63 a year each, and two of £40 each, in Magdalen College, Cambridge; a by-fellowship in the same college, of £126 per annum, and three contingent exhibitions. The premises, in the later English style, occupy two sides of a quadrangle, with a square turret crowned with pinnacles in the angles, and comprise spacious schoolrooms, with residences for the masters contiguous, and a chapel, over which is a fine library, rebuilt in 1815, at an expense of £1860, and containing an extensive and valuable collection of books and manuscripts, to which is annexed a museum of antiquities from Wroxeter, and fossils peculiar to this part of the country. Among the eminent persons who have received the rudiments of their education in this school are, Sir Philip Sidney; Sir Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke; Dr. John Thomas, Bishop of Salisbury; the Rev. Dr. John Taylor, a learned critic and philologist; Dr. Waring, Lucasian professor of mathematics in the university of Cambridge; W. Wycherley and Ambrose Philips, poets; and William Clarke, a learned divine and antiquary. John Allat, formerly chamberlain of the borough, in 1792, bequeathed property amounting to upwards of £13,000, a portion of which was to be applied to clothing, instructing, and apprenticing children, and the remainder to an annual distribution of coats and gowns among aged men and women. Of the dividends, amounting to £393 per annum, about one-third is allotted to the supply of clothing to the adults, and two-thirds to the purposes of the school; and a handsome freestone building was erected for the charity in 1800, at an expense of £2000. A school for instructing, clothing, and apprenticing 18 boys and 12 girls of the parish of St. Julian was erected in 1724, by Thomas Boudler, alderman and draper; the public subscription charity school, near the abbey church, was established in 1778; the royal Lancasterian school was commenced, and a commodious building erected, in 1812; and there are three national schools. St. Chad's almshouses were founded in 1409, by Bennet Tupton, with a small endowment; there were originally thirteen, but for want of funds two have fallen into decay. St. Mary's almshouses, sixteen in number, were founded in 1460 by Mr. Degory Watur, draper; the old houses were taken down in 1823, and a new building, consisting of 16 tenements, each containing two rooms, has been erected opposite St. Mary's church. St. Giles's almshouses, four in number, are inhabited by aged persons nominated by the Earl of Tankerville.

The House of Industry, situated on an eminence adjoining Kingsland, on the south bank of the Severn, was erected in 1765, at an expense of £12,000, by the governors of the Foundling Hospital in London, as a branch establishment. That design, however, was relinquished, and it was afterwards opened as a woollen manufactory for the employment of the children of the poor; it was subsequently rented by government for the confinement of prisoners during the American war, and on the incorporation of the parishes for the maintenance of their poor, in 1784, it was purchased by the guardians and appropriated to its present use. The General infirmary, established in 1745, was the second formed in the kingdom, that of Winchester being the first; the premises, originally of brick, being found too small for the increased population of the town and neighbourhood, were taken down in 1827, and have been handsomely rebuilt of stone, upon a much more extensive scale, at an expense of £18,735, of which £13,044 were raised by subscription. In 1734, James Millington bequeathed property now let for £1227 per annum, for the erection and endowment of an hospital in the suburb of Frankwell: the institution comprises schools for twenty-five boys and twenty-five girls, natives of Frankwell; and provision for twelve resident, and ten out, hospitaliers, to be chosen from decayed housekeepers of Frankwell, or that part of the parish of St. Chad which is contiguous, the latter of whom, on vacancies occurring, have the preference of appointment to a residence: there is a chaplain on the establishment, with a stipend of £50 per annum. Two exhibitions of £40 per annum each to Magdalen College, Cambridge, were given by the same founder, to which boys educated in the hospital have the first claim, and which, in default of such, lapse to boys born in Frankwell, and educated in the free grammar school. Shrewsbury is one of the towns entitled to a share of the charities of Sir Thomas White and Henry Smith; and there is also a considerable sum, the produce of various other bequests, annually distributed in coal and clothing, and other relief. Among the Monastic institutions anciently existing here, were, a convent of Grey friars, founded in the reign of Henry III., by Hawise, wife of John de Charleton, Lord of Powys, of which there are some remains; a convent of Dominican friars, instituted by Lady Genevile, of which there is not a vestige, the foundations having been lately dug up; and a convent of Augustine friars, established by one of the family of Stafford, of which some small portions are remaining. Of the numerous chapels, the only one of which there are any remains is that of St. Nicholas, near the old Council-house, now converted into a stable. Among the eminent Natives of the town have been, Richard and George Plantagenet, sons of Edward IV.; Ralph of Shrewsbury, Bishop of Bath and Wells; Robert, Bishop of Bangor; Thomas Bower, and John Thomas, bishops of Salisbury; Edward Wooley, Bishop of Clonfert; Sneyd Davies; Lord Chief Justice Jones; Richard Onslow, speaker of the house of commons; the Rev. Job Orton; George Costard, a distinguished mathematician; Thomas Churchyard, the poet; Vice-Admiral Benbow; Dr. John Taylor, already mentioned; Hugh Farmer, an eminent divine; and Dr. Charles Burney, a celebrated musician. Ordericus Vitalis, one of the best of early English historians, born at Atcham in 1074, was educated in the abbey. Shrewsbury gives the title of Earl to the family of Talbot.

SHREWTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of AMESBURY, hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Amesbury; containing 571 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of the Bishop of Salisbury: the improper tithes were exchanged for land in 1798, and the vicarial have been recently commuted for £215; the glebe comprises 28 acres. There are two places of worship for Baptists. Ann Estcourt, of Newton, in 1704, bequeathed a rent-charge now amounting to £34. 9. 8., for apprenticing boys; and at the inclosure of the parish in 1798, 10 acres, producing £15 per annum, were allotted for the repair of the church.

SHRIGLEY, POTT.—See POTT-SHRIGLEY.

SHRIPNEY, a tything, in the parish of SOUTH BERSTED, hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 90 inhabitants.

SHRIPLLE, a tything, in the parish of IDMISTON, union of AMESBURY, hundred of ALDERDURY, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Salisbury; containing 39 inhabitants.

SHRIVENHAM (St. ANDREW), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of FARRINGDON, hundred of SHRIVENHAM, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Great Farringdon; containing, with the tythings of Beckett and Bourton, the hamlet of Fernham, the chapelry of Longcott, and the township of Watchfield, 2353 inhabitants, of whom 814 are in the town. The parish comprises 7205*a.* 3*r.* 13*p.*: the Wilts and Berks canal and the Great Western railway pass through it. William de Valence obtained a charter, in 1257, for a market on Thursday, and a fair on the festival of St. Mary Magdalene, which were confirmed by another charter in 1383, but both have been long disused. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £676; impropiator, Viscount Barrington. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1789. The church is a very large structure, principally in the Norman style, with a tower rising from the centre, and contains a monument to Admiral Barrington, by Flaxman. There is a chapel of ease at Longcott. A school, erected at the expense of Archdeacon Berens, is supported by him, and there are some small endowments for education; also eight almshouses, founded in 1642, by Sir Henry Marten, with an endowment, including an augmentation by Mrs. Elizabeth Sadler, amounting to about £80 per annum. A chantry was founded here in 1336, by John de Burghton and Agnes, his wife.

SHROPHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WAYLAND, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Thetford; containing 513 inhabitants. This parish, which gave name to the hundred, and anciently included a town of some importance, comprises, with 485*a.* 2*r.* 14*p.* tithe-free, in Little Beccles, 267*sa.* 1*r.* 38*p.*, of which 1641 acres are arable, 817 pasture and meadow, 120 wood, and a portion fen and common. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 13. 9.; patrons and appropriators, Trustees appointed under the Municipal act. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe consists of 45 acres: in lieu of the impropriate tithes, a certain estate has been allotted. The church is chiefly in the later English style, and includes a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. At the inclosure, 59 acres were awarded to the poor, for fuel.

SHROPSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north by Cheshire and a detached portion of the Welsh county of Flint, on the east by Staffordshire, on the south-east by Worcestershire, on the south by Herefordshire, and on the south-west, west, and north-west, respectively, by the counties of Radnor, Montgomery, and Denbigh, in Wales. It extends from 52° 20' to 53° 4' (N. Lat.) and from 2° 17' to 3° 14' (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of upwards of 1341 square miles, or about 858,240 statute acres. Within its limits are 47,208 houses inhabited, 2086 uninhabited, and 293 in the course of erection; and the population amounts to 239,048, of which number 119,355 are males, and 119,693 females. The name has been corrupted from the Saxon Scrob-scire, a contraction of Scrobbes-byrig-scyre, meaning the shire of Scrobbes-byrig, the Saxon appellation for Shrewsbury. The aboriginal inhabitants of this district were of the tribes called the Cornavii and the Ordovices, the former occupying the country on the north-eastern side of the Severn, the latter the opposite shores of that river, and the south-western tracts. Little is known of the Cornavii; but the Ordovices joined with the Silures, under Caractacus, in defending their territories against the Roman invaders: and it is thought by some that the battle in which the Britons under that leader were finally defeated, by Ostorius Scapula, was fought within the limits of this county. Gough supposes it to have been at the hill called Caer Caradoc, or the Gaer, near the junction of the small rivers Clun and Teme, on the point of which are the remains of a very large and strongly-fortified camp. The annals of Tacitus place the camp of Caractacus at the Breyddin Chain, where in all probability that celebrated leader had his last fatal conflict with the Romans. Under the Roman dominion, Shropshire was included in the division called Flavia Casariensis. After that people had abandoned Britain, this county was the theatre of numerous sanguinary contests between the Britons and the Saxons, by the former of whom it was held as part of the kingdom of Powysland, of which Shrewsbury, called by them Sen-gwerne, was the capital. Though the British princes long disputed the possession of this territory, they were ultimately obliged to retreat; and in 777, their seat of royalty was transferred to Mathrafael, among the mountains of Powys, and Shropshire became part of the kingdom of Mercia. They still, however, made frequent inroads; and the warlike Saxon monarch, Offa, partly to avert the evils attendant upon these hostilities, caused a deep dyke and rampart to be made, which extended 100 miles along the mountainous border of Wales, from the Clwyddian hills to the mouth of the Wye, crossing the westernmost parts of Shropshire; but the Welsh continued their incursions far within this boundary, and in their hasty retreats often carried off immense booty. In the ninth century, when the Danes invaded the island, this part of Mercia, although it suffered less than some others, experienced much calamity, and its chief city, Uriconium, was destroyed. Shrewsbury then sprang up, and flourished in consequence; and Alfred, having subdued these ravagers, ranked it among his principal cities, and gave its name to the shire, of which it was the capital. In 1016, Shrewsbury was taken by Edmund Ironside, who severely punished the inhabitants for having taken part with Canute, in opposition to his father Ethelred. The Welsh continued their incursions both before and after this event with great fierceness, particularly in the time of Edward the Confessor, under their reigning prince, Gruffydd. Harold, afterwards king of England, undertook an expedition against this prince, both by land and sea, and harassed the Welsh so much, that they sent him the head of their chief, in token of subjection: he subsequently endeavoured to secure the advantages thus gained by a decree, forbidding any Welshman to appear on the eastern side of Offa's dyke, on pain of losing his right hand.

At the period of the Norman Conquest, nearly the whole of Shropshire, together with extensive possessions in other parts of England, was bestowed on Roger de Montgomery, a relation of William's, and one of his chief captains, in reward for his services. But the hostilities of the Welsh disturbed this warrior in the enjoyment of his good fortune; and, in 1067, Owain Gwynedd, their prince, in alliance with Edric Sylvaticus, or Edric the Forester, the Saxon earl of Shrewsbury, laid siege to that town, with a force so formidable as to require the presence of the Conqueror, who repulsed the assailants with great slaughter, and bestowed the title of earl of Shrewsbury upon Roger de Montgomery. This county, in like manner, was frequently the scene of contest, or of preparation for military enterprise, so long as the ancient British inhabitants of Wales maintained their independence. William the Conqueror, and his more immediate successors, for the purpose of subduing the resolute Britons, issued grants to certain noblemen of all the lands they should be able to wrest from them; and hence originated the seignories and jurisdictions of the lords marchers. The precise extent of the territory designated as the Marches it is difficult to determine, the word meaning, in a general sense, the borders between the Welsh and the English: but the western border of Shropshire certainly formed a principal portion. The tenure by which these lords marchers held under the king was, in case of war, to serve with a certain number of vassals, to furnish their castles with strong garrisons and with sufficient military implements and stores for defence, and to keep the king's enemies in subjection: to enable them to perform this, they were allowed to exercise, in their respective territories, absolute power. For their better security they fortified old castles and built new ones, garrisoning them with their own retainers; and thus it was that the greater part of the numerous castles on the Welsh border were erected. They had particular laws in their baronies, termed Sngletheria and Waltheria, where all suits between them and their tenants were commenced and determined; but if a question arose concerning the barony and its title, it was referred to the king's courts. There was also, a lord-warden of the marches, whose jurisdiction resembled that of a lord-lieutenant.

Shropshire is at present included in the several dioceses of Hereford, Lichfield, and St. Asaph, in the province of Canterbury; but by the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, the entire county is to be divided between the sees of Chester and Hereford, and that part of it which is to be transferred to the former, will then be in the province of York. The portion of the diocese of Hereford which is in Shropshire, forming about one-half of the county, is almost wholly in the archdeaconry of Salop, which also comprises most of that part of the diocese of Lichfield contained in this county. Shropshire comprises the deaneries of Burford, Clun, Ludlow, Marchia, Newport, Pontesbury, Salop, Stottesden, and Wenlock; and the number of parishes is 214. For purposes of civil government, it is divided into fifteen hundreds, or districts answering thereto, viz., the hundreds of North Bradford, comprising the Drayton and Whitchurch divisions; South Bradford, comprising the Newport and Wellington divisions; and Brimstree, comprising the Hales-Owen and Shiffnall divisions; and the hundreds of Chirbury, Condovery, Ford, Munslow, Oswestry, Overs, Pimhill, Purslow (with which that of Clun has been incorporated), and Stottesden; the liberty of Shrewsbury; and the franchise of Wenlock. It contains the borough and market towns of Shrewsbury, Bridgenorth, Ludlow, and Wenlock; and the market-towns of Bishop's-Castle, Broseley, Cleobury-Mortimer, Clun, Drayton-in-Hales, Ellesmere, Hales-Owen, Newport, Oswestry, Shiffnall, Church-Stretton, Wellington, Wem, and Whitchurch. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county was divided into the Northern and Southern divisions, each sending two members to parliament; and two representatives are returned for each of the boroughs. Shropshire is included in the Oxford circuit, and the assizes and general quarter-sessions are held at Shrewsbury, where is the county gaol.

The form of the county is an irregular parallelogram. The SURFACE presents almost every variety of fine scenery; bold and lofty mountains; woody and secluded valleys; fertile and widely-cultivated plains; a majestic river which divides it into two nearly equal portions; and sequestered lakes. Though no part is absolutely flat, yet the north-eastern districts are comparatively so, as contrasted with the hills on the southern and western borders, approaching the Welsh mountains, and form an important part of the immense plain, or vale, which also includes the whole of Cheshire, and the southern part of Lancashire, and is bounded on the east by the hills of Staffordshire, Derbyshire, and the western borders of Yorkshire; and on the west by the mountains of North Wales, and by the sea. The plain of Salop is about 30 miles long from north to south, or from Whitchurch to Church-Stretton, and 28 miles broad, from Oswestry to Colebrook-dale, and is divided into two unequal portions by the Severn. The famed Wrekin mountain, celebrated for the magnificent and extensive prospects which it commands, rises singly out of the plain, to the height of nearly 1200 feet above the level of the Severn, near which it is situated: north of it are excrescences of rock and partial swells. To the south-west the hills are more frequent; and on the western and south-western borders of the county is a striking succession of mountainous elevations, divided by beautiful valleys: some of the highest ground in the county is considered to be the summits of the hills in the vicinity of Oswestry. Lying to the east of the Wrekin, and on the eastern border of the county, the coal district of Colebrook-dale, which extends from north-east to south-west, about six miles in length, and two in breadth, is considerably above the level of the plain of Shropshire, more especially its southern parts. South-west of the Severn, the limestone ridge of hills, which commences at Lincoln hill in Colebrook-dale, proceeds in a south-westerly direction towards Church-Stretton, near which place it turns southward from the hills, around Hope-Bowdler, and descends nearly in a direct line to Ludlow, on the southern border of the county. Westward is a vale about two miles broad, and nearly fifteen in length, from Colebrook-dale to the Stretton valley. Its western side is bounded by the line of low hills ranging, without any intermediate valley, along the base of a much more elevated ridge, of which the Wrekin forms the northern extremity: this chain is continued on the south-western side of the Severn, in a line with the Wrekin, and constitutes the Acton-Burnell hills, the Frodgesley hills, the Lawley, Caer Caradoc, and the Hope-Bowdler hills; all which have craggy summits, ascend abruptly from the plain, at an angle of about 60°, and command remarkably fine prospects. The vale in which Church-Stretton is situated separates from these the singular mass of hills called the Longmynd, which ascends gradually from the plain to a height much superior to that of the Wrekin, and then stretches, with a level and unvaried summit for several miles, towards Bishop's-Castle. Following the mountainous line that forms the boundary of the plain of Salop, a high and rocky district occurs between the high road from Shrewsbury to Bishop's-Castle and the vale of Montgomery. The most elevated peak of this assemblage of lofty hills is called the Stiperstones, its summit being extremely craggy, and overspread with enormous loose blocks of quartz, which at a distance, look like the ruins of some great fortress. This hill is somewhat higher than the Wrekin, and forms the abrupt termination of a line of mountains that hence extends south-westward into Radnorshire. From the Stiperstones a range of low hills stretches, in a north-easterly direction, as far as Shrewsbury, under the names of Lyth hill, Baystone hill, and the Sharpstones. In the southern parts of the county, the Clee hills, like the Wrekin, have their bases projecting towards the low lands which accompany the course of the Severn: the Brown Clee hill, and the Titterston Clee hill, are amongst the highest in Shropshire, and have flat tops, but very irregular sides, and, like many others similarly situated, have vestiges of ancient fortifications upon their summits. Of the Berwyn mountains only a small portion, the slate mountain of Selattyn, is within the boundary of Salop. The views obtained from many of the heights are remarkably grand and beautiful. The lakes, though neither numerous nor of great extent, form a variety in the landscape rarely met with in the midland counties; that adjoining Ellesmere covers 116 acres, and there are several others in the neighbourhood, but of smaller extent.

The variations of SOIL are as great as those of surface; and the different kinds are so intermingled as to render it difficult to define the limits of each. There is nearly an equal quantity of wheat and turnip land, though the proportions of the former somewhat preponderate; and the other crops that are most common are barley, oats, and peas; in the southern part of the county, bordering on Worcestershire, are about 250 acres of hop plantations. The principal artificial grasses are the broad-leaved clover, Dutch clover (both red and white), trefoil, and rye-grass. In the vales of the south-western parts, the grass lands are very good: the pasture lands are not, however, on the whole, of the richest kind. The county has been cleared at different times of much of its timber, great supplies having been sent to Bristol, for ship-building; but it still retains more fine woods of oak than most other counties, there being sufficient for the home consumption, and a considerable surplus for exportation. The coppice-woods are extensive, and consist chiefly of oak. There are many modern plantations, generally of various kinds of fir and pine, intermingled with different deciduous trees: indeed, there are few trees which do not flourish in the soil. Exclusively of the heathy mountainous tracts before described, which are chiefly sheep-walks, there are some flat open heaths in the north-eastern part of the county, and in the parishes of Worfield and North Cleobury, in the vicinity of Bridgenorth. Clun Forest, an extensive sheep-walk, contains above 12,000 acres, and is a fine extent of smooth turf, with every variation of swelling banks and retired dingles: a part of the Longmynd has been inclosed. There are several large mosses and a great number of smaller ones: the most extensive district of swampy moorland surrounds the village of Kinnersley.

The MINERAL PRODUCTIONS are various and considerable; the principal are coal, iron, lead, and stone of different kinds. The coal district of Colebrook-dale is about six miles long from north-east to south-west, and two miles broad; it commences on the south-western side of the Severn, in the parishes of Barrow and Much Wenlock, and runs across that river through those of Broseley, Madeley, Little Wenlock, Wellington, Dawley, Malins-Lea, Shiffnall, Lilleshall, and some others. The combination of coal, iron-ore, &c., together with the advantages of water-carriage which it possesses, renders Colebrook-dale the centre of some of the most extensive iron-works in the kingdom, which consume by far the greater part of the coal raised there. In the Clee hills, from 20 to 30 miles southward, are other coal-works, where the strata consist also of both coal and iron-stone, and dip towards the centre of the hills. There are coal-fields at Billingsley, two or three miles north-eastward of these, where a stratum of spathose iron-ore has been found; and valuable coal-works lie southward of the Clee hills, some of which produce cannel coal: coal is also found in most other parts of the hundred of Stottesden. Some miles westward of the first-mentioned coal district, pits have been sunk with success; and, indeed, out of the fifteen civil divisions of this county, ten are known to produce this valuable mineral: it is chiefly the south-western districts that are deficient of it. Nearly parallel with the Welsh border is a bank of coal strata, extending from the Dee to the Severn, and a portion of these is worked in the western and north-western parts of Shropshire, the coal having the caking quality of the Newcastle coal, and yielding a powerful heat; the principal works are near Chirk bridge: a stratum of coal seven feet thick has here been met with; spathose iron-ore, and common argillaceous iron-stone, are also found. There are mines of lead-ore of a good quality adjoining the Stiperstones, and in their vicinity; in the western parts of the county, the veins are in argillaceous schistus, and produce sulphuret of lead, both galena and steel-ore (which latter contains silver), carbonate of lead crystallized, red lead-ore, and blende, or black-jack (sulphuret of zinc): the Bog mine has been worked to the depth of 150 yards, and a ton of the ore raised here yields 15 cwt. of pure lead: the ore of the White grit-mine does not yield so much. At Snailbach, a vein, which is in some parts four yards in width, has been worked to the depth of 180 yards: calamine (carbonate of zinc) is also here met with. Ancient tools, judged to be Roman, have been found in these mines. The lead-ore is reduced at Minsterley and other places near the mines, whence it is sent by land-carriage to Shrewsbury, and there shipped, together with the raw calamine, in barges, for Bristol. There are appearances both of lead and copper in different other parts of the county. The various beds of stone are exceedingly numerous, and the county affords throughout a rich field of inquiry for the mineralogist.

The rich stores of iron and lead ores, coal, and stone; the increasing manufactures; and the agricultural improvements of the district, have raised Shropshire to a high position in the scale of national importance; while its inland navigation has rendered it the emporium of the trade between England and Wales, and a grand centre of communication with the inland counties. The chief MANUFACTURE is that of iron, and the number of blast-furnaces for this metal between Ketley and Willey, in the great eastern coal district, in a space of about seven miles, exceeds that in any other tract of equal extent in the kingdom. The quantity of coal annually raised is nearly 300,000 tons: in Colebrook-dale, coked coal was first employed, on an extensive scale, as a substitute for charcoal, in the manufacture of iron. Various branches of the flannel manufacture are pursued near Shrewsbury; and there are mills at different places for dyeing woollen-cloth. A considerable manufacture of gloves is carried on at Ludlow, chiefly for the London market, at which place paper is also made. Near Coalport, on the Severn, coloured china of all sorts, and of exquisite taste and beauty, is made; and at the same newly-formed town is a manufacture of earthenware, in imitation of that made at Etruria, commonly called Wedgwood ware. Glass is made at Donnington; earthenware, pipes, bricks, and tiles, and nails at Broseley; and at Coalport are manufactures of ropes and chains for the mines. There is a manufacture of carpets at Bridgenorth; paper and horse-hair seating are made at Drayton; and at nearly all the towns in the county the malting business is carried on to a very considerable extent. The staple trade of Shrewsbury is in fine flannels and Welsh webs, but it has very much declined.

The Severn, which, among British rivers, is next in magnitude and importance to the Thames, runs nearly through the centre of the county, in an irregular bending course of between 60 and 70 miles, and in a general direction of from north-west to south-east. During the whole of its course through Shropshire, it is navigable for barges of from 20 to 80 tons' burthen, which are towed up it; and for vessels called trows, which are larger, and navigate the ports lower down the river. By far the greater number of the barges are employed in exporting downwards the produce of the mines near Colebrook-dale; wines, groceries, &c., are brought up the Severn, for the consumption of this county, that of Montgomery and others; and besides the exports of coal and iron by means of it, are those of lime, lead, flannel, grain, and cheese, with some others of minor importance. The fish found in the river, within the limits of Shropshire, are salmon, flounders, a few pike, trout, graylings, perch, eels, shad, bleak, gudgeons, chub, roach, and dace (in great abundance), carp, a few lampreys, and ruff. The fishermen very commonly use a kind of canoe, being a very short wide boat, made of osiers covered with hides, and worked with a paddle, answering exactly to the description of the boats of the Britons in the time of Cæsar, and called a coracle: this bark is so light that the fisherman, on quitting the river, carries it upon his back, one end being pulled over his head, in the manner of a large basket. By the statute of the 30th of Charles II., cap. 9, the conservancy of the Severn within the county is vested in the county magistrates, with power to appoint one or more under-conservators. The smaller streams and brooks are extremely numerous, and the waters of almost all of them finally reach the Severn; its most important tributaries are, the Camlet, the Vyrnwy, the Tern, the Clun, the Ony, and the Teme.

The want of a navigable CANAL for conveying the produce of the more remote coal and iron mines of the eastern districts to the river Severn was long experienced, owing to the peculiar unevenness of the surface of the country over which it must pass, and the impossibility of obtaining a sufficient quantity of water for lockage. At last, however, the remedy for these obstacles was supplied by a canal from the neighbourhood of the Oaken gates to the iron-works at Ketley, a distance of about a mile and a half, with a fall of 73 feet, in which, instead of lockage, an inclined plane was formed. An act of parliament was then obtained for the Shropshire canal, which was finished in 1792. Immediately after the completion of this, the Shrewsbury canal was projected, for supplying that town with coal, which was conveyed hither, before its completion, by an expensive land-carriage of about fourteen miles. The Ellesmere canal, or rather system of canals, which unites the Severn, the Dee, and the Mersey, crosses the river Ceiriog into the north-western parts of Shropshire, by an aqueduct 200 yards in length and 65 in height. At Frankton Common, a branch strikes off eastward, which, after having passed close by the town of Ellesmere, proceeds by Welsh-Hampton to Fensmoss, where it divides, one branch leading to the town of Whitechurch, the other terminating at Prees Heath, near the village of Prees. At Hordley also is a branch from the Ellesmere canal, in a south-westerly direction, which joins the Montgomeryshire line. A canal formed by the late Duke of Sutherland, commences at Donnington-Wood, and proceeds on a level to Pavé-lane, near Newport, a distance of seven miles; there is a branch from this to his grace's lime-works at Lilleshall. Iron railways, to convey heavy articles, have been adopted to a considerable extent in the county, and the whole of the extensive iron and coal tract in the vicinity of Colebrook-dale is intersected by numerous tram-roads leading from the coal-works to the different foundries, and wharfs.

The RELICS of ANTIQUITY are numerous and diversified. Remains of encampments, supposed by antiquaries to have been of early British formation, are to be seen in Brocard's Castle, near Church-Stretton; Bury Ditches, on Tongley Hill, near the village of Basford; on the Clee Hills; on the hills called Caer Caradoc, two miles and a half from Church-Stretton, and the Caer Caradoc, or Gear, near Clun; at Old Port, near Oswestry, and on the Wrekin. The principal Roman stations were Uriconium, or Viroconium, now Wroxeter, which was a chief city of the Cornavii, fortified by the Romans; and Rutunium, at Rowton; but of the exact site of the last there is a difference of opinion: there were also Bravinnium at Rushbury; Sariconium, at Bury Hill; and Usacona, at Sheriff-Hales. The Roman station Mediolanum is by some fixed near Drayton, but with more probability at Meivod. Vestiges of Roman encampments and fortifications are found in the Bury Walls, near Hawkstone; the Walls, near Chesterton; and the remains of the ancient city of Uriconium, near Wroxeter. A great Roman road enters Shropshire on the east between Crackley Bank and Weston, and passes through it in a bending line, in the vicinity of Church-Stretton, which town derives its name from it, to Leintwardine, in Herefordshire, on the southern border of this county; and there are besides numerous minor vestiges of that people. Part of Offa's Dyke may be traced in the south-western part of Shropshire, which it enters from Knighton, in Radnorshire, and quits for Montgomeryshire, between Bishop's Castle and Newton; it is again visible in this county near Llanymynech, on the western border, whence it proceeds across the race-course, near Oswestry, and then descends to the river Ceiriog, the north-western boundary of the county, near Chirk, where it again enters Wales. There are the remains of a Danish camp near Cleobury-Mortimer. A very singular cave, in which were human bones, was discovered in 1809, in digging at the bottom of a rock, at Burncote, near Worfield: Kynaston's Cave, in the almost perpendicular side of Nesscliffe Rock, and the traditions connected with it, are worthy of notice.

The number of Religious houses, including collegiate establishments and hospitals, was about 47; and the remains of some of them are interesting either for beauty or antiquity: the principal are those of the abbeys of Buildwas, Hales-Owen, Haughmond, Lilleshall, Much Wenlock, Shrewsbury, and White Abbey, near Alberbury; and of the priories of Bromfield, Chirbury, and White Ladies. Of the ancient Castles contained within the limits of the county, the great number of which has before been accounted for, some of the most remarkable that still remain, wholly or in part, are those of Acton-Burnell; Alberbury; Bridgenorth, which was founded so far back as the year 912; by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great; Caus; Clun; Hopton; Ludlow, so long the seat of the lords president of the Marshes; Middle; Moreton-Corbet; Oswestry; Red Castle, Shrewsbury; Sibdon; Stoke; Wattlesborough; and Whittington. Among the most remarkable ancient Mansions are those of Boscobel, where Charles II. was concealed after the battle of Worcester; White Hall; and Bellstone House; and Shrewsbury Council-house is also remarkable for its antiquity. Of the more modern residences of nobility and gentry the county includes considerably more than a hundred. Shropshire contains numerous medicinal springs of various properties. At Kingley Wick, about two miles to the west of Lilleshall Hill, is a strong spring of impure brine, from which salt was formerly made; and there are medicinal springs of different qualities at Smeithmore and Moreton-Say, in the hundred of North Bradford; at Broseley, and at Admaston near Wellington, besides others near Ludlow; between Welbatch and Pulley Common, in the vicinity of Wenlock, and on Prolley Moor. That best known, however, is Sutton Spa, about two miles to the south of Shrewsbury, and close to the village of Sutton, the waters of which are saline and chalybeate, and somewhat resemble those of Cheltenham. Near Colebrook-dale is a bituminous spring of fossil tar. Numerous fossils are found among the strata of the county, particularly in the Colebrook-dale coal district. The reseda luteola, or dyers' weed, which affords a beautiful yellow dye, grows wild in many parts of the county; and the berberis vulgaris, or common barberry, is also occasionally found in a similar uncultivated state.

SHROTON.—See IWERNE-COURTNAY.

SHUCKBURGH, LOWER (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of SOUTHAM, Burton-Dasset division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5 miles (E.) from Southam; containing 154 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Warwick to Daventry, and consists of 959 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed, with that of Priors'-Marston, to the vicarage of Priors'-Hardwick: the tithes were commuted for land in 1778. The Oxford canal runs here, the rateable annual value of which property in the parish is £644.

SHUCKBURGH, UPPER (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of SOUTHAM, Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 5 miles (S.) from Rugby; containing 46 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1167 acres, and is bounded on the east and south by the river Leam, which separates it from Northamptonshire; the surface is generally elevated, and on the western boundary is Beacon Hill, commanding fine views of the surrounding country, and in clear weather of the Wrekin and the Malvern Hills. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £30; patron, Sir F. Shuckburgh, Bart. The church contains some finely-executed monuments to the Shuckburgh family; the chancel window is embellished with a figure of St. John, painted by Mr. Eginton, of Birmingham.

SHUDY-CAMPS (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LINTON, hundred of CHILFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Linton; containing 402 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 2200 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; patrons and impropriators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The great tithes have been commuted for £295. 8., and the vicarial for £175. 12.; there are 5 acres of impropriate glebe, and 3 belonging to the vicar. The church is an ancient structure. A national school is supported by subscription.

SHUGBOROUGH, a township, in the parish of COLWICH, S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD; containing 53 inhabitants.

SHURDINGTON, GREAT (St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of CHELTENHAM, Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S-BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. W.) from Cheltenham; containing 198 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 500 acres; the soil is gravelly, alternated with loam, the surface flat, and the land generally in pasture. The village is situated on the new road from Cheltenham, through Painswick and the vale of Rodborough, to Bath; and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Badgeworth: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £509. 10., and the vicarial for £339. 13.; the glebe comprises 30 acres, and there is a rent-charge of £6. 9. payable to the rector of Oddington. The church has a very handsome steeple, and a north aisle called the Hatherly aisle. On opening a large tumulus here, a stone coffin was found at the depth of sixteen feet, which contained the body of a man, with a helmet almost consumed by rust.

SHURDINGTON, LITTLE, a hamlet, in the parish of BADGEWORTH, union of CHELTENHAM, Upper division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S-BARTON, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 247 inhabitants.

SHURFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of WILTON, union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 149 inhabitants.

SHURLACH, a township, in the parish of DAVENHAM, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. S. E.) from Northwich; containing 159 inhabitants. The Grand Trunk canal passes in the vicinity, and immediately on the west flows the river Dane.

SHURTON, a tything, in the parish of STOGURSEY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 131 inhabitants.

SHUSTOCK (St. CUTHBERT), a parish, in the union of MERIDEN, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Coleshill; containing, with the chapelry of Bentley, 644 inhabitants, of whom 378 are in the township of Shustock with Blyth. The parish extends for nearly nine miles in length, and comprises by measurement 3788 acres of rich land in equal portions of arable and pasture; in the township are about 2000 acres. The river Blyth and a stream called the Bourne intersect the parish, and the Birmingham and Derby railway, and the London branch of that line, also pass through it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 7., and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiator, Lord Leigh. The great tithes have been commuted for £408, and the vicarial for £243; the glebe comprises 24 acres, and a new glebe-house has been erected. The church is an ancient structure, and contains the remains of Sir William Dugdale. In the hamlet of Bentley is a chapel of ease. Thomas and Charles Huntbach, in 1714, gave certain houses and land for the endowment of a school, and an almshouse for six persons; and there is another school, in which 20 children are instructed at the expense of a lady. Blyth Hall was the residence of the celebrated antiquary, Sir William Dugdale, who purchased that manor of Sir Walter Ashton, in the 1st of Charles I., and here compiled The Antiquities of Warwickshire; he died on the 10th of February, 1685.

SHUTE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AXMINSTER, hundred of COLYTON, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON, 2 miles (N.) from Colyton; containing 683 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with that of Monkton, to the vicarage of Colyton: the tithes have been commuted for £480, of which £300 are payable to the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, and £180 to the incumbent. The church contains a memorial of Charles Bickford Templer, Esq., who was lost in the wreck of the Halsewell East Indiaman, in 1786.

SHUTFORD, EAST, a chapelry, in the parish of SWALCLIFFE, union and hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Banbury; containing 31 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Martin.

SHUTFORD, WEST, a township, in the parish of SWALCLIFFE, union and hundred of BANBURY, county of OXFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Banbury; containing 418 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1765.

SHUTTINGTON, a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Tamworth; containing 190 inhabitants. The parish is situated at the northern extremity of the county, bordering on Shropshire and Leicestershire, and comprises by admeasurement 1355 acres of good arable and pasture land in nearly equal portions: the river Anker and the Coventry canal intersect it. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £318; patron, the Earl of Essex; impropiators, certain Trustees. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1804; the glebe comprises 144 acres. The church is an ancient structure, in the porch of which is a beautiful Norman arch in a very perfect state. There are some remains here of Alvecote Priory, now converted into a farm-house, on the left bank of the river.

SHUTTLEHANGER, a chapelry, in the parish of STOKE-BRUE, union of TOWCESTER, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Towcester; containing 372 inhabitants, and comprising 1259 acres, of which 72 are common or waste land.

SIBBERTOFT (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Harborough; containing 437 inhabitants. The parish borders on Leicestershire, and comprises 2021 acres. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Welford, and valued in the king's books at £6. 4. $9\frac{1}{2}$: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £330, with a glebe of 45 acres; and tithes belonging to the Bishop of Oxford for £155, with $5\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A spot called Castleyard, is supposed to be the site of an ancient castle.

SIBBERTSWOLD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of DOVOR, hundred of BEWSBOROUGH, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Dover; containing 408 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with that of Coldred annexed, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £255; patron, the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is principally in the early English style. A school is supported by subscription. Three-Barrow Down, in the parish, is so named from three large tumuli or barrows, connected with each other by deep trenches, and occupying the hill between Denhill-terrace and the edge of Barham Downs. To the east of Long-Lane farm are other lines of intrenchment, with similar barrows or tumuli, supposed to be of Roman origin.

SIBDON-CARWOOD, a parish, in the union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Bishop's-Castle; containing 59 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Ludlow to Bishop's-Castle, is wholly the property of James Baxter, Esq., of Sibdon Castle; the neighbourhood abounds with features of interest. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £30; patron and impropiator, Mr. Baxter. The church is a handsome structure, built by the proprietor of the castle, and is situated on an eminence commanding a most extensive view.

SIBFORD-FERRIS, a hamlet, in the parish of SWALCLIFFE, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury; containing 287 inhabitants.

SIBFORD-GOWER, a hamlet, in the parish of SWALCLIFFE, union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Banbury; containing 534 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773. A church has been built containing 500 sittings, 340 of which are free. One-third of the rents of the poor's estate is paid to a schoolmaster.

SIBSEY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, W. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Boston; containing 1431 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 5290 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £315. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1810; the glebe comprises 146 acres, with a house. The church is a handsome structure in the early English style, with portions of Norman architecture. Here are two places of worship for Wesleyans; likewise a parochial school, founded in 1723, by the parishioners, who erected the building, and endowed it with land now producing £97. There is also an income of £35, arising from land allotted at the inclosure, for the poor.

SIBSON, a hamlet, in the parish of STIBBINGTON, union of STAMFORD, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Wansford; containing 123 inhabitants.

SIBSON, or SIBSTONE (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing, with the township of Upton, and the hamlet of Wellesborough with Temple Hall, 504 inhabitants, of whom 280 are in Sibson township. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 18. $11\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £962; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1807.

SIBTHORPE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Newark; containing 154 inhabitants. This place was anciently of some importance, and was the residence of the Burnell family, of whose spacious mansion there are, however, no remains. The parish is situated on the Cardike, and comprises by measurement 900 acres, of which 11 are woodland and plantations, and of the remainder two-thirds are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Duke of Portland; net income, £20. The church was originally much larger than it is at present; the north and south aisles have been taken down, and the pillars and lofty arches of the nave are now worked into the outer wall of the building. In the reign of Edward II., Thomas de Sibthorpe founded a chantry in the church, and subsequently erected it into a college for a warden, nine chaplains, three clerks, and four choristers; he also added four chapels, in honour of St. Anne, St. Katharine, St. Margaret, and St. Mary; the revenue, at the Dissolution, was estimated at £31. 1. 2. Thomas Secker, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here.

SIBTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 1 mile (N. W. by W.) from Yoxford; containing 564 inhabitants. It is situated in the eastern part of the county, and comprises by admeasurement 2800 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 4., and in the patronage of R. Sayer, Esq.; improprators, the Landowners. The great tithes have been commuted for £316. 3. 7., and the vicarial for £132. 12. 6.; there are 9 acres of glebe. Here are extensive remains of a Cistercian abbey founded in 1149, by William de Cayneto; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and at the Dissolution possessed a revenue of £250. 15. 7. There was an hospital at the gate of the abbey.

SICKLESMERE, a hamlet, in the parishes of GREAT and LITTLE WELNETHAM, union of THINGOE, hundred of THEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK; containing 273 inhabitants.

SICKLINGHALL, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-OVERBLOWS, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (W.) from Wetherby; containing 226 inhabitants. The township comprises 1405a. 2r. 2p., the property of Mrs. Scott, relict of William Lister Fenton Scott, Esq., whose seat, Woodhall, a handsome mansion, is pleasantly situated, surrounded by plantations, and commanding beautiful views of Wharfedale. A rent-charge of £86 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, and there is a glebe of $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SIDBURY (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Sidmouth; containing 1771 inhabitants. This is a decayed market-town, and there are still fairs for cattle on the Tuesday before Ascension-day and at Michaelmas. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £28, and in the gift of the appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Exeter: the great tithes have been commuted for £300, and the vicarial for £615, with a glebe of 5 acres. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school has been established. On the manor of Sand is an old mansion with the inscription Hortus Johannis Capelli over the garden door.

SIDBURY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Bridgenorth; containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 17. $8\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £227; patron, the Earl of Shrewsbury.

SIDCUP, a hamlet, in the parish of FOOT'S-CRAY, union of BROMLEY, hundred of RUXLEY, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Eltham. There are several gentlemen's seats in the neighbourhood.

SIDDINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTBURY, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Congleton; containing 513 inhabitants, and comprising about 2000 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £106; patron and improprator, E. D. Davenport, Esq. The chapel is partly built of wood and plaster, and partly of brick. John Fowden, in 1712, founded a school, which he endowed with £8 per annum; and a parochial school is supported by the landowners.

SIDDINGTON (St. MARY AND St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Cirencester; containing 469 inhabitants. This place was formerly celebrated for the manufacture of pottery, which was carried on extensively, but within the last 30 years has been discontinued: the site of the works is still called the Pottery Court. The parish is situated on the road from Cirencester to Wootton-Basset, and comprises 2018a. 1r. 13p.; the substratum contains a peculiar stone called Siddington stone of a blueish colour, and very durable, which is quarried for paving, and sometimes for building. The River Churn and the Thames and Severn canal intersect the parish, and from the latter a branch diverges at Siddington-lock to Cirencester; the Cheltenham and Great Western railway also passes through the parish. The living of St. Mary's is a rectory, with which the discharged vicarage of St. Peter is united, the former valued in the king's books at £8. 12. 1., and the latter at £5. 12. 3½; net income of the united livings, £429; patron, the Crown. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1778; the glebe comprises 308 acres, with a house. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, combines portions of the various English styles, with some Norman details, of which latter the south door and the arch leading into the chancel are fine specimens. A school is supported by subscription. The celebrated Dr. George Bull, Bishop of St. David's, who died in 1709, was for nearly thirty years incumbent of St. Peter's, during which period he composed the principal part of his writings.

SIDE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of RAPSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 7 miles (E.) from Painswick; containing 43 inhabitants. It comprises 608 acres, of which the substratum contains stone of good quality, quarried for building and other purposes; the ground is hilly, the soil various. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 18. 4., and in the gift of W. Lawrence, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £83. 10., and the glebe comprises 30 acres.

SIDESTRAND (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Cromer; containing 161 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the north-east coast, comprises 436 acres, chiefly arable; the soil is of moderate quality, the scenery pleasingly varied. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10., and in the alternate patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster, and S. Hoare, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £106; the glebe comprises 4 acres, and the rector also receives a rent-charge of £7. 10. out of the tithes of Trimmingham. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, and had formerly a circular tower, which fell down in 1841.

SIDLESHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of MANHOOD, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S.) from Chichester; containing 927 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Chichester to Selsey, and bounded on the south by Pagham harbour. There is a convenient quay, near which is a superior tide-mill, which for justness of principle is equal to any in the kingdom; it was erected at a considerable expense, by the late Mr. Woodroffe Drinkwater, under the direction of Benjamin Basle, the inventor and constructor of the machinery, which will grind a load of corn in an hour. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with a portion of the great tithes, and valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 10.; net income, £186; patron, the Prebendary of Sidlesham in the Cathedral of Chichester; appropriators of the remainder of the great tithes, the Prebendaries of Sidlesham and Heighley. The church is in the early English style, and consists of a nave, transepts, and side aisles, with an embattled tower at the west end. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SIDMONTON.—See SYDMONTON.

SIDMOUTH (St. NICHOLAS), a sea-port, market-town, and parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, Woodbury and S. divisions of DEVON, 13½ miles (E. S. E.) from Exeter, and 158 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 3309 inhabitants. The earliest account of this place is in the time of William the Conqueror, who bestowed the manor on the monastery of St. Michael, in Normandy, from which, during the subsequent wars with France, it was alienated to the abbey of Sion. In the reign of Elizabeth the manor was leased to Sir William Perryan, and in that of James I. to Sir Christopher Mainwaring; and was subsequently sold to Sir Edmond Prideaux, with the exception of the great tithes, which were given to Wadham College, from which institution they have been bought by the Rev. William Jenkins, the present incumbent. The manor was purchased from Sir Wilmot Prideaux, by Thomas Jenkins, Esq., and is now the property of Hughes Hughes Ball, Esq. In the reign of Edward III., the town appears to have been governed by a portreeve, and to have furnished that monarch, in his attack on Calais, with two vessels and 25 seamen. It is said to have been formerly famous for its fishery, and to have traded with Newfoundland; but the harbour which then existed is supposed, from the discovery of an old anchor, and fragments of vessels, to have been in the Ham meadow, near the town; it has been choked up with sand and pebbles, and only boats and fishing-smacks can now approach the shore. The land to the westward once projected much further than at present into the sea, forming a natural bay, within which vessels sought shelter in times of danger. In 1836 an act was passed for making and maintaining a harbour and other works here; but, after expending about £12,000 in collecting materials and building a wall to prevent the encroachment of the sea, it was found impracticable to complete the undertaking without a very much larger sum than was anticipated, and the object was therefore abandoned. To its attractions as a watering-place may be attributed its present prosperity.

The town is situated at the entrance of a narrow valley, on a small stream called the Sid, from which it derives its name; the surrounding country is remarkably picturesque, and the hills on the east and west sides are of great altitude, and extremely precipitous, terminating abruptly on the shore, and affording great shelter to the place. Though irregularly built, it is very neat, and derives much beauty from the numerous detached residences and pleasing villas in its immediate vicinity, among which is Woolbrook Glen, which, in 1821, was honoured by the residence of the Duke and Duchess of Kent, and her present Majesty, while Princess Victoria: here, indeed, the duke died. The climate is mild; and on account of its sheltered situation from all winds but the south, the myrtle, geranium, and other tender plants, thrive in the open air. The inns and boarding-houses are of the best description; every accommodation is provided for sea-bathing, and on the beach is a public walk more than half a mile in length, fronting which are some warm baths, public rooms, library, &c.; assemblies and concerts, also, take place during the season. The markets, for the regulation of which an act was passed in 1839, are on Tuesday and Saturday, and are well supplied; and there are fairs on Easter Monday and Tuesday, and the third Monday in September. Petty-sessions are held on the first Monday in every month; and at a court leet and baron held annually by the lord of the manor, two constables and tything-men are appointed.

The parish comprises 1539 acres, of which 128 are common or waste land. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 15. 5., and in the gift of the Rev. W. Jenkins: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £200, and the vicarial for £270, and the glebe comprises 23 acres. The church is an ancient structure, with a well-built tower; among the monuments is one to the memory of Dr. Currie, the distinguished biographer of Robert Burns. A handsome church, containing 800 sittings, and dedicated to All Saints, was consecrated May 7th, 1840; £1500 towards the expense were contributed by the Rev. J. Bradney, the incumbent, and £600 by Sir J. Kennaway, who, with others, holds the patronage. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. A national school is supported partly by a small endowment, and another partly by subscription. The poor are relieved by bequests from Anthony Isaack in 1639, and John Minshull in 1663, and others of small amount; and some charitable institutions are maintained by donations. A fraternity of Augustine monks is said to have once existed near the town; and there are still the remains of a building which tradition affirms to have been a chapel of ease, at a period when Sidmouth belonged to the parish of Otterton, on the road to which place is an ancient stone cross. A fort, also, mounting four pieces of ordnance, formerly stood near the town. The head of a Roman standard was lately found on the beach, and is supposed to have been washed up by the sea; it consists of a centaur in bronze, and a figure riding behind him, with a panther leaping up in front of the group, which is about eight inches in height, and evidently formed the head of a standard of the second legion under the Emperor Carausius in Britain. Sidmouth gives the title of Viscount to the family of Adington.

SIGGLESTHORNE (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of York; containing, with the townships of Catfoss, Little Hatfield, Seaton with Wassand, and part of Great Hatfield, 639 inhabitants, of whom 220 are in the township of Sigglesthorne, 13 miles (N. by E.) from Hull. This place, in the Domesday survey Siglestone, was, together with its church, bestowed by the Conqueror upon the collegiate church of Beverley, the provosts of which successively became lords of the manor; and in 1314, Provost Melton obtained from the crown the grant of a fair, to be held on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Lawrence, but which is now discontinued. The parish comprises 5513*a. 1r. 2p.* of arable, pasture, and meadow land under profitable cultivation, and the village, which is well built, is pleasantly situated on the road to Hull. The living is a rectory valued in the king's books at £31. 1. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £685: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1772. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and was repaired in 1831, when an east window of stained glass was inserted by the rector, the Hon. and

Rev. W. H. E. Bentinck, who, also, in 1838 presented a service of communion plate. The churchyard is spacious, and appropriately ornamented; and the rectory-house, built in 1767, is a handsome residence, beautifully situated near it, in grounds tastefully embellished. Marmaduke Constable, Esq., of Wassand, in 1810, bequeathed £400, reduced by the legacy duty to £360, and now producing £12. 6. 4., to the parochial school here, which is supported by subscription; and a school for girls and an infant school have been built, and are maintained by the rector. The interest of £360, arising from a bequest by Mr. T. Gibson, is distributed among the poor of the parish.

SIGNET, with UPTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BURFORD, union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Burford; containing 218 inhabitants.

SIGSTON, KIRBY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTON-SHIRE, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Sowerby-under-Cotcliffe and Winton, 296 inhabitants, of whom 121 are in the township of Kirby-Sigston, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from North-Allerton. The parish comprises by computation 3510 acres, of which about 1560 are in Kirby-Sigston township, and mostly the property of Sir Charles Slingsby, Bart., who is lord of the manor. The village is situated a little to the west of the road between Borrowby and Ellerbeck. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4.

SILCHESTER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Basingstoke; containing 403 inhabitants. This place, situated near the border of Berkshire, was the Caer Seiont or Segont of the Britons, and the Vinconum of the Romans, having been one of the principal stations of the latter in the south of England, and the spot where the usurper Constantine was invested with the purple, in the year 407. About 493, it was destroyed by the Saxon chief, Ælla, on his march to Bath from the coast of Sussex, where he had made his landing. The inclosed area is in the form of an irregular octagon, nearly a mile and a half in circumference; the walls are most perfect on the south side, being in some places nearly twenty feet high. About 150 yards from the north-east angle of the walls is a Roman amphitheatre, now covered with trees; and about a mile and a half to the north-west, near a village called the Soak, are some remains of a camp. In 1833, the walls of the Thermæ, or Roman hot-baths, were discovered, while sinking a drain about 200 yards from the church; the foundations of a building eighty feet in length were fully exposed to view, and about 200 coins were found. The parish comprises 1881 acres, of which 174 are common or waste; the soil is partly gravel, and partly clay; the surface is elevated, and enriched with wood, of which oak and elm are the most prevalent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; and in the gift of the Duke of Wellington: the tithes have been commuted for £410, and the glebe comprises 56 acres. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, with later additions. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists; also a national school. Silchester confers the title of Baron upon the family of Pakenham, earls of Longford.

SILEBY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (E.) from Mountsorrel; containing 1473 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the west by the river Soar, comprises about 2300 acres; the soil is fertile, producing grain of all kinds, and the meadow and pasture lands are rich; the surface is elevated, and the scenery pleasing. One of the intermediate stations on the line of the Midland-Counties' railway is situated here. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 15. 5.; net income, £158; patron and impropiator, W. Pochin, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1759. The church has a highly-enriched tower. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. William Lane, in 1639, bequeathed property now producing £34. 10. per annum, of which one-seventh part is paid to the vicar, and the remainder distributed among the poor; and the Rev. William Staveley, in 1702, founded a small free school.

SILFIELD, a township, in the parish of WYMONDHAM, incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Wymondham; containing 592 inhabitants. Stanfield Hall, in this township, the seat of the Rev. George Preston, is a spacious Elizabethan mansion, surrounded with a moat; a chapel adjoining it, a handsome structure in the later English style, was destroyed by fire in 1826.

SILKSTONE (All Saints), a parish, in the wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelry of Barnsley, and the townships of Dodworth, Hoyland-Swaine, Stainbrough, and Thurgoland, and parts of West Bretton and Cumberworth, 19,820 inhabitants, of whom 1076 are in Silkstone township, 4 miles (S. W.) from Barnsley. This parish, which is on the Doncaster road to Manchester, comprises 14,530 acres; the soil is generally fertile, and notwithstanding the numerous manufactures carried on in the various districts, a considerable part of the population is agricultural. The coal here is of the best kind, and extensively wrought, chiefly by the trustees of the late B. C. Clarke, Esq.; and there are also quarries of good building-stone. For conveying the produce of the mines, and bringing up line, which is much used for tillage, a railroad, two miles in length, has been laid down from the collieries to the basin of the Barnsley canal, whence the coal is sent to London and other markets. The village is on the western boundary of a picturesque valley watered by a small rivulet; some of the inhabitants are employed in hand-loom weaving, and in the making of nails. The neighbourhood abounds with pleasing scenery, richly embellished with wood, and the surface is boldly undulated. Noblethorpe, the residence of Mrs. B. C. Clarke, is a handsome mansion, finely situated here. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 13. 4.; net income, £300, with an excellent parsonage-house and fine gardens; patron, the Archbishop of York. The tithes of the commons were commuted for land, under an act of inclosure, in 1799. The church is an ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the later English style, with an embattled tower strengthened by panelled buttresses and crowned with pinnacles; it contains a splendid monument to Gen. Sir William Wentworth, Bart., of Bretton Park, who commanded the forces in Ireland in the reign of Charles I., and there are several other monuments to the Wentworths, of Wentworth Castle and Bretton. Churches have been built at Stainbrough and Thurgoland; and one is about to be erected at Dodworth; the expense of all three derived from grants by the Ripon and Incorporated Societies and the Parliamentary Commissioners, with subscriptions collected by the present incumbent, the Rev. Henry Watkins. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; also a school, erected by the parishioners, and endowed by the Rev. John Clarkson, in 1754, with a house, some cottages, and five acres of land, producing £23 per annum. Ellen Cutler, in 1633, bequeathed closes, producing, with other bequests, £25 per annum, for the poor.

SILKSWORTH, a township, in the parish of BISHOP-WEARMOUTH, union of HOUGHTON-LE-SPRING, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Sunderland; containing 267 inhabitants. Here was anciently a chapel dedicated to St. Leonard, which probably went to decay upon the general dissolution of chantries. The monks of Durham had lands in Silksworth; and Farnton-Hall, a hamlet and estate within its limits, was parcel of the possessions of the monastery of Hexham, to which institution Thorney Close, a farm also here, perhaps belonged in addition. The township comprises 2099 acres, of which 1384 are arable, 599 pasture and meadow, 90 woodland, and 25 roads and waste. The surface is undulated, and interspersed with plantations, and the soil is chiefly loam, on a substratum of limestone, of which some quarries are wrought; magnesian limestone also shows itself in various places, and coal exists below. A manufactory for bricks and tiles is carried on. Lieut.-Col. Beckwith and W. Robinson Robinson, Esq., have residences in the township: the village lies near the south-western boundary of the parish. The tithes and Easter dues have been commuted for £299. 12.

SILPHO, with HARWOOD-DALE, a chapelry, in the parish of HACKNESS, union of SCARBOROUGH, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Scarborough; containing 335 inhabitants, of whom 93 are in the hamlet of Silpho. The township is mostly bleak moorland hills: through the dale flows one of the sources of the Derwent.

SILSDEN, a chapelry, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of KEIGHLEY, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Keighley; containing 2346 inhabitants. This chapelry, anciently Sighelden, is situated in a valley on the road from Addingham to Burnley, and is bounded on the south by the river Aire; it comprises by admeasurement 6908 acres, of which 700 are arable, 242 wood, and 5966 pasture, moorland, &c., the whole the property, with the exception of 800 acres, of the Earl of Thanet, who is lord of the manor. The soil is various; a portion of the moor has been inclosed and brought into cultivation; coal of inferior quality is found, and there are some quarries of excellent building-stone. The population is partly employed in the woollen and cotton manufactures, which are carried on in the several hamlets; and about 100 persons are engaged in the making of nails. The village is romantically situated, and the surrounding scenery beautifully diversified; in the vicinity is the pleasant residence of William Wright, Esq. The Leeds and Liverpool canal passes through the distract. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, and originally erected in 1711, was rebuilt in 1816, by the Earl of Thanet and his tenants, and is a neat structure, with a square tower: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, the earl. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a school is chiefly supported by the earl. Mr. Thomas Townsend, in 1683, bequeathed £50 to the poor, now vested in the purchase of five acres of land.

SILSOE, a chapelry, in the parish of FLITTON, union of AMPHILL, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Bedford; containing 788 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 2090*a.* 1*r.* 37*p.*, of which 662 acres are arable, 1260 pasture and meadow, and 133 woodland. A market and an annual fair were granted to the inhabitants in 1319; the former has been long discontinued, but the fair is still held on the festival of St. Peter and St. James, and an additional one takes place on the 21st of September. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1809. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, was rebuilt in 1830, chiefly at the expense of Lord de Grey, and is a handsome structure in the later English style. Schools are supported by his lordship.

SILTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of MERE, hundred of REDLANE, Shaston division of DORSET, 5 miles (E.) from Wincanton; containing 385 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1257 acres, of which 85 are common or waste; the substratum contains stone of good quality for building, of which there are several quarries; and the linen manufacture is carried on to a moderate extent, affording employment to about 100 persons. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. Martin: the tithes have been commuted for £330, and the glebe comprises 61 acres. The church is a neat structure, with a low square tower and a south porch, and contains an elegant monument to Sir Hugh Wyndham, Knt., chief justice of the court of common pleas in the reign of Charles II., who, and his wife and son, are interred in the chancel. Two schools are supported by subscription.

SILTON, NETHER, a chapelry, in the parish of LEAKE, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Thirsk; containing 188 inhabitants. This place, which includes Guelddable, comprises by computation 2610 acres of land. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Leake. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school partly supported by F. Hicks, Esq.

SILTON, OVER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Kepwick, 271 inhabitants, of whom 98 are in Over Silton township, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Thirsk. The parish comprises by measurement 1137 acres, of which 178 are arable, 480 meadow and pasture, 99 woods and plantations, and 380 moorland: excellent stone is quarried for building. From a mountain at the north end of the village is one of the most extensive views perhaps in England, having under the eye the whole extent of the beautiful vale of Mowbray, and the Westmorland mountains, which latter, though at some distance, add greatly to the prospect. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £69; patrons and impropriators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, whose tithes have been commuted for £161. 8.: there is a glebe of $13\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church, before the Dissolution, was under the priory of Newburgh, and one of the priests came thence once every month, to officiate here.

SILVERDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of WARTON, union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Burton-in-Kendal; containing 252 inhabitants. It is situated on the bay of Morecambe. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £47; patron, the Vicar of Warton. The chapel was erected in 1830, containing 190 sittings, 100 of which are free.

SILVERLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of CHEVELEY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Newmarket; containing 20 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Ashley, and valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; impropriator, the Marquess of Bute.

SILVERSTONE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Towcester; containing 985 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Brackley to Towcester, and comprises 1654 acres. The living is annexed, with that of Whittlebury, to the rectory of Greens-Norton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SILVERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (N. N. E.) from Exeter; containing 1384 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Tiverton to Exeter, near the Great Western railway; the substratum is partly of the red sandstone, and partly of the clay slate formation. The manor is the joint property of the Earl of Egremont, whose seat is in the parish, and the Earl of Ilchester; the former has seven-twelfths, and the latter five. The village is on a commanding eminence, and fairs are held in it on Feb. 13th and July 2nd. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £51. 8. 4., and in the patronage of the earls of Egremont and Ilchester, the former having seven turns and the latter five: the tithes have been commuted for £925, and the glebe contains $89\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a handsome specimen of the later English style, and adjoining it are some slight remains of an ancient chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free school was founded in 1724, by John Richards, who gave £1200 for its erection and support; the annual income is £90. Forty girls also are instructed in a school supported by voluntary contributions. On a hill on the eastern side of the parish are the remains of a British encampment. The Rev. William Bolton, rector of the parish in the time of the parliamentary war, was ejected from the living, and deprived of his patrimonial inheritance for loyalty to the king.

SILVINGTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, hundred of OVERS, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (N. W.) from Cleobury-Mortimer; containing 46 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the joint patronage of the family of Fowler and Theophilus Salwey, Esq.; net income, £100.

SIMMONDLEY, a township, in the parish and union of GLOSSOP, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Chapel-en-le-Frith; containing 592 inhabitants.

SIMONBURN (St. SIMON), a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND; containing, with the township of Haughton, and the chapelry of Humshaugh, 1029 inhabitants, of whom 500 are in the township of Simonburn, 9 miles (N. W. by N.) from Hexham. This parish was formerly the largest in the county, about 33 miles in length, and 14 in breadth, diversified with mountains and valleys of picturesque character, and bounded by the Roman wall on the south; but in 1814 it was divided, pursuant to an act procured in 1811, into six parishes and rectories, the livings of all which are in the gift of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital, to whom the manor of the ancient parish belongs, and from whose funds the churches were erected. The parish is separated by the North Tyne river from Cholerton, and comprises 13,372 acres, of which 2967 are arable, 9827 pasture, and 459 wood; the farms are principally for the dairy, and the arable land produces good crops; the scenery is pleasingly varied, and the timber is chiefly beech and ash, and the plantations fir. The substratum abounds with coal, and iron-ore was formerly obtained. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £34. 6. 3. for the ancient parish, and in the gift of the Governors, who, in 1841, presented the Rev. Meyrick Beebee: the tithes have been commuted for £542, and there is a good rectory-house, with about 80 acres of glebe. The church, repaired and beautified in 1821, contains monuments to the families of Allgood and Ridley. Giles Heron left an estate, now let for £180 per annum, for teaching and apprenticing children, and affording relief to adults. The castle here was entirely destroyed in expectation of finding some hidden treasure, but part of the west end was rebuilt in 1766. In 1735, a stone inscribed to Ulpian and Sabinus, Roman lieutenants in Britain, was found in taking down part of the rectory-house.

SIMONSTONE, a township, in the parish of WHALLEY, union of BURNLEY, Higher division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Burnley; containing 416 inhabitants.

SIMONSWOOD, a township, in the parish of WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Ormskirk; containing 493 inhabitants. It comprises 2483 acres, of which 391 are common or waste land. The tithes have been commuted for £122, all payable to the rector, except £1 to the vicar.

SIMONWARD.—See BREWARD, St.

SIMPSON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing 585 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south-east by a branch of the river Ouse, and is intersected by the Grand Junction canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 6. 8., and in the gift of Sir John Hanmer, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1770. The church is a handsome structure in the Norman style, and contains in the chancel a fine monument to Sir T. Salden Hanmer and his lady, with others. Thomas Pigot, in 1573, bequeathed property now producing a rental of about £50, for the poor.

SINDERBY, a township, in the parish of PICKHILL, union of THIRSK, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Thirsk; containing 103 inhabitants. It comprises an area of 542*a.* 1*r.* 20*p.*: the village is situated near the Leeming-lane, and a short distance from the river Swale, which flows on the east. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £208, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. In a field here called Chapel field, adjoining the village, are indications of there having been a chapel.

SINGLEBOROUGH, a hamlet, in the parish of GREAT HORWOOD, union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (N.) from Winslow; containing 113 inhabitants.

SINGLETON, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKHAM, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Poulton; containing, in Great and Little Singleton, 391 inhabitants. A fair for sheep and cattle is held on September 21st. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £110; patron, H. Hornby, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £399. 13. 2., of which £43. 5. are payable to the vicar, and £353. 11. 6. to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford. The chapel, consecrated in 1754, is dedicated to St. Anne. There is a place of worship for Roman Catholics; also a national school.

SINGLETON, a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of WESTBOURN and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 6 miles (S.) from Midhurst; containing, with the hamlet of Charlton, 563 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2200 acres: the village is situated on the road from London to Chichester, by way of Midhurst. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of West Dean and chapelry of Binderton, and valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4. The church is in the later English style, with a square tower. Henry Smith, about 1640, left land to the poor, now producing £60 per annum; and there are schools for boys and girls, the latter supported by Mrs. Colonel Wyndham. St. Roche's or Rook's Hill, an elevation 702 feet above the sea, skirts the southern boundary of the parish; and near its summit is an ancient encampment known by the name of the Trundle, a corruption of Roundal, indicating its circular form. It includes an area of about five acres, has a deep fosse, and an outer and inner vallum; the inner vallum is raised to the height of about four feet all round the edge of the inclosure. In the centre are remains of a cell, now level with the ground, the walls of which are composed of flints cemented with mortar so hard as to render them almost immovable; its size is 14 feet by 11.

SINNINGTON, a parish, in the union of PICKERING, partly in PICKERING lythe, and partly in the wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Little Edstone and Marton, 623 inhabitants, of whom 368 are in Sinnington township, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Pickering. The river Seven runs through this parish, which is situated on the road from Pickering to Helmsley, and comprises 2075*a.* 33*p.*, whereof 1254 acres are arable, 723 pasture, and 96 woodland; the soil is a rich clayey loam, the surface undulated, and the scenery picturesque. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £84; patron and impropiator, the Master of Hemsworth school: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1786. The church was built from the remains of a monastery, and was beautified in 1841. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. An annuity of £25 is paid from the estate of Lady Lumley, for instruction, and coal for the school.

SINWELL, with BRADLEY, a tything, in the parish of WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 2504 inhabitants.

SISLAND (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of LODDON, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. W.) from Loddon; containing 64 inhabitants. It comprises 455a. 1r. 6p., of which 340 acres are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 9.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. William Hobson. The tithes have been commuted for £132. 15., and the glebe comprises 17 acres, with a handsome house, built by the present rector. The church is a neat edifice, with a campanile turret; on the north side are the remains of an ancient chapel.

SISTON (St. ANNE), a parish, in the union of KEYNSHAM, hundred of PUCKLECHURCH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Bristol; containing 1014 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in making pins. The parish comprises 1826 acres, of which 118 are common or waste. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of F. Trotman, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £360, and the glebe comprises 14 acres. Here is a national school.

SITHNEY (St. SITHNEY), a parish, in the union of HELSTON, hundred of KERRIER, W. division of CORNWALL, 2 miles (N. W.) from Helston; containing 3362 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the south-west by Mount's bay, includes the chief part of Porthleven fishing-cove, and nearly the whole of Loe pool, and comprises 5447 acres, of which 311 are common or waste; the substratum abounds in minerals, and there are mines of lead, copper, and tin, of which the two last are at present in operation. At Porthleven is a small harbour capable of floating vessels of 200 tons, which land cargoes of coal and timber, the chief imports of the place. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 11. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Exeter; impropiator, S. T. Spry, Esq., whose tithes have been commuted for £522, and those of the vicar for £430; the former has 104, and the latter 19, acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure, and contains some fine remains of stained glass. A chapel of ease was consecrated at Porthleven on the 24th of August, 1841, and dedicated to St. Bartholomew; it is a handsome structure in the Norman style, and contains 300 sittings. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also two schools supported by subscription, and another partly maintained by the curate. At Truthal are the remains of an ancient chapel; and there was formerly an hospital dedicated to St. John, of which there are no vestiges. On Longston Downs is a rude pile of stones, one of which was once a logan rock, called Mên-Amber;

it is 11 feet long, 6 wide, and 4 thick. Several stone battle-axes were found at Venton Vedna, in the year 1799.

SITTINGBOURNE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, and formerly a corporate and market town, in the union and hundred of MILTON, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 10 miles (E. N. E.) from Maidstone; containing 2352 inhabitants. It is an incident worthy of notice in the ancient history of this town that Henry V. was entertained at the Red Lion here, by John Northwood, a gentleman then resident in the vicinity, at the small expense of nine shillings and ninepence; and several other English monarchs have occasionally honoured the place with their presence. The town is situated on the road from Canterbury to London, and consists of one long wide street; in the neighbourhood are a manufactory for oil-cake, and a cement-mill. A weekly market and two annual fairs were bestowed by charter of Elizabeth; the latter are held on Whit-Monday and October 10th, for linen and woollen goods, hardware, &c.; and there is a great market every three months. By the same grant, the inhabitants were incorporated, under the style of "Guardian and Free Tenants," which was subsequently changed by another charter into that of "Mayor and Jurats;" they likewise had the privilege of sending two members to parliament, but this was merely nominal, and, it seems, never exercised. The parish comprises 977a. 3r. 27p., of which 592 acres are arable, 84 pasture, 64 woodland, 101 orchard and garden grounds, and about 8 hop plantations. The Milton creek, which bounds the parish on the north, is navigable at Crown Quay, and hoys sail thence to London. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10: the appropriate tithes, belonging to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is patron, have been commuted for £345, and the vicarial for £192, to which his grace has added £40 per annum; the glebe comprises 2 acres. The church was, with the exception of the walls, destroyed by fire in 1762; the present edifice exhibits specimens in the decorated and later English styles, and contains a fine enriched octagonal font, and some curious monuments. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported. In digging for clay within the last few years, several bodies have been discovered, which appear to have been buried here after some sanguinary conflict, as swords, javelins, and other weapons were found near them, with urns containing beads and ashes; several fibulæ were also dug up, adorned with precious stones. About a quarter of a mile from the field are the remains of the ancient castle of Bayford, erected for the protection of the adjoining country.

SIX-HILLS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGÖE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. S. E.) from Market-Rasen; containing 205 inhabitants. A Gilbertine priory of nuns and canons, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded here by one Grella, or Greslei, and at the Dissolution had a revenue of £170. 8. 9.; the site was granted to Sir Thomas Heneage. The parish comprises about 1500 acres, of which the soil is partly marl, and partly clay, alternated with sand; the surface is hilly and varied; the substratum contains limestone, which is quarried for burning into lime, and also for building. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £67, with a small glebe and house; patron and impropiator, George F. Heneage, Esq. The church is a neat plain structure. There was, till lately, a place of worship for Roman Catholics.

SIZEWELL, a hamlet, in the parish of LEISTON, union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Aldborough; containing 66 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Nicholas. Sizewell Gap, a small bay on the coast, was once a notorious place for smuggling.

SKECKLING (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Hull; containing 810 inhabitants. The parish, which includes the townships of Burstwick and Ryhill, comprises about 4000 acres; the soil is a stiff clayey loam; the surface is undulated, and the scenery diversified. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £219; patron and impropiator, Sir T. A. Clifford Constable, Bart. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1773. In the chancel of the church is a fine painting of the Lord's Supper.

SKEEBY, a township, in the parish of EASBY, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Richmond; containing 175 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 770 acres of land, and is situated on the road from Richmond to Middleton-Tyas. A school, built in 1839, serves as a chapel of ease.

SKEFFINGTON (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of BILLESDON, hundred of EAST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 10 miles (E. by S.) from Leicester; containing 187 inhabitants. The parish is situated in the eastern part of the county, and intersected by the road from Leicester to Uppingham and Stamford; it comprises by measurement 2127 acres, principally pasture and woodland, consisting chiefly of oak, elm, and ash. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 9.; net income, £446, arising from 236 acres of glebe; patron, T. R. Davenport, Esq. The church is ancient, and capable of holding many hundred persons.

SKEFFLING (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Patrington; containing 200 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1613a. 1r. 25p., of which 244 acres are meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable land; the soil is of a productive quality; the surface is level and uninteresting. The village is situated about half a mile from the Humber, and three miles from the sea. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £53; patron and impropiator, the Rev. H. T. Holme. The church is principally in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a Sunday school.

SKEGBY, a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (W.) from Mansfield; containing 775 inhabitants. The substratum contains coal, of which some mines are in operation, and limestone, which is quarried for burning into lime. The village is pleasantly situated on the opposite acclivities of a deep valley near the source of the river Meden; the inhabitants are partly employed in frame-work knitting; about 100 frames are engaged. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron and impropiator, the Duke of Portland, as lessee under the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The church is a small stone edifice, on an eminence some distance from the village. A national school has been recently established.

SKEGNESS (ST. CLEMENT), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the wapentake of CAN- DLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Burgh; containing 316 inhabitants. According to Leland, here was once a considerable town, having a haven and a castle, and surrounded by walls; but it was swallowed up by the sea. From its situation on an advantageous part of the coast, the place is resorted to by visitors for sea-bathing, and is also a coast-guard station, of which the head-quarters are at Great Grinsby. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; net income, £103; patron, the Earl of Scarborough.

SKELBROOKE, a chapelry, in the parish of SOUTH KIRBY, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Doncaster; containing 104 inhabitants. This place is memorable for a meeting here in 1541, between Henry VIII. and the clergy of York, headed by their archbishop, who presented that monarch with the sum of £600. The chapelry, which includes part of the ancient forest of Barnsdale, the celebrated haunt of Robin Hood, comprises by computation 1200 acres, the property of John P. Nevile, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The village is situated on the north bank of the small river Skell, from which it takes its name, and the surrounding scenery is pleasing. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, is a small ancient structure, repaired a few years since: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, Mr. Nevile.

SKELDING, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Ripon; containing 48 inhabitants. The township comprises 963 acres, including 180 waste land or common, and is chiefly the property of Mrs. Lawrence, who is lady of the manor. The village is situated on the north bank of the small river Skell, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified.

SKELLINGTHORPE (ST. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Lincoln; containing 533 inhabitants. The parish comprises 5462a. 1r. 8p., chiefly the property of Christ's Hospital, London: the Fosse Dyke navigation, connecting the rivers Trent and Witham, passes within a quarter of a mile of the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 9.; net income, £31; patron and impropiator, the Master of Spittal Hospital: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1804. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is partly supported by the governors of Christ's Hospital, and partly by the parish.

SKELLOW, a township, in the parish of OWSTON, union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Doncaster; containing 206 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1000 acres. The tithes were commuted for land in 1801, and there is a glebe of 35a. 1r. 27p. A school is partly supported by P. D. Cooke, Esq.

SKELMANTHORPE, a hamlet, in the township of CUMBERWORTH, parishes of HIGH HOYLAND and EMLEY, union of HUDDERSFIELD, wapentake of STAINCROSS and AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from Huddersfield; containing 1420 inhabitants. The hamlet comprises about 1430 acres of profitable land, of which the substratum contains freestone of excellent quality, and some coal. The inhabitants are partly employed in the manufacture of worsted and silk goods, for which there are several mills, and in the weaving of fancy waistcoatings. A fair for cattle and pigs is held at Michaelmas. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported partly by a small endowment, and by subscription. On the inclosure of Cumberworth common, seven acres were allotted to this hamlet, now producing £10. 10. per annum, of which £6 are paid to a schoolmaster, and the remainder distributed among the poor.

SKELMERSDALE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Ormskirk; containing 691 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 1774 acres, of which 108 are common or waste land; the substratum contains coal, which has been explored at various times, though no mines are at present in operation; there is also a quarry of stone, chiefly used for paving, and for building walls. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £142; patron, the Vicar of Ormskirk. A rent-charge of £220 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes. The chapel was erected in 1776. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school has an income of £45, arising partly from an endowment by Evan Swift, Esq., in 1720. Skelmersdale gives the title of Baron to the family of Bootle-Wilbraham.

SKELSMERGH, a township, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Kendal; containing 293 inhabitants. It is bounded on every side, except the east, by the small rivers Kent, Mint, and Sprint, upon which are corn, worsted, bobbin, and dye-wood mills. Here are the remains of a chapel dedicated to St. John the Baptist; and at Doddington-Green is one for Roman Catholics.

SKELTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing, with the townships of Lamonby and Unthank, 788 inhabitants, of whom 314 are in Skelton township, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Penrith. Freestone and limestone are obtained here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £43. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £294; patrons, the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church, an ancient structure thoroughly repaired in 1794, formerly contained a richly-endowed chantry. A free school, erected in 1750, by Isaac Milner, was endowed in 1817, by the Rev. Joseph Nelson, with £1000, now producing upwards of £32 a year; and another school is partly supported by Joseph Cooper, Esq.

SKELTON, a township, in the parish and union of HOWDEN, wapentake of HOWDENSIRE, E. riding of YORK, 2 miles (S. E. by S.) from Howden; containing 212 inhabitants. It is situated on the left bank of the river Ouse, which almost surrounds it, and sometimes overflows the lower parts; it consists of about 1560 acres of land, nearly flat, and a large portion arable, producing wheat and potatoes; the soil is various. Sand Hall is the residence and property of William Scholfield, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1809. There is a Wesleyan meeting-house. The poor receive the rent of about 5 acres of land, an allotment on the inclosure of Walling fen; and another small charity is employed in apprenticing children of the place.

SKELTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from York, on the road to Easingwold; containing 89 inhabitants. The parish is bounded by the river Ouse on the south and west, on which sides it is also skirted by the Great North of England railway, and comprises 2406 acres; the surface is level, the soil a strong clay, and the lands well wooded. The township of Skelton is partly in this parish, but chiefly in that of Overton; and contains 367 inhabitants; it is celebrated for its rural beauty, and is the residence of many genteel families. Skelton Hall, the seat of W. D. Thornton Duesbery, Esq., J.P., was the site of a monastery attached to St. Mary's abbey at York; it has a park of 100 acres, and is surrounded with 430 acres of land, part of which was the property of the late William Wilberforce. Fairfield, the residence of H. Stafford Thompson, Esq., stands within a park of 85 acres; and here is also a cottage residence occupied by Mrs. Hodgson. The living is a rectory; net income, £116; patron, Joshua Hepworth, Esq. The church is a small but very handsome edifice, and a curious and beautiful model of the early English style, with decorated portions; it is sometimes called Little St. Peter, having been built with the stone that remained after the erection of the south transept of York minster. A parochial school for girls is supported by subscription; and there is a school for boys, also in the parish. Two gold coins of Edward I. were lately found near the surface of the ground, and are now in the possession of Col. Smith, of Plainville; and a Roman urn, containing ashes, was discovered in the year 1841.

SKELTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GUISBOROUGH, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Moorsholm with Girrick, and that of Stanghoe, 1053 inhabitants, of whom 628 are in Skelton township, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Guisborough. This place, at the Conquest, was given to Robert de Brus, a Norman baron who came over with William, and who erected a castle here, of which there are scarcely any vestiges remaining, the whole having been modernised in 1794. From this baron descended some of the kings of Scotland, and the present family of Bruce, marquesses of Ailesbury. A market, originally held on Sunday, but subsequently altered to Saturday, and a fair at Whitsuntide, have been both discontinued. The parish forms part of the district of Cleveland, and comprises by measurement 11,460 acres, of which about two-thirds are arable, and one-third pasture; the soil on the high lands is light, and in the low grounds a strong clay; the loftier parts abound with freestone, and command a fine view of the German Ocean, by which the parish is bounded on the north. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Brotton annexed; net income, £137; patron and appropriator, the Archbishop of York: the tithes were commuted for land in 1806. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SKELTON, a hamlet, in the parish of MARSK, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK; containing 70 inhabitants. This village, which stands about a mile west of that of Marsk, is a little to the north of the road between Richmond and Reeth, and upon the south-western bank of a tributary of the Swale; it has a mansion of considerable antiquity, formerly owned successively by the families of Williams, Bathurst, Turner, and Stapleton.

SKELTON, a chapelry, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Ripon; containing 403 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises by computation 1200 acres, a large portion of which is the property of the Earl de Grey: the village is seated on the river Ure, about two miles and a half west-north-west of Boroughbridge. The chapel, handsomely built in the early English style, was erected in 1811 by the Earl de Grey and the inhabitants, jointly: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Ripon, and has a net income of £87. There are two schools, founded and supported by the earl and his countess.

SKELWITH, with MONK-CONISTON, a township, in the parish of HAWKSHEAD, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Ambleside; containing 470 inhabitants. A church was erected and endowed by Mr. Redmayne, on the Brathey Hall estate here, in 1835, and consecrated the year following; it is a neat edifice, on the road from Hawkshead to Ambleside, near Brathey bridge, where are two pleasing cascades, and some fine views.

SKENDLEBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHEOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. E. by N.) from Spilsby; containing 289 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 0. 5.; net income, £155; patron and appropriator, Lord Willoughby de Eresby. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Eight acres of land, divided into twenty-nine portions, are occupied by cottagers rent-free; and a bequest of £5 per annum, by Mrs. Pilkington, is expended in providing gowns for widows.

SKENFRETHER, or SKENFRITH (St. BRIDGET), in the division and hundred of SKENFRETHER, union and county of MONMOUTH, 7½ miles (N. N. W.) from Monmouth; containing 610 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 4650 acres, of which the soil in the low grounds is a stiff loam, but light on the elevated lands, from which the views are beautiful, especially from the Graig hill, whence may be seen ten counties. The river Monnow intersects a small portion of the parish opposite the village, by the erection of a bridge over which, in 1824, at the expense of £1000, defrayed by the county, the road from Ross to Abergavenny is shortened six miles. There are quarries of good flagstone, and of stone for making roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 10½., in the patronage of Mrs. S. Pugh, and endowed with a portion of the impropriate tithes: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £115, and the glebe consists of 17 acres. The church has a nave, chancel, and aisles, with a low square tower; the pulpit is of stone, and in the north aisle is an altar-tomb to John Morgan and Anne his wife, with the date 1564. A national school was erected in 1842. Of the ancient castle here, standing on the west bank of the Monnow, and apparently of a date anterior to the Conquest, nothing remains but the keep and outer wall; it was defended by six towers, and a moat supplied from the river.

SKERNE, a parish, in the union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (S. E. by S.) from Great Driffield; containing 213 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2600 acres, chiefly the property of Richard Arkwright, Esq., who is lord of the manor: the village is pleasantly situated, and the Driffield canal bounds the parish on the east. There is a large mill for grinding bones for manure. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £71; patron and impropiator, Mr. Arkwright. The Wesleyans have a meeting-house.

SKERTON, a township, in the parish of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, ¾ of a mile (N.) from Lancaster; containing 1665 inhabitants. This is a large village, separated from the town of Lancaster by the river Lune, in which is a considerable salmon-fishery. A church has been erected, which was consecrated on the 14th of November, 1833; and there is a free school, built by Jane Jephson, and endowed with £10 a year by Henry Williamson, in 1767. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £74.

SKETCHLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of ASTON-FRAMVILLE, union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 1¼ mile (S. by W.) from Hinckley; containing 47 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel.

SKEWSBY, a hamlet, in the parish of DALBY, union of EASINGWOULD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 8¾ miles (E. by N.) from Easingwould; containing 105 inhabitants. It is situated on a tributary of the Derwent, and about a mile west of Dalby.

SKEYTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of AYLHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (E. by S.) from Aylsham; containing 351 inhabitants. It comprises 1264a. 1r. 8p., of which about 1000 acres are arable, 197 pasture, and 57 woodland; the surface is varied, and one of the tributary streams of the river Bure runs on the south-west. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Oxnead and the vicarage of Buxton annexed, valued in the king's books at £9. 10.; net income, £646; patron, S. Big-nold, Esq. The incumbent's tithes have been commuted for £343, and £15 are payable to the rector of Swanton-Abbot. The church is a small structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and is situated on an eminence.

SKIDBROOK (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth; containing 351 inhabitants. This parish, situated on the German Ocean, comprises 2165*a*. 2*r*. 10*p.*, of which 189 acres are arable, 1270 pasture, 226 meadow, and 400 salt-marsh and common; the surface is flat, but well drained, and abundant crops are produced, the soil being generally a rich clay, resting upon a substratum of black earth, in which marine shells are thickly imbedded. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 3. 6.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. J. M. Phillips. The impropriate tithes, belonging to Lot Ward, Esq., have been commuted for £116, and the vicarial for £377; the glebe comprises 4 acres, and a good parsonage-house has been recently erected. The church, standing in the fields to the west of Saltfleet, is an ancient and fine structure, with a square tower, and is exceedingly neat in the interior, which is well pewed, and contains a pulpit of solid oak bearing the date 1628. A Sunday school in connexion with the Establishment is supported by the vicar. There is a strong chalybeate spring.—See SALT FLEET.

SKIDBY, a parish, in the union of BEVERLEY, Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Beverley; containing 361 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1497*a*. 1*r*. 22*p.*, of which by far the greater portion is arable: the village is long and scattered, and is situated on the eastern edge of the wolds. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Cottingham: the church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Baptists; and a school, built by subscription, in 1813, is endowed with £150 navy five per cent. annuities, purchased with money left by John Marshall, in 1803, for the instruction of eight poor children.

SKILGATE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DULVERTON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (E.) from Dulverton; containing 271 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 4½.; net income, £192; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Richard Bere.

SKILLINGTON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Colsterworth; containing 432 inhabitants, and consisting of 1214 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 4½.; net income, £126; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1794; the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the early and decorated English styles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is supported by subscription.

SKINBURNESS, a village, in the parish of HOLME-CULTRAM, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 11½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wigton. This place had anciently a market and a fair, granted to the abbot of Holme-Cultram, and was of considerable importance as a depôt from which the army employed against the Scots was supplied with stores. About 1303, the town was washed away by an irruption of the sea, and the abbot, in consequence, having obtained licence to erect a church at Arlosh, a new town was there built, called Newton-Arlosh. Skinburness is now a pleasant village and respectable bathing-place, commanding a view over the Solway Firth and of the Scottish mountains beyond. A very productive herring-fishery is carried on.

SKINNAND, a parish, in the Higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 11½ miles (N. W.) from Sleaford; containing 26 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Brant, and comprises 636 acres, of which 40 are arable, and the remainder old pasture and meadow; the soil is generally clay. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 11½.; net income, £85; patron, S. Nicholls, Esq. The church is in ruins.

SKINNINGROVE, a township, in the parochial chapelry of BROTTON, union of GUISBOROUGH, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 8 miles (N. E.) from Guisborough; containing 63 inhabitants. This was an ancient manor belonging to the Bruces, lords of Skelton, and came by marriage to the Thwengs, of Kilton, since whose time the principal families that have been connected with the spot in respect of property, are those of Fanacourt, Routh, Everingham, and Dundas. The township is in the district of Cleveland, and comprises about 250 acres of land; it has a small fishing-village, situated on a creek of the North Sea, and almost secluded from view by the lofty heights that closely environ it on every side. Anciently it was a fishing-town of some importance, "which throve," says Camden, "by the great variety of fish it took."

SKIPLAM, a township, in the parish of KIRKDALE, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Helmsley; containing 84 inhabitants. It is situated on the west side of Kirkdale, and comprises about 1740 acres of land, chiefly the property of Lord Feversham, who is lord of the manor.

SKIPSEA (ALL SAINTS), a parish, chiefly in the union of BRIDLINGTON, but partly in that of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Bonwick, and that of Dringhoe with Upton and Brough, and the chapelry of Ulrome, 797 inhabitants, of whom 358 are in Skipsea township, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Hornsea. The manor is one of those which have continued members of the seignior of Holderness to the present day. In the 12th of Edward III., the king granted a market to the place, to be held on Thursday in every week, and two fairs, to be held annually, one on All Saints'-day, and the other on the day of the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr. The parish is bounded on the east by the North Sea, and comprises by measurement 5050 acres, of which about one-third is pasture, and the remainder arable: the village is agreeably situated on slightly rising ground, and is neatly built. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 16.; patron and appropriator, the Archbishop of York; net income, £90. 16. 6., with a glebe of 5½ acres. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1764. The church is principally in the later English style, and is a neat edifice with a tower; the chancel was rebuilt in 1824, and the nave new-roofed in 1827. The Independents and Wesleyans have places of worship; and schools are supported, for the instruction of the children of the poor.

SKIPTON, a township, in the parish of TOPCLIFFE, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Thirsk; containing 128 inhabitants. It comprises about 820 acres of land, and is situated on the road between Thirsk and Ripon, which here crosses the Swale by a neat bridge of eight arches. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £27. 17. 6., and the appropriate for £175, payable to the Dean and Chapter of York.

SKIPTON (HOLY TRINITY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, chiefly in the E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWGROSS, but partly in the Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 44 miles (W.) from York, and 211 miles (N. N. W.) from London; containing, with the townships of Barden, Bolton-Abbey, Draughton, Embsay with Eastby, East Halton, Hazlewood with Storiths, and part of Beamsley, 6870 inhabitants, of whom 4842 are in the town. This place, which is the head of the richly-fertile grazing district of Craven, and of the honour of Skipton, and liberty of Clifford's Fee, derives its name, in the Domesday survey Scepton and Sceptune, and signifying the town of sheep, from the numerous sheep-walks with which it was anciently surrounded, and which, afterwards being stocked with deer, formed the spacious forest of Skipton, extending from the river Wharfe on the east, to the river Aire on the west, and including an area of 15,360 acres. This forest was under the superintendance of several keepers, each of whom resided in a strongly-built lodge, of which one at Barden was subsequently enlarged and fitted up as an occasional residence of the Clifford family, and is still remaining. At the time of the Conquest this place, as part of the manor of Bolton, belonged to the Saxon earl Edwin, brother of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, and was one of the last of the estates of which their Saxon lords were deprived. On its being wrested from Edwin, it was granted by the Conqueror to Robert de Romille, who, abandoning the seat of its ancient Saxon lords, fixed his baronial residence at Skipton, where he built a strong castle on the summit of a lofty rock, rising precipitously on the north side, and accessible only on the south, by a somewhat less arduous ascent. The manor, however, again became the property of its original Saxon lords, by the marriage of William de Meschines, the descendant of Edwin, with Cecilia, daughter and heiress of Robert de Romille, the founders of the abbey of Bolton; and after passing by marriage into the Albemarle family, subsequently reverted to the crown, and was bestowed by Edward II. on his favourite, Piers de Gaveston.

Upon the death of Gaveston, the barony of Skipton was granted by Edward II. to Robert, Lord Clifford, whose descendant, John de Clifford, taking part with the Lancastrians in the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, suffered an attainder in the reign of Edward IV., who conferred the barony on Sir Wm. Stanley. This attainder, however, was reversed on the accession of Henry VII., when Henry de Clifford, who, for nearly twenty-five years, had lived in concealment among the fells in Cumberland, was reinstated in his possessions, and created Earl of Cumberland. In 1513, he was appointed to a principal command in the English army at the battle of Flodden Field; and was succeeded after his death by his son Henry, who, for his signal services in suppressing the rebellion called the Pilgrimage of Grace, received from Henry VIII. a grant of the extensive revenues of Bolton Abbey. The barony continued in the Clifford family till the death of George, the seventeenth baron of Clifford, and third earl of Cumberland, who died in 1605, and by marriage with whose daughter and heiress Anne, it passed to the ancestors of the Earl of Thanet, the present lord. The ancient castle, for many generations the residence of the Cliffords, is a spacious quadrangular structure, defended at the angles and on the sides by massive circular towers, with an octangular tower at the extremity of the eastern side, built by the first Earl of Cumberland. It sustained several sieges during the wars of the houses of York and Lancaster; and in the reign of Charles I., it was garrisoned for the king, and held out against the parliamentarians for three years, when it was ultimately surrendered on terms, and was partly demolished. The damage it sustained was repaired by the Countess of Pembroke, in 1649, and the building was again rendered habitable; it still contains several stately apartments, with numerous family portraits, and is now occupied by Thomas Heelis, Esq., the steward of the Earl of Thanet.

The town is situated in a valley of luxuriant fertility and picturesque beauty, near the river Aire, and consists of two spacious and long streets, of which the one crosses the extremity of the other nearly at right angles; the houses are well built, chiefly of stone obtained in the neighbourhood. The streets are partially paved, and are lighted with gas from works erected in 1836, at the expense of a proprietary of £10 shareholders; and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water conveyed by pipes from a spring on Rumbles Moor. A subscription library has been established, and is well supported, and a newsroom has been opened in the town-hall; the environs abound with richly-diversified scenery, and from the higher parts are obtained views over the surrounding country. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton manufacture, which is carried on extensively, and for which there are several mills; and there is also an ale and porter brewery. The Leeds and Liverpool canal, which skirts the town on the south-west, affords every facility of conveyance, and contributes greatly to the increase of its trade. The market, which is abundantly supplied with corn, is on Saturday; and a large market for cattle and sheep is held every alternate Monday. Fairs take place on the 25th of March, the Saturdays before Palm and Easter Sundays, the first and third Tuesdays after Easter, on Whitsun-Eve, Aug. 5th, and Nov. 23rd, chiefly for sheep and cattle, and Sept. 23rd for horses. A constable is annually appointed at the court leet of the steward of the manor; and the general quarter-sessions for the West riding are held at Midsummer.

The parish comprises by computation 29,790 acres, including several manors, of which the Duke of Devonshire and the Earl of Thanet are the lords; the surface was anciently well stocked with timber, which from neglect has become scarce, and is found only in plantations of comparatively recent growth; the lands are chiefly in pasture, the substrata in many parts abound with minerals, and there are numerous quarries of valuable freestone and limestone. In the township are 3748 acres, of which 566 are common or waste. A mineral spring near the town is strongly impregnated with sulphur.

ented hydrogen and carbonic acid gases, carbonate of iron, sulphate of magnesia, muriate of soda and lime, and also with iodine; and a spa-room with convenient baths was built some time since by Dr. Dodgson, who allows the gratuitous use of them to the poor. The living is a rectory and a discharged vicarage, the former valued in the king's books at £4. 0. 10., and the latter at £10. 12. 6.; net income, £185, with a house; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church, which is situated near the castle, is an ancient structure of various periods, but chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, which was repaired by Lady Clifford, Countess Dowager of Pembroke, in 1655; four sedilia of stone in the south wall of the nave are almost the only remains of the original edifice. It contains numerous monuments to the Cliffords, whose place of interment it became after the dissolution of Bolton Abbey, and continued to be till the death of the last Earl of Cumberland; the ancient screen is richly decorated, and the font curiously sculptured. A church dedicated to Christ was erected in 1838, at an expense of £5000, including its endowment, raised by subscription, of which £3500 were given by Christopher Sidgwick, Esq., aided by a grant of £350 from the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar, with a net income of £120. There are places of worship for Friends, Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans.

The free grammar school was founded in 1548, by the Rev. William Ermystead, who endowed it with lands now producing more than £600 per annum, in addition to which, the master, who is appointed by the vicar and churchwardens, has an annuity of £3. 15. 10. from the crown, with a house and garden. It is open to all boys without distinction of place, who are eligible to the exhibitions founded by Lady Hastings, in Queen's College, Oxford; and there are two exhibitions belonging to it, founded by William Petyt, Esq., who gave £200 for that purpose. A school called the Clerk's school, was also endowed by Mr. Ermystead with land of great value at Wike, near Harewood; but this property, by mismanagement of the trustees, has been lost. A national school for boys, and another for girls, established in 1816, are both supported by subscription. Sylvester Petyt, Esq., principal of Barnard's Inn, London, and a native of this parish, bequeathed a library for the use of the parishioners, which is now preserved in the church; and he also left £24,048. 11. South Sea annuities for various charitable purposes, of the proceeds of which sum, £20 per annum are paid to Christ-Church College, Cambridge, for the augmentation of exhibitions from the free school, with £2. 10. per annum to purchase books for their use; £5 to the librarian, and £400 to the poor, without distinction of residence. There is likewise a poor's estate for the parish, amounting to £98. 10. per annum, bequeathed by Mr. Ermystead; and the poor of the township have £75 per annum, from land left by the Earl of Cumberland in 1643, Lord Craven in 1647, and other benefactors. The union of Skipton comprises 42 parishes or places, and contains a population of 28,736. George Holmes, an eminent antiquary, who republished the first 17 vols. of Rymer's Fœdera, was a native of the place.

SKIPWITH (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SELBY, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Selby; containing, with the township of North Duffield, 601 inhabitants, of whom 251 are in the township of Skipwith. This parish, which is situated near the rivers Ouse and Derwent, comprises about 5645 acres, whereof 2569 are in the township, belonging to various proprietors, of whom John Parker Toulson, Esq., is lord of the manor; nearly one-half of the land is open moor and common, and the remainder arable, pasture, and meadow. Skipwith Hall, the seat of Mr. Toulson, is a handsome mansion. The village is on the York and Howden road, and consists chiefly of scattered houses, irregularly built. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 11. 3., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £300. The church is an ancient structure, with a massive square tower, and contains numerous mural tablets, of which many of the inscriptions are obliterated; also some fine open screen-work, and good monuments to the Parker and Toulson families. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A bequest now producing £20 per annum, was left in 1714, by Mrs. Dorothy Wilson, of York, for the education of children of the parish; and the Rev. Joseph Nelson, in 1813, bequeathed £400, which sum, after deducting the legacy duty, was invested in the purchase of £451. 2. 8. consolidated three per cent. bank annuities, producing £13. 10. towards the support of a parochial school.

SKIRBECK (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, partly in the wapentake of KIRTON, but chiefly in that of SKIRBECK, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. E. by S.) from Boston; containing 1931 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £34. 17. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £737; patron, the Rev. William Volans. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment under acts of inclosure, in 1771 and 1818. An hospital for ten persons, founded here in honour of St. Leonard, was given in 1230, by Sir Thomas Multon, Knt., to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who dedicated it anew to St. John the Baptist. In the time of Edward II., its revenue was sufficient for the maintenance of four priests, also twenty people in the infirmary, and for the daily relief of forty more at the gate; at present, the buildings contain tenements for ten men, with gardens attached.

SKIRBECK-QUARTER, a hamlet, in the parish of SKIRBECK, union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN; containing 416 inhabitants.

SKIRCOAT, a township, in the parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile (S. S. W.) from Halifax; containing 5237 inhabitants. This township, which extends from the confines of Halifax to the junction of the rivers Calder and Hebble, comprises about 1340 acres; the surface is boldly undulated, and Skircoat Moor, a verdant heath of 150 acres, occupies an elevated site commanding views of Halifax and the surrounding country, which is beautifully diversified. The township comprises the village of Salter-Hebble; part of King-Cross, consisting of detached houses; and many pleasing villas, with various scattered hamlets. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the woollen and worsted manufactures, which are carried on extensively, and there are several dyeing establishments and flour-mills; great quantities of building-stone are also quarried, for the conveyance of which, and of other produce of the place, facilities are afforded by the Calder and Hebble navigation, on the banks whereof are spacious wharfs and warehouses, and by the Manchester and Leeds railway, which passes by the township. H. L. Edwards and Robert Wainhouse, Esqrs., have each a residence here. An episcopal proprietary chapel, erected in 1826 on the Moor, a neat building with a spire, but which was never consecrated, now belongs to Wesleyans, who have also a place of worship at Salter-Hebble; and there is a meeting-house for Independents. A school was built in 1818, at Salter-Hebble, by subscription.

SKIRLAUGH, NORTH, a township, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 9 miles (N. N. E.) from Hull; containing, with the hamlet of Rowton, 183 inhabitants. The township comprises, including Rowton and part of Arnold, about 1100 acres: on an eminence in Rowton is the workhouse of the Skirlaugh union, which extends over 42 parishes or places. The village, which is small, and adjoins that of South Skirlaugh, is situated on the north side of the Lamwith stream.

SKIRLAUGH, SOUTH, a chapelry, in the parish of SWINE, union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hull; containing 286 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1190 acres, belonging to many proprietors, of whom Sir Thomas Aston Clifford Constable is lord of the manor: the village is pleasantly situated on the southern declivity of the vale of the Lamwith stream, opposite to North Skirlaugh. The improper tithes have been commuted for £4. 4. The chapel, dedicated to St. Augustine, was built on the site of a smaller edifice, by Bishop Skirlaw, and consists of a nave, a small north chapel, and chancel, with an elegant tower at the west end, surmounted by a pierced battlement and eight crocketed pinnacles; it was thoroughly repaired in 1819. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have places of worship; and there is a school, a substantial building, in the chapelryard.

SKIRLINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of ATWICK, union of SKIRLAUGH, N. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Great Driffield; containing 16 inhabitants. This place is returned in Domesday book as one of the five sokes belonging to the manor of Hornsea, and about a century afterwards was granted to the priory of Bridlington by the family of Skirlington, who took their name from the spot. The hospital of St. Leonard, York, the priories of Swine and Newburgh, and the abbey of Meaux, also had lands here. The hamlet is bounded on the east by the sea, and consists of High and Low Skirlington, both which estates are tithe-free when occupied by their respective owners. It is situated two miles north of the village of Atwick.

SKIRPENBECK, a parish, in the union of POKKLINGTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from York; containing 222 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Derwent, and on the south by the road from York to Bridlington, and comprises by admeasurement 1615 acres, of which about one-third is meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable, with the exception of 4 acres of woodland. The surface is undulated, and the hedge-rows are thickly set with ash and oak; the soil is chiefly strong clay, with a bed of rich loam along the course of the Beck, which runs through the lands from east to west into the Derwent, and turns a corn-mill at the south-eastern extremity of the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 7. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £214. The tithes have been commuted for land and a money payment; the glebe contains 135 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, of which the chancel has a monument, with a curious inscription, to a member of the Paget family.

SKIRWITH, a township, in the parish of KIRKLAND, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Penrith; containing 293 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school erected by subscription, in 1828. A mansion here is supposed to occupy the site of a preceptory of Knights Templars.

SKUTTERSKELFE, a township, in the parish of RUDBY IN CLEVELAND, union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W. by S.) from Stokesley; containing 33 inhabitants. This place, called in Domesday book Godreschelf, is situated on the northern bank of the river Leven; and within the limits of the township is Thoraldby, anciently written Toroldesbi, which in the time of the Conqueror was demesne of the crown. Among the early proprietors of land here, occur the families of Linley and Bathurst. Near the village is an excellent landmark called Folly Hill, which is sometimes discernible for 20 leagues at sea. The improper tithes have been commuted for £144. 1.

SLACKSTEAD, a tything, in the parish of FARLEY-CHAMBERLAYNE, union of HURSLEY, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 37 inhabitants.

SLAD, or SLADE, a hamlet, partly in the parish of PAINSWICK, and partly in that of STROUD, union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Stroud. This hamlet, which is divided by a stream of water that separates the parishes of Painswick and Stroud into two parts, called respectively Painswick Slad and Stroud Slad, is pleasantly situated in a beautiful valley, through which passes the road to Cheltenham. The surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified: in the vale are several clothing manufactories, and in Stroud Slad is one of the largest in the west of England. An elegant episcopal chapel was erected in 1831, through the exertions of Mrs. Rucker, on a site given by the lord of the manor; and there is a national school.

SLADE-GREEN, a hamlet, in the parish of CRAYFORD, union of DARTFORD, hundred of LESSNESS, lath of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT; containing 66 inhabitants.

SLAIDBURN (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of CLITHEROE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of High Bowland, Forest, Easington, and Newton, 1792 inhabitants, of whom 741 are in Slaidburn township, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Clitheroe. The parish comprises by computation 35,570 acres, of which 5617, including 1200 common or waste, are in the township, belonging to various proprietors, of whom P. E. Townley, Esq. is lord of the manor; the lands are chiefly in pasture, and great numbers of cattle are reared in the extensive mountainous and moorland district. The village is situated in a valley, on the river Hodder, and the scenery around is very beautiful: three large cattle-fairs are held here on the Wednesday before Easter, on Whit-Monday, and the 4th of November. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32; net income, £336; patron, Thomas Wiglesworth, Esq. The church is an ancient structure, built between the 13th and 14th centuries. There is a place of worship for Methodists at Slaidburn, one for Presbyterians at Newton, and one, with a burial-ground, for the Society of Friends. A free grammar school was established in 1717, by John Brennand, who bequeathed an estate, in trust, to apply £200 for the erection of a school-house, with £50 a year to a master, and £30 to an usher. A national school was built in 1842; and the Society of Friends have also a school. A chantry was founded in 1332, by Stephen de Hamerton, in the chapel of St. Mary, then existing on his manor of Hamerton, for a Secular chaplain, to celebrate mass for the repose of the souls of himself, his father, and his mother.

SLAITHWAITE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HUDDERSFIELD, Upper division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Lingarths, in the parish of Almondbury, 3726 inhabitants, of whom 2925 are in Slaithwaite township, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Huddersfield. This chapelry comprises 3073*a. 3r. 3p.*, of which 663*a. 1r. 1p.* are in Lingarths; the lands are principally meadow and pasture, with a small portion of arable; the surface is varied, and the scenery bold and romantic. In the quarries, in which good stone is abundant, are found vegetable fossils, especially firs and other mountain trees. The village is beautifully situated in the valley of the river Colne, which flows through the chapelry, and the inhabitants are chiefly employed in the woollen manufacture, in the spinning of cotton and silk, and in silk-weaving. Slaithwaite Hall, an ancient mansion on a hill which has indications of having been a fortified station, is now divided into cottages: the old manor-house near the chapel is still used for holding the courts leet of the manor of Slaithwaite cum Lingarths, of which the Earl of Dartmouth is lord. About the year 1820, a spring was discovered strongly impregnated with sulphur, and also a chalybeate spring, in their properties closely resembling the waters of Harrogate; and a spa has been established by Mr. Richard Varley, who has erected baths with every requisite accommodation for the use of the waters, built several cottages for visitors, and laid out gardens and pleasure-grounds, which are tastefully embellished. On an analysis of the waters by Mr. West, of Leeds, an imperial gallon of the sulphureous spa was found to contain, 0.7 grains of chloride of calcium, 0.4 of chloride of magnesia, 2.5 of chloride of sodium, and 20.4 of carbonate of soda; the gases are sulphuretted hydrogen, 0.75 of a cubic inch; of carbonic acid 1.25, and of carburetted hydrogen, 4.75: an inflammable gas rises from the surface of the water. The chalybeate spring was found to contain in an imperial gallon 3.4 grains of sulphate, 4.0 of carbonate of lime, 2.4 of carbonate of magnesia, and 3.3 of oxide of iron. There are several reservoirs of water in the district, of which one, comprising 17 acres, is for the supply of the Huddersfield canal, which passes through the chapelry; the road from Leeds to Manchester intersects the village, and is nearly parallel, on the south side, with the river and canal. Fairs for cattle are held on the Friday before May-day, and on the last Friday in October. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £192; patron, the Vicar of Huddersfield. An ancient chapel, repaired in 1593, and rebuilt in 1719, stood near the river, where there is now a cemetery; but in 1788, the building was taken down, and the present spacious though plain edifice erected on ground given by the Earl of Dartmouth; the tower was added in 1814, and an additional cemetery, on the north side, was consecrated in 1842. A free school was founded and endowed in 1721, by the Rev. Robert Meeke, then incumbent, and has an income amounting, with subsequent benefactions, to £42; the master must be a communicant, but not the incumbent, of Slaithwaite. The school-house, which adjoins the ancient chapelry, was rebuilt in 1744, and again in 1842. There is also a national school, for which a handsome building was erected in 1840, at an expense of £650; it is endowed with a surplus fund of £150, and a building erected in 1825 for a proprietary grammar school has been taken on lease for the residence of the master and mistress. The Slaigh or Sloe tree, which formerly spread over a great part of the chapelry, gave the original name of Slaighthwaite to the township; and from the Ling plant the township of Lingarths derives its name.

SLALEY, a parish, in the union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Hexham; containing 547 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 7430 acres of land, lying south of the Devil's water and Dipton, and west of Heeley burn. Prior to the inclosure of Bulbeck common in 1771, a great portion of the district was moory waste; but nearly the whole is now under cultivation, and has assumed a pleasing appearance, adorned with thriving woods and plantations. Some of the buildings have been much improved of late years, and others have been superseded by modern erections, covered with blue or grey slates, instead of thatch. There is a valuable stone quarry in the parish, which is extensively worked. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £103; patron, T. W. Beaumont, Esq.; impropiators, R. Trevelyan and H. Witham, Esqrs. The foundation-stone of a new church was laid on the 25th of May, 1832; the old church had become a mass of ruins, and totally unfit for the celebration of divine service. A school in connexion with the National Society is endowed with £3. 10. per annum.

SLAPTON (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3½ miles (S. S. E.) from Leighton-Buzzard; containing, with part of Horton hamlet, 336 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1170*a. 1r.*, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture; the soil is clay, and the surface generally level. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish, and the London and Birmingham railway within a mile of the church. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 9. 7. ; net income, £172; patrons, certain Trustees. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by subscription.

SLAPTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 7 miles (S. W.) from Dartmouth; containing 726 inhabitants. This place formerly belonged to Sir Guy de Brien, Knt., standard-bearer to Edward III., whom he attended at the battle of Calais, in 1349, on which occasion, having greatly distinguished himself by his intrepidity, he was rewarded with a grant of 200 marks per annum, payable out of the exchequer during his life. Sir Guy founded a chantry in the church for a rector and four priests, and endowed it with £10 per annum in land, and with the advowson of the living. The parish comprises about 3000 acres. The living is a discharged perpetual curacy; net income, £96; patron, William Paige, Esq.; impropiators, the Landowners. The church contains 86 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £15 in aid of the expense. Thomas Knyghton, in 1629, left an estate now producing about £30 a year, for the repair of the town-houses, and for the poor; and John and Charles Kelland, about 1690, bequeathed £150, which sum, with accumulations, now produces about £35 per annum, applied to instruction.

SLAPTON (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of GREENS-NORTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Towcester; containing 208 inhabitants. It comprises about 600 acres; the soil is chiefly clay, alternated with loam, and in the higher lands gravel and sand; the surface on the south is flat, and a brook bounds the parish on this side. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, the Rev. Thomas C. Welch. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SLAUGHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CUCKFIELD, hundred of BUTTINGHILL, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Crawley; containing 1286 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3088 acres, of which 1136 are common or waste land; it is situated on the road from London, through Crawley, to Brighton, and the river Ouse has its source in the grounds of Ashford, forming in its course a lake of about thirty acres at Slaugham mills. The surface is diversified with hill and dale; the soil is sandy, and generally poor. There are considerable remains of the old manor-house of Slaugham Place, the ancient seat of the Covert family; the grand staircase was given by the late Colonel Sergison to the proprietor of the Star inn, Lewes, and has been erected in that house. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 19. 2., and in the patronage of Mrs. A. Sergison; net income, £282. The church was enlarged in 1837, and contains a splendid monument to the Coverts. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SLAUGHTER, LOWER, a parish, in the union of STOW, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. W.) from Stow; containing 222 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bourton-on-the-Water.

SLAUGHTER, UPPER (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of STOW, Lower division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Stow; containing 231 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1727 acres, chiefly arable, with some good meadow land; the surface is hilly, being a portion of the Cotswold range, and the lower grounds are watered by two brooks, which, after flowing through the parish, unite with a third, together forming the river Windrush. The substratum contains stone, which is quarried for building purposes as occasion requires. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 14. 2.; net income, £131; patron and incumbent, the Rev. W. E. Witts. The tithes were commuted for land in 1731; the glebe comprises 227 acres. The church is an ancient structure, chiefly in the Norman style, with subsequent additions.

SLAUGHTERFORD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chippenham; containing 156 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Biddestone. The church contains 100 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £100 in aid of the expense.

SLAWSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Harborough; containing 250 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £174; patron, Earl Cadogan; impropiators, the family of Tailby, and others. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1793.

SLEAFORD, NEW (St. DENIS), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake of FLAXWELL, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 18 miles (S. S. E.) from Lincoln, and 116 (N. by W.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Holdingham, 3382 inhabitants, of whom 3184 are in the town. The name in ancient records is written La Ford and Es-laforde, which has been corrupted into Sleaford, and the epithet New given to distinguish this place from Old Sleaford, an adjoining parish. A castle appears to have been erected here at an early period, but of its history there are few records, and of the building only some trifling remains. The town, situated on the road from London to Lincoln, is of respectable appearance, and gradually improving in buildings and in importance; it is well paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from an adjacent spring, called Bully, or Boiling, wells. There is a small theatre, erected in 1824. A canal connects the town with Boston, Lincoln, and the Trent navigation, and greatly promotes trade. The market is on Monday; and fairs take place on Plough-Monday, Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, August 11th, and October 20th, for horses, cattle, sheep, and provisions. The quarter-sessions for the parts of Kesteven are held here, by adjournment from Bourne; and an act for the more speedy recovery of small debts was passed in 1841. The old town-hall, being greatly dilapidated, has been pulled down, and a handsome edifice in the later English style erected.

The parish comprises by measurement 2000 acres; the substratum abounds with stone of good quality for building, and which is also burnt into lime. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £170; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Lafford, or New Sleaford, in the Cathedral of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1794; the glebe comprises about 100 acres, with a house. The church exhibits some fine specimens of almost every style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, aisles, a large transept on the north side, and a chancel; at the west end is a tower, erected about 1150, which is by far the most ancient part of the building, and is in the early English style, surmounted by a spire of later date, 144 feet high. In the chancel are three fine stalls, in the later style, and at the entrance are the screen and canopy of the old rood-loft; several ancient monuments also adorn the edifice, chiefly belonging to the family of Carr, formerly lords of the manor. There are places of worship for the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded in 1604, by Robert Carr, Esq., who endowed it with £20 per annum, subsequently increased to £80, with a handsome house for the master, who is appointed by the Marquess of Bristol, as owner of the "late fair castle of Sleaford," for which he pays to the crown £40 per annum. A school was endowed with lands by William Alvey, in 1729. An hospital for a chaplain and twelve men, was founded and endowed by Sir Robert Carr, Bart., in 1636, and an exceedingly appropriate chapel was erected in 1823, in which the chaplain officiates twice in the week. The poor law union of Sleaford comprises 56 parishes or places, and contains a population of 23,234. The Bishop of Lincoln had anciently a magnificent palace here, in which King John sojourned for one night on his route to Newark, but no part remains except the foundations. A branch of the Ermin-street passes through this parish and that of Old Sleaford.

SLEAFORD, OLD (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. E.) from New Sleaford; containing 345 inhabitants. The church has been demolished upwards of 200 years, for which period there has been no presentation, the vicarage being now supposed to have merged into the impropriation, and the inhabitants attending divine service at Quar- rington. The vicarage is valued in the king's books at £4. 10.

SLEAGILL, a township, in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Morland; containing 153 inhabitants. Coal is obtained here. The tithes were commuted for land, under acts of inclosure, in 1779 and 1803. The sum of £6 per annum, the produce of land, is paid to a schoolmaster.

SLEAP, a township, partly in the parish of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, and partly in the parish of MIDDLE, hundred of PIMHILL, union of WEM, N. division of SALOP, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Wem; containing 57 inhabitants.

SLECKBURN, or SLEEKBURN, EAST, a township, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, county of DURHAM, locally on the east side, and for electoral purposes annexed to the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Morpeth; containing 72 inhabitants. The township, which is the property of the see of Durham, has the German Ocean at a short distance on the east, and the tide covers a low piece of ground of considerable extent. The Sleck burn rises a little to the west of Tranwell, in the parish of Morpeth, where it is called Catch burn, and pursues its course to the river Blyth, before joining which, it is, for some distance, very narrow and sluggish, and throws down much slake or mud, from which the place derives its name. There is a small village. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £12. 12., and the appropriate for £127. 6., payable to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

SLECKBURN, WEST, a township, in the parish of BEDLINGTON, union of MORPETH, E. division of CHESTER ward, county of DURHAM, locally on the east side, and for electoral purposes annexed to the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Morpeth; containing 225 inhabitants. This place is situated not far from the German Ocean, the spring tides flowing up to it, and near the Sleck burn, which runs across the parish from Morpeth common to the Blyth. A moiety of the manor was anciently held by William de Dunum, in capite, by fealty, and the payment of £4. 10. rent, besides suit at the three courts of Bedlington, and "grinding his corn at the bishop's mill, now known as Bebside mill, at a sixteenth mulcture:" the township is at present in great part the property of the see of Durham. The tithes have been commuted for £194. 1. 6., of which £16. 13. 6. are payable to the vicar, and £177. 8. to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

SLEDDALE, LONG, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal; containing 173 inhabitants. It comprises 5085 acres, nearly half of which consists of pasture and woodland; and here are quarries of fine blue slate, situated amid mountain scenery of the most romantic character. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £69; patrons, the Landowners. The chapel was rebuilt in 1712.

SLEDMERE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DRIFFIELD, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 12 miles (S. E. by E.) from Malton; containing 435 inhabitants. This place comprises, with the hamlet of Croom, about 6650 acres of land rising in bold acclivities, on which are numerous plantations of beech, ash, larch, and fir; it is divided between arable and meadow, and sheep-walks, the former of which preponderate. Sledmere House, a spacious and elegant mansion of stone, the seat of Sir Tatton Sykes, Bart., is seated near the foot of an acclivity, in a beautiful and finely-wooded park to the south of the village; it was built by Sir Christopher, the second baronet, from his own designs, and was improved and enriched by his son, the late Sir Mark Masterman Sykes, brother of the present baronet. Sledmere Castle, on the east side of the park, is a modern edifice. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Sir Tatton: the church, which stands within the park, is a neat fabric, consisting of a nave, chancel, and square tower, and containing some handsome monuments to the Sykes family. A school is partly supported by subscription, and the poor have the interest of some small bequests.

SLEEP, a hamlet, in the parish of ST. PETER, ST. ALBAN'S, union of ST. ALBAN'S, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD; containing 751 inhabitants.

SLENINGFORD, with NORTH STAINLEY, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon; containing 441 inhabitants. It takes its name from an ancient ford over the Ure, and is on the south side of that river, which is here very devious in its course; it comprises about 4230 acres of fertile land. Bramley Grange, the palace of the Bishop of Ripon, where are beautiful views of the vale of the Ure, is situated in the township.

SLIMBRIDGE (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, in the union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Dursley; containing 866 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the Severn, and comprises by measurement 3392 acres, of which the greater part is the property of the Berkeley family; the Gloucester and Berkeley canal and the Gloucester and Bristol railroad intersect it. The manufacture of iron was formerly carried on, but has been discontinued, and the site of the works is now occupied by a saw-mill. Fairs are held on the 3rd of April and on the first Tuesday in October, chiefly for agricultural purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £28. 2. 11.; net income, £601; patrons, the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801 and 1813. The church is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with a lofty and well-proportioned spire. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SLINDON, a township, in the parish of ECCLES-HALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 115 inhabitants. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £70. 1., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and the vicarial for 18s. 1d., and there is a glebe of half an acre.

SLINDON (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of ALDWICK, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Arundel; containing 544 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2504a. 2r. 6p., of which 777 acres are arable, 475 meadow and pasture, 968 woodland, and 237 common; the surface is varied and rich. Slindon House, the seat of the Countess Dowager of Newburgh, was originally built by one of the archbishops of Canterbury, and was for some time the residence of the celebrated Stephen Langton, who died here in the reign of Henry III.; the present mansion, erected by Sir George Kemp, in the reign of Elizabeth, is a handsome structure, on a bold eminence. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½., and in the patronage of the countess: the tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe comprises 43 acres. The church is in the later English style. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

SLINFOLD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HORSHAM, partly in the hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, but chiefly in the hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Horsham; containing 691 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the road from Horsham to Guildford, and comprises about 3550 acres; the soil in some parts is light and fertile, but is generally a deep stiff clay; the surface is hilly, and the substratum contains good building-stone, which is quarried in blocks of large dimensions. Two branches of the river Arun unite in the parish, and flow into the sea at Littlehampton. The living comprises a sinecure rectory and a vicarage united, valued jointly in the king's books at £12. 14. 2.; net income, £472; patron, the Bishop of Chichester. The church is an ancient edifice, with a low tower. The Roman road from Regnum to London passed for about two miles through the parish; and Roman swords and ornaments of brass have been found. The Rev. James Dallaway, author of the Topography of the Rape of Arundel, was rector.

SLINGLEY, with SEATON, a township, in the parish of SEAHAM, union of EASINGTON, N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Sunderland; containing 175 inhabitants. It was anciently called Slinglaw, a hill or law; and is situated to the south-west of Seaton. Among former proprietors, occur the families of Widdrington, Hebborne, Collingwood, and Dale.

SLINGSBY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 6 miles (N.) from Whitewell, and 6 (W. N. W.) from New Malton; containing 609 inhabitants. This place, at the time of the Conquest, belonged to the Lacy family, and afterwards to the Mowbrays, who had a castle here. The Wyvilles, the Knights Templars, and others, held lands under the Mowbrays; and the castle subsequently became the property of the noble family of Hastings, who are supposed to have rebuilt it, and of whom William, the great Lord Hastings, was beheaded by Richard III., leaving his son Edward his heir, who by will, in 1497, directed Slingsby to be sold. The castle and manor were purchased, some time previously to 1619, by Sir Charles Cavendish, whose son took down the old castle, and, in 1643, erected on its site a large and elegant mansion, of quadrangular form, with towers on the eastern and western sides, in the style of Inigo Jones, and which afterwards became the property of the poet, Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham. Not being inhabited, however, it fell into decay, and after the death of the duke, was purchased, along with the estate, in 1735, by an ancestor of the Earl of Carlisle, the present proprietor, by whom the dilapidated remains are carefully preserved.

The parish comprises by measurement 2300 acres, of which 1850 are arable, 400 pasture, and 50 wood. The southern portion is chiefly a valley of moorland in the bosom of the Howardian hills; advancing northward, it abruptly rises to an elevated natural terrace, forming a portion of the boundary of those fine hills, flanked on the east and west with ancient woods of stately oak. This terrace commands, towards the south, a view of Castle-Howard, with its princely domain; towards the north, the whole range of the eastern moors from Whitestone cliff to Seamer Beacon, with the richly-cultivated and extensive vale of the river Rye in the foreground; and in the north-eastern distance is a view of the sea. From the terrace, the land gradually descends northward into the valley of the Rye. The soil in the middle part of the parish is a rich hazel loam, producing excellent crops of turnips, oats, and barley; and in the northern portions, which are marshy, a strong clay prevails, well adapted for wheat. The hills are of the oolite limestone formation, in which some large fossil bones have been found, and ammonites and various other fossil remains; and in the lower grounds are extensive beds of fine blue clay: the stone is quarried for building, burning into lime, and for the roads, and some kilns have been recently established for the manufacture of bricks and tiles from the clay. The village is spacious and well built, and is pleasantly situated at the base, and partly on the acclivity, of the northern ridge of the Howardian hills, and is watered by the Wathbeck rivulet, which flows through the lower part of it; it is one of three villages in Yorkshire that retain their rustic maypole. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Earl of Carlisle, with a net income of £548, including a commodious parsonage-house, and 100 acres of glebe. The church is a neat structure, partly Norman, and partly in the later English style, and of which the chancel was rebuilt in 1835; it contains several ancient monuments, with one of a templar in the full costume of a Norman knight, recorded by Dodsworth to be of the Wyville family, who held lands here for more than 600 years. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A school for boys and another for girls are partly supported by the Earl of Carlisle; and ten acres of land are appropriated to the use of the poor, who also have some small benefactions. There are numerous barrows and tumuli in that part of the parish which stretches into the Howardian hills, and the whole of that curious valley is interspersed with Druidical remains and other relics of antiquity.

SLIPTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTONE, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3¼ miles (W. by N.) from Thrapstone; containing 159 inhabitants. It comprises about 624 acres; the substratum contains limestone, which is quarried chiefly for the roads, and for building cottages and walls. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 3½.; net income, £104; patrons and impropiators, the family of Sackville. The tithes were commuted for land in 1771; the glebe comprises about 112 acres. The church is an ancient structure. A school is supported by Mr. and Mrs. Germain.

SLOLEY (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (E.) from Scotow; containing 291 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 719 acres, of which 640 are arable, 20 meadow and pasture, and 50 wood: the lands are chiefly the property of the Rev. B. Cubitt, who is lord of the manor. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. B. Cubitt: the tithes have been commuted for £240. 10., and the glebe comprises 24 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, with later additions, and a square embattled tower; it was thoroughly repaired in 1841.

SLOOTHBY, a hamlet, in the parish of WILLOUGHBY, union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 242 inhabitants.

SLOUGH, a village, partly in the parish of STOKE-POGES, and partly in that of UPTON, union of ETON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 41 miles (S. E. by S.) from Buckingham, and 21 (W.) from London; containing 1189 inhabitants. A cattle-market is held on Tuesday. One of the stations of the Great Western railway is situated here, and is much frequented by visitors to Windsor Palace and Eton College: a handsome hotel has also been erected. Sir William Herschell, the celebrated astronomer, who died in 1822, resided at this place, where he constructed his powerful telescope.

SLYNE, with HEST, a township, in the parish of BOLTON-LE-SANDS, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2½ miles (N.) from Lancaster; containing 316 inhabitants, and comprising 669a. 3r. 8p. A breakwater was constructed at Hest bank in 1820, along the side of which vessels from Liverpool and Glasgow load and unload their cargoes; and by means of a canal extending to within a short distance of the shore, a considerable trade is carried on with Kendal and other inland places. The road across the Sands to Ulverstone commences at Hest; and the great road to Kendal, Carlisle, and Glasgow, passes through the village of Slyne. Courts leet and baron are held here. There are traces of salt-works which formerly existed in the neighbourhood.

SMALESMOUTH, a township, in the parish of GREYSTEAD, union of BELLINGHAM, N. W. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Bellingham; containing 159 inhabitants. It is situated on the Smales burn, near its junction with the river Tyne, and contains the hamlets of Greystead and Holt. Dalby Castle is also in the township.

SMALLBURGH (St. PETER), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 5¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Coltishall; containing 634 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north-east by the navigable river Ant, and comprises 1247a. 32p., of which 922 acres are arable, 197 meadow and pasture, and 127 fen and marsh: the road from Cromer to Yarmouth passes through. Petty-sessions are held here, at the house of industry for the incorporated hundreds of Happing and Tunstead. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4., and in the gift of the Bishop of Norwich: the tithes have been commuted for £420, and the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the later English style; the tower fell down in 1677, and has not been rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SMALLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of MORLEY, union of BELPER, hundred of MORLESTON and LIT-CHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 7 miles (N. E.) from Derby; containing 826 inhabitants. There are extensive collieries in the neighbourhood. The tithes have been commuted for £337. 19. 6., and there is a glebe of 27¼ acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. John and Samuel Richardson, in 1712, conveyed property for a school, of which the annual income is £88.

SMALLFORD, a ward, partly in the parish of St. STEPHEN, and partly in that portion of the parish of St. PETER, St. ALBAN's, which is in the hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of St. ALBAN's, union of St. ALBAN's, county of HERTFORD; containing 245 inhabitants. Here are almshouses for three widows.

SMALL-HYTHE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of TENTERDEN, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Tenterden. The living is a donative, in the patronage of the Householdors of Dumborne; net income, £107. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

SMALLRIDGE, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of AXMINSTER, Honiton and S. divisions of DEVON; containing 207 inhabitants.

SMALLWOOD, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Sandbach; containing 606 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £300. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SMANNELL, or SWANHILL, a hamlet, in the parish, union, and hundred of ANDOVER, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 65 inhabitants.

SMARDALE, a township, in the parish of KIRKBY-STEPHEN, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Kirkby-Stephen; containing 35 inhabitants. It comprises 1735 acres, of which 643 are common or waste land. Smardale Hall, an ancient manor-house formerly belonging to the Warrop and Dalston families, proprietors of the township, is now a farm-house.

SMARDEN (St. MICHAEL), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of WEST ASHFORD, hundred of CALEHILL, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 9 miles (N. E. by E.) from Cranbrooke, and 46 (S. E. by E.) from London; containing 1141 inhabitants, and comprising 5379a. 3r. 15p. The old market-house is yet remaining; and a fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held on the 10th of October. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 2. 6.; net income, £501; patron, the Archbishop of Canterbury. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a free school founded in 1716, by Stephen Dadson, who endowed it with property now producing upwards of £65 a year.

SMEATON, GREAT, a parish, in the union of NORTH-ALLERTON, partly in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, and partly in GILLING-EAST, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from North-Allerton; containing, with the township of Hornby, and part of that of Great Smeaton (the other portion being in Croft parish), 517 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the Tees, and, including Hornby, comprises 3219 acres, of which 1828 are arable, 1333 grass, and 58 woodland; the soil is a stiff strong clay. The surface is varied; the lower grounds are watered by the river Wisk, which intersects the parish, and the scenery is open, and of pleasing character. The great north road passes through the village. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Appleton-upon-Wisk annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4.; net income, £472; patron, Henry Hewgill, Esq. The church is an ancient edifice. There are one boys' and two girls' schools.

SMEATON, KIRK (St. MARY), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Pontefract; containing 326 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1800 acres; the soil is light but fertile, and the substratum generally limestone, well adapted for building, though not for agricultural purposes. There are also quarries of freestone, of which some was formerly sent to London; but the quality varied so greatly that the quarries were abandoned, and a tram-road that had been laid down for its conveyance to Heckbridge was taken up, and the ground it occupied restored to a state of cultivation. A considerable quantity of teasel is grown. The great north road intersects the parish, and the new Doncaster and Leeds road skirts it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and has annexed 333 acres of land, for which the tithes were commuted in 1808, and which are worth from 21s. to 22s. per acre; patron, Earl Fitzwilliam. The church is a small neat structure in the early English style. A national school is supported.

SMEATON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of BIRKBY, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from North-Allerton; containing 71 inhabitants. This is a township of scattered houses, situated on the south side of the river Wisk, opposite Great Smeaton, and comprising about 1000 acres of land.

SMEATON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of WOMERSLEY, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Pontefract; containing 233 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1100 acres, chiefly the property of Lincoln College, Oxford, and of which the soil is a rich loam; the river Went passes on the south, in a direction nearly from east to west, and is sometimes swollen so as to flood the pastures to a small extent. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1786.

SMEETH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EAST ASHFORD, franchise and barony of BIRCHOLT, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Ashford; containing 489 inhabitants. This was formerly a market-town; and fairs are still held on May 12th and Michaelmas-day, for toys and pedlery. The living is annexed to the rectory of Aldington: the church is principally in the Norman style. Timothy Bedingfield, in 1691, bequeathed an estate producing £111. 10. per annum, for education.

SMEETON-WESTERBY, a township, in the parish of KIBWORTH-BEAUCHAMP, union of HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Harborough; containing 567 inhabitants.

SMERRILL, with MIDDLETON, a township, in the parish of YOULGRAVE, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Bakewell; containing 323 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £21. 13. 4.

SMETHCOTT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CHURCH-STRETTON, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury; containing, with the townships of Betchcott and Picklescott, and the hamlet of Walk-Mills, 371 inhabitants, and comprising about 1500 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 9.; net income, £276; patrons, the Trustees of Hulme's charity, Manchester. The church is a small ancient building. The Rev. Henry Fletcher, in 1810, gave £10 per annum to be distributed among widows, and applied to education.

SMETHWICK, a township, in the parish of BRERETON, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Sandbach.

SMETHWICK, a hamlet and extensive manufacturing district, in the parish of HARBORNE, union of KING'S-NORTON, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Birmingham; containing 5020 inhabitants. This place is situated on the road from Birmingham, through Oldbury, to Dudley, and the hamlet comprises by measurement 1830 acres of arable, pasture, and meadow land. The substratum in the northern part appears to contain a good supply of coal, J. W. Unett, Esq., a proprietor of land in the parish, having, after boring to the depth of 220 yards, at an expense of £1200, found coal measures corresponding with those of a pit which has been sunk by Joshua Horton, Esq., a mile from the spot, and also with one belonging to Lord Dartmouth, about a mile and a half distant, in the parish of West Bromwich, both which pits have a seam of excellent coal, ten yards in thickness. There are likewise pits of good gravel, which is used for the roads. The prevailing scenery is pleasingly diversified, and in some parts beautifully picturesque, and enlivened by numerous good residences, of which the principal are, the Lightwoods, a handsome mansion built in 1780; the Firs, the Woodlands, Smethwick House, Galton-Bridge House, Shireland Hall, and Smethwick Hall, built about a century since, on the site of an ancient hall.

Of the manufactories established in the district, the principal are some very extensive works, in which more than 700 persons are employed in the manufacture of various kinds of glass, and of the several chemical products connected with glass-making, upon a larger scale than in any other establishment in Great Britain. The chief articles are, the British window glass called crown glass; the ordinary foreign window glass, called German sheet-glass, introduced into this country within the last ten years, by Mr. Robert Lucas Chance, the senior partner of the firm; and French shades, also of his introduction, and which are blown into oval, square, or circular forms of large dimensions, some exceeding three feet six inches in height, and one foot nine inches in diameter. A new description of plate-glass, made by grinding and polishing German sheet-glass, by a process recently invented by one of the partners, is exclusively made here; and the other branches carried on in the works include, stained and ornamental glass, glass for optical purposes, and sulphate and carbonate of soda in different states. A manufactory for railway-carriages affords occupation to 650 persons; the Smethwick soap, soda, and red-lead works, which have been established for more than thirty years, employ about 100 persons; in the Smethwick foundry 230 men are constantly engaged, and some iron-works belonging to Messrs. Jones, Aspinall, and Co., are likewise extensive. The District Steel and Iron works employ 150 men in the manufacture of steel and iron, and also of spades and shovels, and of gun-barrels under contract with the East India Company and the Board of Ordnance; and the Crown Works for the manufacture of boilers, and plate and sheet iron, employ about sixty men. The hamlet is intersected by the Old Birmingham canal, with its greatly improved line of navigation, over which have been constructed six bridges, and an aqueduct of cast-iron; one of the bridges, called the Summit, or Galton bridge, is a stately structure, of which the arch has a span of 150 feet, and an elevation of sixty feet above the water.

A chapel, with a house for the minister, was erected in 1732, by Mrs. Dorothy Parkes, who endowed it independently of the mother church: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of her Trustees, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Dales, who resides in the parsonage, a handsome house near the chapel. A church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1838, at a cost of £4000, raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £400 from the London, and £750 from the Diocesan, Society, and a district was soon after assigned to it; it is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles and surmounted by a lofty spire, and contains 786 sittings, of which 400 are free. By order of council, dated the 11th of August, 1842, the district attached to this church was erected into a separate and independent parish, under the designation of North Harborne; the vicar of Harborne having resigned the patronage of the new benefice, it has been constituted a vicarage, and endowed with the vicarial tithes over 830 acres; and the Rev. T. G. Simcox, the first incumbent, has been continued vicar, by the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, who are the patrons. The parsonage-house, situated behind the church, is a handsome residence of appropriate style; and opposite to it are the North Harborne national schools, erected in 1840. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and near the chapel is a school endowed by Mrs. Parkes with property producing £8. 9. per annum. The poor have six almshouses, and some land is vested in trustees for the benefit of the necessitous.

SMISBY, a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LAZOUCH, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Ashby; containing, with Bondary, extra-parochial, 337 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron and impropiator, the Marquess of Hastings. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1820. A school is supported by subscription, for the instruction of the children of the poor.

SNAILWELL (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newmarket; containing 273 inhabitants. It comprises 1830*a.* 2*r.* 30*p.*, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture and heath. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 11. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of J. Thorp, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £484, and the glebe comprises 100 acres.

SNAINTON, a chapelry, partly in the parish of EBBERSTON, but chiefly in that of BROMPTON, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Scarborough; containing 687 inhabitants. The township comprises about 4480 acres, partly low fertile marshes, which extend southward to the river Derwent; on the north side of the village the land is chiefly high moor. The village is large, and pleasantly situated at the junction of the roads from Scarborough to Malton and to Kirkby-Moorside. The chapel is subordinate to the vicarage of Brompton, and was built in 1836, at a cost of £750, on the site of one erected in 1150; the fine Norman porch of the old chapel now forms an entrance to the churchyard. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SNAITH (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, in the union of GOOLE, chiefly in the Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, but partly in the Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK; comprising the chaperies of Armin, Carleton, Goole, Hook, and Rawcliffe, and the townships of Balne, Cowick, Gowdall, Heck, Hensall, Pollington, and Snaith; and containing 10,444 inhabitants, of whom 855 are in the town, 23 miles (S. by E.) from York, and 175 (N. by W.) from London. This place is of considerable antiquity, and at a very early period a priory for Benedictine monks was founded here as a cell to the abbey of Selby, to which establishment the church of Snaith had been given by Girard, Archbishop of York, in the year 1106; the priory flourished till the Dissolution, and was afterwards granted by Edward VI. to John, Earl of Warwick. The town, which is situated on a gentle declivity on the south bank of the river Aire, is small and irregularly built; the streets are lighted with oil; the houses are chiefly of brick, but a few handsome and substantial dwellings have been lately erected, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from wells. The environs abound with pleasing scenery, enlivened by the rivers Don and Went, in the vale of which latter is the small hamlet of Balne-Croft; and the canal from Knottingley to Goole passes southward of the town. Flax was formerly cultivated in the neighbourhood to a considerable extent, and conveyed to the market at Leeds by the river Aire; but the quantity has been much diminished, and potatoes are now sent in large quantities. There is a steam-mill for grinding corn. The market is on Thursday; and fairs take place on the last Thursday in April, and August 10th, for cattle, &c. The parish comprises by computation 35,000 acres, the property chiefly of Viscount Downe, the Earl of Mexborough, and N. E. Yarburgh, Esq. The living is a vicarage; net income, £479; patron, Mr. Yarburgh. The church is a spacious structure in the later English style, with a low square tower surmounted by pinnacles, and a belfry of wood; it contains a splendid monument by Chantrey to the second Viscount Downe, a marble bust to an ancestor of the present Lord Beaumont, and some remnants of ancient armour, with several banners. There are district churches at Rawcliffe, Carleton, Whitgift, Armin, Hook, and Goole; also a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free grammar school, and some almshouses for six widowers, were founded in 1623, by Nicholas Waller, who bequeathed houses and land for the payment of £28 to the master, £12 to the usher of the school, and £20 per annum to be divided among the almspeople; the endowment is now applied in aid of a national school. There are almshouses for six persons, founded by the Yarburgh family; also others for six widows, which were rebuilt in 1802, by Viscount Downe; and various bequests have been left for the poor.

SNAPE (St. John the Baptist), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Saxmundham; containing 542 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the Ore, and comprises about 1800 acres, of which the greater portion is arable and upland pasture of good quality, and the remainder, near the river, low and marshy. The Ore, over which is a bridge, forms an estuary for nearly a mile, and near the bridge is a quay for shipping corn. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Friston, and valued in the king's books at £5. 5. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$. The church contains an hexagonal font, much enriched, in the later English style. A society of Benedictine monks from the abbey of St. John, at Colchester, settled here in 1155, and in 1400 were exempted from all subjection to that house, and raised into a distinct priory; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and, at its suppression, in 1524, was granted to Cardinal Wolsey towards the endowment of his intended colleges, when its revenue was valued at £99. 1. 11.

SNAPE, a township, in the parish of WELL, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (S.) from Bedale; containing 729 inhabitants. The township comprises 4451 acres, of which the greater part is arable land; a portion called Snape-Water, formerly a morass, is now drained and cultivated. The population is chiefly employed in wool-combing for the worsted-spinners. Snape Castle, a large and venerable building, anciently a seat of the Fitz-Randolph and other families, and rebuilt by the Latimers in the reign of Henry VII., is now partially in ruins, but portions of it are in the occupation of tenants of Mark Milbank, Esq., the present owner. Thorpe Perrow, the seat of Mr. Milbank, is a spacious and handsome mansion here, surrounded by an extensive park and fine plantations. A chapel which formerly belonged to the castle, has been beautifully fitted up by Mr. Milbank, and divine service is gratuitously performed in it by the vicar of Well. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and an almshouse for eight aged persons, and free schools for the poor, have been founded and endowed by Lady Neville.

SNARESHILL-HOUSE, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of GUILT-CROSS, W. division of NORFOLK, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Thetford; containing 28 inhabitants. This place and Thetford Lodge are all that remain of two villages called Great and Little Snareshill. In the vicinity are several tumuli, supposed to cover the remains of the slain in a battle which occurred here between Edmund, King of the East Angles, and the Danes under their leader Inguar.

SNARESTON (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. W.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres, of which one-third is arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture: the Ashby canal passes through. The living is annexed to the rectory of Sweptone: the church is a small modern building of brick. A free school was founded and endowed by Thomas Charnells, Esq., in 1717; the income is about £50 per annum.

SNARFORD (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (S. W.) from Market-Rasen; containing 76 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1100 acres, of which the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by several small streams. Of the ancient Hall, the seat of the Snarford family, only the site and part of the foundations are remaining. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4; net income, £181; patron, the Subdean of Lincoln. The church contains numerous monuments, of which the principal are to the St. Poll family.

SNARGATE (St. DUNSTAN), a parish, in the union of ROMNEY-MARSH, and liberties of ROMNEY-MARSH and NEW ROMNEY, though locally in the hundred of ALOESBRIDGE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from New Romney; containing 80 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, united to the rectory of SNAVE, and valued in the king's books at £17. 6. 8.; net income of Snargate, £84.

SNAVE (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union and liberty of ROMNEY-MARSH, though locally in the hundreds of ALOESBRIDGE, HAM, and NEWCHURCH, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from New Romney; containing 91 inhabitants. It comprises by estimation 1455 acres, of which 200 are arable, and in good cultivation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 7. 11.; net income, £160; patron, the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is a spacious edifice of stone, with a handsome western tower.

SNEATON, a parish, in the union of WHITBY, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Whitby; containing 238 inhabitants. The parish is bounded by the river Esk, and is the property of James Wilson, Esq., by whom courts leet and baron are held: the scenery in the neighbourhood presents a succession of hills and magnificent dales. Very excellent flagstone is quarried. The Whitby and Pickering railway passes at the foot of the village. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 12. 6., and has a net income of £170, arising from corn-rents assigned in commutation of tithes, in 1802; it was formerly in the patronage of the Crown, but is now in that of Mr. Wilson, to whom, as a remuneration for building the church, two presentations were given by the crown, at the expiration of which the living will revert to it. The church, replacing an old edifice which had been for some time in a dilapidated state, was erected in 1825, at a cost of £720, defrayed by the late James Wilson, Esq.; it is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with a low tower surmounted by a small spire, and the eastern end and the south porch are ornamented with buttresses terminating in richly-croqueted finials. A free school was built by the late Mr. Wilson, who left £10 per annum for a master, to which the parish adds £5.

SNELLAND (All Saints), a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Wragby; containing, with the hamlet of Swinethorpe, 97 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 17. 6., and in the gift of Earl Brownlow: the tithes have been commuted for £248. 12., and the glebe comprises 43 acres.

SNELSMORE, a tything, in the parish of CHIEVELEY, union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Newbury; containing 290 inhabitants. It comprises 869 acres, of which 79 are common or waste land. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £250.

SNELSON, a township, in the parish of ROSTHERN, union and hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 199 inhabitants.

SNELSTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Ashbourn; containing 399 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Norbury. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SNENTON (St. STEPHEN), a parish, in the union of RADFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile (E.) from Nottingham; containing 7079 inhabitants. This village, which a few years since contained not more than 250 persons, now presents a most respectable appearance, some new streets and many elegant houses having been lately erected: several of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of stockings and lace. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £227; patron and impropiator, Earl Manvers. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1796. The church is a very ancient edifice, covered with rough plaster; the burial-ground is near the summit of a bold excavated rock commanding extensive prospects over the vales of Trent and Belvoir. An additional church has been erected at an expense of £4700, by subscription, aided by a grant of £700 from the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome cruciform structure in the early English style, with a lofty tower rising from the intersection; it was consecrated on the 26th of September 1839, and contains 1240 sittings, of which 800 are free. The county asylum for lunatics, noticed in the article on Nottingham, is in this parish. In the neighbourhood are some curious excavations in the stone rock, used as dwellings.

SNETTERTON (St. ANDREW AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WAYLAND, hundred of SHROPHAM, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N.) from East Harling; containing 261 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1840 acres, of which 1540 are arable, 280 pasture, and 20 woodland: the road to Norwich through Thetford passes through it. The living comprises the consolidated rectories of All Saints and St. Andrew the Apostle, united to the rectory of Quiddenham, and valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 1. There are but slight remains of the church of St. Andrew; that of All Saints is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower.

SNETTISHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 11 miles (N. N. E.) from Lynn; containing 1151 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Snetham, had once a market on Friday, and there are still some remains of the ancient market-cross in the village. The parish comprises about 5600 acres, of which 3000 are arable, 1700 pasture and marsh, 100 woodland, and 800 heath and waste; the substratum abounds with carrstone of excellent quality, which is extensively used for building, and, though soft and easily worked when taken from the quarry, becomes hard by exposure to the air. The village, which is on the road from Lynn to Wells, about two miles from the coast, is spacious and well built; and petty-sessions for the division are held in it on the second Monday in every month. On the beach adjoining the Lynn channel is a bed of shingle, of which great quantities are sent by vessels to Lincolnshire, and used in repairing the roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £110; patron and impropiator, H. L. Styleman L'Estrange, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1762. The parsonage-house has been enlarged and improved by the incumbent, the Rev. J. Coldham.

The church is a cruciform structure in the later English style, with a lofty tower and spire, serving as a landmark for mariners; the chancel and north transept are in ruins. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; also a school endowed for twenty boys. Ninety acres of land were allotted to the poor for fuel, on the inclosure. Ancient brass instruments, in the shape of axe-heads, with handles to them, usually termed celts, have been discovered in the neighbourhood.

SNEYD, a township, in the parish of BURSLEM, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD; containing 1328 inhabitants. The place adjoins the town of Burslem on the west, of which it forms a portion; and extensive coal-works and mines of ironstone are wrought here. A church district was formed in 1844, and endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SNIBSTON, a chapelry, in the parish of PACKINGTON, union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Ashby; containing 352 inhabitants. It is detached from the rest of the parish, and is on the road from Leicester to Ashby. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

SNILESBY, or SNILESWORTH, a township, in the parish of HAWNBY, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 10 miles (N. W.) from Helmsley; containing 116 inhabitants. It is a moorland township on one of the branches of the river Rye, and comprises by computation 2500 acres of land, having scattered houses.

SNITTER, a township, in the parish and union of ROTHBURY, W. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Rothbury; containing 163 inhabitants. It stands upon a conical mount, between two streams called Wreigh and Lorbottle, which shortly afterwards unite, and join the Coquet river; the lands in the neighbourhood are of the most excellent quality, and the hedges are unusually high and vigorous.

SNITTERBY (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, E. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $11\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Market-Rasen; containing 235 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Wadingham: the tithes were commuted for land in 1769.

SNITTERFIELD (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, Snitterfield division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Stratford; containing 822 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 3600 acres; the soil is a stiff loam, alternated with gravel; the surface is undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a copious brook which flows through the whole extent of the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £271; patron, the Bishop of Worcester; impropiator, Robert Philips, Esq. The residue of the great tithes have been commuted for £109. 10., and of the vicarial for £55, the principal part having been commuted for land in 1765; the glebe comprises 240 acres. The church exhibits portions in the early, decorated, and later English styles.

SNITTERTON, with WENSLEY, a township, in the parish of DARLEY, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of WICKSWORTH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by N.) from Matlock; containing 604 inhabitants, of whom 46 are in the hamlet of Snitterton.

SNITTLEGARTH, with BEWALDETH, a township, in the parish of TORPENHOW, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Ireby; containing 73 inhabitants.

SNODLAND (ALL SAINTS), with PADDLESWORTH, a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of LARKFIELD, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from West Malling; containing 500 inhabitants. It comprises about 1400 acres, of which 800 are arable, 400 pasture, 150 wood, and 40 hop plantations; the lands are intersected by a stream tributary to the Medway, and on its banks is a paper-mill. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £297; patron, the Bishop of Rochester. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style. John May, Esq., in 1800, founded a school.

SNOREHAM (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Maldon; containing 211 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3, and in the gift of J. H. Strutt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £105. 12., and the glebe comprises $21\frac{1}{2}$ acres. There is not a vestige of the church, and the inhabitants attend that of Latchingdon, with which place the parish is rated for the poor.

SNORING, GREAT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of NORTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Little Walsingham; containing 556 inhabitants. It comprises 1645*a.* 18*p.*, of which 1405 acres are arable, 191 meadow and pasture, and 25 woodland. The living is a rectory, with that of Thursford annexed, valued in the king's books at £24, and in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £539, and the glebe comprises 37 acres, with a handsome house, erected by Sir Richard Shelton. The church is a good structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and contains some ancient monuments and brasses to the Shelton and other families; on the south side of the chancel are three sedilia of stone, and a piscina. The union workhouse is in the parish.

SNORING, LITTLE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Fakenham; containing 293 inhabitants. It comprises 1524*a.* 3*r.* 9*p.*, of which 1151 acres are arable, 247 meadow and pasture, and 125 woodland. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of East Barsham, and valued in the king's books at £12: the tithes have been commuted for £347, and the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church is in the early English style, with a Norman doorway on the south: in the churchyard is a detached circular tower with a Norman entrance, supposed to have belonged to a more ancient church. A house for lepers was founded here in 1380.

SNOWSHILL, a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 6 miles (N. E.)

from Winchcomb; containing 298 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Stanton.

SNYDALE, a township, in the parish of NORMANTON, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Pontefract; containing 138 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1300 acres, chiefly the property of James Whitwell Torre, Esq., whose seat, Snydale Hall, is a handsome residence. Rent-charges have been awarded, as commutations for the tithes, amounting to £188. 0. 6., of which £108. 0. 4. are payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, £54. 0. 2. to improPRIATORS, and £26 to the vicar. There is also a glebe of $6\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

SOBERTON, a parish, in the union of DROXFORD, hundred of MEON-STOKE, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bishop's-Waltham; containing, with the tything of East Hoc, 954 inhabitants, of whom 863 are in Soberton tything. The parish comprises 5814 acres, of which 455 acres are common or waste land. The living is annexed to the rectory of Meon-Stoke: the tithes have been commuted for £828, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church is principally in the early English style.

SOCKBRIDGE, a township, in the parish of BARTON, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Penrith; containing 250 inhabitants. It is situated on the south bank of the river Eamont, and abounds with limestone. The ancient hall, a quadrangular building with a tower, has been converted into a farm-house. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £40. 2. 7., and the vicarial for £3. 1. 5.

SOCKBURN (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DARLINGTON, partly in the S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, county of DURHAM, but chiefly in the wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. E.) from Darlington; containing 201 inhabitants, of whom 42 are in the township. This has been supposed to be the Saxon Socabyrig. In the time of Canute, Snaculf gave to the church of Durham "Socceburg and Grisbi;" and soon after the Conquest the place became the seat of the Norman family of Conyers. The parish comprises the townships of Sockburn, Over Dinsdale, and Girsby; the first, which is wholly in the county of Durham, contains about 1000 acres. Among other late improvements, a bridge of wood, consisting of one arch of upwards of 150 feet span, has been thrown across the river Tees by the lord of the manor and owner of the lands within the township, Henry Collingwood Blackett, Esq. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £79; patrons and improPRIATORS, the Master and Brethren of Sherburn Hospital. The church, principally in the early English style, has been partly taken down, and a new building erected on the opposite side of the Tees, in a situation more convenient for the parishioners, chiefly at the expense of Mr. Blackett and the master of Sherburn Hospital. The old edifice contains some ancient monuments, one of which is reported to be that of Sir John Conyers, representing him with his feet resting upon a lion, that appears to be contending with a winged dragon; and in an adjoining field is the Grey Stone, where, according to legendary story, the dauntless knight slew the "monstrous venomous and poisonous wyveron, ask, or worm, which overthrew and devoured many people in fight."

SOCK-DENNIS.—See STOCK-DENNIS.

SODBURY, CHIPPING (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 28 miles (S. S. W.) from Gloucester, and 113 (W. by S.) from London; containing 1273 inhabitants. This town, which existed in the twelfth century, and was endowed by King Stephen with the same privileges as Bristol, is situated on the road from Bristol to Cirencester, at the foot of a hill near the source of the Little Avon. The market is on Thursday; and fairs are held on May 23rd and June 24th, for cattle, cheese, and pedlery; and on the Friday before Lady-day and Michaelmas-day, both statute-fairs. The town was governed by a bailiff until 1681, when the inhabitants were incorporated by charter of Charles II., which ordained that the municipal body should consist of a mayor, six aldermen, and twelve burgesses; but this grant was annulled by proclamation of James II., in 1688, at the request of the inhabitants: constables are now elected annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor. The parish comprises 100 acres, chiefly pasture and common; the surface here is flat, but the adjacent scenery of bold and mountainous character. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £126; patron, the Vicar of Old Sodbury. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style. There are meeting-houses for Baptists and the Society of Friends; and a free grammar school is endowed with £20 per annum. The poor law union of Chipping-Sodbury comprises 23 parishes or places, and contains a population of 19,230.

SODBURY, LITTLE (*ST. ADELIN*E), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Chipping-Sodbury; containing 125 inhabitants. Previously to the battle of Tewkesbury, a skirmish took place here between the forces of Queen Margaret, and the advanced guard of Edward IV., when several of the latter were made prisoners; and during the parliamentary war in the reign of Charles I., Cromwell lodged for one night at the old manor-house. The parish comprises 1071 acres, of which 112 are common or waste; the lands are the property of W. H. H. Hartley, Esq. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 10., and in the gift of Mr. Hartley: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe consists of 31 acres. There are traces of a camp, probably of Roman origin, on the brow of the Cotswold hills facing the Severn, commanding an extensive view of the vale of Gloucestershire, and forming one of a line of intrenchments of great importance: within the area was discovered a coin with the legend Caius Marius Imperator concordia Militum, which motto is written on the sign of the Cross Hands, a posting-house 11 miles from Bath, in the parish of Old Sodbury. Little Sodbury House, now a ruin, was anciently the residence of the illustrious Tyndale, who retired to this place during the Reformation, and employed himself in the translation of the Bible; and subsequently of David Hartley, who was minister plenipotentiary at the court of Versailles in 1783, and negotiated the treaty between Great Britain and the United States of America.

SODBURY, OLD (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-SODBURY, Lower division of the hundred of GRUMBALD'S-ASH, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Chipping-Sodbury; containing 871 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3617 acres, of which 312 are common or waste; the substratum contains stone of the soft oolite formation, which is quarried for building. The road from Bristol to Chippenham passes through the village, and meets the Bath and Cheltenham road at the Cross Hands inn here, a good posting-house, where is also a post-office. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The great tithes have been commuted for £233. 8., and the vicarial for £512. 10.; and there is a glebe-house, with about half an acre of garden-ground. The church is an ancient structure, containing some interesting details of Norman architecture.

SOFTLEY, with LYNESACK, a township, in the parish of ST. ANDREW AUCKLAND, union of AUCKLAND, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 8 miles (S. S. E.) from Wolsingham; containing 910 inhabitants. This township, commonly called South Side, is bounded on the south by the river Gaunless, and contains several coal-works; the soil is mostly of a cold nature, especially on the north. A considerable portion of the land is tithe-free.

SOHAM (St. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAPLOE, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Ely, and 69 (N. N. E.) from London; containing, with the chapelry of Barway, 4162 inhabitants. This was a place of some note at a very early period, and St. Felix, first bishop of the East Angles, is said to have founded a monastery here about 630, which he made the seat of his diocese prior to the removal of the see to Dunwich; here, also, his remains were interred, but they were afterwards taken up and conveyed to Ramsey abbey, when the cathedral was erected at Soham by Luttingus, a Saxon nobleman. This building, as well as the bishop's palace, was destroyed by fire, and the monks, at that time a flourishing society, were killed by the Danish army under the command of Ingvar and Ubba, in 870. Before the draining of the fens, here was a large lake, over which was a dangerous passage by water to Ely; but it was subsequently rendered more safe by the construction of a causeway through the marshes, at the expense of Hervey, Bishop of Ely. The town is situated upon the east bank of the river Cam, on the verge of the county; the streets are irregularly built, and the houses of mean appearance. Horticulture is carried on to a considerable extent, especially in the article of asparagus; the dairies are abundant, and cheese of a most excellent quality, and very similar to that of Stilton, is made. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on May 9th, for horses, cattle, and pedlery; and on the Monday before Midsummer, which is a pleasure-fair. The parish comprises 12,000 acres, of which 400 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £32. 16. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the improprators, the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge: the great tithes have been commuted for £672. 14., and the vicarial for £1653; the impropriate glebe comprises 78 acres, and the vicarial four. The church is a venerable cruciform structure, with a lofty square embattled tower visible at a great distance, and in the interior are several monuments. At Barway is a chapel of ease. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians; also a free school for boys, endowed with the profits of an estate of moorland allotted on the division of the commons, in 1658, and now producing £60 per annum; and children are apprenticed with a premium of £20 from funds given by Bishop Laney. Some few vestiges of the ancient palace and cathedral are yet visible; and several human bones were dug up at the east end of the street near the church, a few years since.

SOHAM, EARL (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of PLOMESGATE, hundred of LOES, E. division of SUFFOLK, 12 miles (N. by W.) from Woodbridge; containing 741 inhabitants, and comprising 1944a. 2r. 24p. A fair, chiefly for lambs, is held on July 23rd. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of the Rev. J. H. Groome: the tithes have been commuted for £598, and the glebe consists of $9\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is an ancient structure, partly in the early, but chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; the roof is finely groined, and the font, of Caen stone, richly sculptured. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. The town lands contain 45 acres, and nearly £1400 are vested in the funds for the poor. Soham Lodge was the residence of the Countess of Surrey, the wife of the poet; she died here, and was buried at Framlingham.

SOHAM, MONK (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Framlingham; containing 404 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1569a. 2r. 33p., of which 58 acres are common or waste. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. J. H. Groome: the tithes have been commuted for £445, and the glebe comprises 88 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower.

SOHO.—See HANDSWORTH.

SOKEHOLME, a chapelry, in the parish of WARSOP, union of MANSFIELD, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Mansfield; containing 66 inhabitants, and comprising 984 acres.

SOLIHULL (St. ALPHEGE), a parish, the head of a union, and formerly a market-town, in the Solihull division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 13 miles (N. W.) from Warwick, and 105 (N. W.) from London; containing 3401 inhabitants. This town is situated on the road from Warwick to Birmingham, and consists principally of two spacious and parallel streets, intersected by two smaller; the houses are generally well built and of modern appearance, and are amply supplied with water from two copious springs to the north; the air is remarkably salubrious, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. The Warwick and Birmingham canal passes about half a mile to the north of the town, the Stratford canal about two miles to the south of it, and the Hampton station of the London and Birmingham railway is within a distance of three miles to the north-east. Fairs for horses and cattle are held on the 29th of April and 12th of October, and on the 11th of September for horses and for hiring servants. Petty-sessions are held on the first Saturday in every month, alternately with Knowle; and the town-hall, a neat brick building, is well adapted for the purpose.

The parish comprises 11,296 acres, of which 5583 are arable, 4080 meadow and pasture, and 568 wood and plantations; the surface is flat; the lands are well inclosed, and the scenery, in parts enlivened by the river Blyth, which intersects the parish, is enriched with abundance of hedge-row timber, chiefly oak. The soil is partly gravelly and light, and partly clayey loam, and generally in good cultivation, yielding crops of every kind; the substratum contains coal, but no mines are at present in operation. Olton Hall and Malvern Hall, situated in the parish, are handsome residences. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 18. 4., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. Archer Clive, M.A., by whom a handsome parsonage-house has been erected, in the Elizabethan style: the tithes have been commuted for £1500, and the glebe comprises 91 acres. The church is a spacious cruciform structure, partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, with an embattled tower rising from the centre and surmounted by an octangular spire. The interior abounds with rich details; the tracery, mouldings, and corbels are elaborately ornamented; and some very beautiful tabernacle-work which formed part of the ancient rood-loft, where the organ was originally placed, has been removed to the front of the west gallery built in 1840, at an expense of £435. The font, of octagonal form, is Norman, with circular pillars at the angles; in the chancel and transepts are piscinæ in trefoil arches with triangular canopies; and there were formerly numerous monuments, especially to the Holbech family, in the ancient chapel of St. Katharine, but the roof was destroyed by the fall of the spire in the year 1757, and many of the monuments were then injured. A church has been erected at Shirley-Street, which see. There are places of worship for Independents and Roman Catholics.

Various charitable bequests have been made to the parish at different times, yielding, in 1827, an annual income of £317, and have since that date been improved under the management of the trustees, now producing a gross revenue of £600, subject to deductions for keeping the buildings in repair. These funds, by order of the court of chancery in 1840, are partly appropriated to the maintenance of a free grammar school, which affords a classical and general education, and also includes an English school for the children of the poor. A sum is likewise allotted from the income to the support of schools for boys and girls at Shirley-Street; above 20 children of the parish are clothed; and a school near Solihull, in which are 70 girls, has an endowment of £25 per annum, arising from a bequest by Mrs. Martha Palmer. The rent of a farm producing £50 per annum, bequeathed by Mr. Collet, is partly distributed in donations of 1s. each to poor persons, twice in the year, at the gravestone of the testator; and the remainder is applied, at the discretion of the trustees, to other charitable purposes. The union of Solihull comprises eleven parishes or places, all in the county of Warwick, with the exception of the parish of Yardley, which is in the county of Worcester, the whole containing a population of 12,406. A Benedictine nunnery dedicated to St. Margaret, was founded at Hen-Wood, in the parish, by Ketelburn de Langdon, in the reign of Henry II., and at the Dissolution had a revenue of £21. 2. Near Olton Hall are some traces of an ancient moat.

SOLLARS-DILWYN, a township, in the parish of DILWYN, union of WEOBLEY, hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD; containing 165 inhabitants.

SOLPORT, a township, in the parish of STAPLETON, union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of the county of CUMBERLAND; containing 353 inhabitants.

SOMBOURN, KING'S (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S.) from Stockbridge; containing, with the tything of Brook, 1125 inhabitants, of whom 146 are in the tything of Up Sombourn. This place, which, prior to the Conquest, was held in royal demesne, and now forms part of the duchy of Lancaster, was the residence of the celebrated John of Gaunt, of whose palace there are still some remains. What are thought to have been the ancient stables have been converted into a farm-house; and the gardens and pleasure-grounds, with the park, fish-ponds, and an extensive bowling-green, encompassed by an earthwork about three feet high, may yet be traced. The parish comprises by measurement 7450 acres, of which about 1500 are woodland. Considerable quantities of chalk are sent from the neighbourhood to Redbridge, for the improvement of the strong clay soil in the New Forest, by the Andover canal, which passes through the parish, and is crossed by a bridge at a place called Horsebridge, on the line of the old Roman road from Winchester to Old Sarum. The living is a vicarage, with those of Little Sombourn and Stockbridge annexed, valued in the king's books at £21. 1. 10½.; net income, £696; patron and impropiator, the Rev. Sir John Barker Mill, Bart. The church is an ancient structure, containing some interesting details, among which is the figure of an ecclesiastic in robes within a trefoiled niche. There was formerly a chapel of ease at Compton. On an eminence three miles to the north of the church are the remains of an encampment called the Ring, with a deep intrenchment inclosing an area of about twenty-one acres; and on the adjoining down, but within the parish of Stockbridge, are remains of smaller dimensions, probably the outworks of the former.

SOMBOURN, LITTLE (All Saints), a parish, in the union of STOCKBRIDGE, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. E.) from Stockbridge; containing 116 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1515 acres, of which about 300 are woodland. The living is annexed, with that of Stockbridge, to the vicarage of King's-Sombourn.

SOMERBY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (S. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 480 inhabitants. It comprises 1590 acres, of which the substratum contains stone of inferior quality, quarried for building and for the roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. M. Burnaby; net income, £224, arising from land; impropiators, S. Smith, Esq., and others. The church is an ancient structure, with a tower and spire rising from the centre. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school endowed with £15 per annum.

SOMERBY, a chapelry, in the parish and wapentake of CORRINGHAM, union of GAINSBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Gainsborough; containing 63 inhabitants.

SOMERBY (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Grantham; containing, with the chapelry of Great Humby, 267 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2543*a.* 15*p.*, of which 588 acres are in Great Humby: there are quarries of stone, which is used for common building purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £645; patron, Lord Willoughby de Eresby. The tithes were commuted for a corn-rent variable every fifteen years, by an act of parliament, in 1811; the glebe comprises 77 acres. The church contains a tablet to the Rev. John Myers, for 42 years rector. There is a chapel of ease at Great Humby; and a parochial school is supported by subscription. Some traces exist of a Roman road.

SOMERBY (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 63 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £198. 3., and the glebe comprises 13 acres.

SOMERCOATES, NORTH (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Louth; containing 819 inhabitants. It is situated close to the sea, and comprises 4752 acres, of which 1208 are common or waste land; the general character of the soil is in some parts loamy, and in others sandy; the surface is flat, but well drained, and excellent crops are produced. There is a warren of 137 acres, with a good stock of rabbits; and in the northern portion of the parish is a rich salt-marsh, consisting of 600 acres, called the Pitties. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 4., and in the gift of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster: the impropriate tithes, belonging to F. Lucas, and A. Floyer, Esqrs., have been commuted for £496, and the vicarial for £490; and there are 24 acres of glebe attached to the benefice. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower, and contains an octagonal font of Norman design. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship; and there is a free school for the parishes of North and South Somercoates, endowed with 14 acres of land, probably allotted at the inclosure, and with a house and 2 acres, purchased by aid of £50 left by John Mottram, in 1691; the whole producing £31 per annum. About £65, arising from land, are yearly distributed among the poor; and they also receive a small amount out of some charitable bequests.

SOMERCOATES, SOUTH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Louth; containing 375 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2597*a.* 2*r.* 21*p.*, part of which was formerly marsh land, inclosed under an act of parliament passed in the year 1630; the village is scattered, and the property is divided among several families. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 6. 3., and in the gift of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £559. 10., and the glebe contains 31 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a house. The church is a neat edifice, with a very lofty spire; the interior was repewed in 1820, and has a curious font of octagonal shape. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a small school is supported by subscription, for children who do not attend the free school in the village of North Somercoates; some trifling bequests are distributed, and the poor also receive the produce of a portion of land set apart for their benefit.

SOMERFORD-BOOTHES, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Congleton; containing 264 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £165.

SOMERFORD, GREAT (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Chippenham; containing 556 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1630 acres, and the river Avon forms its boundary on the north and east. At the inclosure in 1806, small allotments of land were awarded to poor tenants for cultivation, through the exertions of the incumbent, who has since let out for the same purpose about 100 acres of his glebe, on account of the success attending the original grant, as evinced by the highly improved condition of his parishioners. Lace-making is carried on to a limited extent. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 14. 7., and in the gift of Exeter College, Oxford; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains nearly 300 acres, allotted in lieu of tithes, and valued at £490 per annum. A parochial school was recently built on a small estate given to the parish by Queen Elizabeth.

SOMERFORD-KEYNES (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S.) from Cirencester; containing 360 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the Thames, and comprises 1533*a.* 3*r.* 31*p.*, of which about half is arable, and the remainder pasture, with the exception of a few acres of woodland; the soil is in some parts gravel, and in others clay. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £261; patron and improprator, G. S. Foyle, Esq. Mr. George Soley recently bequeathed £200 to the poor.

SOMERFORD, LITTLE (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of MALMESBURY, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Malmesbury; containing 357 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 1.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Henry Wightwick, whose tithes have been commuted for £260. A school is supported by subscription.

SOMERLEYTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. W. by N.)

from Lowestoft; containing 504 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1410*a. 1r. 32p.*, and the navigable river Waveney forms its western boundary. The living is a rectory valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of the Rev. George Anguish: the tithes have been commuted for £350; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 45 acres.

SOMERSALL-HERBERT (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 4 miles (E. by N.) from Uttoxeter; containing 120 inhabitants, and comprising 700 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 10., and in the gift of the Earl of Chesterfield: the tithes have been commuted for land, valued at £190 per annum, and the ancient glebe contains about 20 acres of excellent quality.

SOMERSBY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. W.) from Spilsby; containing 59 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 16. 5½; net income, £92; patron, Robert Burton, Esq.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a maritime county, bounded on the north-west by the Bristol Channel, on the south-west by Devonshire, on the south-east by Dorsetshire, on the east by Wiltshire, and on the north-east by Gloucestershire. It extends from 50° 48' to 51° 27' (N. Lat.), and from 2° 35' to 4° 5' (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of 1642 square miles, or 1,050,880 statute acres: there are 82,617 houses inhabited, 4703 uninhabited, and 769 in the progress of erection; and the population amounts to 435,982, of which number 209,383 are males, and 226,599 females. At the period of the Roman Conquest, the district now forming the county of Somerset was part of the territory of the Belgæ, a people of Celtic origin, who had migrated hither out of Gaul, about three centuries before the commencement of the Christian era. Between the native Britons and this tribe continued hostilities existed, in consequence of the efforts of the former to regain possession of the territory which had been taken from them; but at length, about 250 years after the first settlement of the Belgæ, Divitiacus, King of the Suessones, brought over to them from the continent a considerable army of their fellow-countrymen, and a treaty was concluded, in which a line of demarcation between the territories of each nation was agreed upon. This line consisted of a large and deep fosse defended by a rampart, called Wansdike, parts of which may still be traced. Commencing at Andover in Hampshire, it traverses the county of Wilts, and on approaching Somerset crosses the Avon near Binacre, and again at Bathampton, whence it continues over Claverton down to Prior Park, English-Combe, Stanton-Prior, Publow, Norton, and Long Ashton, and terminates on the shores of the Bristol Channel at Portishead, being 80 miles in length. Thus nearly the whole of Somersetshire was included in the territory of the Belgæ; and of the three chief cities of that people, two, Bath and Ilchester, were situated within its limits. In the Roman division of the kingdom it was included in Britannia Prima.

The county is co-extensive with the diocese of Bath and Wells, in the province of Canterbury, and is divided into the archdeaconries of Bath, Wells, and Taunton, the first having no archidiaconal court, and in the two latter the bishop exercising jurisdiction concurrently with the archdeacons. The first contains the deaneries of Bath and Redcliffe; the second, those of Axbridge, Cary, Frome, Ilchester, Marston, Pawlett, and the jurisdiction of Glastonbury; and the last, those of Bridgwater, Crewkerne, Dunster, and Taunton: the total number of parishes is 469. For purposes of civil government the shire is divided into various hundreds, and contains the cities of Bath and Wells; the borough, market, and sea-port town of Bridgwater; the borough and market towns of Frome and Taunton, the market and sea-port town of Watchet, the small sea-port town of Porlock, and the market-towns of Axbridge, Bruton, Chard, Crewkerne, Dulverton, Dunster, Glastonbury, Ilminster, Langport-Eastover, Milverton, Minehead, Shepton-Mallet, Somerton, Wellington, Wincanton, Wiveliscombe, and Yeovil. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county has been divided into the Eastern and the Western divisions, each sending two members to parliament; two representatives are returned for each of the cities, and one for the newly-enfranchised borough of Frome. Somersetshire is included in the western circuit: the Lent assizes are held at Taunton; the summer assizes at Bridgwater and Wells, alternately. The quarter-sessions take place on January 11th and April 19th at Wells; on July 12th at Bridgwater; and on October 18th at Taunton.

To describe the variety of SURFACE with some degree of perspicuity, it is necessary to consider it as divided into three districts. The first comprehends the north-eastern portion of the county, included between the harbours of Uphill and King-road, on the west, and the towns of Bath and Frome on the east: the next and central division, which is much the largest, comprising the entire middle part of the county, from the borders of Wiltshire and Dorsetshire to the Bristol Channel, is bounded on the north-east by the Mendip hills, and on the south-west by the Quantock hills and the forest of Neroche; the third forms the remaining western part of the county. The general surface of the North-Eastern district is finely varied by lofty hills, which command magnificent views over the fertile plains that lie beneath them; the western part of it, however, including the hundreds of Winterstoke and Portbury, consists of low moorlands, as they are called, which are subject to frequent inundation. The extensive mountainous range called the Mendip hills, stretches from Cottle's Oak, near the town of Frome, on the eastern side of the county, in a direction nearly west-north-west, immediately northward of Wells and Axbridge, to a place called Black Rock, on the Bristol Channel, near Uphill, a distance of more than 30 miles. In the Middle division, on the borders of Wilts and Dorset, the lands are high, and chiefly occupied either as sheep-walks or in the production of corn. The country around Shepton, Bruton, Castle-Cary, Ilchester, Somerton, Langport, Petherton, and Ilminster, is exceedingly productive, both in corn and pasture, and abounds with good orchards and fine luxuriant meadows; westward of this extensive tract rise the Polden and Ham hills, with a bold aspect. A distinguishing feature in this division is its marshes or fen lands, which are divided into two districts, called Brent Marsh, and the Bridgwater or South Marsh. The two principal bogs of the district, comprising several thousand acres, situated one on each side of this river, a little to the westward of Glastonbury, are five or six feet higher than the adjacent lands, and consist of a mass of porous earth, saturated with, and floating in, water: some parts of the drained lands are occasionally subject to land-floods. The South-Western division of the county has nearly an equal proportion of lofty hills and fertile slopes and vales. In the vale of Taunton-Dean, which comprises thirty parishes, and the market-towns of Taunton, Wellington, and Milverton, the prospect is agreeably relieved by a mixture of arable and pasture ground; but to the north-west are wild and mountainous tracts. The Quantock hills, extending nearly the whole of the distance between the town of Taunton and the sea; the Brandon hills, to the westward of these; and others in this part of the county, are noted for their wild and picturesque scenery. The loftiest point of the Quantock hills is 1270 feet above the sea; the elevation called Dundry beacon, however, situated near the coast, is the highest land in the county, being, according to the ordnance survey, 1668 feet.

The mountainous parts of the county have a smooth, undulating, and rounded outline, seldom presenting cliffs or precipitous faces, except on the sea-shore. The extensive line of sea-coast is very irregular, in some places projecting in lofty and rocky promontories, and in others receding into fine bays, with low and level shores. From Stert point, at the mouth of the Parret, northward, the shore is for a considerable distance entirely flat, and composed of vast sand-banks, repelling the waters of the ocean, which anciently spread over these shoals, and covered the extensive district now called Brent Marsh. The general direction of the Somersetshire coast, from the western extremity until near the mouth of the Parret, is from west to east; here, however, commence the shores of the marshes of the middle district, which, extending in a direction nearly from north to south, form, with the last-mentioned, the bay of Bridgewater, so called from the sea-port of that name, situated some miles up the river Parret. This bay is terminated on the north by the promontory formed by Breane down; beyond this are two smaller bays and promontories, between which and the mouth of the Avon the coast runs nearly in a north-easterly direction. For its general fertility, Somersetshire is particularly eminent; and the variety of SOIL is so great, that almost every species may be found within its limits. In the north-eastern district the proportion of arable land is very small; in the middle division it is greater, but almost wholly on the south-eastern side; in the vale of Taunton, in the western part of the county, there is much arable land, and on the northern side, approaching Watchet: the whole amounts to nearly 300,000 acres. The rotations of crops are various; those commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas, the produce of which varies greatly. The grass lands are of very large extent, and the plains are remarkable for their luxuriant herbage, furnishing a supply of produce much more than sufficient for consumption; London, Bristol, Salisbury, and other markets, receiving great quantities of fat oxen, sheep, and hogs; besides cider, cheese, butter, and different other articles from this county. Potatoes are very extensively grown in different districts, more especially on the fertile soils in the vicinity of Castle-Cary, where 160 sacks per acre are a common crop. In the parishes of Wrington, Blagdon, Ubley, Compton-Martin, and Harptree, in the north-eastern district, teasel is produced, chiefly on a strong rich clay. Woad is also cultivated in this district, chiefly in the vicinity of Keynsham, the quality of which is much esteemed; three or four crops are commonly gathered in the season, and the average produce per acre is about a ton and a half. In the rich tract extending from Wincanton by Yeovil to Crewkerne, a great deal of flax and hemp is grown. The cattle of Somersetshire also form an object of great importance in its agricultural economy.

The Woods and Plantations occupy about 20,000 acres; the north-eastern district is but partially covered, and, according to the demand at the collieries, the wood it contains is cut at very irregular intervals. On the borders of Wiltshire was the large forest of Selwood, extending from Penscellwood to within three miles of Frome, and which was disafforested in the reign of Charles I.: it appears to have extended over a vale of about 20,000 acres, 18,000 of which have been cleared and converted into arable and pasture land, with a small portion of meadow; the remainder continues in coppice woods, the chief sorts of timber being oak and ash, while the underwood is principally hazel, ash, alder, willow, and birch. The country has different uncultivated wastes: in the north-western district are several uninclosed commons, the principal of which are Broadfield down and Lansdown, the former containing about 2500 acres, the latter nearly 1000; the surface of Lansdown is perfectly smooth, and it is remarkable for its excellence in feeding sheep. The large open tract called Leigh down, to the west of Bristol, is also subject to a right of commonage, and is chiefly depastured with sheep. More than one-half of the ancient royal forest of Mendip, on the hills of that name, is now inclosed; the remainder is covered to the extent of several miles with heath and fern, and furnishes pasturage for large flocks of sheep. In the middle division, the largest uninclosed upland common is the forest of Neroche, near Ilminster, containing 800 or 900 acres, and upon which different parishes have a right of commonage without stint; the next in size is White-down, near Chard; the low marshy wastes comprise several thousand acres. At the western extremity of the county, and partly in Devonshire (which see), is the great forest of Exmoor, extending from east to west for a distance of ten or twelve miles, and from north to south about eight, and containing nearly 20,000 acres. There are several hundred acres of uncultivated land on the Quantock and Brandon hills, and in some other parts, and the wastes of that part of Black-down which lies within this county are supposed to exceed 1000 acres: the occupiers of estates contiguous to these hills stock them with young cattle in the summer months.

The chief MINERAL PRODUCTIONS are coal, lead, calamine, limestone, freestone, and various other kinds of stone; and fullers'-earth, marl, and ochre, are also occasionally found. The coal beds are the nearest to London of any yet discovered, and constitute the most southern deposit of that mineral in England; the deposit is comparatively small, and lies northward of the eastern parts of the Mendip hills. These hills, which consist chiefly of limestone of that kind technically called mountain limestone, are famous for their mines, chiefly of lead and lapis calaminaris. Those of lead, however, are nearly exhausted, at least the deep working is so. incumbered with water that little can be done in them, though, in former times, many thousand pounds were annually paid to the see of Wells for the lord's share (one-tenth) of the lead dug in the forest, in the parish of Wells only: on Broadfield down, also, are veins of lead. The Mendip mines are governed by a set of laws and orders commonly called Lord Choke's Laws, which were enacted in the time of Edward IV., when on some disputes arising, that monarch sent Lord Choke, chief justice of England, down to his royal forest of Mendip, and the said laws were agreed upon by the lords royal of Mendip, viz., the Bishop of Bath, Lord Glaston, Lord Benfield, the Earl of Chewton, and my lord of Richmond, at a great meeting then held at a place called the Forge. The mountain limestone formation near Bristol, which is a feature in English geology, constitutes the hills rising from beneath the red marl to the west of that city, and forms a range of considerable elevation, through which the Avon passes, in its course to the Severn. These hills consist of a prodigious number of strata, of very different natures, but chiefly of limestone of several varieties, the dip of which is about forty-five degrees. Some of the limestone strata contain different organic remains; and an assemblage of numerous strata, called the Black Rock, from the colour of the limestone, which is here quarried for paving-stones, contains numerous fossils and rounded concretions, penetrated by petroleum, which sometimes exudes from the rock. The strata alternating with the limestone are beds of clay of various kinds, which sometimes contain nodules of coral and geodes of iron-ore: thin beds of iron-stone and quartzose sand are also found, besides a bed of coal about two inches thick. The mountain limestone ranges round Bristol, in almost every direction, forming a kind of irregular basin, and reposes on the red sandstone, which visibly passes beneath it. On the top of the limestone strata forming the cliffs, on the side of the Avon, lies a yellowish sandstone, which has sometimes the appearance of breccia, occurring also in some other parts of the same district. The red clay in the neighbourhood of Bristol contains gypsum, and abounds with sulphate of strontian, in veins and large beds. The mountainous part of the western district of the county is formed of a series of rocks, differing much in mineralogical character, but a great proportion of them having the structure of sandstones; some of the finest of these sandstones graduate into a fine-grained slate, divisible into laminæ as thin as paper, and having a smooth, silky, and shining surface. Copper, in a state of sulphuret and of malachite, and veins of hematite, are frequently met with; and nests of copper-ore, of considerable magnitude, have been found in the subordinate beds of limestone. The Quantock hills, Grabbist hill, Croydon hill, Brendon hill, and some others to the west of them, consist chiefly of the kind of stone called greywacké, in some places interstratified with limestone; the quarries of limestone in the eastern side of the Quantock hills are very numerous. North Hill, extending along the sea-shore from Minehead to Porlock, and forming a very bold precipitous coast, is of greywacké; and the whole of the precipitous coast of the county presents a great variety of mineralogical strata. The kind of limestone called by mineralogists lias, and which extends in a direction nearly north-east and south-west almost to the banks of the Humber, commencing in Dorsetshire a little to the west of Ilchester, passes by Bath, and occupies a large tract of this county. The greatest quantity of freestone is raised at Coombe down.

The principal Manufactures are those of woollen and worsted goods at Frome, Taunton, Wellington, and Wiveliscombe; of gloves, at Yeovil, Stoke, and Martick; of lace, at Chard and Taunton; of silk, at Taunton, Bruton, and Shepton-Mallet; of crape, at Taunton, and of knit worsted stockings, at Shepton-Mallet. Upon the Avon are several mills for preparing iron and copper, and others for the spinning of worsted, and the spinning and weaving of cotton. Many of the lower classes derive cheap and wholesome food from the salmon and herring fisheries of Porlock, Minehead, and Watchet, which are carried on to a considerable extent; the other fish found off the coast, and which are occasionally taken at different places upon it, are tublin, flounders, sand-dabs, hakes, pipers, soles, plaice, skate, conger-eels, shrimps, prawns, crabs, muscles, and starfish.

The chief Rivers are the Lower Avon, the Parret, the Tone, the Brue, and the Axe, of which the first, besides constituting the harbour of Bristol, is navigable for small craft as high as Bath, a distance of sixteen miles above that port. The Parret forms the harbour of Bridgwater, and falls into Bridgwater bay at Stert point; the navigable part of its source commences at Langport, whence to Stert point is a distance of about twenty miles. The Tone becomes navigable at Taunton to the Parret at Boroughbridge, about eight miles from Taunton, and near the centre of the county. The Brue is navigable up to Highbridge, a distance of two miles from its mouth. The smaller streams are very numerous; they all flow through fertile tracts, and the banks of many of them are adorned with extensive ornamented grounds belonging to the various seats of the nobility and gentry, with which the county abounds; some of the principal are the Yeo, the Cale, the Chew, the Frome, the Ivel, and the Barl. The Kennet and Avon canal enters the county from Bradford in Wiltshire, and joins the Lower Avon at Bath. The Somersetshire coal canal commences in the Kennet and Avon canal at Limpley-Stoke, near Bradford, and proceeds to Poulton; a railway branching from it in the parish of South Stoke extends to the collieries at Wilton and Clandown. The Grand Western canal enters the county near the parish of Thorn St. Margaret's, and proceeds to Taunton; and there is also a canal from Taunton to Bridgwater. The Great Western railway enters the county at Bathford, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Bath, and, crossing the Avon on a bridge near the city, proceeds along the southern bank of the river to within a short distance of Bristol, whence it is again carried over the Avon to one of its termini at Temple Mead, in the county of Gloucester; it is $117\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and at Bristol joins the Bristol and Exeter railway, which runs through Somerset in a south-western direction, near the towns of Bridgwater, Taunton, and Wellington into the county of Devon.

The Remains of Antiquity that have been found are very various. The parish of Stanton-Drew, in the north-eastern district, is remarkable as containing the remains of four clusters of huge massive stones, forming two circles, an oblong and an ellipsis, which are supposed to have once constituted a Druidical temple. The ancient boundary called Wansdyke, may be traced in several places; and in the vicinity of its course, near Great Bedwin, celts and ancient instruments of war have been discovered. Besides the Roman cities of Bath and Ilchester, there are numerous places which, although their names have been changed or altered, since that remote period, still bear evident marks of Roman origin in the foundations of some of their walls, and in various remains that have from time to time been dug from them; and among the many miscellaneous remains of this people which have been discovered, more especially at Bath, are included temples, sudatories, tessellated pavements, altars, hypocausts, and coins of different ages. Traces of ancient encampments are visible in various parts. The principal Roman road was the Fosse-way, which extends across the county from Bath, in a south-westerly direction to Perry-Street, on the confines of Devonshire. In a direction nearly parallel with this ran another road from the forest of Exmoor, through Taunton, Bridgwater, and Axbridge, to Portishead, whence was a trajectus, or ferry, across the Bristol Channel to the city of Isca Silurum, now Caerleon. On Salisbury hill are traces of the earthworks thrown up at the time of the siege of Bath by the Saxons. An encampment called Jack's Castle, near Wilmington, is supposed to have been of Danish formation. The intrenchments formed by the forces of Harold, near Porlock, in 1052, are still to be seen.

According to Tanner, the number of Religious Houses in the county, of all denominations, before the Reformation, including two Alien priories, was about 44. There are remains of the abbey in the Isle of Athelney, founded by King Alfred; of that of Banwell, established in the same reign; of those of Bath, Bruton, Cliff, Glastonbury, Hinton, Keynsham, Muchelney, and Wells; of the priories of Barlinch, Barrow, Bath, Berkeley, Buckland, Sordrum, Cannington, Chewton, Dunster, Frome, Hinton-Charterhouse, Ilchester, Kewstoke, Montacute, Portbury, Stavordale, Stogursey, Taunton, Woodspring, and Yeanston; and of the nunneries of Nunney, Walton, and Whiteball. Remains also exist of the ancient castles, of Bridgwater, Dunster, Montacute, Stoke-under-Hamdon, Stowey, Taunton, and Walton. Combe-Sydenham, near Stogumber, is a very old mansion, the seat of the family of the Sydenhams. The more modern seats of nobility and gentry are particularly numerous. Besides the celebrated waters of Bath, there are mineral springs of different properties at Alford, Ashill, Castle-Cary, East Chinnock, Glastonbury, Queen-Camel, Wellington, and Wells; at Nether Stowey is a petrifying spring. In the Mendip hills, and surrounded by wild and magnificent scenery, is Wokey Hole (so called from the neighbouring village of Wokey), an extensive natural cavern, the most celebrated in the West of England, in which the waters of the Axe take their rise, issuing from it in a clear and rapid stream. In the parish of Cheddar, in the same district, is an immense chasm in the hills, called Cheddar Cliffs, the scenery of which is particularly rugged and striking. Somersetshire abounds with rare and curious plants, and on the hilly wastes occur the dwarf juniper, the cranberry, and the wortleberry, the last being here provincially called hurts. The rocks on the coast have great quantities of the lichen marinus, or sea-bread; in the low moors grows the gale, or candle-berry myrtle. The county gives the title of Duke to the family of Seymour.

SOMERSHAM (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Huntingdon, and $64\frac{1}{4}$ (N.) from London; containing 1517 inhabitants. This town, formerly called Summersum, is supposed to have derived its name from an adjacent hill which was the site of a summer camp of the Romans; it is situated in a fertile country, abounding with springs of remarkable purity, some of which were considered to possess medicinal qualities, but are now disused. Several of the inhabitants are employed in preparing wicks for rushlights, which are sent to various parts of the kingdom. The market, long since discontinued, was on Friday: fairs are held on June 23rd and November 12th, but they are very inconsiderable. The parish comprises about 3200 acres. The living is a rectory, with Colne and Pidley annexed, valued in the king's books at £40. 4. 7., and annexed to the regius professorship of divinity in the university of Cambridge; net income, £1770. An exchange of tithes for land and corn-rents took place in 1796, and a commutation has been made recently for a rent-charge of £531. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The Baptists have a place of worship. A free school is endowed with the proceeds of £200, the bequest of Thomas Hammond, in 1746, and with some land assigned by the commissioners in 1765; the income is £26 a year. There is also a Feoffees' estate, yielding £55 annually, applied to repairing and maintaining a bridge over a stream called Cranbrook, on the road from Somersham to Colne, also a causeway leading from the bridge to the church. The bishops of Ely had formerly a palace here.

SOMERSHAM (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Ipswich; containing 485 inhabitants, and comprising 1014a. 16p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of Mrs. Stubbin: the tithes have been commuted for £270. There are places of worship for Independents and Baptists.

SOMERS-TOWN, a chapelry, in the parish of ST. PANCRAS, Holborn division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2 miles (N. W.) from St. Paul's Cathedral, London. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £400; patron, the Vicar of St. Pancras. This place has, within the last 30 years, become a very populous neighbourhood, and a particular description is given in the article PANCRAS, ST.

SOMERTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Deddington; containing 329 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1780 acres, and is intersected by the river Cherwell and the Oxford and Birmingham canal; the soil is sandy and loamy, and the subsoil a blue clay, incumbent upon limestone. The locality is celebrated for its perennial springs, affording a plentiful supply of excellent water, and one of which, on the glebe, is said to be the source of the river Ouse. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 1. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £225; patron, the Rev. H. Wintle. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1765; there is a glebe of 47 acres, with a parsonage-house, built by Bishop Juxon, whose arms are beautifully painted on glass in the hall window; and in the orchard is an apple-tree of the golden-pippin species, planted by that prelate, and supposed to be one of the largest in the kingdom. The church contains several memorials to the Fermor family; and over the communion table is a fine painting of the Last Supper, which, during the period of the commonwealth, was much defaced, but has been restored by the Rev. H. Wintle. On the north side of the tower of the building is represented, in stone, Our Saviour between the Two Thieves; and in the churchyard is a handsome stone cross, having on its south side a crucifix in basso-relievo. Here was once a castle, as appears from the will of Thomas Fermor, Esq., dated 1580, by which he bequeathed "the castle-yard and chapel therein" to his executors, who erected on its site a free school, and endowed it with £10 per annum. There is also a girls' school, endowed by the Countess of Jersey with £20 a year. Some remains of the old mansion of the Fermors still exist, particularly the large western window, which gave light to the grand hall; and very recently an apartment could be traced, termed the Prince's chamber, from its having been once occupied by James II., who granted a charter for a fair at Somerton, which was held in a place now called Broad Pound. There is a powerful petrifying spring in the parish, forming a small cascade.

SOMERTON (ST. MICHAEL), a market-town and parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Ilchester, and 123 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 1981 inhabitants. This was anciently the chief town in the county, and during the Saxon era, a castle was erected here, which became a royal residence; it was subsequently converted into a state prison, and was the place of custody of many distinguished persons, among whom was John, King of France, removed hither from Hertford Castle by Edward III. Its site was afterwards occupied by the gaol, in the erection of which the materials of the ancient edifice were used, and which now forms part of the premises of the White Hart inn. The town is situated near the river Cary, over which is a stone bridge, and consists of several narrow streets: glove-making is carried on to a considerable extent, in connexion with the Yeovil trade. The market is on Tuesday; and fairs take place on the Tuesday in Passion-week, and the third, sixth, ninth, and twelfth Tuesdays following, for cattle; and September 30th and November 8th, for cattle, sheep, hogs, and pedlery. The town is governed by a bailiff and constables, annually chosen by the inhabitants; the county magistrates formerly presided at petty-sessions in the town-hall, which stands in the centre of the market-place, but they now meet at the Red Lion inn. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 0. 7½, and in the gift of the Earl of Ilchester: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £259, with a glebe of 40 acres; and those belonging to the Dean and Chapter of Bristol, for £687, with 197 acres. The church is an ancient structure, having an octagonal embattled tower on the south side; the roof exhibits a very curious specimen of carving in wood. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; also a free school founded in the 27th of Charles II., by Thomas Glover, who endowed it with an estate producing £10. 10. per annum, in addition to which is a rent-charge of £5, given by Alice Yates. On the eastern side of the hill above the village of Hurcot, are considerable quantities of fine white alabaster, and Roman pavements have been discovered in the immediate vicinity.

SOMERTON (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 9 miles (S. S. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 143 inhabitants, and consisting of 995 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the gift of the Marquess of Downshire: the tithes have been commuted for £287. 10., and the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church, which stands on high ground, and commands an extensive prospect, has some remains of Norman architecture, and contains the family vault of Viscount Blundell.

SOMERTON, EAST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 9½ miles (N. by W.) from Yarmouth; containing 61 inhabitants. It comprises 798*a. 1r. 27p.*, of which about 439 acres are arable, and the remainder pasture; the scenery is generally pleasing. The living is annexed to the rectory of Winterton: the tithes have been commuted for £270. The church has been long since demolished.

SOMERTON, WEST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of WEST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 8½ miles (N. N. W.) from Yarmouth; containing 248 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1199*a. 2r. 37p.*, of which about 539 acres are pasture, and 10 wood: the village consists of several detached houses at the foot of a gentle eminence. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron, Thomas Grove, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £320. The church has a circular tower, the upper part octagonal, and was repaired in 1839; the chancel contains a neat monument to a member of the Rising family. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph de Glanville, lord chief justice of England, founded an hospital here for three lepers, subject to Butley Priory, in Suffolk.

SOMPTING, a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of BRIGHTFORD, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Shoreham; containing 515 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2854 acres, of which 1800 are arable, and the remainder pasture, common, or waste; the surface gradually rises from the southern extremity, and terminates in the north in steep downs, comprehending bold scenery, and commanding extensive views. At Sompting Abbots, the residence of Thomas Compton, Esq., Queen Caroline dwelt for some time. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7.; net income, £150; patron, C. Marshall, Esq., who is impropiator with several others. The church is a cruciform structure, principally in the early English style, with a tower at the west end, and contains a private chapel and an oratory, the latter of which is now used as a baptistery; the church was enlarged and repaired in 1828, and again in 1838. An hospital dedicated to the Virgin Mary and St. Anthony, was founded at Cokeham, at an early period, by William Bernchijs.

SONNING (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WOKINGHAM, partly in the hundred of BINFIELD, county of OXFORD, and partly in the hundreds of CHARLTON and SONNING, county of BERKS, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Reading; containing, with the liberty of Early, and that of Woodley with Sandford, 2712 inhabitants, of whom 550 are in Sonning Town liberty, and 868 in the Oxfordshire portion, which consists of the liberty of Eye with Dunsden. This parish, which is of considerable antiquity, is said, during the separation of Berks and Wilts from the ancient see of Sherborne, to have been the seat of a diocese; but the fact has not been satisfactorily established. The bishops of Salisbury had a palace here, in which Isabel, queen of the deposed monarch Richard II., resided from the time of his imprisonment in Pontefract castle till his lamentable death in 1399. The village is situated on the bank of the river Thames, over which is a wooden bridge, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified: the Great Western railway intersects the parish. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 7. 1.; net income, £451; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury; impropiator, R. Palmer, Esq. The vicarial tithes were exchanged for corn-rents in 1816, under an inclosure act; and the impropriate have been recently commuted for a rent-charge of £1762. A new church capable of containing between 700 and 800 persons, is about to be erected, the estimated cost of which is £2000. An act for establishing a general cemetery here was passed in 1842. There is a place of worship for Independents. Sir Thomas Rich, in 1766, founded a free school, which he endowed with an estate now producing £52. 10. per annum; and there are other benefactions for education, yielding £26. 14. a year.

SOOTHILL, UPPER and NETHER, a township, in the parish and union of DEWSBURY, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Dewsbury; containing 4453 inhabitants. The township comprises by admeasurement 2326 acres; the lands are in good cultivation, and the substratum abounds with freestone, which is extensively quarried. At Soothill Hall, the ancient seat of the Soothill family, now let out in farm-tenements, is a small room called the Bishop's parlour, which afforded an asylum to the Bishop of Elphin, who in the rebellion of 1645, was driven from his diocese, and died here in 1655. The township comprises the two villages of Earls-Heaton and Hanging-Heaton (which see), and various scattered hamlets. An old building now used as a malt-house, is supposed to have been originally a church or chapel.

SOPLEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Christchurch; containing, with the tythings of Avon, Ripley, and Shirley, 939 inhabitants, of whom 325 are in Sopley tything. The parish comprises 4400 acres, of which 1400 are common or waste land. The village is pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the river Avon, over which is a ford, said to have been crossed by Sir Walter Tyrrel on his way to Poole, after the death of Rufus, and which still bears his name. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patron, H. Compton, Esq.; impropiator, W. Wyndham, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £550, and the vicarial for £330; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 40 acres. The parochial church is one of the smallest cruciform structures in the kingdom. An additional church was consecrated on the 5th December, 1839, containing 337 sittings, of which 250 are free; £700 for the erection, and £1000 for the endowment, were given principally by the Diocesan Church-Building Society at Winchester, and a grant was also made by the Pastoral Aid Society. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents. Near the main road are two large sepulchral barrows, situated in Derrat Lane, or Danes-rout lane, so called from the rout of the Danes at the place.

SOPWORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of MALMESBURY, and in a detached portion of the hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Malmesbury and Kingswood, and N. divisions of WILTS, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by S.) from Malmesbury; containing 216 inhabitants. It is situated about a mile from the road between Bath and Oxford, and comprises 1000a. 2r.; the soil rests upon a substratum of oolite, the surface of which is loose and broken, and, being mixed in several parts with clay, forms a kind of subsoil frequently called stone-brash. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10. 5., and in the gift of the Duke of Beaufort: the tithes have been commuted for £198; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 100 acres.

SOTBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HORNCASTLE, E. division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Wragby; containing 156 inhabitants, and comprising 1606 acres by admeasurement. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £193. The tithes were commuted for land in 1801; the glebe contains 300 acres.

SOTHERTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Wangford; containing 222 inhabitants, and comprising about 1000 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Uggheshall, and valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.: the tithes have been commuted for £275, and the glebe comprises 12 acres.

SOTTERLEY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of WANGFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Beccles; containing 223 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of Frederick Barne, Esq., whose ancestor, Sir George Barne, was lord mayor of London in the time of Edward VI. The tithes have been commuted for £295; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 17 acres. The church is pleasantly situated in Sotterley Park, near the mansion, and consists of nave and chancel, with an embattled tower; a gallery was erected in 1836. The chancel contains several brasses to the ancient family of Playters, and on its northern side is a splendid monument of marble and alabaster to Sir Thomas Playters.

SOTWELL (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union and parliamentary borough of WALLINGFORD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Wallingford; containing 148 inhabitants, and comprising 672a. 2r. 5p. The living is annexed to the rectory of St. Leonard, Wallingford. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £119. 11.; Queen's College, Oxford, and God's House, Southampton, have a portion of the impropriate tithes, which have been commuted for £102. 11., and the remainder have been exchanged for £51.

SOUGHTON, or SYCHTYN, a township, in the parish of LLANSILLIN, hundred of OSWESTRY, N. division of SALOP, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Oswestry; containing 251 inhabitants.

SOULBURY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Leighton-Buzzard; containing, with part of the hamlet of Hollingdon, 615 inhabitants, of whom 499 are in the township of Soulbury. The London and Birmingham railway intersects the parish. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £116; the patronage and impropriation belong to Lady Lovett. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Robert Lovett, in 1710, and the Rev. John Sambee, in 1728, endowed a school with property now producing an income of £77; and there are also some trifling bequests appropriated to charitable purposes.

SOULBY, a township, in the parish of DACRE, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. W.) from Penrith; containing 61 inhabitants. The village is situated on the margin of the beautiful lake Ullswater.

SOULBY, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-STEPHEN, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Brough; containing 300 inhabitants. It comprises 2475*a. 2r. 5p.*, of which about 936 acres are arable, and 1539 meadow and pasture: the village is considerable, and is situated on the rivulet Scandale, which is here crossed by a bridge of three arches, erected in 1819. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on the Tuesday before Easter, and August 30th, and are well attended. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £78; patron, Sir George Musgrave, Bart.; impropiator, J. Wakefield, Esq. Land was assigned in 1806, in lieu of all moduses and small tithes. The chapel was erected in 1663, and endowed at the expense of Sir Philip Musgrave.

SOULDERN (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Deddington; containing 604 inhabitants. The Oxford and Birmingham canal passes through the parish, and the river Cherwell forms the western boundary; the soil on the lower grounds is clay, and stony on the hills. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 2., and in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £428. 11.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains $13\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church is a curious ancient structure, with a tower in the Norman style; a Norman arch which separated the nave from the chancel was destroyed in rebuilding the latter, and other alterations and repairs have defaced the original character of the edifice. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SOULDROP (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the hundred of WILEY, union and county of BEDFORD, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Harrold; containing 332 inhabitants. This parish, which was inclosed agreeably with the provisions of an act of parliament passed in the year 1770, is situated in the north-western portion of the county, and upon the high road between the towns of Bedford and Higham-Ferrers, from which road a branch diverges, in the immediate vicinity of Souldrop, to Harrold. The living is a discharged rectory, united in 1735 to that of Knotting, and valued in the king's books at £10: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1770, and under the recent Tithe act have been further commuted for a rent-charge of £8. 17. 4.; there are 68 acres of glebe. The church has been rebuilt, but the ancient steeple remains, and, being situated upon very high ground, is, though not lofty in itself, a conspicuous object for several miles round.

SOULTON, a township, in the parish and union of WEM, Whitchurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 34 inhabitants.

SOUND, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Nantwich; containing 255 inhabitants. It comprises 1067 acres, of which 37 are common or waste land. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £92. 5., and the vicarial for £21. 3. 11., payable to the vicar of the parish of Acton.

SOURTON (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Oakhampton; containing 732 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3740 acres, exclusive of a large tract of common formerly belonging to Dartmoor; the surface is hilly, and the subsoil is clay. The village is on the road from Oakhampton to Tavistock. The living is annexed to the rectory of Bristow.

SOUTH-ACRE (ST. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Swaffham; containing 100 inhabitants. It comprises 2492*a. 6p.*, of which 2066 acres are arable, 123 pasture, and 207 woodland: the river Nar runs along the northern boundary. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of A. Fountaine, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £510; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises about $44\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church contains portions of the three styles of English architecture, with a square embattled tower; at the east end of the north aisle is a chapel, with the effigy of a Knight Templar supposed to represent Sir Endo Harsick, who died in 1292, and by whom it is thought the church was erected. At Racheness, in the parish, was an hospital for lepers, in the time of Henry II., subordinate to the priory of Castle-Acre. There are slight remains of the ancient hall, the seat of the Harsicks.

SOUTHALL, a chapelry, in the parish of HAYES, union of UXBRIDGE, hundred of ELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from London. A considerable market for fat-cattle is held every Wednesday; and the place is also benefited by the Great Western railway, which has a station here. A chapel has been built and endowed at Southall Green, by Henry Dobbs, Esq., in whose family the patronage is vested.

SOUTHAM, with BROCKHAMPTON, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, union of WINCHCOMB, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Cheltenham; containing 278 inhabitants, and comprising 1743 acres.

SOUTHAM (St. James), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 10 miles (E. S. E.) from Warwick, and 84 (N. W.) from London; containing 1670 inhabitants. This town, anciently called Suthau, is of great antiquity, and formerly possessed a mint; the monks of Coventry had a religious establishment here, and in Bury orchard, near the churchyard, foundations have been discovered, and many skeletons dug up. In an old mansion near the centre of the town, which appears to have been built prior to the reign of Elizabeth, Charles I. and his two sons are said to have slept, on the night before the battle of Edge-Hill, in which engagement a son of the Earl of Pembroke, who was buried in Southam church, was slain. The parochial register for the year 1641 contains an entry of money paid to the royal footman for opening the church doors, which had been locked up and sealed by the king's order, as a punishment to the inhabitants for not ringing the bells on his entering the place. The town is situated on an eminence rising from the eastern bank of the river Stowe, and consists of two streets; the houses in general are modern and well built, the inhabitants are adequately supplied with water from springs, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. The river is crossed by a neat stone bridge of two arches, at the lower extremity of the town; and on the rising ground on the opposite side, an antique mansion forms a striking contrast with the other buildings. The market is on Monday, and well supplied with corn; and fairs are held on Easter-Monday, the Monday after Holy-Thursday, and July 10th, for cattle and horses; the last of which is a show fair, at which, in imitation of that at Coventry, the procession of Lady Godiva is celebrated. A constable and headborough are appointed annually at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The parish consists of 2976 acres. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £22. 17. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £534. The church is a stately structure, principally in the decorated English style, with a fine tower surmounted by a lofty spire; in the roof of the nave, which is lighted by eight clerestory windows, enriched with tracery, is some tabernacle-work well carved in oak. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A free school was founded in 1762, and endowed with land previously given for the relief of the poor; the proceeds amount to about £30 per annum, and are augmented with £30 from the rents of town lands. There is also an endowment of £200 per annum for the poor, and the repairs of the bridge. An infirmary for curing diseases of the eye and ear, established by Mr. Smith, a resident surgeon, in 1818, under the patronage of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, is supported by subscription. The union of Southam embraces 19 parishes or places, and contains a population of 9907. Here is a mineral spring of similar properties to the waters at Leamington; also another called Holywell. The Rev. Mr. Holyoak, author of the first collection of English words published in the form of a dictionary, was rector of the parish in the seventeenth century.

SOUTHAMPTON, a sea-port, borough, market-town, and county of itself, locally in the S. division of HAMPSHIRE, 75 miles (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 27,744 inhabitants. This place probably derives its name from the ancient British Ant, the original appellation of one of the rivers which empty themselves into its fine estuary. To the

the north-east of the present town, on the opposite bank of the Itchen, the Romans had a military station, called Clausentum, which was succeeded by the Saxon town of Hantune, on the site of the modern Southampton. In 838, the Danes, with a fleet of 33 ships, effected a landing on the coast, but were repulsed with considerable loss by Wulphere, governor of the southern part of the county, under Ethelwolf; and in 860 they again penetrated into the county, and burned the city of Winchester. In the reign of Athelstan two mints were established here. In 981, a party of Danish pirates having made a descent from seven large vessels, plundered the town, and laid waste the neighbouring coast. In the reign of Ethelred II., Sweyn, King of Denmark, and Olave, King of Norway, landed here with a considerable force, burned the place, massacred the inhabitants, and committed the most dreadful depredations in the surrounding country, till Ethelred purchased peace by the payment of £16,000, on the receipt of which the invaders retired to Hantune, where they embarked for their own kingdom. Canute, after his establishment on the throne, made this town his occasional residence; and it was whilst seated on the beach here, at the influx of the tide, that he took occasion to make that memorable reproof of his courtiers, for their gross flattery, which has been recorded by historians. Adjoining the walk round the marsh, on the present dock land, are to be seen the reputed remains of a double circular protection by posts and rails of the spot on which the occurrence took place; the tops of the posts a few inches above the mud only remain, and the progress of the docks will probably obliterate these, unless some record be placed to continue so interesting a remembrance.

At the time of the Conquest, the town was so much reduced by the repeated incursions of the Danes, that at the Norman survey the king had only 79 demesne tenants. Henry II. and his queen landed at the port, on their return from France, in 1174. In the reign of John, Adam de Port was governor of the castle; and in that of Edward III. the town was completely destroyed by the French and their allies, the Spaniards and Genoese, but they were repulsed, with the loss of the Prince of Sicily and other commanders. Richard II. enlarged the castle and strengthened the fortifications that had been erected for the defence of the town and harbour. Henry V., previously to the battle of Agincourt, marshalled his army here for his expedition against France, and during his stay in the town, detected a conspiracy formed against him by the Lords Cambridge and Scroop, and Sir Thomas Grey, who were here executed for treason, and buried in the chapel of an ancient hospital, still remaining, called God's House. In the reign of Edward IV., Southampton was the scene of a sanguinary contest between the partisans of the houses of York and Lancaster, in which the former having gained the victory, many of the Lancastrian chiefs were, by the king's order, executed with extreme barbarity. The town had increased materially in extent and importance, and its trade had become so flourishing, that, in the reign of Edward V., the lord mayor of London was appointed collector of the king's duties at this port. In 1512, Grey, Marquess of Dorset, embarked here with a force for the assistance of Ferdinand, King of Spain; and, ten years after, the Emperor Charles V. sailed from it, on his return to his own dominions, after having visited Henry VIII. Edward VI., in his tour through the western and southern parts of the kingdom, for the benefit of his health, visited the town, and was sumptuously entertained by the mayor and corporation; and Philip, King of Spain, on his arrival in England to espouse Queen Mary, landed at the port, and was entertained at the sheriff's house by the mayor and his brethren, who sent him a present of wine, which he received on board his ship, the Grace de Dieu.

The town is situated on a peninsular tract of ground rising from the north-eastern shore of Southampton Water, and bounded on the east by the river Itchen, over which is a floating or steam bridge leading to Gosport, constructed under an act obtained in 1834; on the south and west is a fine open bay formed by the confluence of the Itchen with the river Test. The shores of the bay, or estuary, are richly clothed with wood, and afford a succession of diversified scenery, the vicinity being studded with villages, mansions, and villas. Southampton Water, about two miles broad at its entrance near Calshot Castle, stretches north-westward nearly seven miles; and on the eastern shore are the ruins of Netley Abbey, forming an object romantically picturesque. The town, rising gradually from the margin of the water, is distinguished for the beauty of its situation; and the approach from the London road, through an avenue of stately elms and a well-built suburb, is exceedingly striking. The principal entrance is through Bar-gate, one of the ancient gates, on the north front of which are two gigantic figures representing Sir Bevois of Southampton and the giant Ascupart, whom, according to a legendary tale, Bevois is said to have slain in combat. From this gate, which is embattled and machicolated, a spacious street, more than half a mile in length, leads directly to the quay, for the improvement of which the old Water-gate was taken down about 35 years since. The old part of the town was formerly inclosed with walls nearly a mile and a quarter in circuit, of which, with their ruined circular towers, considerable portions are still entire, the principal being that reaching from the south-east of West-gate along the shore northward. Of the ancient gates, the chief now remaining are West-gate and South-gate, in addition to Bar-gate, in relation to which last, the more modern part of the town is distinguished by the appellation of Above-Bar, while the other part is called Below-Bar. In Above-Bar are many fine ranges of building, and a new street of handsome houses has been erected, leading to the western shore, with a terrace, commanding a view of the surrounding scenery. The town is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with excellent water.

A literary and philosophical society, established some years since, by a proprietary of 30 members, is further supported by an unlimited number of annual subscribers of £1. 1., and lectures are given periodically. In a central part of the High-street, during six months of the year, is an exhibition of paintings for sale, well known as the Hants Picture Gallery. A medical society was instituted in 1834. The principal library and reading-rooms are in the High-street, at which a book of arrivals is regularly kept; and there are two circulating libraries and several reading-rooms in other parts of the town, together with billiard-rooms, elegantly fitted up. A mechanics' institute, in Hanover-buildings, was established a few years since, and is very flourishing; there are nearly 400 members, and it contains a museum, library, and lecture-room. Near the Platform is a subscription bowling-green. There are two assembly-rooms, one called the Long Rooms, erected on the west side of the town in 1761; and the other, recently built, termed the Archery Rooms. The theatre, in French-street, is well arranged and tastefully decorated; the season commences in August. Races are held in the autumn, and continue two days; the course, which is well adapted to the purpose, is pleasantly situated on Southampton Common, and was given by the corporation. The Archery grounds, on the west bank of the Southampton Water, form an agreeable promenade; and Mr. Page's botanic gardens adjoining contain a very extensive collection of indigenous and exotic plants, constantly keeping pace with the improved state of botanical science and discovery. A regatta takes place during the summer, at which prizes, given by subscription, are contested for by yachts and small vessels belonging to the fishermen of Itchen, on the Southampton river, than which none can be more favourably adapted to aquatic excursions, the bay being finely sheltered. A yacht club has been established, further to promote these sports.

The salubrity of the air, and the beauty of its situation, have made Southampton a resort for sea-bathing; and hot, cold, medicated, and vapour baths have been constructed. In addition to those previously established, a handsome and commodious building was lately erected in the Grecian style, at an expense of £7000, near the Platform on the beach; but this is now the Southampton dock-house, and stands in the centre of their land: the other baths, however, have been much improved, and the loss is therefore not much felt. Numerous respectable lodging-houses are let for the accommodation of visitors. On the beach is a causeway planted with trees, extending above half a mile: on the Platform, which has been much enlarged, is an ancient piece of ordnance, given by Henry VIII., and recently mounted on a handsome cast-iron carriage, the gift of John Fleming, Esq. The government, likewise, have presented to the town six pieces of ordnance, to be used on public occasions of rejoicing, and these are also on the Platform. Some barracks erected here during the late war, and occupying about two acres of land, were, in 1816, considerably enlarged, and converted into a military asylum, as a branch of the institution at Chelsea, under the patronage of the late Duke of York, for the orphan children of soldiers, and of those whose mothers are dead, and their fathers absent on service; the buildings are of brick, handsome and commodious, and are appropriated to the reception of female children only. At Itchen Ferry, and on the western side of the town, are bathing-machines, with experienced guides. The environs are equally remarkable for the beauty of their scenery, and for the number of elegant mansions and villas; and in addition to the numerous attractions which the town itself possesses, and the facilities afforded for aquatic excursions, there are in various directions, extensive rides through a country abounding with extreme interest.

The port, of which the jurisdiction extends from Langstone harbour on the east, to Hurst Castle on the west, and midway from Calshot Castle to the Isle of Wight, carries on a considerable foreign trade: the imports are, wine and fruit from Portugal; hemp, iron, and tallow from Russia; pitch and tar from Sweden, and timber from other ports on the Baltic. There is also a good trade with Jersey and Guernsey; and by act of parliament of Edward III., making Southampton one of the staple ports for the exportation of wool, all cargoes of that material, not originally shipped to those islands from this port, must either be re-landed here, or pay a duty at the custom-house. A coasting trade is carried on with Wales, from which it imports iron and slates; with Newcastle, from which it obtains coal, lead, and glass; and with various other places. The quay, on which stands a convenient custom-house, is accessible to vessels of 250 tons' burthen, and a spacious stone-faced quay has been added on the eastern side for smaller craft. A landing pier, for the convenience of passengers to and from the Isle of Wight, Guernsey, Jersey, and France, was constructed by act of parliament, in 1832, and is 900 feet in length, curving at the eastern extremity for the accommodation of steam-packets; the carriage-road is 20 feet wide, and on each side of it is a foot-path protected by railing; the pier is of timber, and lighted with gas, and forms an agreeable promenade. In 1837, it was discovered to have been nearly destroyed by submarine insects, between high and low water mark; and, in consequence, all the piles have been replaced by others thickly studded with nails. Some very extensive and important docks have also been constructed here, the plan of which includes a tidal, and an inner or wet, dock, the former extending over a space of 16, and the latter of 14, acres. Of the tidal-dock, which was the first commenced, the foundation-stone was laid in 1838, and the work was opened August 29th, 1842, having been completed at a cost of £140,000; it has always 18 feet water at low-water spring tides, and the entrance is 150 feet in width, thus admitting vessels of almost any tonnage. Buildings, likewise, have been erected for the storage of goods, and a tramway has been formed to the station of the London railway, distant about 300 yards. The number of vessels of above 50 tons registered at the port, is 65, and their aggregate burthen 7520 tons. The harbour is spacious, and affords good anchorage for ships, which may ride at any time in security, being sheltered from all winds. Steam-vessels proceed regularly, during the summer and autumn, to Havre, and to Jersey and Guernsey; and there are sailing-packets on the same destination at all other seasons, daily; steam-packets also afford a constant communication with the Isle of Wight and Portsmouth. The trade of the town principally arises from the wants of the inhabitants and visitors, and is facilitated by the Itchen canal navigation to Winchester, the river itself being navigable as far as Northam, where is an establishment for making the boilers of steam-engines, at which from 30 to 50 hands are also employed by the proprietors in iron ship-building. The London and South-Western railway, constructed under an act obtained in 1834, has its terminus here; the length of the line is $76\frac{3}{4}$ miles, and it has a branch from Bishop's-Stoke, a few miles north of Southampton, to Gosport. The market days are Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, that on Friday being for corn; the markets are well supplied with fish, eggs, poultry, and provisions of every kind. The fairs are on May 6th and 7th, for cows and pigs, and on Trinity Monday and Tuesday: the latter, a very ancient fair, is proclaimed by the mayor with particular ceremony on the preceding Saturday, and continues till the Wednesday noon following; it is principally for horses, cattle, and pigs, and is held on the eastern side of the town, near the site of an ancient hermitage formerly occupied by William Geoffrey, to whom its revenue, arising from standings, &c., was originally granted. A court of pie-poudre is attached to it, and during its continuance all persons are free from arrest for debt within the precincts of the borough.

The inhabitants were first incorporated in the reign of Henry I., whose charter was confirmed by Richard I., and by John, who assigned the customs of the port, together with those of Portsmouth, to the burgesses, for an annual payment of £200; their privileges were extended and confirmed by numerous subsequent sovereigns, and were modified by Charles I. The corporation, however, now consists of a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the borough is divided into five wards, and the number of magistrates is 14. The town exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament; the borough comprises about 1970 acres, erected into a county of itself by Henry VI.; the mayor is returning officer. The recorder presides at quarterly courts of session for all offences not capital; and the corporation have the privilege of holding assizes, when the judges are travelling the western circuit, to try for capital crimes committed within the limits of the town and county of the town. A court of record occurs every alternate Tuesday by the recorder, for the recovery of debts to any amount; petty-sessions take place daily, and a court leet annually. The inhabitants paying scot and lot have right of common on the Town Lands adjoining the town, the most extensive of which is the common, containing about 350 acres. The audit-house is a handsome building, erected about 50 years since, comprising in the upper story a spacious hall, where the business of the corporation is transacted, and the records and regalia are deposited; among the latter, which are very splendid, is a silver oar, borne before the mayor on public occasions, as the ensign of his admiralty jurisdiction. The guildhall is a room above the arches of the ancient Bar-gate, which is a beautiful and venerable structure in the Norman style; the principal archway is deeply moulded and enriched, and flanked by circular embattled turrets, and the approach is ornamented with two lions sejant, cast in lead, presented to the corporation in 1744, in lieu of two which were decayed, by William Lee, Esq., on his being elected a burgess. The south side of the gateway is neatly faced with stone, with a niche in the centre, in which is a statue of George III., presented by the late Marquess of Lansdowne, to replace a decayed figure of Queen Anne. The common gaol for the borough comprises four rooms for 50 prisoners: the bridewell contains three rooms, capable of receiving ten prisoners, and a small chapel, in which divine service is performed once in the week; the sheriff's prison for debtors contains two wards, and is adapted for ten prisoners.

Southampton comprises the PARISHES of All Saints, containing 6901; Holy Rood, 2036; St. John and St. Lawrence united, 1132; St. Mary, 14,885; and St. Michael, 2149 inhabitants. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 10½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £400. The church, rebuilt on the enlarged site of an ancient structure, is in the Grecian style, with a turret at the end rising from a square pedestal, and surrounded by six Corinthian columns, supporting a circular entablature surmounted by a dome. The area underneath the church is divided into arched catacombs, in one of which are deposited the remains of Captain Carteret, the celebrated circumnavigator, and of Bryan Edwards, author of the History of the West Indies. The living of Holy Rood parish is a discharged vicarage, valued at £12. 1. 10½.; net income, £379; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure in the High-street, with a tower and spire at the south-west angle, and has a portico in front; among the monuments is one by Rysbrach to Miss E. Stanley, sister of the Right Hon. Hans Stanley, with an epitaph written by the poet Thomson, who has immortalised her memory in his poem of the Seasons. The living of St. John's is a discharged rectory, united to that of St. Lawrence, and valued at £6. 13. 4.: the church has been demolished. The living of the parish of St. Lawrence is a discharged rectory, valued at £7. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £148. The old church, a small ancient building, has been taken down, and a much larger and very excellent edifice erected, which was consecrated March 31st, 1842, and is an ornamental feature in the High-street; it is in the later English style, and contains 600 sittings. St. Mary's is a rectory, in the precinct of the town, valued in the king's books at £37. 5. 5., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the church is modern, and has a very extensive churchyard, which is the principal cemetery of the town. St. Michael's is a discharged vicarage, valued at £12. 11. 10½., and in the gift of the Crown; net income, £145. The church is an ancient and spacious structure, chiefly in the Norman style, with a tower between the nave and chancel, surmounted by a lofty and well-proportioned octagonal spire. The massive circular columns that supported the roof have been replaced with lighter octangular pillars, and sharply-pointed arches; the windows are of a later style, and the tracery of the large west window has been carefully restored, and the upper compartments embellished with stained glass; a new window, also, of elegant design has been placed by the corporation in the chapel of the church, in which, from time immemorial, the mayors have been sworn into office. The font is of Norman character, and highly enriched; there are some ancient monuments, and in the chapel is an old cenotaph of Lord Chancellor Wriothsley, who in the reign of Henry VIII. passed sentence of death on Queen Anne Boleyn. St. Paul's, a proprietary chapel in the parish of All Saints, a handsome edifice in the later English style, was erected about the year 1831, and has an east window adorned with stained glass. There are also, a chapel dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and a free chapel dedicated to Our Saviour, the livings of both of which are perpetual curacies; net income of the former, £110; patrons, certain Trustees:—and of the latter, £70; patron, the Rev. W. Davies. The chapel dedicated to Our Saviour has been enlarged; and the first stone of a church in the Norman style, with a tower and spire, to contain 562 sittings, of which 332 will be free, was laid in June 1843. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics.

The Free Grammar school was founded in the reign of Edward VI.; the corporation have erected a convenient school-house, on the site of an ancient edifice called Westhall, and the endowment produces about £30 per annum. Among other eminent men who have been educated in the establishment, was the celebrated Dr. Watts, a native of Southampton, whose father kept a boarding-school in the town. A charity school was instituted in 1760, for qualifying twenty boys for the sea-service, by Alderman Taunton, who left considerable funds for charitable uses; but the number of scholars has, by a decree of the court of chancery, been reduced to ten, who are permitted to choose any mechanical trade, if they prefer it. Pensions of £10 a year were also paid from these funds to six decayed persons of the town, of whom the number has been increased to sixteen by a bequest of Charles D'Aussy, Esq.; and £40 per annum are appropriated from the same source, as a reward for female servants, and a portion on their marriage. The hospital of Domus Dei, or God's House, here, was originally founded in the reign of Henry III., partly as a convent for nuns, and as a chapel to a neighbouring friary, which was burned by the French in the reign of Edward III., by whom it was given to Queen's College, Oxford; after various changes, it was established as an hospital for a warden, four brothers, and four sisters. The buildings are ancient, and retain much of their original character; the chapel was long used as a place of worship by French Protestants. The hospital of St. John, on the site of which the theatre has been built, consisted of a master and six boys, and was sold in 1774, under an act of the 13th of George III., for £425, which were appropriated towards the erection of the present workhouse, in which is a school for fifty children, who are maintained and instructed in consideration of an annuity of £40 charged upon the property of the corporation.

Thorner's almshouses, a neat and commodious range of building, receiving their name from the funds for erecting them having been bequeathed by Robert Thorner, Esq., in 1690, for gradual accumulation, were originally built in 1789, but have lately been enlarged, and now accommodate twenty-six widows: the same benefactor also left considerable funds for apprenticing children. Almshouses in St. Mary's parish were founded in 1565, by Richard Butler, mayor, and built on ground given by Thomas Lister, mayor, in 1545. There is also a penitentiary, or refuge for destitute females, a spacious building, with a handsome chapel attached to it, recently erected in front of Kingsland-place. Miss Elizabeth Bird bequeathed £1400 three per cents. to the corporation, in trust for the annual payment of £5 each to six unmarried women, members of the Church of England, and upwards of sixty years of age; and the late Mr. Newman left nearly £3000 in the funds for the erection and maintenance of an infirmary, which was established in 1839, in a building rented for the purpose. Southampton is one of the twenty-four corporations entitled to a share of Sir Thomas White's lending charity; and there are various other bequests for distribution among the poor. At Bittern, about a mile and a quarter from the town, supposed to have been the old station Clausentum, numerous Roman antiquities have been discovered, including considerable vestiges of a fortification, and a portion of a wall, coins from the reign of Claudius to those of Valentinian and Valens, tessellated pavements, bricks, fragments of pottery, urns, vases, and sculptured stones, on several of which were inscriptions. Southampton gives the title of Baron to the family of Fitzroy.

SOUTHAMPTON, COUNTY of, on the southern coast, bounded on the east by the counties of Surrey and Sussex, on the north by that of Berks, on the west by Wiltshire and Dorset, and on the south by the English Channel. Including the Isle of Wight, it extends from 50° 36' to 51° 23' (N. Lat.) and from 45' to 1° 53' (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of upwards of 1628 square miles, or 1,041,920 statute acres: it contains 66,617 houses inhabited, 3311 uninhabited, and 502 in course of erection; and the population amounts to 355,004 persons, of whom 175,023 are males, and 179,981 females. At the period of the invasion of Britain by Cæsar, the southern parts of this district were a portion of the territory of the Regni, and the more northern tracts part of that of the Belgæ, who had come over from Gaul, and violently dispossessed the former inhabitants. Under the Romans it was included in the division called Britannia Prima. The Isle of Wight, called by that people Vectis, is mentioned by Suetonius as having been conquered by Vespasian, about the year 43; but no other traces of Roman occupation have been at any time discovered in it than a few coins. On the establishment of the kingdom of Wessex, by Cerdic, a great part of the county was included within the limits of that kingdom, at the same time that a portion of its southern shores, together with the Isle of Wight, was comprised in the Saxon kingdom of Kent. The ancient British name of this district was Gwent, or Y Went, a term descriptive of its open downs; and hence the appellation Caer Gwent, or the city of the Gwentians, now Winchester. When the Saxon dominions in Britain were divided into shires, this district received the name of Hamtunscyre, from the ancient name of the present town of Southampton; and this was afterwards corrupted into Hamptescyre, whence its modern appellations of Hampshire and Hants. The name of the Isle of Wight is considered by Mr. Whitaker and other antiquaries to have been derived from the British word Guith, or Guict, signifying the divorced or disjoined, and apparently indicating a supposition of its having once been connected with the main land: hence also arose its Roman name of Vectis, or the separated region: by the Saxons it was called Weet. William the Conqueror, on his accession to the throne of England, granted the lordship of the Isle of Wight, with a palatine jurisdiction, to his kinsman, William Fitz-Osbert. It afterwards several times escheated to, and otherwise became vested in, the crown, and was as often granted to different noble families. Sir Edward Widville, who, in the first of Henry VII., was made captain of the Isle of Wight, may probably have received a grant of the lordship of it; but since the period of his death it has remained in the possession of the crown, although some lands annexed to the castle at Carisbrooke continue to be holden by the governor jure officii. From the time that Edward I. purchased this lordship of Isabella de Fortibus, the defence of the island was generally entrusted to some person nominated by the crown, who was at first distinguished by the appellation of warden, afterwards by that of captain, and, in later times, by that of governor.

The county is in the diocese of Winchester, and province of Canterbury; and the archdeaconry of Winchester, which is co-extensive with the county, comprises the deaneries of Alresford, Alton, Andover, Basingstoke, Droxford, Fordingbridge, Sombourn, Southampton, Isle of Wight, and Winchester, and contains 305 parishes. The Northern division includes the minor sessional divisions of Alton, Andover, Basingstoke, Droxford, Kingsclere, Odiham, Petersfield, and Winchester; and the Southern division those of Fareham, Lymington, Ringwood, Romsey, Southampton, and the town and county of the town of Southampton. The ancient hundreds are 39 in number, and besides them are the liberties of Alresford, Alverstoke, and Gosport, Beaulieu, Bentley, Breamore, Dibden, Havant, Lymington, Soke (Winchester), and Westover; and the liberties of East and West Medina, in the Isle of Wight. The county contains the city of Winchester; the borough, market, and sea-port towns of Christchurch, Lymington, Newport, Portsmouth, and Southampton; the borough and market towns of Andover and Petersfield; the sea-port and market-town of Yarmouth; the sea-ports of Newtown, Emsworth (a dependency on the harbour of Portsmouth), and Brading; and the market-towns of New Alresford, Alton, Basingstoke, Bishop's-Waltham, Fareham, Fordingbridge, Gosport, Havant, Kingsclere, Odiham, Ringwood, Romsey, Stockbridge, and Whitchurch. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county has been divided into the Northern and the Southern divisions, each sending two members to parliament; and the Isle of Wight has, for electoral purposes, been constituted a county of itself, with one representative. Two members are returned for Winchester, and two for each of the boroughs, except Christchurch and Petersfield, which, under the act, now send only one each. Hampshire is included in the western circuit; and the assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Winchester.

The form of the county, exclusively of the Isle of Wight, approaches nearly to a square, with a triangular projection at its south-western corner. The Isle is separated from the main land by a strait of unequal breadth, formerly called the Solent Sea, now the Sound, or, more usually the West Channel, the breadth of which, at its western extremity, is about a mile, and towards its eastern end, as much as 7 miles. The form of the island is somewhat rhomboidal, the greatest diagonal being 23 miles from east to west, and the transverse diameter, from north to south, about 13. The SURFACE of the whole county is beautifully varied by gently rising hills and fruitful valleys, and, in some parts, with extensive tracts of woodland. In the southern districts, approaching the coast, the population is much more dense than elsewhere; the mildness of the seasons, the beauty of the landscapes, and the proximity to the ports, operating as strong inducements to the continued residence of many families besides those engaged in commercial pursuits. The agricultural report drawn up by Charles Vancouver, Esq., for the consideration of the Hon. the Board of Agriculture, divides the main land into five districts. The First, called the woodland division, occupies the northern portion of the county, comprising an area of 103,944 acres, and includes the woodlands and wastes of Bagshot, &c. Its soil and substrata are various, but the great mass of the district has a strong brown and grey loam, resting upon a tough blue and yellow clay, having generally an excess of moisture, with numerous unsound and boggy places. The Second tract comprises the whole body of the county from the borders of Wiltshire to those of Sussex and Surrey, and is computed to contain 454,295 acres: the higher parts of this large central district have much the appearance of an elevated plain, divided into many unequal portions, and intersected by deep hollows, through which the brooks and rivulets rising in these elevated tracts descend, for the most part, in a southerly course towards the sea. The higher tracts are almost wholly in open and extensive sheep downs: the substratum is throughout a firm unbroken bed of chalk. The Third district is small, containing only 49,525 acres, and includes the forests of Woolmer and Alice-Holt, the hills of Binfield, Great and Little Worldham, Selborne, and Empshot, together with all the lower sides of the chalk hills surrounding and forming the vale of Petersfield, the soil of which is, for the most part, a grey sandy loam of good staple, lying on a kind of soft sand rock, being provincially termed malmy land. The Fourth division consists of the whole southern part of the county situated on the main land (excepting a tract of 26,895 acres, at its south-eastern extremity), and comprises an area of 333,489 acres. This large area, besides many extensive wastes and commons, comprehends the Forest of Bere, the New Forest, and Waltham Chase; its soils are various, but consist chiefly of light sandy and gravelly loams, intermixed with clay and brick earth, and resting on substrata of argillaceous and calcareous marl. Hayling Island, forming the south-western extremity of the county, and Portsea Island, containing the town of Portsmouth, together with the tracts on the main land immediately opposite to them, constitute the Fifth district, comprising an area of 26,895 acres. In the islands and low grounds of the main land, a strong flinty and a tender hazel-coloured loam prevail. The soil and substrata of Portsdown hill, in the different degrees of its elevation, are similar to those of the chalk district.

Through the centre of the ISLE OF WIGHT from east to west, extends a range of lofty hills, affording only pasturage for sheep, and commanding views over every part of the island, with the ocean on the south, and the beautiful shores of Hampshire on the north. Its surface is otherwise much diversified: on the coast the land is, in some parts, very high, particularly on the south, where the cliffs are steep, and vast fragments of rock, which the waves have at some time undermined, lie scattered below; on the northern side the ground slopes to the water in easy declivities, excepting towards the Needles, or western extremity, where the rocks are bare, broken, and precipitous. The height of the cliffs, of which the Needles form the extreme point, is, in some places, 600 feet above the level of the sea; in some parts they are perpendicular, and in others overhanging; they contain many deep caverns. The Needles derive their name from a lofty pointed rock rising to the height of about 120 feet above low-water mark, and severed, with others, from the main land by the force of the waves: part of this rocky projection, about 60 years since, having been undermined by the sea, fell and totally disappeared. St. Catherine's hill, the highest point in the island, rises 750 feet above the level of high-water mark, and commands magnificent prospects; as also do the Culver cliffs, at the eastern end of the island; Carisbrooke Castle, and Bembridge down. The soil and substrata of the isle are extremely various. The chalk downs of Brading and Arreton form an unbroken range from Culver cliff, on the eastern coast, to the valley that separates them from Staple's heath; those of Gatcombe and Shorwell are isolated from the western range by a highly-cultivated valley, extending from Shorwell to Newport, and terminating northward in the waste called Parkhurst Forest. From the vale of Shorwell to the western extremity of the island the high chalk downs are broken only by three gaps, or carriage-roads, one of which is the passage between the head of the Yarmouth river and the innermost cove of Freshwater bay. The tract of downs situated towards the southern extremity of the island terminates abruptly towards the sea, in a precipice of limestone rock, having the appearance, particularly when seen from a distance, of an immense stone wall, and overhanging the romantic tract called the Undercliff, which extends along the sea-shore for a distance of nearly six miles.

With regard to the AGRICULTURE of the county, the rotations of crops on the arable lands are various; the grain and pulse generally cultivated consist of wheat, barley, oats, rye, peas, and beans. The most usual artificial grasses are the common broad clover, rye-grass, trefoil, sainfoin, and lucern: burnet is a plant that forms a large portion of the herbage of the downs; a much larger and stronger species is found on many of the low grounds, and upon the cold clay loams, where, as upon the downs, it has every appearance of being indigenous. In the parish of Alton and its vicinity, upon the borders; of Surrey, hops are grown to a great extent; the produce varies greatly, but may be estimated, on an average, at about five cwt. per acre; their culture has been much encouraged by the reputation of the Farnham hops, that town, in Surrey, being situated only at the distance of a few miles. The entire extent of hop-plantations throughout the county is at present 1609 acres. Many cows are kept in different parts, for the purpose of suckling calves to supply the markets of London, Portsmouth, Chichester, Winchester, Newbury, Reading, Salisbury, &c., with veal; and the number of sheep is remarkably great. Numerous hogs are fed for a few weeks, at the close of the autumn, upon the mast produced in the forest and other woodlands; and a superior mode of curing being practised, the Hampshire bacon has become famous for its excellence. Upon the heaths and forests vast numbers of light small horses are bred, generally about twelve hands high, and provincially termed heath-croppers, which propagate indiscriminately upon these wastes, where they succeed in maintaining an existence throughout the year. Gardening is carried on to a great extent in the vicinity of all the large towns, and Portsea Island is considered to produce the finest brocoli in the kingdom. The county has also long been celebrated for its honey, called heath honey and down honey, from the different districts in which the bees collect it; the latter being the more valuable.

The woods are numerous and extensive. The New Forest comprises a large tract in the south-western part of the county: its ancient boundaries, according to the oldest perambulation extant, which is dated 8th of Edward I., were, the Southampton river on the east, the Sound and the British Channel on the south, and the river Avon on the west; northward, it reached as far as North Charford on the west, and to Wade and Ower bridge on the east. According to a perambulation made in the 22nd of Charles II., the forest then stretched from Godshill, on the north-west, south-eastward to the sea, a distance of about 23 miles; and from Hardley on the east, to Ringwood on the west, about 15 miles; and contained 92,365 statute acres. The extent of the wood and waste lands of the tract was, however, at that time, reduced to 63,845 acres, which belong to the crown, and are subject to certain rights of commonage, pasturage, pannage, and fuel, possessed by the proprietors of estates within, or adjacent to, the forest; which rights, and those of the crown, are defined by an act of the 9th and 10th of William III., for the increase and preservation of timber in the forest. In consequence of this act, the woodlands, which, according to surveys made at different periods, had been long remaining in a neglected state, received for a while some attention; but that, ere long, was withdrawn from them, when the superintendence of the surveyor-general of the crown lands ceased, and the whole fell by degrees under the sole direction of the surveyor-general of the woods. By a return just presented to parliament, the New Forest contains 57,684 acres of open land, 5605 under inclosure for the growth of timber, and 813 occupied as encroachments; 2307 acres are royal property, 25,830 freehold belonging to private persons, and 122 copyhold. The scenery is remarkable for its beauty, presenting magnificent woods, extended lawns, and vast sweeps of wild heath, unlimited by artificial boundaries, together with numerous river views and the prospect of distant shores

The oaks seldom rise into lofty stems, and their branches, which are more adapted to what the ship-builders call knees and elbows, are commonly twisted into the most picturesque forms. The advantage of water-carriage to the various royal or private dockyards, in which its produce is employed, is superior to that of any other forest in the kingdom. The Forest of Bere, situated in the south-eastern part of the county, and extending northward from the Portsdown hills, which, according to a perambulation made in 1688, is now considered the boundary, comprises about 16,000 acres, upwards of one-third being inclosed. North-westward of it is the Chase of Bishop's-Waltham, containing about 2000 acres, which belong to the see of Winchester. The forest of Alice-Holt and Woolmer, on the eastern border of the county, approaching the confines of Surrey and Sussex, and to the north-east of Petersfield, is divided into two parts by intervening private property; its limits comprehend 15,493 acres, of which 8694 belong to the crown; the division called Alice-Holt contains about 2740 acres of crown land. Parkhurst or Carisbrooke forest, lying at a short distance to the north-west of Newport, in the Isle of Wight, occurs in Domesday book under the appellation of the King's park, and was afterwards called the King's forest; it includes about 3000 acres, nearly destitute of valuable trees. The total quantity of waste land in Hampshire, exclusively of the forests, falls little short of 100,000 acres.

The MINERAL PRODUCTIONS are not numerous. On the southern shores of the county, particularly near the mouth of the Beaulieu river, iron-stone is washed up by the sea, and was formerly gathered, and conveyed to the iron-works at Sowley. It is also occasionally found in small quantities in different other parts of the county, particularly in the cliffs near Hordwell, which are upwards of 100 feet high, and abound with nodules of iron-ore, together with pebbles, or flints, many of them containing fossil shells, or their impressions, of various and scarce species, found in a blueish kind of clay or marl. The range of chalk hills crossing the county from east to west, and occupying the central part of it, forms a portion of the vast formation that constitutes so considerable a feature in the geology of England. The strata constituting the southern part of the main land, and the northern part of the Isle of Wight, lie upon a depressed portion of the chalk beds, which is termed the Chalk Basin of the Isle of Wight. Between Milton and Christchurch is found a hard reddish stone, of which several ancient structures in that part of the county are built. The numerous strata of various kinds and formations, and exhibiting great diversity of position, of which the Isle of Wight consists, form a remarkably rich field of study for the geologist. At Alum bay, at the north-western extremity of the island, is found a vein of white sand, in great demand for the glass-works of Bristol and Liverpool, as also for others situated on the western coasts of England and Scotland, and in Ireland. Eastward of this, along the northern foot of the downs, grist or quarry stone, of a yellowish grey colour, and very porous texture, is found in detached masses, and used for building. A strong liver-coloured building-stone rising in cubical masses, encrusted with a brownish kind of ochre, and inclosing specimens of rich iron-stone, occurs on the southern side of the island: rough calcareous freestone is frequently found in the marl-pits, in loose detached pieces. Eastward of Staple's heath, and northward of Arreton downs, a close grey limestone is raised, the beds of which are separated from each other by small layers of marine shells, cemented together by alum, that substance being well known to pervade the western parts of the island. Freestone is sometimes found under marl in the northern districts of it: a plum-pudding stone exists in large quantities near Sandown fort, and is much used for paving and flooring. Potters' clay occurs in great variety in different parts of the county; and ochres of divers colours in the Isle of Wight.

The Manufactures are various, but not extensive; ship-building, however, in addition to the works of the royal dockyard at Portsmouth, is extensively pursued in most of the numerous creeks and harbours. The other productions are chiefly woollen goods, bed-ticking, light silk articles, sacking, leather, and a coarse kind of earthenware. At Overton are very large silk-mills, and the young female peasantry in the vicinity are much employed in the straw-hat manufacture, which is also carried on at many other towns in the county. There are paper-mills in different parts, those near Overton being of considerable importance. At Lymington is a manufacture of salt. The advantages for maritime commerce are very great, and the shores of the county, especially of the Isle of Wight, are likewise much resorted to during the summer for the purpose of sea-bathing; the most frequented places on the main land are Christchurch, Muddiford, Lymington, and Southampton; and in the Isle of Wight, Yarmouth, Cowes, Ryde, Shanklin, and Ventnor. In all the rivers and creeks that discharge their waters directly into the sea, salmon are caught; the fisheries of the Southampton Water are particularly extensive, and the boats engaged in them often make long coasting voyages to procure other fish, which are taken thence to the markets of London, Oxford, Bath, &c. Several persons also are employed on the flat and rocky shores of the Isle of Wight, in catching shrimps and prawns, and on its bolder shores, in taking crabs and lobsters.

The principal rivers are the Test, the Anton, the Itchen, the Avon, the Boldre water, and the Exe. The Test, below Redbridge, expands and forms the head of the Southampton Water, an arm of the sea which extends from the "Above Town" of Southampton to the Sound at Calshot Castle, and is rendered exceedingly picturesque by its woody and irregular shores: the general direction of the Southampton Water is from north-west to south-east. The Itchen, also called the Arbre, was brought into a regular channel, and made navigable up to Winchester, by Godfrey de Lacy, Bishop of Winchester, in 1215: towards its mouth it expands considerably. The Avon, by an act passed in 1665, was made navigable up to Salisbury; but the works having been swept away by a flood, the navigation was destroyed. The Boldre water is formed by several small streams rising in the New Forest, most of which unite above Brockenhurst, thence proceeding southward, by Boldre and Lymington, to the sea. The Exe, frequently called the Beaulieu river, from similar sources in the same district, flows south-eastwardly, and, beginning to expand near Beaulieu, opens into a broad estuary to the sea, below Exbury. The principal river of the Isle of Wight is the Medina, anciently called the Mede, which rises near the bottom of St. Catherine's down, in the southern part of the island, and, flowing directly northward, divides it into two equal parts, each constituting a liberty, which derives its name from its position on the eastern or western side of this stream: passing on the eastern side of the town of Newport, the Medina mingles its waters with those of the sea in Cowes harbour. The other main streams of the island are the Yar, the Wootton, and the Ear; and its shores are also indented by various creeks and bays. A navigable canal has been made along the valleys of the Test and Anton, from Andover to the head of the Southampton Water: from Barlowes-Mill, near Andover, its course is by Stockbridge and Romsey to its termination at Redbridge, in the parish of Millbrook. From Redbridge a branch proceeds directly to Southampton, and a collateral branch extends from it in a westerly direction, up the valley between East Dean, Lockerley, and East Tytherley, to Alderbury common, within two miles of Salisbury, but neither of them is navigable. There is also a canal commencing at Basingstoke, made under the authority of an act of parliament obtained in 1778, to the river Wey, in Surrey, by which the navigation is maintained to the Thames; the length of the canal is 37 miles and a quarter, and the cost of cutting it amounted to about £100,000, a large portion of which was expended in forming a tunnel through Grewell hill, near Odiham, which is arched with brick, and is nearly three-quarters of a mile long. The Winchester and Southampton canal is one of the oldest in the kingdom, the act for its construction having been procured in the reign of Charles I., but, from the want of a suitable trade upon it, it does not appear to have realised the expectations of the projectors. The London and South-Western railway enters the county, from Surrey, at Farnborough, and passes by Basingstoke and Winchester to Southampton: a branch proceeds from it, at Bishop's-Stoke, about midway between Winchester and Southampton, to Gosport, thus connecting the metropolis with that important place and Portsmouth.

Within the limits of the county were the stations of Venta Belgarum, supposed to have been at Winchester; Vindonum, at Silchester; Claudentum, at Bittern; Briga, at Broughton; and Andaoreon, at Andover. The principal remains of Roman occupation discoverable are at Silchester, approaching the confines of Berkshire, where gold coins and rings, Roman bricks and pottery, &c., have been dug up; and about three-quarters of a mile north of Lymington is Buckland Rings, the remains of a Roman camp. Traces of other encampments are visible in various parts; some of the most extensive and remarkable are those of the camp on Danebury hill, to the west and north-west of which are several barrows, many more of these monuments being found in different parts of the county. Three Roman roads branch from Silchester, one of them proceeding to the northern gate of Winchester; another by Andover, to Old Sarum; and the third, northward, across Mortimer heath: from Winchester also was a road leading to Old Sarum. The number of ancient religious establishments was about fifty-three. There are still interesting remains of the abbeys of Hide, Netley, Beaulieu, and Quarr; as also of the hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester. The castles of Hurst, and Porchester, and that of Carisbrooke in the Isle of Wight, are still standing; and there are also remains of the castles of Christchurch, Odiham, and Warblington. The modern seats of the nobility and gentry are extremely numerous, more especially the villas. Several chalybeate springs are found in different parts of the Isle of Wight; at Pitland is one impregnated with sulphur, and at Shanklin another, the water of which is slightly tinctured with alum. The water of the streams in the northern woodland part of the county is of a strong chalybeate quality, and that which issues from the bogs and swampy ground is charged with a solution of iron. In the strong loam, woodland clay, and chalk districts, the want of a regular supply of water during seasons of drought is severely felt. Fossil remains of different kinds are found in some of the strata of the county, among the natural curiosities of which may also be mentioned the immense chasms near the sea-shore in the Isle of Wight, called Blackgang, Luccombe, and Shanklin Chines; and there is a large natural cavern at Freshwater Gate, a small creek in the centre of Freshwater bay. Samphire grows plentifully on some of the high cliffs of the Isle.

SOUTHAY, a hamlet, in the parish of KINGSBURY-EPISCOPI, union of LANGPORT, hundred of KINGSBURY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 24 inhabitants.

SOUTHBOROUGH, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and lowey of TONBRIDGE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Tonbridge; containing 1217 inhabitants. It is situated about midway between Tonbridge and the Wells, and consists of a number of scattered houses. A district church in the early English style, has been erected and endowed at an expense of £8436, defrayed by subscription: the property is vested in five trustees, who appoint the perpetual curate, whose net income is £153. In 1785, premises for a school were erected by the executors of the Rev. E. Holmes, and endowed with £1050, four per cents.

SOUTH-BURN, a township, in the parish of KIRKBURN, union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Great Driffield; containing 97 inhabitants. It comprises about 1030 acres of land, the property of various freeholders: the village which is small, is situated on the south side of the Kirkburn rivulet, between the roads from Driffield to Watton and Tibthorpe to Bainton.

SOUTHCHURCH, a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Rochford; containing 432 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Thames, and comprises 188*a.* 1*r.* 31*p.*, about one-sixth whereof is pasture, 15 acres woodland, and the remainder arable; a considerable portion of the shore is flat and overflowed by the tide, and large oyster-beds have for many years been preserved. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, valued in the king's books at £27. 0. 10.: the tithes have been computed for £800, and the glebe comprises 60 acres. The church is a small edifice with a tower and spire.

SOUTHCOATES, a township, in the parish of DRYPOOL, union of SCULCOATES, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by E.) from Hull; containing 1167 inhabitants. It comprises about 1050 acres of fertile land, chiefly in pasturage, extending eastward from Drypool, along the Holderness road, and the shores of the Humber.

SOUTHCOT, a tything, in the parish of ST. MARY, READING, union and hundred of READING, county of BERKS, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Reading; containing 66 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 344 acres. It is situated a little to the south of the road leading to the town of Newbury.

SOUTH-COVE.—See COVE, SOUTH.

SOUTHEASE, a parish, in the union of NEWHAVEN, hundred of HOLMSTROW, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Lewes; containing 120 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the east by the river Ouse, and situated on the road from Lewes to Newhaven, comprises 904 acres, of which 282 are arable, and 340 down pasture; the surface in some parts is hilly, and the soil a loam incumbent on chalk. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 0. 10., and in the gift of the family of Lewis: there is a glebe-house; the glebe contains $9\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £210. The church is principally in the early English style, with a circular tower.

SOUTHEND, a hamlet, in the parish of PRITTLEWELL, union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Prittlewell, and 42 (E.) from London. This place is situated at the mouth of the Thames, directly opposite to the river Medway, and at the southern extremity of the county, from which circumstance it probably derives its name. Though formerly an inconsiderable hamlet, consisting only of a few fishermen's huts, it has within the last few years grown into repute for sea-bathing, and, being the nearest watering-place to London, is rapidly rising into importance. It comprises the lower or old town, and the upper or new town; the former on the beach, and the latter on an eminence fronting the sea. The old village consists principally of an irregular line of houses facing the water, to which have been recently added some handsome dwellings, and a parade has been formed and partly inclosed: nearly in the centre is a commodious inn, and there are two others on a smaller scale; at the eastern extremity is a small theatre, which is opened every season, and on the beach are several good bathing-machines. The new town, which is considered as the more fashionable residence, is superior both in its situation and in the character and style of its buildings, and consists chiefly of the terrace, occupying an elevated site facing the sea, and having in the front a fine promenade; adjoining which is an hotel, containing several suites of apartments, a lofty assembly-room, with others for cards and refreshments, and every requisite accommodation. The library, a neat building in the later English style, has a good reading-room, and is well supported; and adjoining it is a billiard-room. In front of the terrace, and extending the whole length, is a shrubbery tastefully laid out in walks commanding a fine view of the sea; and within this inclosure are the baths, in the cottage style. A pier of frame-work has been constructed by an incorporated company of proprietors, and in the vicinity are many pleasant walks and rides through a district abounding with richly-diversified and picturesque scenery. A district church has been lately built, of which the patronage is now vested in four Trustees, but will afterwards reside in the Bishop of London; and there is a place of worship for Independents.

SOUTHERNBY-BOUND, a township, in the parish of CASTLE-SOWERBY, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Penrith; containing 136 inhabitants.

SOUTHERY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (S.) from Downham-Market; containing 1023 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south by the Isle of Ely, and intersected by the great Ouse river, comprises 3695*a. lr.* 14*p.*, of which 2681 acres are arable, 711 pasture and meadow, and 23 wood: the road from London to Lynn runs through the village. A steam-engine of 60-horse power was erected in 1842, to drain the fen lands in the immediate vicinity. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the gift of George Hall, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £629. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises $106\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church is a very ancient structure, with a wooden screen separating the nave and chancel.

SOUTH-FIELDS, a liberty, in the parish of St. MARY, borough of LEICESTER, locally in the hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing 2566 inhabitants, many of whom are employed in frame-work knitting.

SOUTHFLEET (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W.) from Gravesend; containing, with the hamlets of Betsome, Hook-Green, and Westwood, 667 inhabitants. This was a place of importance during the heptarchy, when it was called Sud-fleta; and from its proximity to the old Watling-street, its distance from the station Durobrivis (Rochester), and the numerous Roman relics found on the spot, it is supposed to have been known long before the heptarchy, and to occupy the site of the Vagniacæ of Antoninus. The parish comprises 2541*a.* 2*r.* 30*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 15., and in the gift of the Bishop of Rochester: the tithes have been commuted for £872, and the glebe contains 6 acres. The church is principally in the decorated English style, and exhibits many marks of antiquity, including six stone stalls under pointed arches, a piscina, a window of stained glass, and a font much admired for its curious workmanship. A school is endowed with a rent-charge of £20.

SOUTHGATE, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of EDMONTON, county of MIDDLESEX, 8 miles (N. by W.) from London; containing 2438 inhabitants. The name of this place is derived from its situation at the south gate, or entrance, of Enfield Chase, and it is still called South-street division; the Chase, however, has been entirely inclosed, and is now in a good state of cultivation. The village contains many handsome houses; the New River runs at its extremity, and the neighbourhood is well wooded: the Duke of Buckingham has a residence here, in the grounds of which is a very fine old oak-tree, that covers with its shade nearly an acre of ground. The chapelry is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Enfield, for the recovery of debts under 40*s.* The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Edmonton; net income, £180. The chapel, built in 1615, at the expense of Sir John Weld, has been pulled down and rebuilt. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school has been erected near the Green, in a very neat style. In an adjacent field called Camp Field, have been found several pieces of cannon, and a gorget belonging to Oliver Cromwell, having his initials handsomely inlaid with jewels, now in the British Museum; and in 1829, several ancient coins were dug up in the neighbourhood.

SOUTH-HAMLET, an extra-parochial liberty, in the Middle division of the hundred of DUDSTONE and KING'S-BARTON, union, and E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 1055 inhabitants, and comprising 741 acres. Here is a mineral spring.

SOUTH-HILL (St. SAMPSON), a parish, in the union of LISKEARD, Middle division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 3 miles (N. W.) from Callington; containing 640 inhabitants. The parish is separated from St. Ives by the romantic stream Lynher, and comprises 2953 acres, of which 402 are common or waste land. The lead-mine of Redmoor, here, was recently worked, but is not now in operation; common blue slate, however, is quarried for the roofing of houses. A small cattle-fair is held on the first Tuesday in April. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Callington annexed, valued in the king's books at £38; net income, £748; patrons, Lord Ashburton and George Stroud, Esq., the former of whom has two presentations, and the latter one. The tithes have been commuted for £380; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 240 acres, of which 50 are situated in Callington. The church is an ancient structure, with lancet-headed windows. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SOUTHILL (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD; containing, with the hamlets of Broom and Stanford, 1379 inhabitants, of whom 579 are in the township of Southill, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Biggleswade. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Old Warden annexed, valued in the king's books at £11. 15.; net income, £384; patron and impropiator, W. H. Whitbread, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1797. The church contains monuments to several of the Byng family, among which are those of the celebrated naval officer, Sir George Byng, first Viscount Torrington, and of his son, Vice-Admiral the Hon. John Byng, who was executed for alleged professional misconduct. The Baptists have a place of worship.

SOUTHMERE (ALL SAINTS), formerly a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Burnham-Westgate. This place, though anciently of some note, has now dwindled into a mere hamlet, called Summerfield, containing a few inhabitants, who are considered as connected with the parish of Docking. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 11. 2., and in the gift of Eton College. There is no church.

SOUTHMINSTER.—See MINSTER, SOUTH.

SOUTHOE (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of St. NEOTS, hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from St. Neots; containing 297 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with that of Hail-Weston annexed, and valued in the king's books at £14. 2. 3½;

net income, £288; patron and incumbent, the Rev. R. Pointer, who erected a schoolroom in 1818. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment, in 1797, under an inclosure act. There are some mineral springs in the parish. Bishop Chadderton was interred here.

SOUTHOLT (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Eye; containing 211 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed with the great tithes, and annexed to the rectory of Worlingworth: the tithes have been commuted for £237. 10. A school is supported out of the rents of town lands, the proceeds of which, amounting to about £100 per annum, are also partly applied to the repairs of the church, and to the general purposes of the parish.

SOUTHORP, a hamlet, in the parish of BARNACK, union of STAMFORD, soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. E.) from Stamford; containing 147 inhabitants, and comprising, with Walcot, 1840 acres, of which 271 are common or waste land.

SOUTHORPE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of GAINSNOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (N. E.) from Gainsborough; containing 41 inhabitants.

SOUTHOVER, county of SUSSEX.—See LEWES.

SOUTHPORT, a chapelry, in the parish of NORTH MEOLS, union of ORMSKIRK, hundred of WEST DERRY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 9 miles (N. W.) from Ormskirk, and 22 (N.) from Liverpool. This place, situated at the mouth of the Ribble, on the shore of the Irish Sea, has of late years been much resorted to for sea-bathing, and possesses most of the usual accommodations for visitors; it consists of one principal street of good brick houses, with gardens in front, and is surrounded by meols, or sand hills, resembling small tumuli. The Victoria baths here, built by subscription at an expense of £6000, form a handsome range of building with a colonnade in front; and attached to it are gardens and a conservatory, with a fine terrace walk of great extent. A theatre, newsrooms, and libraries, with other places of public resort, supply the means of amusement and relaxation. An episcopal chapel, called Christ church, was built in 1820, the living of which is a perpetual curacy; net income, £107; patron, Sir P. H. Fleetwood, Bart. It was enlarged in 1830. Trinity church, a neat edifice in the early English style, was consecrated November 8th, 1837, having been built by subscription, and will accommodate 500 persons: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of Trustees. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics. A Strangers' charity furnishes to sick poor the means of obtaining the benefit of sea air and bathing; and a dispensary was erected in 1823.

SOUTHPORT, HAMPSHIRE.—See PORTSEA.

SOUTHROP (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRIGHTWELL'S-BARROW, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N.) from Lechlade; containing 403 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1400 acres, and is watered by the river Lead: there are several quarries, the material of which is used for repairing roads. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 16. 8.; patrons, the Warden and Fellows of Wadham College, Oxford; impropriator, J. Tuckwell, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £220, and the glebe contains about 50 acres.

SOUTHROP, a tything, in the parish of HERRIARD, union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of BERMONDSPIT, though locally in that of ODIHAM, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. W.) from Alton; containing 349 inhabitants.

SOUTHROPE, a township, in the parish of HOOK-NORTON, union of BANBURY, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD; containing 282 inhabitants.

SOUTHROW, a hamlet, in the parish of BARDNEY, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGÖE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN; containing 198 inhabitants.

SOUTHSEA.—See PORTSEA.

SOUTH-SHORE, a village, in the three townships of LAYTON with WARBRICK, BISPHAM, and GREAT MARTON, parishes of BISPHAM and POULTON, union of the FYLDE, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 531 inhabitants. This is a modern bathing-village, situated on the coast, and consists chiefly of scattered lodging-houses, erected for the accommodation of the persons who resort to it during the season; to which circumstance its rise and present extent may be attributed.

SOUTHTOWN, formerly a parish, but now commonly termed a hamlet in the parish of GORLESTON, locally in the incorporation and hundred of MUTFORD and LOTHINGLAND, E. division of SUFFOLK; containing 1428 inhabitants. This place, formerly called Little Yarmouth, is a suburb to Great Yarmouth, with which it is connected by a bridge over the Yare; and, as regards franchise, and matters of trade and jurisdiction, was united to that borough by an act passed in the 16th and 17th of Charles II. It consists of two separate parts, about a mile and a half distant from each other, of which the south-eastern, overlooking the sea, and adjoining Gorleston High-street, is called, by way of distinction, Southtown-on-the-Hill; the other extends from Yarmouth bridge about half a mile southward, along the western bank of the Yare, one side of the road being occupied by handsome private houses, and the other by timber-wharfs, docks, and yards for ship-building, which afford employment to a great number of shipwrights and others. The living, a discharged rectory, was consolidated in 1520 with the vicarage of Gorleston; and the parochial church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, has fallen into decay. There is, however, a church, dedicated to St. Mary, erected in 1831, by subscription, at an expense of £2300, the Earl of Lichfield, then Viscount Anson, giving the site and £500: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £200; patrons, Trustees. The tithes have been commuted for £110.

SOUTHWARK.—See LONDON.

SOUTHWELL (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 14 miles (N. E.) from Nottingham, and 132 (N. N. W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Hexgreave and Normanton, 3487 inhabitants. This place, which is of great antiquity, derived its name from one of many large springs, or wells, that formerly existed in the neighbourhood, but few of which are now remaining. It was distinguished, at a very early period, by the foundation of one of the first Christian churches in this part of the country, by Paulinus, who, at the request of Ethelburga, wife of Edwin, King of Northumbria, had been sent over to England by Pope Gregory VII., to preach the doctrines of Christianity, which she had herself embraced, and who, having converted Edwin to the Christian faith, was made Archbishop of York, in 627. The history of the town relates chiefly to the progress of its religious establishment, which flourished, under a succession of prelates, till the Conquest, at which time the church had become collegiate, had ample revenues, and contained ten prebends, the number of which was subsequently augmented to sixteen. From that period till the Reformation, the possessions of the church continued to increase, and the establishment to prosper, especially during the reigns of Henry I., II., and III., Edward I., and other sovereigns, who contributed largely to its endowment. Popes Alexander III. and Urban III. were also munificent patrons; every succeeding archbishop was anxious to promote its independence, and the zeal and liberality of its own members were constantly devoted to its improvement. Soon after the dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII., the archbishop, and the prebendaries of Southwell, surrendered the church to that monarch, by whom, at the request of Cranmer, the chapter was re-founded, in 1541, and Southwell subsequently erected into a see, of which, in 1543, Dr. Cox, afterwards translated to Ely, was appointed bishop. Edward VI., however, soon after his accession to the throne, dissolved the chapter, and granted the prebendal estates to John, Earl of Warwick, upon whose attainder, in 1553, they reverted to the crown; but they were restored by Queen Mary, who re-established the chapter upon its ancient foundation, and the prebendal establishment was finally confirmed by Queen Elizabeth, in 1585, and a new code of laws instituted. During the civil war, Charles I. was frequently at this town, and held his court generally at the archiepiscopal palace, and occasionally at the King's Arms inn, now the Saracen's Head; at which latter place, on the 6th of May, 1646, he privately surrendered himself to the Scottish commissioners. The parliamentary troops, during their stay in the town, converted the church into a stable, broke the monuments, defaced the ornaments, demolished the palace (in which Cardinal Wolsey had resided during the summer previous to his death), and destroyed all the ancient records, except the Registrum Album, or white book, which is still in the possession of the chapter, and contains most of the grants to the church, from the year 1109 to 1525: the lands belonging to the see were sold for £4061.

The TOWN is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence richly clothed with wood, and surrounded by an amphitheatre of hills of various elevation, near the small river Greet, which is noted for the red trout abounding in it; it comprises the districts of Burgage, the High Town, Easthorpe, and Westhorpe, together forming a considerable though scattered town, well paved and supplied with water, and consisting of houses in general wearing a very neat and prepossessing appearance. Assemblies are held in a commodious suite of rooms erected in 1806; a harmonic society, established in 1786, is well supported; and there is a small theatre, opened in 1816. A pleasant promenade has been formed on the north side of the churchyard, and planted with trees, and the roads in the vicinity have been recently improved; the air is salubrious, and the environs afford some agreeable walks. The only branch of manufacture is that of silk, for which a mill has been erected on the Greet, by a firm at Nottingham. The market is on Saturday; and fairs take place on Whit-Monday, which is a pleasure-fair, and Oct. 21st, a statute-fair. The town is under two separate jurisdictions, called the Burgage and the Prebendage: the former, denominated the Soke of Southwell cum Scrooby, includes twenty townships, for which quarterly courts of session are held by a Custos Rotulorum, and justices of the peace, nominated by the Archbishop of York and the Chapter of Southwell, and appointed by a commission under the great seal for the trial of all but capital offenders. The prebendage includes 28 parishes, over which the chapter, by their vicar-general, exercise ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and all episcopal functions, except confirmation and ordination. The house of correction for the county, after having been several times enlarged, was completed in 1829.

The parish comprises 5613*a.* 1*r.* 19*p.*, of which 2179 acres are arable, 752 meadow, 2161 pasture, 117 woodland, and 85 hop-grounds. The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Normanton in the Collegiate Church (the appropriator), valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 4.; net income, £144. The church, which is both parochial and collegiate, is a magnificent cruciform structure, chiefly of Norman architecture, with some portions in the early, decorated, and later English styles; it has a low central tower, and two others of the same height at the west end, richly ornamented, between which is the principal entrance, through a circular arch, with a large window above it, of the later style, highly enriched by elegant tracery. The nave and western transept are of Norman character; the former has a flat roof of panelled oak finely carved, and supported upon low and massive circular columns and arches, and is lighted by a range of clerestory windows of small dimensions, above a triforium of large and undivided arches. The roof of the aisles is groined in stone; the arches and piers sustaining the central tower are strikingly beautiful, from the simplicity of their style, and the stateliness of their elevation: the choir and the eastern transepts are admirable specimens of the early English style, perhaps unrivalled for their purity of design and fidelity of minute detail; the stalls and the screen are in the later period of the decorated style. On the eastern side of the north transept was formerly a chantry, or singing school, which has been converted into a library for the college, containing a valuable and extensive collection of works, chiefly on divinity. On the north side of the church is the chapter-house, in the decorated English style: the entrance doorway, which is double, is elegantly enriched with foliage of a character not very prevalent in England; the tracery in the windows, and in the stalls under them, is also very beautiful. The prebendal houses, and especially that for the residentiary prebendary, are handsome edifices. In the churchyard are some remains of the ancient collegiate buildings, the establishment of which is still retained, consisting of 10 prebendaries, several minor canons, an organist, six singing men, six choristers, and six boys as probationers, with a registrar, treasurer, auditor, and other officers; the chapter has the patronage of the minor canonries and twenty-one benefices. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists.

The free grammar school, which occupies the site of the college of the chantry priests, is under the superintendence of the chapter, and has two scholarships founded in St. John's College, Cambridge, by the Rev. Dr. John Keyton, canon of Salisbury, in the reign of Henry VIII., for boys who have been choristers in the collegiate church: the school has a small endowment. The poor law union of Southwell comprises sixty parishes or places, and contains a population of 25,011. Of the ancient episcopal palace there are considerable remains overspread with ivy, and forming an interesting and romantic ornament to the town; they consist chiefly of the chapel and great hall, which are almost entire, and fitted up as a modern residence; and in this portion of the building is a room lighted by the great west window of the hall, which is appropriated to the holding of the sessions: the quadrangle, once surrounded with offices, has been converted into a garden. Vestiges of a Roman fosse are perceptible on the Burgage hill. Of the springs which formerly distinguished the vicinity, and from one of which the town derived its name, St. Catherine's well, at Westhorpe, celebrated for the cure of rheumatism, and South well, about half a mile to the south-east of the town, are still open.

SOUTHWELL-PARK, an extra-parochial district, in the union and hundred of THINGOE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (W. S. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 16 inhabitants.

SOUTHWICK (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of SUNDERLAND, E. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Sunderland; containing 1912 inhabitants. This place, hitherto a township of Monk-Wearmouth, has just been separated from it, and made a distinct parish. It was once the property of a family named Suthwyk, and afterwards formed part of the possessions of the Hedworths, and was also the residence of the Greys, of which family was Dr. Zachary Grey, the editor of Hudibras, whose brother George lived here. The parish comprises 1018*a.* 1*r.* 7*p.* on the north of the Wear, upon the banks of which river are several limekilns, ship-yards, and earthenware and glass manufactories: the village is neatly built, and pleasantly situated, stretching along the heights above the Wear. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Durham, by whom it has been endowed: the appropriate tithes, payable to the 10th canon of Durham cathedral, have been commuted for £114. 0. 6., and the inappropriate for £36. 12. 2. The church is in the early English style, with a noble square tower, and was erected in 1842, at a cost of £1800, defrayed by the Dean and Chapter, who also gave the site (from which is a beautiful view of the vale of the Wear), and who have expended altogether many thousand pounds in the district. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a national school built in 1836. Human bones, and sometimes entire skeletons, have been found when removing the soil above the limestone quarries on Southwick hills.

SOUTHWICK, with PARK, a township, in the parish and union of TEWKESBURY, Lower division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 123 inhabitants.

SOUTHWICK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of OUNDE, hundred of WILLYBROOK, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from OUNDE; containing 171 inhabitants. The parish is almost entirely surrounded with woods belonging to Rockingham Forest, and comprises 1354*a.* 30*p.*, nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land; the soil is a strong clay mixed with marl. The village is situated in a valley, in the midst of beautiful scenery, about two miles from the river Nene. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 6.; net income, £90; patrons, the family of Capron. There is a glebe-house, with a glebe containing about 40 acres. The church is a plain neat building; and in the chancel is a piece of sculpture, by Roubilliac, to the memory of G. Lynn, Esq., whose family held the estate, till 1841, for many centuries.

SOUTHWICK (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of FAREHAM, hundred of PORTSDOWN, Fareham and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from Fareham; containing 749 inhabitants. A priory of Black canons founded by Henry I. at Porchester, in 1133, was soon after removed hither, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was valued at £314. 17. 10. per annum; it acquired some historical celebrity from having been the scene of the marriage of Henry VI. with Margaret of Anjou, and there are still a few remains of the buildings, in Southwick Park. The parish comprises 4100 acres by admeasurement, of which 1727 are arable, 1167 meadow, 1016 woods, and 190 waste, &c.: good building-stone is quarried, and there are kilns for burning chalk into lime. The manor-house, which was destroyed by fire in 1840, was a large building of some antiquity, with two wings terminating in gables, and embattled: Charles I. was on a visit to the owner of the mansion at the time when the Duke of Buckingham, whom he had accompanied thus far from London, was assassinated by Felton, at Portsmouth; and George I. was also entertained here. The publicans at Southwick enjoy the privilege, under a charter of Queen Elizabeth, of having no soldiers billeted upon them, or quartered in their houses. A fair for horses is held on April 5th; and here was formerly a market, granted to the priory in 1235, but long disused. The living is a donative, in the patronage of T. Thistlethwayte, Esq.; income, £156, with a house and garden: the tithes have been commuted for £147. The church contains a peal of bells valued at £1000.

SOUTHWICK (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of STEYNING, hundred of FISHERGATE, rape of BRAMNER, W. division of SUSSEX, 1 mile (E.) from New Shoreham; containing 957 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1175*a.* 6*p.*: the river Adur intersects its southern portion, and the Shoreham branch of the London and Brighton railway also passes through it. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 13. 9½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £207. The church is principally in the Norman style, though the upper part of the tower, and some smaller portions, are of later date: in 1834 it was enlarged. Dr. John Pell, F.R.S., a celebrated mathematician, was born here.

SOUTHWICK, a chapelry, in the parish of NORTH BRADLEY, union of WESTBURY and WHORWELSDOWN, hundred of WHORWELSDOWN, Whorwelsdown and N. divisions of WILTS, 2½ miles (S. W. by S.) from Trow- bridge; containing 1384 inhabitants. The manufacture of broad-cloth and kerseymeres is carried on. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, the Vicar of North Bradley. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

Arms.

probably derived from an adjacent wood, the western confines still retaining the appellation of Wood's-end Marshes and Wood's-end Creek. It is supposed that the Danes, about the year 1010, had a fortified post here, but authentic information carries us no further back than to 1202, when the first chapel was built by the prior and monks of Thetford, in right of their cell at Wangford. The town appears to have enjoyed considerable prosperity for about a century and a half previously to the year 1659, when a dreadful conflagration took place, which in a few hours consumed the town-hall, and almost every public building except the church, with 238 dwelling-houses, and numerous granaries and warehouses, besides an immense quantity of merchandise, the value of all which was estimated at more than £40,000. The population at the time is supposed to have amounted to about 2000, the chief of whom abandoned the ruins and sought refuge principally in the neighbouring places. Another remarkable event was the memorable sea-fight between the English, under the command of the Duke of York, and the Dutch, under Admiral de Ruyter, which took place in Sole Bay, to the east of the town, on the 26th of May, 1672, when, though the former proved victorious, many brave and distinguished officers were slain, among whom was the Earl of Sandwich, second in command. The haven, which is formed by the mouth of the river Blyth, was originally at Dunwich, but the incursions of the sea on that ancient city having in the early part of the fourteenth century rendered the haven no longer navigable, it was cut in the year 1590 near to its present situation; in the year 1747 it had become choked up with sand, and was cleared out by act of parliament. In 1749, a pier was erected on the north side; and the Society of the "Free British Fishery," who were incorporated in 1750, having established a branch of their undertaking at this port, a south pier was added in 1752 to complete the works: by the same act of parliament, duties were also imposed on imports and exports.

The town is pleasantly situated on a hill overlooking the North Sea, and is rendered peninsular by the sea and a creek called the Buss Creek, which runs into the river Blyth, over which is a bridge, formerly a draw-bridge, leading into the town. It consists principally of one paved street; the houses are mostly well built and of modern appearance, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from numerous excellent springs. The most considerable residences, however, are on elevated sites, commanding fine sea views, and especially on the cliffs, which are covered with all kinds of lodging-houses, for the accommodation of visitors, particularly those resorting hither for bathing, for which Southwold, from the nature of its situation and the convenience of the beach, is admirably adapted. There are hot and cold baths, and a good promenade; also a reading-room called the Casino, on the Gun Hill, with an assembly-room: races, likewise, are held annually. On St. Edmund's, commonly called Gun Hill, are six eighteen-pounders, presented by the Duke of Cumberland, who landed here from the Netherlands, October 17th, 1745; and to counteract the encroachments of the sea, a break-water has been made under Gun Hill cliff, extending upwards of 300 yards. The TRADE of the town consists in the home fishery, which is principally for soles, and employs several small boats; in the curing and reddening of herrings and sprats, in malting, and in the preparation and exportation of salt, for which there is a manufactory. The chief imports are coal, rock-salt, firs and deals, culm, iron, stone, slate, glass, earthenware, chalk, oats, &c.; and the exports wheat, barley, malt, oak-timber, bark, wool, refined salt, and fish. The number of vessels registered at the port is thirty-six, of between 40 and 100 tons' burthen; and of various kinds of boats there are about 250. The last harbour act received the royal assent 29th May, 1830, since which the scale of duties has been somewhat reduced. The entrance into the haven is on the south side of the town: the superintendance of it is vested in commissioners, who, though they have considerably improved the navigation within the harbour, find great difficulty in keeping it open, on account of the accumulation of sand about the bar. The river Blyth was made navigable to Halesworth, nine miles distant, under an act passed in 1757; and, besides the bridge crossing it at Blythburgh, there is a ferry to Walberswick. The market is on Thursday; and a fair is held on Trinity-Monday.

Corporation Seal.

The first charter of incorporation was granted by Henry VII. in 1490, and confirmed, with extended privileges, by Henry VIII. and subsequent sovereigns. The corporation now consists, however, of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and, by a commission obtained in 1841, the number of magistrates is four. The guildhall was erected by the corporation, at an expense of £800: the old gaol having been taken down, a new one was built in 1819, which is now a national school. The parish comprises 646*a. 3r. 7p.* The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Reydon, and in the gift of the Earl of Stradbroke; it is endowed with the great and small tithes, which have been commuted for £68, and its value, including a good residence, is estimated at about £136 per annum. The church, which was completed about 1460, is a very elegant structure in the later English style, with a large and lofty tower, surmounted by a spire, and constructed of freestone intermixed with flint of various colours. At each angle of the east end of the chancel is a low hexagonal embattled tower, decorated with crosses; the south porch is very elegant, and above the clerestory roof is a light open lantern. The ceiling was, in former times, handsomely painted, and the interior very richly ornamented, as appears by the carved work of the rood-loft, screen, and the seats of the magistrates; the gallery was enlarged in 1836. On the south side of the churchyard are three grave-stones, in memory of Thomas Gardner, the historian of Dunwich and Southwold, and his two wives and daughter, on which are some singular inscriptions. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans, each possess a place of worship. The corporation have estates under their controul for the building and maintenance of bridges, sea-walls, &c., and of the town-hall, for the payment of the salaries of the corporation officers, and for general purposes of improvement. John Sayer, in 1816, bequeathed £200 four per cent. consols. towards the support of the Burgh school; but that institution having been relinquished, the dividends are now applied, according to the will of the donor, to the relief of widows of Trinity pilots and masters of vessels belonging to the port. On a hill called Eye cliff, at a small distance from the town, are vestiges of ancient encampments, and, in many parts, of circular tents, now called Fairy hills, most probably of Danish origin. Numerous coins of Roman emperors and British kings have been found in the immediate vicinity, and fossil remains of the elephant and mammoth have been discovered in the cliffs, which are rich in agates, cornelians, and other valuable stones.

SOUTHWOOD (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Acle; containing 52 inhabitants. The parish is crossed by the Norwich and Yarmouth railway, and comprises about 450 acres of land, chiefly arable: the village has fallen into a state of decay. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Limpnhoe annexed; net income, £163; patron, J. F. Leathes, Esq. The glebe contains 7 acres.

SOUTHWOOD, a hamlet, in the parish of EVER-CREECH, union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 54 inhabitants.

SOUTHWORTH, with CROFT, a township, in the parish of WINWICK, union of WARRINGTON, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Newton-in-Mackerfield; containing 1155 inhabitants. A rent-charge of £230 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes. The Hall once belonged to the Roman Catholic college of Stonyhurst, and part of it is still used as a chapel by persons of that persuasion.

SOW (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of FOLESHILL, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Coventry; containing 1388 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by the river Sow, the Oxford canal, and the road from Coventry to Hinckley, and consists of 2477 acres: the rateable annual value of the canal property here is £1400, and of mineral £50. Considerable coal-works are in operation; and many of the inhabitants are engaged in the ribbon manufacture, in connexion with the trade of Coventry. The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Stoke; impropiator, Earl of Craven. The church has been enlarged.

SOWERBY, with INSKIP, a township, in the parish of ST. MICHAEL, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Garstang; containing 735 inhabitants.

SOWERBY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, 1 mile (S.) from Thirsk; containing 957 inhabitants. This place, at an early period, was the property of the Lascelles family, who, in the reign of Elizabeth, granted it to the Meynells, whose descendant, Thomas Meynell, Esq., is now lord of the manor. The township comprises 2528 acres, of which 27 are woodland and plantations, and of the remainder, two-thirds are arable, and about one-third meadow and pasture; the surface is varied, and the scenery pleasingly enriched with wood; the soil is fertile. The village is large and well built, and leading from it is a fine broad gravel-walk across the fields, commanding some extensive and interesting prospects; the manufacture of varnish is carried on. The Great North of England railway passes within a mile. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £34; patron and appropriator, the Archbishop of York, whose tithes have been commuted for £300. The chapel, an ancient structure in the Norman style, was rebuilt on an enlarged scale, in 1842, at an expense of £1100, raised by subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society. A parochial school is supported.

SOWERBY, a chapelry, in the parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Halifax; containing 8163 inhabitants. The chapelry is situated on the south side of the vale of Todmorden, and comprises by computation 3670 acres, of which one-half is inclosed, and an act of parliament has just been obtained for inclosing the remainder. The lands under cultivation produce abundant crops, and the surface is beautifully diversified with hill and dale; the river Calder and the Manchester and Leeds railway pass on the north. Good building-stone is extensively quarried, and the Millstone group contains a seam of plate-coal. The village of Sowerby, which is on an eminence, is spacious and well built; and within the chapelry are parts of the villages of Sowerby-Bridge and Mytholmroyd, as well as numerous scattered hamlets. The manufacture of woollen, silk, worsted, and cotton goods, is carried on extensively. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £190; patron, the Vicar of Halifax: there is a glebe-house, with about 35 acres of land. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected in 1765, on the site of an ancient chapel of ease of which some portions are preserved in the grounds of Field House, where they have been formed into an artificial ruin; it is a spacious and handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and contains a handsome monument, with a well-executed statue, to the memory of Dr. John Tillotson, Archbishop of Canterbury, who was born at Haugh-End, in the chapelry. In 1840, a district church, dedicated to St. George, was erected in the Norman style, at a cost, including a neat parsonage-house in the vicinity, of £2600, of which £300 were a grant from the Ripon Diocesan Society; net income of the incumbent, £150. There are eight places of worship for various denominations of dissenters; also a grammar school for boys with an endowment of £16 per annum, for teaching twelve scholars, who are chosen by the minister and churchwardens. In 1711, the Rev. Paul Bairstow, bequeathed property now producing £103 per annum, of which £85 are distributed among poor persons; to whom, also, Mrs. Mary Wadsworth bequeathed property producing £21 per annum. John Bentley, in 1654, left £20, to be lent on interest to tradesmen; besides which there are several small benefactions for the poor generally, and an almshouse for three men and three women, who each receive half-a-crown per month. A large Druidical stone here was, some years since, split up, and appropriated to building a cottage.

SOWERBY-BRIDGE, a chapelry, in the parish of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. W. by W.) from Halifax; containing 5000 inhabitants. This place, which, at the commencement of the present century, comprised only a few scattered houses called the Old Causeway, has since that period increased with surprising rapidity in extent and population. The town consists of a spacious street of well-built houses, about a mile in length, and of numerous detached and pleasant villas; the surrounding scenery is varied, and the whole has an aspect of cheerfulness and prosperity. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen, worsted, waste-silk, and cotton goods; and in the making of cards for flax, cotton, and worsted mills, under a patent obtained by Mr. James Walton. The weaving of tarpaulings is also carried on; there are three iron-foundries, several chemical-works, and a large brewery; on the banks of the Calder are some extensive corn-mills; and stone of excellent quality for building is found in abundance, and quarried for the supply of the neighbouring districts. The Calder and Hebble navigation, and the Rochdale canal, pass through the chapelry; and there is a first-class station here on the Manchester and Leeds railway, which near this place runs through a tunnel 640 yards in length. The chapel of ease, built in the reign of Henry VIII., and which had become totally inadequate to the population, was taken down in 1819, and a more spacious edifice erected in the centre of the village, by subscription, aided by a grant of £800 from the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles; it has a finely-groined roof, and contains 1200 sittings, of which 300 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £230; patron, the Vicar of Halifax. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national school built in 1837, by a grant from government, and likewise used for the meetings of a mechanics' institution recently established. Numerous fossil trees were dug up while making the excavations for the railway.

SOWERBY, CASTLE (St. KENTIGERN), a parish, in the union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Hesket-Newmarket; containing, with the townships of Busta-beck-Bound, How-Bound, Row-Bound, Southernby-Bound, and Stockdalewath-Bound, 1007 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 10. 5.; net income, £98, with a glebe-house; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land, in 1767. A school is endowed with £10 per annum. At Birkseugh are the remains of a chapel, formerly called Lady Chapel; and in How-Bound is Castle Hill, the site of an ancient castle from which the parish derives its distinguishing prefix.

SOWERBY, TEMPLE, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-THORE, EAST ward and union, county of WEST-MORLAND, 7 miles (N. W.) from Appleby; containing 381 inhabitants. The village is situated on the river Eden, which is here crossed by a bridge considered to be the finest in the county, erected in 1823, at an expense of £3700, to replace a structure destroyed by a flood in 1822. There are two spacious streets of well-built houses, with several commodious inns; and in the vicinity are many villas inhabited by genteel families. Fairs for sheep and cattle are held on the last Thursdays in Jan., Feb., March, June, July, August, and October, and on the second Thursday in May. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £96; patron, the Earl of Thanet. A rent-charge of £155 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes. The chapel, dedicated to St. James, is a handsome structure of red freestone, with a square tower and portico, rebuilt and enlarged in 1770, at the expense of Sir William Dalston. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Knights Templars had a preceptory here, which, when suppressed in 1312, was given to the Hospitallers.

SOWERBY-UNDER-COTCLIFFE, a township, in the parish of KIRBY-SIGSTON, union of NORTH-ALLERTON, wapentake of ALLERTONSHIRE, N. riding of YORK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from North-Allerton; containing 63 inhabitants. This place is on the west side of the river Codbeck, opposite the lofty acclivity of Cotcliffe wood, and comprises about 610 acres, belonging to several proprietors.

SOWTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ST. THOMAS, partly in the hundred of EAST BUDLEIGH, but chiefly in that of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Exeter; containing, with part of the tything of Clist-Satchfield, 382 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the great road from London to Exeter, and comprises by admeasurement 1094 acres; the small stream of Clyst runs through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Bishop of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for £264, and there is a glebe-house, with a glebe of 15 acres.

SOYLAND, a township, in the chapelry of RIPPONDEN, parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Halifax; containing 3603 inhabitants. It comprises about 4960 acres, of which a considerable portion forms part of the bleak mountainous ridge of Blackstone-Edge, on the borders of Lancashire. The manufacture of cotton and woollen goods is carried on. The township includes a portion of the village of Ripponden, several scattered hamlets, and detached dwellings, with some neatly-built houses in the dells and on the acclivities of the hills with which the surface is diversified. There are places of worship for Wesleyans both of the Old and New Connexion. A mineral spring here, called the Swift Cross Spa, is slightly impregnated with iron, and holds in solution sulphuretted hydrogen and a free alkali.

SPALDING (St. Mary and St. Nicholas), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 44 miles (S. E. by S.) from Lincoln, and 100 (N.) from London; containing, with the chapelry of Wickham, 7778 inhabitants. This place, which is said to have derived its name from a Spa, or spring of chalybeate water, in the market-place, is of great antiquity, as appears from the remains of Roman embankments in the neighbourhood; and at an early period in the Saxon annals, it is mentioned as one of the points on the boundary line of the estate belonging to Crowland Abbey, and as the residence of Thorold de Buckenhale, the last Saxon governor of the province of Mercia, who, in 1051, founded here a cell for a prior and five monks subordinate to that monastery. At the Norman Conquest, the manor was presented to Ivo Talbois, Earl of Angiers, and nephew of the Conqueror, who built a castle here, by which the religious society were so harassed that they abandoned their convent, which, falling into the hands of the earl, was, together with the church of St. Mary and the manor, given in 1074 to the abbey of St. Nicholas, at Angiers, to which it became an alien priory, inhabited by monks of the Benedictine order. At the time of the suppression of alien priories, this establishment was exempted; it was subsequently raised to the dignity of an abbey, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was estimated at £878. 18. 3.

The town is situated on the river Welland, in a fenny district, remarkably well drained; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and there are many wells of excellent water for the supply of the inhabitants; the houses are in general substantially built and of neat appearance, and several of them are very handsome. An antiquarian society was established many years since by Mr. Maurice Johnson, of which Sir Isaac Newton, Sir Hans Sloane, Dr. Stukeley, and other distinguished persons, were members; and many of the valuable books, some manuscripts, relics of antiquity, and natural curiosities, are still preserved. There is a theatre, a small neat building, opened for three weeks in the month of September. The land in the vicinity is extensively appropriated to grazing, and wool forms a material article in the trade of the town; very considerable business is also carried on in corn, coal, and timber. The river Welland is navigable inland to Stamford, and sloops of from fifty to seventy tons' burthen can come up from the sea to the centre of the town, which maintains a regular coasting trade with London, Hull, Lynn, &c. The port is a member of that of Boston; there is a quay for landing goods, with spacious storehouses for their reception, and this place may be considered one of the most thriving towns on the eastern coast. The market, which is one of the largest in the kingdom for fat-cattle, is on Tuesday; and fairs are held on April 27th and June 30th, by letters-patent of George I.; and on Aug. 28th, Sept. 25th, and Dec. 6th, by prescription, chiefly for live stock. The town has, for many centuries, been the principal seat of jurisdiction for the parts of Holland; in the Saxon times, the courts of law were held here by the earls, and subsequently to the Conquest the priors were invested with judicial authority, and possessed the power of life and death. At present, the quarter-sessions for the parts of Holland take place here and at Boston; and petty-sessions for the wapentake occur every week. Courts of sewers, and of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5, in the hundred of Elloe, and the parishes of Gosberton and Surfleet; and also courts leet and baron, at which the steward presides, are held here. The town-hall, situated at the north-west end of the market-place, was erected at the expense of John Hobson, about the year 1620; the lower part is let for shops, and the rents are given to the poor, according to the will of the donor. A new house of correction for the parts of Holland, an airy and commodious edifice, was built in 1824.

The parish comprises 10,367 acres of arable and pasture land, the former of which predominates; it includes the large tract of inclosed fen called Spalding common, now well drained, and in a profitable state of cultivation. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of certain Trustees, who are seised of the rectory in trust for the incumbent; net income, £950 per annum. The church was erected about 1284, when the old conventual church was taken down, and is principally in the later English style of architecture, with a fine tower surmounted by a crocketed spire: considerable additions were made to it in 1466, among which is the beautiful north porch. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was well endowed by John Blanche and John Gamlyn, and latterly by Mr. Atkinson; and, by letters-patent of the 30th of Elizabeth, four trustees were incorporated, whose successors have a common seal. During the confusion of the civil wars the school fell into disuse, but it was restored by Charles II. with all its former endowments, the amount of which, arising from about ninety-two acres in land, is £199. 15. per annum: the learned Dr. Bentley was once head master. The Petit school was founded in 1682, by Thomas Willesley, and well endowed with land: the premises were rebuilt in 1826, at a cost of £300, and the revenue is £170 per annum. The Blue-coat school, founded by one of the Gamlyn family, and re-established by the parishioners in 1710, has an income of about £200, and the school-house was rebuilt in 1815, at an expense of £350. An almshouse for twenty-two persons was endowed in 1590, by Sir Matthew Gamlyn; and another was established in 1709, for eight widows, by Mrs. Elizabeth Sparke. There are also estates, amounting to £452 per annum, vested in trustees called Town Husbands, for the benefit of the poor; and connected with this charity are eleven almshouses for widows. The union of Spalding comprises 9 parishes, and contains a population of 20,549. A portion of the abbey buildings is yet remaining, partly converted into tenements, and partly in ruins; many relics of antiquity have been found in the neighbourhood at different times, and several have been taken out of the river Welland.

SPALDINGTON, a township, in the parish of BUBWITH, union of HOWDEN, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (N. by E.) from Howden; containing 313 inhabitants. This township, which is on the south side of Spalding moor, comprises 3385*a.* 37*p.*, the property of Lord Howden and others. Spaldington Hall, formerly the seat of the ancient family of Vavasour, and a fine specimen of the Elizabethan style, was taken down in 1838. The village is small; and about a mile distant from it, eastward, is the hamlet of Spaldington-Outside, on the Market-Weighton road. There is an Episcopal chapel; and the Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SPALDWICK (St. James), a parish, in the hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, 7 miles (W. by N.) from Huntingdon; containing 415 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Cambridge to Northampton, and comprises 1470 acres; the soil is a strong clayey loam, mixed in some parts with gravel, and produces every kind of grain of the best quality, and the oxen and sheep fed upon the pastures are remarkably fine flavoured, especially the latter, in consequence of the sweetness of the herbage. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before Whit-Sunday and November 28th, for sheep and cattle of all sorts, and for pedlery. The living is a discharged vicarage, formerly in the patronage of the holder of the now suspended prebend of Longstowe in the Cathedral of Lincoln, and valued in the king's books at £12. 0. 10.; net income, £96; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter. The tithes were commuted for land in 1774; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 40 acres. The church, erected about 1300, has a northern entrance of Norman architecture. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents.

SPALFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of NORTH CLIFTON, union of NEWARK, N. division of the wapentake of NEWARK, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Tuxford; containing 93 inhabitants, and comprising 806 acres. The tithes were commuted for land in 1813.

SPANBY (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. N. E.) from Falkingham; containing 96 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Swaton. The church is a small low structure, which has been of larger dimensions.

SPARHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Reepham; containing 321 inhabitants. It comprises 1729 acres, of which 1202 are arable, 223 meadow and pasture, and 15 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 11., and in the patronage of Edward Lombe, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £481. 18., and there is a glebe-house, with 91 acres of land. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with a lofty embattled tower surmounted by a pinnacle at each angle. At the inclosure, 20 acres were allotted to the poor for fuel.

SPARK-BROOK, a hamlet, in the parish and union of ASTON, hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK. This is a beautiful suburb of the town of Birmingham, situated on the road to Stratford-on-Avon, and distant about a mile and a half from the Post-office. It contains several seats, among which are, the Farm, that of Samuel Lloyd, Esq.; Yew-Tree Cottage, the residence of Thomas Simcox, Esq.; the Larches, formerly inhabited by Dr. Withering, the botanist, and Dr. Priestley, in whose time the rioters attacked it, now occupied by William Sharp, Esq.; and the Poplars, a large brick mansion, the residence of John Smith, Esq.

SPARKFORD (St. Mary Magdalene), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 7½ miles (W. by S.) from Wincanton; containing 286 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Exeter, and comprises 955 acres, of which 257 are arable, 651 pasture, and 47 wood and gardens; the soil is loamy, and dairy-farming is chiefly carried on. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Rev. Henry Bennett: the tithes have been commuted for £245. 6., and the glebe comprises 40 acres. The church was rebuilt about twenty years since by the patron.

SPARKFORD, BISHOP'S, and WEST, two tythings, in the parish of St. FAITH, city and union of WINCHESTER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing respectively 191 and 239 inhabitants.

SPARSHOLT (Holy Cross), a parish, in the union of WANTAGE, partly in the hundred of SHRIVENHAM, but chiefly in that of WANTAGE, county of BERKS, 3¼ miles (W.) from Wantage; containing, with the hamlet of Fawler, and the chapelry of Kingston-Lisle, 903 inhabitants, of whom 506 are in Sparsholt township. The Wilts and Berks canal, and the Great Western railway, pass through the parish; and the Ikeneld road through the vale of White Horse, to the south of the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 3½.; patrons and improprators, the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. The great tithes have been commuted for £530, and the vicarial for £358. 12.; there is a glebe-house, and the respective glebes contain 132¼ and 12 acres. The church, principally in the Norman style, contains three stone stalls and a piscina. Abraham Atkins, in 1788, gave a school-house at Kingston-Lisle, and endowed it with a moiety of the rents arising from a certain estate; the income is about £63.

SPARSHOLT (St. Stephen), a parish, in the union of NEW WINCHESTER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3¼ miles (W. N. W.) from Winchester; containing 375 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 2½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £230; improprator, Sir W. Heathcote, Bart.

SPAUNTON, a township, in the parish of LASTINGHAM, union of PICKERING, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (N. W.) from Pickering; containing 110 inhabitants. It comprises about 1228 acres, chiefly the property of Lord Feversham, and is on the west side of the river Severn.

SPAXTON (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W.) from Bridgwater; containing 1002 inhabitants. The parish is situated at the foot of the Quantock hills, and comprises 3387 acres, of which 95 are common or waste land: there are several quarries, some containing an excellent sandstone, of which the church was built. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 8. 9., and in the gift of the Rev. William Henry George: the tithes have been commuted for £650; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 66 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style. The Rev. Joseph Cook, rector, bequeathed lands, in 1708, producing a liberal income; for the maintenance of six persons in an hospital; also £6 per annum, for teaching children.

SPECKINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of YEOVILTON, union of YEOVIL, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 26 inhabitants.

SPEEN (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWBURY, partly in the hundred of KINTBURY-EAGLE, and partly in that of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 1 mile (W.) from Newbury; containing, with the chapelry of Speenhamland, and the tythings of Bagnor, Church-Speen, Marsh-Benham, and Wood-Speen, 3069 inhabitants, of whom 224 are in Church-Speen, and 632 in Wood-Speen. This place was the Spina of the Romans, a station on the road from Gloucester to Silchester. To the north of the church, traces of an agger, or fortification, are distinctly visible; on Speen Moor, a large urn has been found under a tumulus of earth eight feet high; and a Roman altar, consecrated to Jupiter, was discovered in 1730, at Fulsham, in the neighbourhood. This was the principal scene of the second battle of Newbury, fought October 27th, 1644, between what is now the castle and the village. A market was formerly held on Monday, but has been long disused. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Kennet and the Kennet and Avon canal, and on the north by the river Lambourn, and comprises 3350 acres, the soil of which is generally of a gravelly nature, and the surface much varied. The living is a vicarage, with the chapelry of Speenhamland, valued in the king's books at £14. 0. 10.; net income, £424; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Salisbury: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1779. The church contains some curious monumental figures. An additional church has been erected and endowed by the vicar, the Rev. H. W. Majendie, in the hamlet of Stockcross, and was consecrated in November 1839.

SPEENHAMLAND, a chapelry, in the parish of SPEEN, union of NEWBURY, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS; adjoining the town of Newbury, and containing 867 inhabitants. The great western road passes through the village. A chapel of ease was erected in 1831, chiefly by subscription, and contains 1000 sittings; and a school-house has been built and endowed by Mr. and Mrs. Page, of Goldwell House. There is also an almshouse, founded in 1664, by Mrs. Anne Watts, for two widows.

SPEETON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BRIDLINGTON, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of York, 5½ miles (N. N. W.) from Bridlington; containing 125 inhabitants. This township, which belongs to W. J. Denison, Esq., comprises about 1820 acres of land, and commands a beautiful view of the shore from Scarborough to Flamborough head: the village is situated on an eminence north-east of the road from Bridlington to Scarborough, and the sea bounds the chapelry on the north. A kind of blue stone is picked off the cliff in large quantities, and made into cement. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £44. 8.; patron, Mr. Denison: the chapel is an ancient humble edifice. A windmill upon Speeton heights is a conspicuous object, and can be seen at a great distance both by sea and land.

SPEKE, a township, in the parish of CHILDWALL, union of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (S. S. W.) from Prescot; containing 548 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £372. 11. 9., of which £311. 17. 3. are payable to the Bishop of Chester, and £57. 12. to the vicar.

SPELDHURST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TONBRIDGE, partly in the hundred of SOMERDEN, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, but chiefly in the hundred of WASHLINGSTONE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 3 miles (N. W.) from Tonbridge-Wells; containing 2753 inhabitants. The parish is intersected by a branch of the river Medway, and comprises 3919 acres, of which 1367 are arable, 1401 pasture and meadow, 545 woodland, and 256 common. Good building-stone is quarried; iron-ore abounds, rendering the springs more or less chalybeate, and the well from which the Tonbridge water is drunk is situated here. Fairs for cattle are held at Groombridge, in the parish, on May 17th and September 25th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 5., and in the patronage of Mrs. Harbroe: the tithes have been commuted for £498, and the glebe comprises 8½ acres, with a house. The church, struck by lightning and burned down in 1791, but rebuilt in the following year, contains two curious epitaphs on Sir Walter and Lady Anne Waller, and some monuments to the Bacon family. There is a private chapel at Groombridge, built in 1625; and a chapel was erected by subscription, in 1682, on the boundary line dividing this parish from that of Tonbridge. The Duke of Orleans was detained prisoner at Groombridge in the reign of Henry V., and built a porch to the old church.

SPELSBURY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Chipping-Norton; containing, with the hamlets of Dean, Ditchley, Fulwell, and Taston, 597 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 8. 9.; net income, £211; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes were partly commuted for land and money payments in 1779, and the remainder in 1802. The church, founded by the Beauchamp family, had once a lofty and elegant spire, which, in 1772, was taken down, from the insufficiency of the tower to sustain its weight; and other alterations have contributed to destroy the original character of the edifice. In the north aisle is the sepulchral chapel of the family of Lee, which contains the remains of Henry, Lord Wilmot, and of his son John, the celebrated Earl of Rochester. On an eminence near the village is an extensive triangular intrenchment called Castle Ditches.

SPENNITHORNE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of York; containing, with the townships of Bellarby and Harmby, 785 inhabitants, of whom 198 are in Spennithorne township, 1 mile (N. E. by N.) from Middleham. In Spennithorne township are 1261 acres, of which 1198 are arable and pasture, and 63 woodland; the scenery is beautiful, and embraces, in its variety, wood, water, and rich pastures. There are some quarries of limestone. The village is neat, and pleasantly situated on the north side of Wensleydale: the river Ure, which is here very devious in its course, passes at a short distance on the west. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 10. 5.; net income, £425; patron, Marmaduke Wywill, Esq. The rectorial tithes of Spennithorne and Harmby were commuted for land in 1775; and some tithes in Harmby have been recently commuted for a rent-charge of £10. 16. The church is an ancient structure. A parochial school, erected in 1833, is supported by subscription. John Hutchinson, a philosophical writer, was born here in 1667.

SPERNALL (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N.) from Alcester; containing 107 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Arrow, near the road from Birmingham to Cheltenham, by way of Evesham, and comprises 1159 acres, of which 137 are woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 18. 1½., and in the gift of Charles Chambers, Esq., R.N.: the tithes have been commuted for £160; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 28 acres. The church, a Norman structure, was repaired, and the chancel rebuilt, in 1844.

SPETCHLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3¼ miles (E. by S.) from Worcester; containing 155 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Worcester to Evesham, and comprises 757 acres. A first-class station of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway is situated here. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 3., and in the gift of Robert Berkeley, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £148. 18., and the glebe comprises nearly 24 acres. The church contains several monuments worthy of notice to the memory of the Berkeley family. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel.

SPETISBURY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of LOOSEBARROW, Blandford division of DORSET, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 654 inhabitants. The river Stour runs past the village. The living is a rectory, with Charlton-Marshall annexed, valued in the king's books at £28. 18. 1½., and in the gift of I. S. W. S. E. Drax, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £440; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 51 acres. The Roman Catholics have a chapel. In 1728, a school was founded and endowed with land given by Dr. Sloper and Bishop Hall, and now producing £110 per annum. Here was a priory, a cell to the abbey of Preaux, in Normandy, but afterwards considered part of the cell of Monks' Toft, in Norfolk, belonging to the same house. In the neighbourhood are the remains of an ancient British encampment called Spetisbury Rings, in which coins and other relics of the Saxons have been found.

SPEXHALL (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Halesworth; containing 215 inhabitants, and consisting of 1484 acres by admeasurement. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £14, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £286; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 45 acres.

SPILSBY (St. JAMES), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the E. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 31 miles (E.) from Lincoln, and 133 (N.) from London; containing, with the hamlet of Eresby, 1457 inhabitants. The town is situated upon an elevated spot of ground which commands an extensive south-easterly view of a tract of marsh and fen land, bounded by Boston deeps and the North Sea, and is within twelve miles of Skegness, on the best part of the Lincolnshire coast. It consists of four principal streets diverging from a spacious square, forming the market-place, which is ornamented on its east side by a cross, consisting of a plain octagonal shaft rising from a quadrangular base, and resting on five steps. A subscription library and news-room is connected with the chief inn. The market is on Monday; and fairs are held on the Monday before, and the two next Mondays after, Whit-Monday (when Whitsuntide falls in May, otherwise there is no fair on the latter day), and on the third Monday in July, for cattle and for wearing-apparel: a market for fat-stock, recently established, takes place every fortnight. There is a court of requests for Spilsby and other parishes; and the general quarter-sessions for the South division of the parts of Lindsey are held here, in January and July. A court-house and house of correction, begun in June, 1824, were completed within two years, at an expense of £25,000; the latter occupies about two acres of ground, and is surrounded by a brick wall, in which, in front of the building, is a Doric portico.

The LIVING is a perpetual curacy; net income, £109; patron and impropiator, Lord Willoughby de Eresby. The church is an irregular stone edifice, with a handsome embattled tower at the west end, supposed to have been erected about the time of Henry VII., at a much later date than the body of the structure. Amongst several ancient monuments is one in memory of the celebrated Lord Willoughby de Eresby, who, in the reign of Elizabeth, commanded 4000 English troops despatched to France, in aid of Henry IV., King of Navarre; he died in 1601, and was interred here. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a grammar school, originally founded by the Willoughby family, and rebuilt in 1826, has an income of £66. 10. per annum. In 1735, the Duke of Ancaster and others endowed a school for 20 boys. There are a national and a Lancasterian school; and about £90 per annum, vested in trustees, are distributed half yearly to persons of good character. The poor law union of Spilsby comprises 66 parishes or places, and contains a population of 26,699. At Eresby are extensive remains of the foundations of a chapel, made collegiate in 1349, for a master and twelve priests, by Sir John Willoughby, and dedicated to the Holy Trinity; and at the same place was formerly an elegant mansion belonging to the Duke of Ancaster, which, in 1769, was destroyed by fire, one gateway pillar of exquisite brickwork alone remaining.

SPINDLESTONE, a township, in the parish of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of BAMBROUGH ward and of NORTHUMBERLAND, 3¼ miles (E. by S.) from Belford; containing 151 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the Waren river, and comprises 455 acres, of which 175 are pasture, and the remainder arable land; coal exists, though it is not wrought, and there are also whinstone, limestone, and freestone. Messrs. Nairn have constructed here a reservoir of four acres for their extensive mills. Waren House, the residence of Philip Nairn, Esq., is surrounded with plantations, and has fine sea and land views. Here was anciently a military station of considerable extent, and vestiges of mounds and intrenchments are conspicuous.

SPITALFIELDS (CHRISTCHURCH), a parish, in the union of WHITECHAPEL, Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 20,436 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in the north-eastern part of the metropolis, was anciently called Lolsenorth Field, and appears to have been selected as a place of sepulture by the Romans, during their occupation of London. On breaking up the ground in 1576, for clay to make bricks, numerous urns containing ashes and burnt bones were discovered, in each of which was a brass coin of the emperor reigning at the time of the interment. Among these were some coins of Claudius, Vespasian, Nero, Antoninus Pius, Trajan, and others; and vials, glasses, and pottery of red earth, were also found, with various other relics of Roman antiquity. The present name is derived from a priory of canons of the Augustine order, and an hospital for poor brethren, entitled "the New Hospital of our Lady without Bishopsgate," founded in the year 1197, by Walter Brune, citizen, and afterwards sheriff, of London, and Roesia his wife, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; the establishment continued to flourish till the Dissolution, when its revenue, according to Dugdale, was estimated at £478. 6. 6. From the time of the Reformation it was the custom for a bishop, a dean, and a doctor of divinity, to preach a sermon each upon the Resurrection, on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Easter-week, in a pulpit cross in the churchyard of the priory: during the protectorate of Cromwell the practice was discontinued, and the cross destroyed; but the sermons, called the "Spital Sermons," were revived after the restoration of Charles II., and preached in the parochial church of St. Bride, Fleet-street, and are now delivered before the lord mayor and aldermen of the city, at Christchurch, Newgate-street. Undistinguished by any important features for many years, this place at length became the seat of the silk manufacture, originally established at Canterbury and other towns by the refugees who, after the revocation of the edict of Nantz, in the reign of Louis XIV., had found an asylum in England. From this time it began to increase, and it is now one of the most populous districts in the vicinity of the metropolis.

The parish was originally a hamlet in Stepney, from which it was separated by act of parliament in 1729. In Church-street and several other streets are some spacious and well-built houses; the other parts are inhabited chiefly by weavers and persons connected either immediately or remotely with the silk trade, who work in their own dwellings. The place has long been celebrated as the principal seat of the silk manufacture, which is carried on to a very considerable extent. Within the parish and the immediate vicinity are many houses in the trade engaging from 200 to 1500 persons each; and including the adjacent parishes of Bethnal-Green and Shoreditch, and the hamlet of Mile-End New Town, and its neighbourhood, not less than 15,000 looms are at work, affording occupation to more than 50,000 persons, exclusively of those engaged in other departments of the trade, which, in all its branches, is computed to employ from 130,000 to 150,000 in the district. The principal articles made are broad silks and plain and figured velvets of the best quality; and connected with the manufacture are numerous dyeing establishments, some of which are on a large scale. In Brick-lane is the very extensive ale and porter brewery of Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, and Buxton; in Wheler-street is a soap-manufactory, in which about 40 persons are employed; and there are several manufactories of harp and violin strings, violins and double basses, and materials for colouring spirits and vinegar. In Montague-street is a timber-yard, in which is a great assortment of fancy mahogany and rosewood veneers; and in Bell-lane is a large timber and building yard. The market, principally for fruit and vegetables, is very extensive, and has been for many years in high reputation for the supply of potatoes. The parish is within the jurisdiction of the Tower Hamlets court of requests.

The LIVING is a rectory not in charge; net income, £445; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, who pay a stipend of £120 to the curate. The church, built in 1729, under the provisions of an act of parliament in the reign of Anne, is a stately and massive structure in the Roman style, with a tower surmounted by a pyramid of rather cumbrous appearance. On the north side of the chancel is a monument by Flaxman to Sir Robert Ladbrooke, Knt., lord mayor of London, whose statue in his civic robes, with the sword and mace lying at his feet, is finely executed in marble; and on the south side is a monument to Edward Peek, Esq., one of the commissioners for building 50 new churches in the reign of Anne, and who laid the first stone of this edifice. Sir George Wheler's chapel, in Chapel-street, was built by that gentleman for the accommodation of his tenants, previously to the erection of the parochial church, and for many years after continued in the family, but was subsequently purchased by the Tillards, whose lands were contiguous to those of the founder; it is a proprietary Episcopal chapel, now in the patronage of the Rev. Richard Tillard. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Calvinistic Methodists. A parochial school was founded in 1708, and is endowed with benefactions amounting to £241 per annum. A national school was built in Quaker-street, in 1819, at a total expense of £3300, raised by subscription, and is adapted to the reception of 1000 children; in the boys' room divine service is performed every Sunday evening by the rector. On the opposite side of the street is an infants' school, established in 1820. In Wood-street is the Protestant Dissenters' charity school, instituted in 1717, by subscription, for 50 boys and 50 girls; the house is substantially built, with a good garden behind, and in one of the lower rooms is a library, with a philosophical apparatus for the members of the Eastern Mechanics' Institute, who hold their meetings here. In Bell-lane is the Jews' free school, originally founded in 1818 for 270 boys, and rebuilt on a larger scale in 1820.

SPITTAL-ON-THE-STREET, a chapelry, in the parish of GLENTWORTH, union of GAINSBOROUGH, W. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (E.) from Gainsborough. The chapel is dedicated to St. Nicholas. An hospital for poor women, with a chapel dedicated to St. Edmund, existed here in the reign of Edward II., and was augmented in that of Richard II., and is now under the superintendance of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln.

SPITTAL, with POULTON, a township, in the parish of BEBINGTON, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Great Neston; containing 209 inhabitants.

SPITTLE, or SPITAL, a considerable fishing and sea-bathing village, in the parish of TWEEDMOUTH, union of BERWICK-UPON-TWEED, in ISLANDSHIRE, forming a part of the detached portion of the county of DURHAM, locally northward, and for electoral purposes annexed to the N. division, of NORTHUMBERLAND, 1 mile (S. E.) from Berwick; containing 1631 inhabitants. This place, situated on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the river Tweed, and consisting of two principal streets, was formerly inhabited by smugglers and others of disreputable character; but, since the inclosure of the adjacent common, these have gradually been superseded by honest and industrious fishermen. Here are six houses for curing red and white herrings; and good accommodation is afforded for persons who resort to the place for sea-bathing, or for drinking the water of a powerful chalybeate spring in the neighbourhood. On Sunnyside hill, half a mile from the village, is an extensive colliery, the property of the corporation of Berwick. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians.

SPITTLE, a township, in the parish of OVINGHAM, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 11 miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle; containing 10 inhabitants. This place, which is farm land, is the property of Robert Ormston, Esq.: the village is situated on the north side of the Hexham turnpike-road, and on a tributary of the river Tyne. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of 13s. 4d. Here is a mineral spring, of which the water contains a considerable quantity of sulphur.

SPITTLEGATE, a township, in the parish and union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 1 mile (S. by E.) from Grantham; containing, with Houghton and Walton, 1980 inhabitants. This place, with Grantham and Little Gonerby, was lighted with gas, in 1833, by a company established with a capital of £6000. A church was built in 1841, containing 800 sittings, of which 400 are free.

SPITTLE-HILL, a township, in the parish of MITFORD, union, and W. division of the ward, of MORPETH, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. by N.) from Morpeth; containing 12 inhabitants. This place, which comprises about 154 acres, takes its name from an hospital founded in the reign of Henry I., and dedicated to St. Leonard, by William de Bertram, who endowed it with land for a chaplain. The advowson was vested in the barons of Mitford; but prior to the 14th century, the abbot of Newminster obtained possession of the lands. The hospital continued to exist till the year 1464, and on the death of one of the Percys, who held the advowson, was valued at 40s. per annum; the site is now occupied by a modern mansion, the residence of Mr. Bullock, owner of the township, which has been for many years the property of his family. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £16. 12. 2.

SPIXWORTH (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of St. FAITH, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Norwich; containing 52 inhabitants. The parish is on the old road from Norwich to Cromer, and comprises 1224a. 16p., chiefly arable. Adjoining the village is Spixworth Hall, erected in 1609, and situated in tastefully laid out grounds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the gift of J. J. Longe, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £360; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 8 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, with a square tower; on the north side of the chancel is a splendid monument to William Peck and his wife Alice, and there are numerous memorials to the Longe family.

SPOFFORTH (All Saints), a parish, in the Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Follifoot, Linton, Plumpton, Little Ribston, and Wetherby, 3398 inhabitants, of whom 969 are in the township of Spofforth with Stockeld, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wetherby. This place was the residence of the Percy family previously to their settlement at Alnwick, and possessed a formidable castle, their baronial seat, which was demolished by the Yorkists after the battle of Towton, in which the Earl of Northumberland, and his brother Sir Charles Percy, were slain; the remains consist chiefly of the grand hall, which, though a ruin, retains much of its ancient magnificence, and is about 76 feet in length, and 37 in breadth, and lighted by a lofty window, enriched with flowing tracery. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Wharfe, and on the north-east by the Nidd, and comprises by computation 12,600 acres, of which 3800 are in the township of Spofforth, and chiefly the property of Col. Wyndham, who is lord paramount of the manor, the copyholders being all under the rectorial manor; the district abounds with limestone and sandstone. The village is situated on the Crimple brook, and on the London road to Harrogate and Knaresborough; it is neatly built, containing several handsome houses, and the surrounding scenery is pleasingly diversified. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £73. 6. 8.; net income, £1538; patron, Colonel Wyndham. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, partly in the Norman and early English styles, and contains a monument with a recumbent figure of a Knight Templar. At Wetherby is a chapel of ease. The Wesleyans have a place of worship; and some schools are supported by charity. There is a mineral spring, not now in use, from which the parish is supposed to have derived its name; and adjoining the rectory-house was an ancient hall, in which was formerly deposited a quantity of armour, probably for arming the rectorial copyholders of the manor.

SPONDON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Derby; containing 1586 inhabitants. The parish was formerly more extensive, the chapelries of Chaddesden and Stanley having been recently separated from it, and erected into distinct parishes. It comprises 3089 acres by admeasurement, of which 609 are arable, 2363 pasture, 92 wood, and 25 water; and the beautiful mansion of Locks Hall, surrounded by a park of 200 acres, is situated here. The chief produce is cheese. The village, seated on a commanding eminence overlooking the vale of Derwent, is of considerable extent, and the residence of several highly respectable families. The inhabitants are principally employed at cotton-mills, and in the manufacture of stockings, lace, and net, for the Nottingham market; about 50 persons also are occupied in brick-making. The Derby canal passes for more than two miles through the parish, and has a wharf about half a mile from the village; and there is an intermediate station near the place, on the branch line between Derby and Nottingham, of the Midland-Counties' railway. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 7.; net income, £162; patrons, the Trustees under the will of the late W. D. Lowe, Esq., who, with Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart., are improPRIATORS. The tithes for the liberty of Spondon were partly commuted for land and a money payment in 1788; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 69 acres. The church, which is in the decorated English style, and contains in the chancel three stone stalls, has, within the last few years, undergone a thorough repair at an expense of £1200: in the churchyard is an antique stone, apparently Saxon. There are places of worship for Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists; and a school is endowed with land producing about £15 per annum.

SPOONBED, a tything, in the parish of PAINSWICK, union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 694 inhabitants.

SPORLE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Swaffham; containing, with Palgrave, 773 inhabitants. The parish, including those of Great and Little Palgrave, comprises 4180a. 10p., of which about 3690 acres are arable, 400 pasture, and 90 woodland and plantations. The living of Sporle with Great Palgrave is a vicarage, with the rectory of Little Palgrave annexed, and is valued in the king's books at £10. 3. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of Eton College; improPRIATOR, W. Lucas, Esq. The tithes of Sporle and Great Palgrave have been commuted for £929. 4., and the glebe comprises 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres; the vicarage is endowed with land producing £80 per annum; the tithes of Little Palgrave have been commuted for £120, and its glebe comprises 90 acres. The church is an ancient and spacious building of flint, with a tower quoined and embattled with freestone, and a large embattled porch; a piscina and a niche of elegant design, which had long been concealed under a thick coat of plaster, were opened in 1842. At the inclosure, 92 acres of land were allotted to the poor, producing £52 per annum. A priory of Black monks, a cell to the abbey of Saumers, in Anjou, was founded here, as it is thought, by Henry II., and at the suppression was granted by Henry VI. towards the endowment of Eton College; the moat may still be traced. Walter Hart, Bishop of Norwich, was rector of the parish.

SPOTLAND, a chapelry, consisting of the townships of Further and Nearer Side, in the parish and union of ROCHDALE, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Rochdale; containing 18,480 inhabitants. The chapelry is about 6 miles long and 4 broad, and forms an extensive suburb to the town of Rochdale, largely participating in the cotton and every other branch of trade and manufacture carried on there. The river Spodden runs through the district. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Rochdale; it has a glebe-house. The chapel was erected in 1835, in the later English style, with a campanile turret, at an expense of £4430. There are places of worship for dissenters. Samuel Taylor and Robert Jacques, in 1740, conveyed to trustees property for education, of which the income is £20; and the premises were rebuilt in 1819, at a cost of £400. Another school is endowed with £14. 10. per annum; and a dispensary for the parish of Rochdale is situated here.

SPRATTON (St. Luke), a parish, in the union of BRIKWORTH, hundred of SPELHOE, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Northampton; containing, with the hamlet of Little Creaton, 966 inhabitants, of whom 889 are in Spratton township. The parish is situated on the road from Northampton to Leicester, through Welford, and comprises by computation 2483 acres. A few hands are employed in the manufacture of carpets. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the gift of R. J. Bartlett, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for land under an inclosure act; there is a glebe-house, and the land contains about 200 acres, valued at £350 per annum. The church has a highly-ornamented spire, and is an ancient structure, partly in the Norman, and partly in the early and decorated English styles, of the former of which the western entrance is a beautiful specimen: in a chantry is a monument representing a Knight Templar. There are places of worship for Independents and Baptists.

SPREYTON (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of OAKHAMPTON, hundred of WONFORD, Crockerwell and S. divisions of DEVON, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Oakhampton; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises 2979 acres, of which 916 are common or waste land. The ground is hilly, and the village is supposed to be on as elevated a site as any in the county; the view from the tower of the church is altogether panoramic, and embraces, among numerous interesting objects, and beautifully picturesque scenery, more than 30 churches. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. 8.; net income, £135; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Richard Holland; improPRIATORS, the Landowners. There is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 90 acres. The church has a good tower of granite, and on the timber of the roof of the chancel are an inscription and several Latin verses, in which Henry Talbot is named as Lord of Spreyton, and a benefactor to the church, in 1452.

SPRIDLINGTON (St. Hilary), a parish, in the E. division of the wapentake of ASLACOE, parts of LINDSEY, union, and county, of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N. by E.) from Lincoln; containing 292 inhabitants. The western part of the parish adjoins the road from Lincoln to Hull; the number of acres by computation is 2400; the surface is flat, and the soil in some parts light, and in others clayey. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 10.; net income, £454; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Frederick Gildart. The tithes were commuted for land in 1774; there is a glebe-house, and the land contains 250 acres. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SPRINGFIELD (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX,

1 mile (N. E.) from Chelmsford; containing 2256 inhabitants. This parish, which is separated from that of Chelmsford by the river Chelmer, is supposed to have derived its name from the extraordinary number of springs within its limits; it comprises by admeasurement 2728 acres, of which the soil is a good loamy earth, partially mixed with gravel, and the surface rises gently from the banks of the river. The village is pleasantly situated on elevated ground commanding fine views, and has been much increased since the formation of the Chelmsford and Maldon navigation: the county gaol is here. The living is a rectory in two portions, called Bosworth's and Richard's, consolidated by Bishop Sherlock, the former valued in the king's books at £11. 6. 8., and the latter at £11. 4. 9½; patron, the Rev. Arthur Pearson. The tithes have been commuted for £848; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 55½ acres. The church, an ancient edifice with an embattled tower, was fully repaired in 1837, when the lower part of a handsome window, which had been bricked up, was opened, and a carved oaken screen restored to its pristine beauty, by John Adey Repton, Esq.; there is an elegant font in the Norman style. An additional church, built by subscription, in the Norman style, and the site of which was given by Sir Henry and Lady Mildmay, was consecrated in July 1843, and is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Dr. Goldsmith is said to have composed his Deserted Village whilst residing at a farm-house nearly opposite the church; and Joseph Strutt, the engraver and antiquary, was born here, in 1749.

SPRINGTHORPE (St. GEORGE AND St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Gainsborough; containing, with the hamlet of Sturgate, 209 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1072 acres, of which 220 are common or waste; the surface is flat, uninclosed, and badly drained; the soil is a stiff clay, producing chiefly wheat and barley. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £177, and the glebe comprises 14½ acres. The church is a very ancient dilapidated edifice, in the Norman style.

SPROATLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Hull; containing 372 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Hull to Aldborough, and comprises 1380 acres of land, of level surface, and wholly laid out in agriculture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 10.; net income, £230, with a house; patron, John West Hugall, Esq. The tithes of the lordship were commuted for annual money payments in 1762. The church, built in 1819, upon the site of an old edifice dedicated to St. Swithin, is of white brick, principally in the later English style: when laying the foundation, some antique tombstones were found, one of them bearing a Saxon inscription. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Bridget Biggs, in 1733, gave an estate for the erection and support of a school, of which the income is about £90.

SPROSTON, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, ¼ miles (E.) from Middle-wich; containing 171 inhabitants. The inappropriate tithes of the township have been commuted for a rent-charge of £86.

SPROTBOROUGH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the township of Cadeby, 534 inhabitants, of whom 381 are in Sprotborough township, 2¾ miles (W. S. W.) from Doncaster. This place anciently belonged to the Fitzwilliam family, one of whom founded an hospital here, dedicated to St. Edmund, prior to 1363, which flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £9. 13. 11. The manor subsequently became the property of the Copley family, of whom Sir Godfrey built the present spacious mansion, in the reign of Charles II., and whose descendant, Sir Joseph Copley, Bart., is now lord. The parish comprises about 3400 acres of fertile land, situated in the vale of the river Don, and abounding in richly diversified and pleasingly picturesque scenery. Sprotborough Hall consists of a centre and two wings in the Grecian style, and contains many stately apartments, an extensive library, and a valuable collection of paintings; the grounds are tastefully laid out in lawns, and embellished with woods and plantations. The village is on the western acclivity of the vale, and had formerly a cross, which was removed in 1520. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £44. 18. 9.; net income, £685; patron, Sir J. Copley. The church is an ancient structure with a tower, and contains some monuments to the families of Fitzwilliam and Copley. A national school is supported chiefly by the rector and the Copley family; and there are several bequests for the poor.

SPROUGHTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (W. by N.) from Ipswich; containing 585 inhabitants. The Stow-Market and Ipswich navigation passes through the parish, a part of which is within the liberties of Ipswich. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 18. 9., and in the gift of the Marquess of Bristol: the tithes have been commuted for £566; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 13 acres. The church has some interesting monuments, of which one is to the Rev. J. Waite, rector in 1670.

SPROWSTON (St. MARY AND St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of St. FAITH, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 2½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Norwich; containing 1235 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from Norwich to North Walsham, and comprises 2576a. 1r. 9p., of which 2098 acres are arable, 231 pasture, and 246 wood. The Hall, the ancient seat of the Corbets, has been greatly improved by the present proprietor. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich, the appropriators; net income, £94. The church, chiefly in the early style, with a square brick tower, contains a monument of marble to Sir Miles Corbet and Catherine his lady, a descendant of whom, Thomas Corbet, was one of the judges that signed the death-warrant of Charles I. There is a place of worship for Baptists. At the inclosure of Mousehold heath in 1800, the owners agreed to pay £30 per annum, to provide coal for the poor. There are remains of a chapel dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, now converted into a barn.

SPROXTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 8 miles (N. E. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 394 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2222*a.* 2*r.* 16*p.*; the surface is hilly, and the soil is in general incumbent on limestone of the oolite species, of which there are three quarries, supplying a good material for purposes of building and agriculture; the part of the village below the hill is situated on red sandstone, which is also used for building. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Saltby consolidated, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 4.; net income, £282; patron and improprator, the Duke of Rutland. The tithes have been commuted for 135 acres of land, of which 70 are in the parish of Saltby, and the whole of which is valued at £260 per annum. The church is in the later English style, with slight traces of Norman architecture. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A Danish tombstone, which for centuries had served as a bridge over a brook, was recognized some time since as an ancient relic, and removed into the vicarage-garden; and several coins were discovered on its removal, near the same place.

SPROXTON, a township, in the parish of HELMSLEY, union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, 1¼ mile (S.) from Helmsley; containing 172 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Helmsley to York, a little to the west of the river Rye, and comprises 3370 acres of arable and pasture land, all the property of Lord Feversham, the lord of the manor.

SPURM-HEAD, or SPURN-HEAD, in the parish of KILNSEA, union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 12 miles (S. S. E.) from Patrington. This place, which is identified with the Ocellum Promontorium of Ptolemy, is situated at the eastern extremity of the county, projecting into the mouth of the river Humber, near its influx into the North Sea, and forming a peninsular promontory, connected with the main land by a narrow isthmus, which is overflowed at high water. It is inhabited only by a few veteran seamen, who are pensioned by the Trinity House of Hull, and have the management of the life-boats stationed here for the assistance of distressed mariners, who are frequently exposed to great hazards in navigating this part of the coast, to lessen which two lighthouses have been erected, that are also under their care.

SPURSHOT, a tything, in the parish of ROMSEY-EXTRA, union of ROMSEY, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 31 inhabitants.

SPURSTOW, a township, in the parish of BUNBURY, union of NANTWICH, First division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Tarporley; containing 508 inhabitants. A mineral spring called Spurstow Spa was formerly much frequented, and baths were erected by Sir Thomas Mostyn, for the accommodation of visitors; but the waters are not at present in repute. The improper tithes have been commuted for £130, payable to the Haberdashers' Company, London.

STADHAMPTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (N.) from Bensington; containing 384 inhabitants, and comprising 609*a.* 1*r.* 27*p.* The living is a perpetual curacy, incorporated with that of Chislehampton; net income, £52; patron, Charles Peers, Esq. In the churchyard is a remarkably fine yew-tree. There is a place of worship for Particular Baptists. The Rev. John Owen, D.D., the learned non-conformist, dean of Christ-Church, and vice-chancellor of the university of Oxford, in the time of the Commonwealth, was born here; and Wilmot, Earl of Rochester, is supposed to have been also a native.

STADMERSLOW, a township, in the parish of WOLSTANTON, union of WOLSTANTON and BURSLEM, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N.) from Burslem; containing 309 inhabitants, located principally at the village of HARRISEY-HEAD. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STAFFIELD, a township, in the parish of KIRK-OSWALD, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 1½ mile (N. N. W.) from Kirk-Oswald; containing 257 inhabitants. The village is situated in a deep vale, on the north side of the river Croglin, and near it are the remains of an old border fortification called Scarrowmanwick. Stafffield Hall is distinguished for its walks and beautiful scenery.

STAFFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of BARWICK, union of YEovil, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Yeovil; containing 321 inhabitants.

STAFFORD, a borough and market-town, consisting of the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Chad, and the head of a union, locally in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 10,730 inhabitants, of whom 9245 are in the borough, 136 miles (N. W.) from London, on the road to Chester. This town, which is of great antiquity, was originally called Stadford or Stadford, from the Saxon Stade, signifying a place on a river, and from the trajectus or ford across the Sow, on which it is situated. It is said to have been, in 705, the devotional retirement of St. Bertelin, the son of a Mercian king, upon whose expulsion from his hermitage, at a spot called Bertelney, and Betheney, meaning the island of Bertelin, several houses were built, which formed the origin of the present town. In 913, Ethelfleda, Countess of Mercia, erected a castle on the north side of the river, and surrounded the town with walls and a fosse, of which the only remains are one side of a groove for a portcullis, at the entrance to Eastgate-street. Edward the Elder, brother of Ethelfleda, about a year after the erection of the castle, built a tower, the site of which Mr. Pennant supposes to have been the mount called by Speed Castle hill. From this period to the Conquest, the town appears to have increased considerably in extent and importance, and though it had not received any charter of incorporation, it is, in Domesday book, called a city, in which the king had eighteen burgesses in demesne, and the earls of Mercia twenty mansions. William, out of all the manors in the county, reserved this only for himself, and built a castle to keep the barons in subjection, appointing as governor Robert de Toeni, the progenitor of the house of Stafford, on whom he bestowed all the other manors, with the title of Baron de Stafford. The castle, after having been rebuilt by Ralph de Stafford, a celebrated warrior in the reign of Edward III., remained till the civil war in the time of Charles, when it was garrisoned by the royal forces under the Earl of Northampton, but was at length taken by the troops under the command of Sir William Brereton, and subsequently demolished by order of the parliament. The remains consisted chiefly of the keep, and were situated on the summit of a lofty eminence, about a mile and a half to the south-west of the town; the walls were eight feet thick, and at each angle was an octagonal turret, with a tower similarly shaped on the south-west side. About fifty years since, the only visible remains were part of a wall, which the late Sir William Jerningham underbuilt, to prevent it from falling; in doing which it was discovered that the basement story lay buried under the ruins of the upper parts. Sir George Jerningham (now Lord Stafford) afterwards began to rebuild the castle on the old foundation, but has completed only the south front, flanked with two round towers, in which are deposited some ancient armour and other curiosities.

Arms.

The town is pleasantly situated on the north side of the Sow, about six miles distant from its confluence with the Trent; the entrance from the London road is by a neat bridge over the river, near which was one of the ancient gates. The houses are in general well built of brick, and roofed with slate, and many of them are of modern erection; the streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. There is a theatre; assemblies are held in a suite of rooms in the town-hall, and races take place in September on Marston-field. The environs are pleasant, abounding with noble mansions and elegant villas. The principal branch of manufacture is that of shoes and boots for the London market, and for exportation; the tanning of leather is carried on to a considerable extent; and Stafford, in common with the neighbourhood, is noted for the quality of its ale. The river Penk joins the Sow near Rutford bridge, an elegant structure of three arches, nearly a mile distant; the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal passes near the town, and one of the principal stations on the Grand Junction railway is situated here. The market is on Saturday; and fairs are held on April 5th, May 14th, June 25th, October 3rd, and December 5th.

The inhabitants first received a regular charter of incorporation in the fourth year of the reign of John, confirming all privileges previously enjoyed; but after various additions in subsequent reigns, it became forfeited in 1826, by the common council neglecting to fill up vacancies; and, on petition, a new charter was granted by George IV., in 1827.

Corporation Seal.

The corporation, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76, now consists of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; the number of magistrates is nine; the borough is divided into two wards, and the municipal and parliamentary boundaries are co-extensive, comprising an area of 600 acres. The town first exercised the elective franchise in the 23rd of Edward I., since which time it has regularly returned two members to parliament: the mayor is returning officer. Petty-sessions take place weekly; and the corporation have power to hold quarterly courts of session within the borough, for all offences not capital; but they transfer to the judges travelling the circuit all causes requiring the decision of a jury. The assizes and sessions for the county, which had previously been held here, were restored by Queen Elizabeth, the inhabitants having represented to her, on visiting the town, in 1575, that to their removal its decay at that time was, among other causes, to be attributed. The county-hall is a handsome modern building of stone, in the centre of the High-street, and occupying nearly the whole of one side of a spacious square, appropriated as a market-place, over part of which is a room for 1000 stand of arms, for the Staffordshire militia: towards its erection the corporation contributed £1050. It is 120 feet in length, ornamented in the front with finely-sculptured figures of Justice and Peace, and contains several good apartments, with an assembly-room in the centre, elegantly fitted up, and extending nearly the whole length. The county gaol and house of correction is a substantial edifice.

The living of St. Mary's is a rectory not in charge, in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £340. The church, formerly collegiate for a dean and thirteen prebendaries, is an ancient and spacious cruciform structure in the early English style, with a lofty octagonal tower rising from the intersection, the upper part of which is of later date; the north entrance is richly adorned with delicate shafts and bold hollows embellished with flowers and foliage. The interior is beautifully arranged; the piers and arches are of the early English, passing into the decorated style, and to the east of the transepts diminish gradually in height; the windows are generally in the decorated style, though intermixed with others of the later English, of which the east window is an elegant specimen. The chancel is spacious, and the roof is supported on finely-pointed arches, and piers of clustered columns; in the north transept is a font of great beauty, highly ornamented with sculptured figures and animals; there are also many ancient and modern monuments, among which the most conspicuous are those of the family of Aston, of Tixall. The church has recently undergone a thorough course of external and internal restoration, at an expense of nearly £10,000, of which £5000 were the gift of Jesse Watts Russell, Esq., of Ilam Hall, and £4000 were raised by subscription, under the auspices of the Rev. W. E. Coldwell, the rector. The living of St. Chad's is a perpetual curacy; net income, £85; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Prees in the Cathedral of Lichfield. The church is a small edifice, originally in the Norman style, with a tower of the later English, between the chancel and nave; the chancel is still in good preservation, and, with the exception of a modern east window, retains its original character; but the nave is of more recent date. A church of which the first stone was laid by the Earl of Harrowby, in November, 1837, has been endowed with £1300, vested in the three and a half per cent. consols., by the present rector, in whom and his representatives the patronage is vested; it is a neat structure, containing 600 sittings, of which 300 are free. Churches have likewise been erected in the hamlets of Marston and Whitgreave, in the parish of St. Mary, the livings of which are perpetual curacies; patron, the Rector. There are places of worship for Presbyterians, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans of the Old and New Connexion; also a Roman Catholic chapel in that part of the environs called Forebridge, a small handsome edifice, erected by the late Edward Jerningham, Esq., and containing several ancient oak stalls removed from Lichfield cathedral.

The free grammar school, which, according to Leland, was originally established by "Sir Thomas, Countre Parson of Ingestre by Heywodde, and Syr Randol, a chauntre preste of Stafford," and further endowed with subsequent benefactions, was, on petition of the inhabitants, refounded by Edward VI., who augmented the revenue, in 1550; the income is now about £350 per annum. An institution for the relief of the widows and orphans of poor clergymen of the county is supported by subscription, and has also an income arising from property vested in old South Sea stock. A county infirmary, or hospital, was established in 1766, and the present building erected in 1772. A county general lunatic asylum was instituted in the year 1818, for patients from all parts of the kingdom, upon moderate terms, regulated according to their circumstances; the buildings, erected at a cost of £30,524, are capable of accommodating 212 inmates, and the gardens and pleasure-grounds comprise 30 acres. Almshouses for twelve aged and infirm persons were erected in 1640, by Sir Martin Noel, at an expense of £1000, and twenty families reside in them. The poor law union of Stafford comprises 20 parishes or places, and contains a population of 20,293. A priory of Black canons was founded by Richard Peche, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, in 1181, and dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket, the revenue of which at the Dissolution was £198. 0. 9.; a small portion of the buildings remains, now converted into a farm-house, about two miles east of the town. A house of Friars Eremites, of the order of St. Augustine, was established in the suburb of Forebridge, by Ralph, Lord Stafford, to which, on the abolition of the priory of Stone, the monuments of the family were removed; it continued till the suppression, at which time these splendid memorials were destroyed. A priory of Franciscan friars was instituted at the north end of the town walls by Sir James Stafford, of Sandon, in the reign of Edward I., the income of which at the Dissolution was £35. 13. 10.; and in addition to these were, a free chapel in the castle, dedicated to St. Nicholas; the free chapel, or hospital, of St. John, near the river, in Forebridge, for a master and poor brethren, the revenue of which was £10; and a free chapel dedicated to St. Leonard, of which the income was £4. 12. 4. Several silver coins, of a later date than the reign of Edward VI., a silver cross, the lower portion of an ancient font or piscina, a cannon-ball, and two small mill-stones, were found on repairing the walls of the castle, some few years since. Among eminent natives have been, John de Stafford, a Franciscan monk; Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter, and chancellor of England, in the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV.; Thomas Ashebourn, a strenuous opponent of Wycliffe; Thomas Fitz-Herbert, a learned Roman Catholic divine of the 16th and 17th centuries, and principal of the English College at Rome; and Izaak Walton, the well-known author of the treatise on the art of angling. Stafford gives the title of Baron to the family of Jerningham.

STAFFORD, WEST, a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of CULLIFORD-TREE, Dorchester division of the county of DORSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Dorchester; containing 212 inhabitants. It is situated on the southern branch of the river Frome. The living is a rectory, with that of Frome-Billet united, valued in the king's books at £10. 8. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of John Floyer, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £265, and the glebe comprises 39 acres. The church, according to the date 1640 over the porch, seems to have been rebuilt in that year. Frome-Billet was once a parish, but the church having been destroyed, and the place becoming almost depopulated, the living was united, about the middle of the 15th century, to that of West Stafford; it contains an ancient mansion, which formerly belonged to the family of Gould, now the property of Mr. Floyer.

STAFFORDSHIRE, an inland county, bounded on the north and north-west by Cheshire, on the west by Salop, on the south by Worcestershire and a detached part of Salop, on the south-east by Warwickshire, and on the east and north-east by a small projecting portion of the county of Leicester, and by Derbyshire. It extends from $52^{\circ} 23'$ to $53^{\circ} 14'$ (N. Lat.), and from $1^{\circ} 33'$ to $2^{\circ} 22'$ (W. Lon.), and includes an area of 1148 square miles, or 734,720 statute acres: within its limits are 97,777 houses inhabited, 5458 uninhabited, and 904 in course of erection; and the population amounts to 510,504, of which number 258,864 are males, and 251,640 females. Its ancient British inhabitants were the Cornavii, whose territory, on its subjection by the Romans, was included in the division called Flavia Casariensis. On the completion of the Anglo-Saxon heptarchy, it was comprised in the powerful kingdom of Mercia, several of the principal towns of which were situated within its limits. The county is in the diocese of Lichfield, and province of Canterbury, and forms an archdeaconry containing the deaneries of Tamworth, Tutbury, Lapley, Treizull, Alveton, Leek, Newcastle-under-Lyme, and Stone, with 146 parishes. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Cuttlestone East and West, Offlow North and South, Pirehill North and South, Seisdon North and South, and Totmonslow North and South; and contains the city of Lichfield; the borough and market towns of Newcastle-under-Lyme, Stafford, Tamworth, Stoke-upon-Trent, Walsall, and Wolverhampton, the three last recently enfranchised; and the market-towns of Burslem, Burton-upon-Trent, Cheadle, Eccleshall, Hanley, Lane-End, Leek, Longnor, Penkridge, Rugeley, Stone, Uttoxeter, and Wednesbury. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county has been formed into the Northern and Southern divisions, each sending two members to parliament; two representatives are returned for Lichfield, and two for each of the boroughs, except Walsall, which sends only one. The county is included in the Oxford circuit; and the assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Stafford.

Its SURFACE is various. The Northern part rises into hills, called the Moorlands, constituting the southern extremity of the long mountainous range which stretches hence through the north of Derbyshire, and along the western confines of Yorkshire, towards the borders of Scotland. These moorlands are to the north of a supposed line drawn from Uttoxeter to Newcastle-under-Lyme, and comprise extensive tracts of waste and uncultivated land, appropriated almost entirely to the pasturage of sheep. A large portion of them has been inclosed with stone walls, almost the only fence to be seen in this part; but the inclosures have not been subdivided, and large breadths have never undergone the least improvement. The pleasant vale in which is situated the town of Cheadle, in this part of the county, is bounded, in the vicinity of that town, by high barren hills, composed of huge heaps of gravel: the wastes upon these hills, and others equally dreary and barren, extending both northward and westward of Cheadle, are extensive, and almost their only produce is heath, broom, whortleberries, and mountain cinquefoil. Eastward of this town also, approaching the borders of Derbyshire, are similar desolate wastes, one of which, near the banks of the Dove, is called Oak-moor, from its being nearly covered with dwarf oaks. A little to the north of this commences a large tract of limestone country, included between the rivers Dove and Churnet, extending westward as far as Ipstones, and northward as far as Longnor, and comprising an area of 50 or 60 square miles. This is the most valuable part of the moorlands, the soil naturally producing a fine herbage. Many of the hills here, which are composed of immense masses of limestone, rise to a great height, and in various places present huge perpendicular cliffs. The Weaver hills, in the southern part of the district, of very considerable extent, rise, in common with some other of the highest peaks of the moorlands, to an elevation of 1000 feet and upwards above the tide in the Thames at Brentford, and command remarkably extensive views, in which are included the Peak hills of Derbyshire; these are almost covered with irregular excrescences, clothed with moss or lichens. Many other parts of the moorlands, notwithstanding their great superiority of elevation, are entirely wet peat moors, or moss; such are Morrage, Axedge, the Cloud heath, High Forest, Leek Frith, and Mole Cop.

The Middle and Southern parts of the county are level, or diversified only by gently rising eminences. The following tracts, however, are exceptions to this observation, viz., the limestone hills of Dudley and Sedgley; the parish of Rowley-Regis, principally composed of an isolated mountain terminating in various peaks, the loftiest of them, called Turner's Hill, being the highest spot of ground in the south of Staffordshire, rising 900 feet above high water in the Thames at Brentford; the hills of Clent, in the detached portion of the county lying to the south of Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, and nearly equal in height to those of Rowley; Barbeacon, rising 653 feet, and many others of less elevation. The quantity of land in the county devoted to AGRICULTURAL purposes is estimated at 600,000 acres, of which 500,000 are arable, the rest meadow or pasture. Of the arable lands, 200,000 acres are of the clayey, or of the more friable of the mixed loams; an equal quantity is of gravelly or sandy loam, or of the calcareous soils, and the remaining 100,000 acres are, for the most part, of light sandy or gravelly loams, suitable for turnips. The courses of crops are various: it may be observed, however, that the Norfolk system, including the rotation of turnips, barley, clover, and wheat, is in common practice on the light soils. The crops of grain and pulse usually grown are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas. On the moorlands oats are almost the only grain ever cultivated, and are generally sown for three succeeding years, after which the ground is laid down for grass: a considerable quantity of oaten bread is eaten in the moorlands. Buck-wheat, here called French wheat, is sometimes cultivated, both as a crop and for ploughing under as manure. Hemp and flax are also grown, though upon a small scale; and many leases are subject to restrictions, to prevent the cultivation of these plants to any great extent. The common artificial grasses are red clover, white clover, trefoil, and rye-grass; burnet and rib-grass are also sown in considerable quantities. In the parish of Tettehall, near Wolverhampton, great quantities of a peculiar kind of pear, called from the name of the place where it is produced, are grown.

The Woods, wastes, and impracticable lands, are supposed to occupy upwards of 100,000 acres. The county is well stocked with almost every species of thriving English timber, growing on the numerous estates of the nobility and gentry. Plantations to a great extent have been made on various parts of the steep moorland hills, particularly those of Dilhorne, Kingsley, and Oakmoor: from the underwood of these, many rods and staves, to make crates for the use of the potteries, are cut. Needwood Forest, in the eastern part of the county, situated between the rivers Trent and Dove, before the passing of an act of inclosure about the commencement of the present century, was an entirely wild tract of nearly 10,000 acres, presenting much romantic and beautiful scenery, and affording pasturage to numerous herds of deer: it was also subject to a common right for cattle and horses. Of the wastes at present remaining, Cannock Heath is by far the most extensive, containing upwards of 25,000 acres, near the centre of the county, and chiefly to the north and east of the small town of Cannock. Although now a bleak and dreary tract, entirely devoid of trees, it is asserted to have been covered in former times with a profusion of majestic oaks, and to have been a favourite chase of the Saxon monarchs of Mercia.

The MINERAL PRODUCTIONS are numerous and valuable, consisting chiefly of coal, iron, lead, copper, marble, gypsum, and stone of various kinds. The coal strata occupy an area of more than 75,000 square acres; the most extensive deposit is in the southern part of the county, and extends in length from about one mile south of Rugeley to Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, a distance of 22 miles, while its breadth in some places is not much less than 9 miles. In its southern part, at various depths below the surface, is found the thick coal, or ten-yard stratum, beneath which are valuable beds of iron-stone, the clay iron-ore of mineralogists. The whole of the beds of coal, iron-stone, sandstone, and shale in this district have suffered much dislocation from the action of volcanic rocks, which are found to occupy large areas underneath the surface, and to protrude through and form hills of basaltic rock of greater or less elevation at Rowley-Regis, Barrow Hill, and Powk Hill. The base rock of this coal-field is a limestone, known by its peculiar fossils to belong to the Wenlock formation of geologists; it rises to the surface in a ridge of hills from Dudley, in Worcestershire, to Sedgley, again round the town of Walsall, and in isolated patches in other places. In the north of the county coal and iron-stone are also raised in abundance, in the neighbourhood of Newcastle and the Potteries, near Lane-End and Hollybush, and in the vicinity of Cheadle and Dilhorne. In the numerous mines of coal and iron, and in the foundries, blast-furnaces, slitting-mills, and other iron manufactories, an immense number of workmen are employed; and the works on the banks of the Birmingham canal are particularly numerous and extensive. The other metallic ores obtained are those of copper and lead, of both which considerable quantities are raised at Ecton, near Warslow, approaching the north-eastern border of the county: a copper-mine is also worked at Mixon, within a few miles of Leek; and a lead-mine near Stanton Moor, in the same part of the county. Limestone forms the substratum of a very great part of the country already described: an immense quantity of it is raised for burning into lime; and the limeworks on Caldon Low, and in the neighbourhood of the Weaver hills, are particularly extensive. The limestone, in different places, has some of the qualities of marble, and is susceptible of a high polish; in others it is composed, in a great measure, of petrified animal remains. The kind of marble called rance-marble, which is white, with red veins formed of shining gritty particles, and takes so good a polish as to be frequently used for chimney-pieces and monuments, is found in great abundance in Yelpersley Tor and the adjoining hills: there is a considerable quantity of grey marble at Stansop. In the great limestone district, particularly on the banks of the river Dove, are some veins of gypsum, which is also dug between Needwood Forest and Tutbury; and many of the moulds used in the potteries are composed of this material, after it has been burned and ground. Extensive quarries of excellent freestone are numerous; clays of almost every description are found, and potters'-clay, of several sorts, abounds chiefly in the vicinity of Newcastle, in which district the pottery wares were formerly manufactured from it. At Amblecoat, in the southern part of the county, is a clay of a dark bluish colour, of which glass-house pots of a superior quality are made. Yellow and red ochre are also found; and a blue clay, obtained at Darlaston, near Wednesbury, is used by glovers. A kind of black chalk exists in beds of grey marble, in Langley-close; and a fine reddish earth, little inferior to the red chalk of France, is obtained near Himley Hall.

The MANUFACTURES are various and extensive: that of hardware, in the southern district, is very important, and affords employment to many thousand persons. At Wolverhampton, and in its vicinity, are made locks of every kind, edge-tools, files, augers, japanned goods, and a great variety of other articles of the same material. The town and neighbourhood of Walsall are famous for the manufacture of saddlers' ironmongery, such as bridle-bits, stirrup-irons, spurs, &c., sent thence to every part of the kingdom. The making of nails employs many thousand persons in some of the most populous parishes in this part of the county, particularly in those of Sedgley, Rowley, West Bromwich, Smethwick, Tipton, Wombourne, and Pelsall, and in the Foreign of Walsall; and many women and children are employed in making the lighter and finer sorts. The other kinds of hardware produced are chiefly plated, lackered, japanned, and some enamelled goods, toys, tobacco and snuff-boxes, of iron and steel; and machinery for steam-engines. Some places also partake of the manufacture of guns; and there are several works for making brass, and for preparing tin plates, chiefly in the northern part of the county. In those parts of Staffordshire situated in the vicinity of Stourbridge and Dudley, in Worcestershire, are a number of large glass-houses, where the manufacture is carried on to a great extent. The manufacture of china and earthenware, in the north-western part of the county, is the most extensive and important in the kingdom: the district called the Potteries consists of numerous scattered villages occupying an extent of about ten square miles, and containing about 20,000 inhabitants. This manufacture, though of very ancient establishment in this part of the country, was of inferior importance until the latter part of the eighteenth century, when, chiefly by the exertions of the late Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., it was raised to such a pitch of excellence, as confers great honour upon that gentleman's ingenuity and taste; and, in consequence, several of the villages of this district, particularly Burslem and Hanley, have grown rapidly into populous market-towns. The several species of ware invented by Mr. Wedgwood, varied by the industry and ingenuity of the manufacturers into an infinity of forms, and differently painted and embellished, constitute nearly the whole of the fine earthenwares at present manufactured in England, which are the object of a very extensive traffic. Notwithstanding that almost every part of the kingdom receives supplies of pottery from this district, yet by far the greater portion of its produce is exported to foreign countries; and the exports of earthenware and china to the United States alone amount to 60,000 packages annually. The quantity of wool manufactured is small, nearly the whole of the produce of the county being sold to the clothing and hosiery districts. The cotton manufacture is considerable; and the works at Rochester and other places near the Dove are on a large scale, as are also those at Fazeley and Tutbury. The town of Leek and its neighbourhood have a considerable manufacture of silk and mohair, the articles being chiefly sewing-silk, twist, buttons, ribbons, ferrets, shawls, and handkerchiefs. Tape is manufactured at Cheadle and Tean, affording employment to many of their inhabitants. Stafford has manufactures of shoes and boots, for exportation and home consumption; and tanning and hat-making are carried on to a great extent in several of the towns. This county is also celebrated for its ale, particularly that made at Burton.

The principal Rivers are the Trent, the Dove, the Tame, the Blythe, the Penk, and the Sow: the Severn also, though not considered a Staffordshire river, takes its navigable course by the parish of Upper Arelly, at the south-western extremity of the county. The Trent, which ranks as the third largest river in England, becomes navigable at Burton, a little below which, being joined by the Dove, it enters Derbyshire; after a course, through this county and bordering upon it, of upwards of 50 miles. The Dove, which, throughout its course, forms the boundary between this county and that of Derby, not far from its source enters the beautiful and sequestered Dove-dale, flowing through it in a southerly direction, to the vicinity of Ashbourn, in Derbyshire, whence it proceeds south-westward towards Uttoxeter, near which town it assumes a south-easterly direction, by Tutbury, to its junction with the Trent to the north-east of Burton. From the great inclination of the bed of this river, its water flows with great rapidity, in some places dashing over rugged masses of rock, in others forming gentle cascades. Near the village of Ilam, in this county, the Dove is greatly augmented by the waters of the rivers Manifold and Hamps: the former, rising near the source of the Dove, takes a very circuitous route through a romantic vale situated in the north-eastern part of the county, and, sinking into the earth to the south of Ecton Hill, between the villages of Butterton and Wetton, emerges again at Ilam, shortly before its junction with the Dove, and at the distance of about four miles from the spot where it sinks into the ground. The stream is joined during its subterraneous transit by the Hamps, which in like manner passes under ground for a considerable distance.

The extent of ARTIFICIAL NAVIGATION for the ready transport of the produce of the mines, manufactures, &c., is remarkably great. The Grand Trunk canal, which was planned, and in a great measure executed, by the celebrated engineer Brindley, enters this county from Cheshire, near Lawton, and almost immediately passes through the Harecastle tunnel, which is 2880 yards long; the highest level of the canal is at Harecastle, from which, on the south-eastern side, there is a fall of 316 feet. The Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal branches from this at Haywood, near the confluence of the rivers Sow and Trent, and quits the county, in its course to the Severn, a short distance to the south of Kinver: this canal, with the Grand Trunk, completes the communication between the ports of Bristol, Liverpool, and Hull. The Coventry and Oxford canal branches from the Grand Trunk at Eradley Heath, and near Fazeley enters Warwickshire; from Fazeley a branch proceeds to Birmingham, and is called the Birmingham and Fazeley canal. The Wyrley and Essington canal, commencing at a place called Wyrley Bank, forms a junction with the Birmingham canal a little beyond the village of Wednesfield, near Wolverhampton; its branches are, one from the vicinity of Wolverhampton to Stow Heath, another from Pool-Hayes to Ashmore Park, and a third from Lapley-Hayes to Ashmore Park. At Huddlesford commences a branch from the Coventry canal, called the Wyrley and Essington Extension, which forms a junction with the Wyrley and Essington line near Bloxwich; on the western side of Cannock Heath a branch is carried southward, by Walsall Wood, to the limeworks at Hayhead. Its whole extent, including the branches, is $34\frac{1}{2}$ miles; and from Cannock Heath to the Coventry canal it has a fall of 264 feet. The Birmingham canal, from that town in Warwickshire, joins the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal a little to the north of Wolverhampton, after a course of 22 miles. Of the very numerous branches of this canal, one proceeds northward, over Ryder's Green, to the collieries of Wednesbury, and the vicinity of Walsall; and another, beginning about a mile from Dudley, passes south-westward by Brierly Hill, and to the left of Brockmore Green joins a canal which, commencing in a large reservoir at Pensett's Chase, and passing nearly in a straight line by Wordsley, crosses the river Stour, and joins the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, a few miles to the west of Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, to which town there is a small branch. The cut which connects the Dudley canal with that of Birmingham, called the Dudley Extension canal, has part of its course in this county. Sir Nigel Gresley's canal extends from the Grand Trunk, near Newcastle-under-Lyme, past that town, to the coal-mines in Apedale. The Grand Junction railway enters the county a little to the north-west of Birmingham, and passing by Wednesbury, Penkridge, and Stafford, quits it to the north-west of Madeley. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway, also, crosses an angle of the county, on its eastern side.

Several large single stones at Cannock are supposed to be Druidical, as also are the eight upright stones, called the Bridestones, near Biddulph, on the north-western boundary of the county; and on Drood, or Druid heath, where are several singular earthworks, Mr. Shaw, the historian of the county, considers the chief seat of the Arch-Druid of Britain to have been situated. Thyrsis, or Thor's house, a cavern in the side of a lofty precipice in the vale of the Manifold, near the village of Wetton, is also thought to have been the scene of Druidical rites. Some very ancient artificial caves have been discovered at Biddulph. The encampment of Billington, about three miles to the west of Stafford, and that on Castle hill, near Beaudesert park, in the vicinity of Rugeley, are of ancient British formation. Under the Roman dominion, the tract now constituting Staffordshire contained the stations of Etocetum, at Wall, near Lichfield; and Pennocrucium, now Penkridge. Sheriff-Hales, near the confines of Shropshire, is supposed by some antiquaries to have been the site of the station Uxacona, or Usacona. Two of the great pretorian ways also crossed Staffordshire: the Watling-street, entering it from Warwickshire, near Tamworth, proceeded westward across the southern part, and quitted it for Shropshire, to the west of the town of Brewood: the Ikeneld-street, which entered from Warwickshire, at the village of Handsworth, near Birmingham, proceeded thence, in a north-north-easterly direction, to a little beyond Shensstone, where it crossed the Watling-street, and afterwards pursued a north-easterly course, entering Derbyshire at Monks' Bridge, on the Dove. Roman domestic remains, and traces of their roads, are discoverable in different places; and Roman earthworks are visible at Arelly wood, Ashton heath, Ashwood heath, near Kinver at Oldbury, near Shareshill, and in Tiddesley park. Near Maer are intrenchments supposed to have been thrown up by Cenred, in the progress of his hostilities against Osred, King of Northumbria; and on Sutton-Coldfield is a camp, considered to be of Danish formation. The number of Religious houses in the county, including free chapels, hospitals, and colleges, was about 40; and remains of the abbeys of Burton and Croxden, and of the priories of Rowton, Stafford, and Stone, are still visible. The remains of ancient castles are chiefly those of Alveton, Caverswall, Chartley, Dudley, Healy or Heyley Castle, Tamworth, and Tutbury; and among the most remarkable ancient mansions are Bentley Hall and Moseley Hall, in both which Charles II. remained con-ceased for some time after the battle of Worcester. Staffordshire contains numerous modern seats of the nobility and gentry, many of which are elegant, and several magnificent; and among the most distinguished are, Trentham, the property and residence of the Duke of Sutherland; and Beaudesert, that of the Marquess of Anglesey. Salt springs exist in different places, the principal in the parish of Weston; and there are other mineral springs of various qualities, the most remarkable of which are, that near Codsall, formerly famous for the cure of leprosy; St. Erasmus' well, between Ingestrie and Stafford; and that at Willoughby. Numerous fossil remains occur in various parts of the strata of the county, more particularly in some of the limestone beds. At Bradley, to the east of Wolverhampton, a stratum of coal, about four feet thick, and eight or ten yards below the surface, having been set on fire, burned for about fifty years, and has reduced a considerable extent of land to a complete calx, used for the mending of roads: sulphur and alum are found in its vicinity. The county gives the inferior title of Marquess to the family of Leveson-Gower, dukes of Sutherland.

STAGBATCH, a hamlet, in the parish and union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HERFORD, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Leominster; containing 37 inhabitants.

STAGSDEN (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Bedford; containing 632 inhabitants. It comprises about 3386 acres, of which 220 are arable, 1100 meadow and pasture, and about 80 woodland; the soil is chiefly clay, producing good wheat; the timber is oak and elm, with plantations of fir. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; patron, the Hon. G. R. Trevor; impropiators, the Master, Fellows, and Scholars of Trinity College, Cambridge. The great tithes have been commuted for £558, and the vicarial for £350, and the glebe comprises 2 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with an embattled tower. A school is endowed with £6 per annum.

STAIN, a hamlet, in the parish of WITHERN, union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, containing 14 inhabitants.

STAINBROUGH, a township, in the parish of SILKSTONE, wapentake of STAINCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (S. W.) from Barnsley; containing 482 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1700 acres, chiefly the property of Thomas Frederick Vernon Wentworth, Esq., lord of the manor. Wentworth Castle, situated here, now the seat of Mr. Wentworth, was erected in 1730, by Thomas Wentworth, third Earl of Strafford, on the death of whose son, in 1791, the earldom passed to his cousin, and, after his decease in 1799, became extinct, when the estates descended to the Vernon family, who assumed the name of Wentworth. The castle is a magnificent structure, chiefly in the Grecian style, and contains many elegant and stately apartments, and a gallery 180 feet in length and 24 wide, divided into three compartments by a double range of marble pillars with gilt capitals. In the area of the quadrangle is a marble statue of Thomas, the third Earl of Strafford, by Rysbrach; and near the south lodge is a fine stone column, surmounted by a female figure, and dedicated in 1744 to John, Duke of Argyle and Greenwich, who had died the preceding year: the park is well stocked with deer, and richly wooded, and on the east side of the grounds is a serpentine canal, over which is a handsome stone bridge. There is a large colliery carried on in the township by Messrs. Cooper and Company. A neat small chapel was erected in 1841, at the expense of Mr. Wentworth, who presents to the living, a donative; and there is a school for children of both sexes, with a small endowment.

STAINBURN, a township, in the parish of WORKINGTON, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward above Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 1 mile (E.) from Workington; containing 179 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land in 1812. Here was formerly an oratory, subordinate to the priory of St. Bees.

STAINBURN, a chapelry, in the parish of KIRKBY-OVERBLOWS, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Otley; containing 248 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2900 acres of land in good cultivation, the property of F. H. Fawkes, Esq., lord of the manor: the village consists chiefly of scattered houses, and the township also includes the small hamlets of Braythorne and Moorside. The chapel is a neat edifice in the Norman style, with narrow windows: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £58; patron, the Rector of Kirkby-Overblows. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1776. There are some trifling bequests for the poor.

STAINBY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KEST-EVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (W.) from Colsterworth; containing 190 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by the river Witham, comprises 1390 acres, according to survey; the soil is various, but well adapted for grain, and the substratum is partly red-stone rock, and partly freestone, which latter, though now little used, is said to have supplied the materials for building many of the beautiful churches in the fenny district. The village is on the south-western border of the county. The living is a rectory, with which that of Gunby was consolidated in 1773, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8.; net income, £466; patron, the Earl of Harborough. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773; the glebe comprises 256 acres, with a house. The church was neatly rebuilt in 1805, at the expense of the late earl. Near the river are the remains of a Roman villa, where a sudatory, tessellated pavements of ordinary character, and pieces of leaden pipes and tiles, have been found; and near the village is an ancient fortification with some outworks, now called Tower Hill, but no record of it is extant, nor are any traces of masonry discernible. In the western portion of the parish are two tumuli, not far distant from each other, and supposed to be the graves of some slaughtered Danes.

STAINDROP (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; comprising the townships of Hilton, Ingleton, Langleydale with Shotton, Raby with Keeverstone, Staindrop, and Wackerfield; and containing 2436 inhabitants, of whom 1399 are in Staindrop township, 11 miles (W. N. W.) from Darlington, and 244 (N. N. W.) from London. This place, formerly called also Stainthorp, or the stony town, is of great antiquity, and was granted by King Canute, who had a mansion at Raby, to the monastery at Durham. It is pleasantly situated on the road from Barnard-Castle to Bishop-Auckland, in a valley, and consists chiefly of one long well-built street. In the vicinity are very extensive works for smelting lead-ore. A market on Saturday, and fairs on the Vigil of St. Thomas the Martyr and two following days, were granted in 1378, by Bishop Hatfield, but after a time, fell into disuse; the market, however, has been revived, and is well supplied with provisions. The magistrates hold petty-sessions every alternate Saturday; and a court leet and court baron for the lordship of Raby take place at Michaelmas by the lord of the manor, when constables are sworn in at the former, and debts under 40s. are recoverable at the latter. The parish comprises about 14,000 acres. Staindrop Hall is the seat of R. G. Hubback, Esq.; and the Rev. J. W. D. Merest, John Trotter, Esq., John Lort Phillips, Esq., and William Hodgson, Esq., have good houses here. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Cockfield; proprietor, the Duke of Cleveland. The church, formerly collegiate, is a handsome structure, exhibiting portions in the early, decorated, and later English styles, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and contains some ancient monuments to the Neville family. There are places of worship for the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans; and schools are supported by subscription. A collegiate establishment was founded here in the reign of Henry IV., by Ralph Neville, Earl of Westmoreland, in honour of the Virgin Mary, for a master, six priests, six clerks, six decayed gentlemen, six poor officers, and other men; its revenue, at the Dissolution, was £170. 4. 6.

STAINES (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 10 miles (W. S. W.) from Brentford, and 17 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 2487 inhabitants. This place has by some been thought to derive its name from a Roman milliarium, said to have been fixed here; and the traces of a Roman road pointing towards Staines' bridge, mentioned by Dr. Stukeley, who also describes the town as having been surrounded by a ditch, may strengthen this conjecture. But the more general opinion is, that its appellation is derived from a stone which, standing on the bank of the Thames near it, marks the extent of the jurisdiction of the lord mayor of London, as conservator of the river; the stone bears date 1285, and was raised upon a pedestal, erected upon the spot where it originally stood, in 1781. In 1009, an army of Danes, after having burned the city of Oxford, learning that troops were on the march from London in pursuit of them, retreated to their ships, and crossed the river at this place. The town, which has been much improved of late, consists principally of one wide street, containing several good houses, terminating at the river, across which was formerly an iron bridge of one arch; but this being considered unsafe, a handsome stone bridge has been erected, which was opened in 1832, and a new street made in a line with it. The town is lighted with gas from works situated on the opposite bank of the river, on the road to Egham. A building was erected near the bridge in 1835, for a literary and scientific institution. The market is on Friday; the market-house is a small edifice surmounted by a spire. There are fairs on May 11th and September 19th. The parish comprises 1822a. 2r. 21p., of which about 700 acres are arable, 600 meadow and pasture, and 454 common or waste. The living is a vicarage, with Laleham and Ashford annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £425; improvers, the family of Coussmaker. Attached to the vicarage are 59 acres of glebe in this parish, 16 in Laleham, and 26 in Ashford. The church is a neat structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and north and south aisles, rebuilt in 1828, and a square embattled tower of brick, erected by Inigo Jones in 1631, and in 1829 raised twelve feet and surmounted with a battlement of stone, crowned by pinnacles. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Independents. The poor law union of Staines comprises thirteen parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,216. Duncroft House, in which King John is said to have slept the night after he had signed Magna Charta on the neighbouring plain of Runymede, is in the parish. A forest anciently extended from Staines to Hounslow, but part of it has been inclosed.

STAINFIELD, a chapelry, in the parish of HACCONBY, union of BOURNE, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3½ miles (N. N. W.) from Bourne.

STAINFIELD, a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Wragby; containing 154 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2097 acres, of which 275 are wood, and the remainder arable and pasture; the soil is tolerably fertile, the surface flat, and a portion fenny land. There are some remains of the ancient mansion of the Tyrwhitt family, now occupied as a farm-house. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £71; patron and improver, T. T. Drake, Esq. A priory of Benedictine nuns was founded here in the reign of Henry II., by Henry Percy, and at the Dissolution possessed a revenue of £112. 5.

STAINFORTH, a township, in the parish of GIGLESWICK, union of SETTLE, wapentake of STAINCLIFFE WEST, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (N.) from Settle; containing 261 inhabitants. A considerable part of the lands here belonged to Sawley Abbey, and at the Dissolution was granted to Sir Arthur D'Arey. The township including Great and Little Stainforth, comprises about 3480 acres, in pasture, divided among various proprietors, subject to small quit-rents payable to Pudsey Dawson, Esq., of Hornby Castle. The village of Great Stainforth is beautifully situated in the fertile valley of Ribblesdale, which abounds with romantic scenery; and between Great and Little Stainforth is a fine waterfall, formed by the Ribble in its passage over the limestone rock, a short distance above which an ancient bridge spans the river with one lofty arch, adding greatly to the effect. About a mile above Stainforth, on a brook which flows into the Ribble, is another fall of water, of very considerable elevation, embosomed in magnificent scenery, and called Catrig force, immediately from the foot of which the water again rushes down the precipitous rock, in several successive falls of varying height and character, the banks on either side being overhung with bold and broken rocks, interspersed with wood. There are some good houses in the village; and Taitlands, the residence of Thomas Redmayne, Esq., is a handsome mansion, commanding an extensive view of the valley. A district church was erected in 1841, by Mr. Dawson, at an expense of £2500, on a site purchased by subscription; it is in the Tudor style, with a square embattled tower, and contains 250 sittings, all free. The living is a perpetual curacy, endowed by subscription with £2100, and in the patronage of five Trustees.

STAINFORTH, a township, in the parish of HATFIELD, union of THORNE, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Thorne; containing 924 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 2355 acres, the property of H. B. Simpson, Esq., and some smaller proprietors. The village is pleasantly situated on the river Don, near its communication with the Stainforth and Keadby canal; and there are good bridges over the river and the canal, and a spacious quay for loading and unloading a considerable number of sloops that trade here, of which several belong to the inhabitants. The chapel of ease, an ancient edifice erected in the 14th century, was rebuilt in 1819, at an expense of £700, raised by subscription. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. Henry Travers, in 1706, bequeathed land now producing £15 per annum, for teaching children.

STAININGHALL.—See STANNINGHALL.

STAININGTON, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of ECCLESFIELD, union of WORTLEY, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Sheffield, on the road to Glossop; containing upwards of 2000 persons. This place comprises 5652 acres, and is chiefly a mountainous moorland district, on the north side of the river Rivelin, abounding, especially in the south and west portions, with game, which is strictly preserved. Revell Grange, the seat of Francis Wright, Esq., is a handsome mansion here. The neighbourhood contains coal of moderate quality, of which there are several mines in operation; and there are some quarries of good freestone for building. The village consists chiefly of scattered houses; the population is partly employed in the manufacture of clasp-knives and anvils, and in grinding cutlery. A fair for cattle is held on the first Monday in November. The church, erected in 1830, at an expense of £3500, by parliamentary grant, is a neat structure in the later English style, with a campanile turret, and contains 799 sittings, of which 348 are free: the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Ecclesfield, with a net income of £150, and a glebe-house erected in 1840. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Unitarians; and a national and infants' school is supported by subscription.

STAINLAND, a township, in the parish and union of HALIFAX, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Halifax; containing 3759 inhabitants. The township comprehends the two manors of Stainland and Old Lindley, the former the property of the Earl of Scarborough, and the latter belonging to the family of Thornhill, and comprises by computation 2335 acres, a considerable part of which was inclosed under an act of parliament, in 1807; the district abounds in variety of surface and scenery. The population is partly employed in the woollen, cotton, and worsted manufactures; and there are two mills for making pasteboard used in the woollen manufacture. Coal abounds in the township and vicinity, and three mines are at present in full operation; there are also some extensive quarries of freestone. Bradley Hall, here, the seat of the ancestors of the Earl of Mexborough, which was burnt down in 1629, and subsequently rebuilt, is now a farm-house. The village is situated on an eminence above the vale of Dean Head rivulet, commanding a pleasing view of the surrounding country; in the neighbourhood are several handsome mansions, and the Elland station on the Manchester and Leeds railway is distant only about two miles and a half. The chapel, dedicated to St. Andrew, originally erected in 1755, was rebuilt in 1840, as a district church, at an expense of £1800, of which £300 were granted by the Ripon Diocesan Society, and the remainder raised by subscription; it is in the Grecian style, with a tower, and the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Halifax, with a net income of £150. The vicarial tithes were commuted for land in 1816. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and a school in connexion with the Church is supported by subscription. James Gledhill bequeathed £100, of the interest of which he appropriated £2 to the incumbent, and the remainder to be distributed in linen to the poor. Roman tiles have been found at Slack, in the township; opposite to the chapel is an ancient cross, and there is a fine spring of water called St. Helen's Holy well, impregnated slightly with iron, and containing sulphuretted hydrogen and a free alkali.

STAINLEY, NORTH, with SLENINGFORD, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon; containing 441 inhabitants. This place, literally Stone-lea, or Stonelay, is situated on the south bank of the river Ure, and comprises by computation 4230 acres, of which the soil is fertile, the surface finely undulated, and the scenery picturesque. Bramley Grange farm, here, was not long since purchased as the site of an episcopal palace erected for the Bishop of Ripon. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £302. 0. 6., and the appropriate for £37. 12. 6., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. A neat chapel has been erected by subscription, and a day and Sunday school is supported.

STAINLEY, SOUTH, a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Ripley; containing 251 inhabitants. This place was formerly the property of Sir Solomon Swale, who, having suffered severely for his loyalty during the parliamentary war, was presented with the first baronetcy conferred after the Restoration. Sir Solomon, in those unsettled times, having neglected to sue out a renewal of the lease by which he held some property under the crown, a chancery clerk, noticing the omission, obtained it for himself, and involved the baronet in a litigation which, in a few years, ended in his becoming a prisoner in the king's bench, where he died of a broken heart; and Stanley Hall, the ancient family seat, is now a ruin. The parish, which is within the liberty of Knaresborough, comprises by measurement 2012a. 3r. 1p., whereof 1199 acres are arable, 750 meadow and pasture, and 61 woodland and plantations; the surface is undulated, and the scenery, which is enriched with wood, is in many parts beautifully picturesque; the soil is fertile, and the substratum abounds with limestone, which is extensively quarried and burnt into lime. The village is situated on the road from Leeds to Ripon, and the parish includes also the hamlet of Cayton. The living is a vicarage; net income, £75; patrons, R. Reynard and I. S. Browne, Esqrs. The church, a small ancient structure, partly Norman, and partly in the decorated English style, has been rebuilt in the early English style, at a cost of £700, contributed by the vicar, landowners, and other inhabitants. A parochial school for 20 children is supported by the vicar and J. Simpson, Esq., of Cayton Hall.

STAINMORE, a chapelry, in the parish of BROUGH, EAST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Brough; containing 611 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £119; patron, the Earl of Thanet. The chapel was erected as a school in 1594, consecrated for divine service in 1680, and repaired in 1699 by Thomas, Earl of Thanet, who built a house adjoining, in which about 30 children are instructed for an endowment of £30 per annum. At a place called Maiden Castle is a Roman fort, and there is another at Rere Cross, which, according to tradition, was erected in the first or second century, by Marius, a petty king of the Britons, in memory of a victory he had obtained there over the Picts.

STAINSBY, a hamlet, in the parish of AULT-HUCKNALL, union of MANSFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Chesterfield; containing 101 inhabitants.

STAINSBY, a hamlet, in the parish of ASHBY-PUEBORUM, union of HORNCASTLE, hundred of HILL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 24 inhabitants.

STAINSIKER, or STAINSAIRE, with [HAWSKER, a township, in the parish, union, and borough of WHITBY, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, N. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Whitby.

STAINTON, a township, in the parish of STANWIX, union of CARLISLE, CUMBERLAND ward, and E. division of CUMBERLAND, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. W.) from Carlisle; containing 69 inhabitants.

STAINTON, a township, in the parish of DACRE, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Penrith; containing 305 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1772.

STAINTON, with STREATLAM, a township, in the parish of GAINFORD, union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 373 inhabitants, of whom 112 are in the hamlet of Stainton. This place at an early period belonged to the Traynes, lords of Streatlam, and was acquired, by marriage with the heiress of Trayne, by Sir Adam Bowes. The estate afterwards became separated from the Streatlam property, but was re-united to it in 1526, when the Hedlam family assigned the lands to Sir William Bowes. About a century subsequently, however, a portion of Stainton was again detached, and so continued until the commencement of the present century, when the late Earl of Strathmore once more annexed Stainton to Streatlam. The village is small, and scattered on a high exposed site; the houses standing on the brink of large quarries of freestone, from which the materials for most of the buildings in the neighbourhood have been obtained. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £100, and the impropriate for £204. 13. 6.

STAINTON, a township, in the parish of URSWICK, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Dalton; containing 80 inhabitants.

STAINTON, a chapelry, in the parish of HEVERSHAM, union and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Kendal; containing 605 inhabitants, of whom 365 are in the township of Stainton, exclusively of that of Sedgwick. The chapelry, including Sedgwick, comprises about 2004 acres, of which 1910 are arable, 40 meadow, and 54 woodland: the Lancaster canal passes through. On a stream tributary to the Belo, are two mills for spinning flax, and a woollen-mill; and the manufacture of bobbin is also carried on. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £89; patron, Vicar of Heversham. The chapel, called Cross-Crake chapel, founded in the reign of Richard II., by Anselm de Furness, son of the first Michael le Fleming, was rebuilt in 1773, and had a burial-ground attached to it in 1823. There is a place of worship for Independents. At Helme are the remains of an encampment.

STAINTON, a township, in the parish of DOWNHOLME, union of RICHMOND, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Richmond; containing 47 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1840 acres, of which a moiety is uninclosed: the village is situated among the fells, about a mile southward of the river Swale.

STAINTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of STOCKTON, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Hemlington, Ingleby-Berwick, and Malby, the chapelry of Thornaby, and the town of South Stockton, 2256 inhabitants, of whom 391 are in the township of Stainton, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Stockton. The parish is in the district of Cleveland, and occupies an elevated site, commanding a view of the sea and the mouth of the river Tees; the soil is a loam resting upon clay, and there is a quarry of whinstone affording excellent materials for the roads. The township of Stainton, the most considerable division in the parish, comprises the manors of Stainton, Thornton, and Stainsby, respectively styled in Domesday book Steintun, Tornetun, and Stemaneshie: the most important owners of property, at various periods, appear to have been the families of De Brus, Thweng, Gower, and Pennyman. The living is a vicarage, with the chapelry of Thornaby annexed, valued in the king's books at £5. 14. 2.; net income, £270; patron and appropriator, the Archbishop of York. The church is an ancient structure with a square embattled tower; situated on an eminence, and was thoroughly repaired in 1810. Attached to the vicarage is a library of 344 volumes on divinity, bequeathed by the Rev. Richard Lumley, vicar from 1667 to 1676. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a parochial school, to which Mrs. Bourdon, in 1817, left £5. 5. per annum, is further supported by subscription.

STAINTON (St. WINIFRED), a parish, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W.) from Tickhill; containing 226 inhabitants. The parish, including the hamlet of Hellaby, comprises by computation 3050 acres; the surface is varied, and the substratum abounds with limestone of good quality, which is extensively quarried and burnt into lime. Hellaby Hall, an ancient mansion on the property of Sir R. J. Eden, is now a farm-house. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 15.; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Scarborough. The great tithes have been commuted for £51. 10., and the vicarial for £100; the glebe comprises 35 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and contains, at the extremity of the south aisle, a chapel called the Holm Choir, formerly belonging to the mansion of Holm Hall. Schools are supported in connexion with the Establishment.

STAINTON-BY-LANGWORTH (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGIE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (W.) from Wragby; containing, with the hamlets of Newbell and Reasby, 222 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 18. 4.; net income, £183; patron, the Earl of Scarborough, who, with Earl Manvers, is impropiator. The tithes were commuted for land in 1764.

STAINTON-DALE, a township, in the parish of SCALBY, union of SCARBOROUGH, PICKERING lythe, N. riding of YORK, 8½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Scarborough; containing 306 inhabitants. The township comprises about 2970 acres, of which the greater portion is a moorland tract, extending along the coast of the German Sea. The soil and manorial rights of the liberty and royalty belong to certain freeholders; and the inhabitants claim exemption from tithes and tolls, pursuant to a charter of King Stephen, who, in 1140, granted the manor to the Knights Templars, on condition that a chaplain should constantly be retained by them to perform divine service daily, and to make intercession for the kings of England: the chantry was dissolved in 1540. There is a school, built by subscription in 1832.

STAINTON, GREAT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SEDFIELD, N. E. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Darlington; containing, with the township of Elstob, 150 inhabitants, of whom 128 are in the township of Stainton. This place, called also Stainton-le-Street, derived that name from its situation on the line of a Roman vicinal road leading from Old Durham and Mainsforth, through Bradbury, Mordon, and Sadberge, to the ford across the river Tees at Sockburn. The parish occupies elevated ground commanding extensive views of the German Sea and the Cleveland hills, and comprises 1948a. 36p., of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the soil is generally of a strong clayey quality. The village is situated on the road to Sedfield, and the western branch of the Clarence railway passes through the township of Elstob. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £283. 3., and the glebe comprises 47 acres. The church, situated on rising ground to the west of the village, is a neat structure, consisting of a nave and chancel: the parsonage-house is a commodious residence, fronting the south. A school was founded and endowed in 1749, by the Rev. Thomas Nicholson, and has since received several donations, chiefly from the trustees of Lord Crewe's charities.

STAINTON-LE-VALE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, S. division of the wapentake of WALSHCROFT, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (N. E.) from Market-Rasen; containing 148 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 17. 6.; net income, £99; patron, J. Angerstein, Esq.

STAINTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of BISHOPTON, union of SEDFIELD, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 7 miles (N. E.) from Darlington; containing 74 inhabitants. It once belonged to the family of Conyers, who in the year 1613 assigned the lands to their tenants, of whom the Elstobs and Wellfoots were the principal; and in 1684, the freeholds were the property of the families of Tatham, Fewler, Allinson, Newton, and others. The township comprises 1083a. 1r. 21p., of which 637½ acres are arable, 376 pasture, 60 woodland, and 10 waste. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £9. 10., and the impropriate for £136. 6.

STAINTON, MARKET (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (E. by N.) from Wragby; containing 184 inhabitants. This was formerly a market-town, from which circumstance it derived the adjunct to its name; and in the centre of the present village is a spacious green which was the ancient market-place. The market has been long discontinued, and a fair held on the 29th of October was removed to Horncastle in 1768. The parish comprises by measurement 1123 acres. Stainton Hall, a handsome mansion, was built by the late John Loft, Esq. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £66; patron and incumbent, the Rev. John Loft. The church is a neat structure, repaired and beautified by the late Mr. Loft.

ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD.—See ALBAN'S, ST.—And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

STALBRIDGE (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of DORSET, 7½ miles (E. by N.) from Sherborne, and 111 (W. S. W.) from London; containing, with the tythings of Gomershay, Thornhill, and Weston, 1882 inhabitants, of whom 1297 are in the town. This place, in Domesday book written Staple-bridge, at the time of the Conquest belonged to the abbey of Sherborne. The town, and the greater part of the parish, are situated on a rock which supplies building materials for the neighbourhood; the streets are partially lighted by subscription, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water. From the south end of the main street another diverges; and at the intersection is an ancient stone cross, rising 30 feet, including the height of the pedestal, which is ornamented on the sides with sculptured emblematical figures. On the pedestal is the frustum of a pyramid, twelve feet high, with fluted angles, and decorated on one of the faces with a figure of Our Saviour having a lamb at his feet, and at the bottom with shields of arms, and surmounted by canopied shrines, in one of which is a representation of the Crucifixion. Above these are enriched canopies, terminating in a crocketed pinnacle formerly surmounted by a cross, and the whole is supported on three octagonal flights of steps, which diminish in the ascent. In the park once belonging to the manor-house, the Anglesea cricket club is held, and a building has been erected for the accommodation of the members, who meet weekly during the season; but the rest of the park is converted to agricultural purposes, and is surrounded by a wall five miles in circumference. Stalbridge was formerly noted for the manufacture of stockings: several of the inhabitants are now employed in winding silk. A branch of the river Stour, and the Dorsetshire and Somersetshire canal, pass through the parish. In the reign of Edward I. a grant of a market and fair was made to the abbot of Sherborne; the present market is on Tuesday; on every alternate Tuesday is a great market for cattle; and fairs are held on May 6th and Sept. 4th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 4. 7., and in the gift of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £1200, and the glebe contains 53 acres. The church is a spacious structure, with a lofty embattled tower, and contains some ancient monuments. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STALHAM (St. Mary), a post-town and parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of HAPPING, E. division of NORFOLK, 14 miles (N. E.) from Norwich, and 122 (E. N. E.) from London; containing 729 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road from Cromer to Yarmouth, comprises about 1600 acres, bounded on the west and south-west by the river Ant; the town is spacious, and a considerable trade in corn is carried on, for which there are commodious wharfs, one at Wayford Bridge, and another to the south, communicating with the river by a cut. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5; patron and incumbent, the Rev. B. Cubitt; improPRIATOR, the Rev. R. Johnson. The great tithes have been commuted for £240, and the vicarial for £170, and the glebe comprises 6 acres. The church is a handsome structure in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower; there are remains of a richly-carved screen, and the font is elaborately sculptured. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At the inclosure of the parish, 60 acres of land were allotted to the poor, who have also £20 arising from bequests. Part of a Roman pavement was discovered about the year 1800, to the south of the village.

STALISFIELD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of FAVERSHAM, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAY, E. division of KENT, 2½ miles (N. N. E.) from Charing; containing 378 inhabitants. It comprises about 2200 acres; the soil is generally clay, and the substratum flint rock; the surface is hilly, and the scenery varied. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; patron and appropriator, Archbishop of Canterbury. The great tithes have been commuted for £335, and the vicarial for £820; the glebe comprises 3 acres. The church is a handsome and ancient cruciform structure.

STALLINGBOROUGH (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, E. division of the wapentake of YARBOROUGH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (W. N. W.) from Great Grimsby; containing 437 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Humber, and comprises about 4000 acres, the greater portion of which is pasture and meadow; the soil is generally clay, the surface chiefly level, and the scenery enriched with wood, of which the most prevalent kind is ash. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 10. 10., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Lincoln (the appropriator), with a net income of £127: the tithes of the bishop have been commuted for £63. 15. 5., and those of the improPRIATORS for £90. 3.; the glebe comprises 54 acres. The church, with its tower, fell down in 1746; but the chancel, and a burial-place of the Ayscough family, were rebuilt of brick, in a neat modern style, and the present edifice contains 300 sittings. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STALLING-BUSK, a chapelry, in the parish of AYSGARTH, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 17 miles (W. by S.) from Middleham; containing, in its village, about 100 inhabitants. It is situated south of the Ure, in the picturesque vale of Raydale, and in its neighbourhood is the fine lake of Semmer or Seamere water. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Aysgarth, with a net income of £91: the chapel is supposed to have been built in the 17th century. At Marcett, a small hamlet about a mile west of the village, is a place of worship for Methodists.

STALLINGTON, a liberty, in the parish and union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, N. division of the county of STAFFORD; containing 91 inhabitants.

STALMINE, with STAYNALL, a chapelry, in the parish of LANCASTER, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Poulton; containing 504 inhabitants. The township comprises 2138 acres, of which 333 are common or waste. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £267; patron, Vicar of Lancaster. A rent-charge of £284 has been awarded as a commutation for the impropriate tithes, and one of £130 for the incumbent's. The chapel is dedicated to St. James.

STALYBRIDGE, a market-town and chapelry, partly in the township of HARTSHEAD, parish and union of ASHTON-UNDER-LINE, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER; and partly in that of DUKINFIELD, parish of STOCKPORT, and partly in that of STALYBRIDGE, parish of MOTTRAM-IN-LONGDEN-DALE, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 8 miles (N. E. by N.) from Stockport; containing 12,731 inhabitants. The town is on the banks of the Tame, and derives its appellation Staly, originally Stavcleigh, from a family of that name, who had a residence here, which is still in existence; the addition arises from a bridge, which has been recently rebuilt, at an expense of £4000, and connects the two counties of Lancaster and Chester. It is partially paved, lighted with gas, and well supplied with water; considerable improvements have been made, under an act of parliament obtained in 1828; and in 1842 a new act for lighting the town and vicinity was passed. The neighbourhood, formerly much covered with wood, presents some bold scenery; and from the Wild Bank, which rises 1300 feet above the level of the sea, the prospect is extensive. The principal market-day is Saturday; and there is a fair for pedlery on March 5th. The court of requests held at Ashton, for the recovery of debts under £5, comprises this place within its jurisdiction. The advance of the trade and population of the town has been singularly rapid; the first cotton-mill was erected in 1776, and a steam-engine was introduced in 1795, since which period numerous factories, worked by steam-engines, have been established, giving employment to about 7000 persons. Large quantities of excellent fire-bricks are also manufactured. The new road from Manchester to Sheffield runs on the north side of the town, and the Huddersfield canal passes in the vicinity. A temporary place of confinement, termed a Lock-up, has been recently built. The living is a perpetual curacy, subject to the rector of Ashton; net income, £143; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The chapel, dedicated to St. George, has been rebuilt on a new site, and was consecrated in October, 1839. There is also a church, of which the first stone was laid on the 27th of August, 1838, and which has been completed at an expense of £3879, by subscription, aided by a grant from the Incorporated Society; it is a handsome structure in the later English style, and contains 1026 sittings, of which 521 are free. The General and Particular Baptists, Wesleyans, and Methodists of the New Connexion, have places of worship. A society for mutual instruction has been established, with a library, and apparatus for lecturing; and there are also a newsroom and several benefit societies.

STAMBORNE (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of HALSTEAD, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 10 miles (N. W.) from Halstead; containing 540 inhabitants. It is about four miles in length, and three in breadth. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, £353. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower, and has an east window embellished with stained glass. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is supported partly by an endowment from Mrs. Cole, who gave the fourth part of the rent of a farm. Sir John Fairwell, governor of the Tower, who served under William III., was interred here.

STAMBRIDGE, GREAT (St. Mary and All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Rochford; containing 431 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2545 acres, of which 1700 are arable, 388 pasture, and 12 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of the Charter-house, London: the tithes have been commuted for £700, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is situated on an eminence, and consists of a nave, south aisle, and chancel, with a tower and shingled spire.

STAMBRIDGE, LITTLE, a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Rochford; containing 126 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 601 acres. Here is an extensive brewery. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £167, and the glebe comprises 30 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel.

STAMFORD, a borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, and the head of a union, locally in the wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 46 miles (S. by E.) from Lincoln, and 89 (N. by W.) from London; containing 6385 inhabitants. Its original name, Seanforde, signifying a stone ford, was derived from the passage across the river Welland being paved with stone; it was afterwards called Stanford, which was subsequently changed to its present appellation. The town is of very remote antiquity, its origin being ascribed by tradition to a period long before the Christian era; but the earliest authentic account respecting it is by Henry of Huntingdon, who records that the Picts and Scots, having ravaged the country to Stamford, were here defeated by the Britons, aided by the Saxons under the command of Hengist, who had been called to the assistance of the Britons by their king Vortigern. It was one of the five cities into which the Danes were distributed by Alfred the Great, when, after defeating them, he allowed that people, with Guthrum their prince, to settle in the kingdom, and who were thence called Fif-burgenses, or Five-burghers (the other places being Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, and Lincoln), and subsequently Sefen-burgenses, on the addition of two more cities, namely, Chester and York. A castle was erected by Edward the Elder, early in the 10th century, on the bank of the river, opposite the town, to check the incursions of the Danes, and of the Five-Burghers and other internal enemies, but every vestige of it long since disappeared. Another castle, on the north-west of the town, the foundations of which are still visible, was fortified by Stephen, during the war with the Empress Matilda, but was captured by Henry of Anjou, her son, afterwards Henry II.; and the town appears to have been at this period surrounded by a wall, of which a few traces are discernible on its northern side, and of its gateways on the east and west sides: though there are no traces of a gate towards the north, the street is called Scot-gate, from the gate which formerly stood there. The barons met at Stamford in the 17th of John, to concert those measures which led to the signing of Magna Charta by that monarch. In the reign of Henry III., the Carmelites, and members of other religious establishments, here commenced giving lectures on divinity and the liberal arts, which being attended by a great number of youths of good family, led to the erection of colleges, and Stamford became celebrated as a place for education. Its importance, indeed, in this respect, was so great that, from dissensions occurring in the reign of Edward III., in the university of Oxford, amongst the students from the southern and those from the northern parts of England, a considerable number of the latter, with several professors, removed hither; but they soon returned to Oxford, in consequence of a royal proclamation, and statutes were passed by both universities, by which any person taking a degree at either of them bound himself by oath not to attend any lectures at Stamford. A part of the gate of Brasenose College, standing in St. Paul's-street, is all that now remains of the university. This place suffered much during the war between the houses of York and Lancaster, a great portion of it having been burnt and otherwise destroyed about 1461, and it never afterwards regained its former importance.

Seal and Arms.

The town is pleasantly situated on the side of a hill, rising gradually from the northern bank of the Welland, across which is a stone bridge of five arches connecting it with Stamford-Baron, or St. Martin's, in Northamptonshire; the houses are chiefly built of freestone, obtained from the neighbouring quarries of Ketton, Whittering, and Barnack, and covered with slate. The streets are lighted with gas, from works erected in 1824, at an expense of upwards of £9000; an act was passed in 1841, for paving and otherwise improving the town, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The surrounding country is finely varied, and the approach to the place from the south is pleasing and picturesque. The theatre, erected in 1768, is a neat and commodious edifice, lighted with gas; there are assembly-rooms in St. George's-square; and races are held in October, on a good course, a mile in circumference, on Whittering heath, near the town. On the bank of the river are excellent cold and hot water baths. The trade is principally in coal, rafts, malt, and beer, and is much promoted by the Welland being navigable hither from Spalding for boats and small barges. The market-days are Monday and Friday, the latter noted for corn, for the sale of which a handsome building has been recently erected; and butchers' and fish markets were built in 1807, by the corporation. The fairs are on the Tuesday before February 13th, Monday before Mid-Lent, Mid-Lent Monday, Monday before May 12th, Monday after the festival of Corpus Christi, and November 8th and 9th. At the time of the Conquest, Stamford was governed by lagemen, or aldermen, but was not incorporated by charter until the 1st of Edward IV. In 1663, a charter was granted by Charles II., wherein the chief magistrate is first styled mayor, and which was confirmed in 1685, by James II. The government is now vested in a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the borough is divided into two wards; the municipal boundaries are co-extensive with those for parliamentary purposes, and the number of magistrates is six. The town first sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., and continued to do so, with occasional intermissions, until 1542, since which period it has exercised the privilege without interruption: the borough includes also the parish of Stamford-Baron, and comprises an area of 2399 acres: the mayor is returning officer. The recorder holds quarter-sessions; and petty-sessions take place every Monday. The town-hall, rebuilt in 1776, is a large and handsome detached building, standing in the main street, near the bridge, and containing a sessions-room, house of correction, gaol, guard-room, and other apartments.

Stamford formerly contained 13 parochial churches, but several of those in the liberties were destroyed by the northern soldiers, in 1461; and the number was again reduced, in 1538, at the dissolution of monastic institutions: under an act of parliament passed in 1547, the parishes were consolidated, and five churches were allowed to remain. All Saints' parish contains a population of 1978; that of St. George, 1600; St. John the Baptist, 1211; St. Mary, 337; and St. Michael, 1259. The living of All Saints' is a rectory, with that of St. Peter's consolidated, valued in the king's books at £12. 7. 8½., and in the patronage of the Crown for one turn, and the Marquess of Exeter for two; net income, £431. The church is a large and handsome structure, combining some fine specimens of the early and later English styles, with a lofty embattled tower surmounted by an elegant octangular crocketed spire, of later English character; it was built about 1465, at the expense of John Brown, a merchant at Calais, who was buried in it. The living of St. George's is a discharged rectory, with that of St. Paul's consolidated, valued at £5. 3. 11½.; net income, £124; patron, the Marquess of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for £79. 5., and the glebe contains 6 acres. The church, a spacious plain edifice with a square embattled tower, was rebuilt in 1450, by William Bruges, the first garter king at arms. The living of St. John the Baptist is a rectory, with that of St. Clement's consolidated, valued at £8. 8. 6½., and in the patronage of the Marquess for two turns, and R. Newcomb, Esq., for one turn; net income, £167. The church, rebuilt about the year 1452, principally in the later English style, has a neat embattled tower adorned with pinnacles, and a good south porch; the screen separating the chancel from the nave and aisles, and the roof, are both very handsome. The living of St. Mary's is a discharged vicarage, valued at £4. 18. 9.; net income, £87; patron, the Marquess. The church, which is supposed to have been built about the end of the 13th century, on the site of one so early as the Conquest, and is considered the mother church, is principally in the later English style, with some portions, particularly a very fine tower and spire, of early English architecture, highly deserving the attention of the antiquary. The living of St. Michael's is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of St. Andrew's and the rectory of St. Stephen's consolidated, valued at £18. 14. 2.; net income, £136; patron, the Marquess. The late church, situated near the centre of the town, was probably the oldest, having been built early in the thirteenth century. It was, however, much altered, and an embattled tower at the west end was erected, in 1761; and in 1832, whilst the workmen were employed in improving the interior, by widening the span of the arches and diminishing the number of pillars, the walls gave way, and nearly the whole of the roof and the body of the church fell into a mass of ruins. The present church was built on its site, and consecrated October 26th, 1836. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics.

The Ratcliffe free school here was founded by Alderman William Ratcliffe, about the year 1530, and endowed by him with estates now producing £547. 16. per annum: the remains of the ancient church of St. Paul were assigned for the school-house; in 1608, a dwelling-house, garden, and orchard, nearly adjoining, were vested in feoffees for the residence of the master; and, in 1726, the dwelling-house was rebuilt by subscription. The school is entitled to one of the twenty-four scholarships at John's College, Cambridge, augmented by the first Lord Burghley; and Thomas, Lord Exeter, in 1613, founded three fellowships, and eight scholarships at Clare Hall, Cambridge, with preference to candidates educated at Stamford school, provided they are equally qualified with their competitors. Mr. Thomas Truesdale, by will, in 1700, left £50 for scholars going to the university; and £12 per annum were bequeathed by Mr. Marshall, for an exhibition for a scholar from the grammar school of Southwark, or Stamford. A Blue-coat school was established in 1704, by subscription, with which an estate at Hogsthorpe was purchased; Wells', or the petty school, was endowed in 1604; and a national school for girls was founded in 1815. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally endowed. The principal is the hospital, or bede-house, founded and largely endowed by William Browne, in 1493, for a warden, confrater, twelve aged men, and two nurses, who are incorporated, and have a common seal; the edifice is a very neat structure, containing a house for the warden, apartments for the confrater, and rooms for the aged men and nurses, with a chapel in which prayers are read daily by the warden or the confrater. Truesdale's hospital, in Scot-gate, was instituted in 1700, and rebuilt in 1833, for twelve men, with their wives and a nurse, and as, on the decease of any inmate, his widow must quit the hospital, the sum of five shillings a week was bequeathed by H. Fryer, Esq., to each person so leaving it, for the remainder of her life. Snowden's hospital, endowed in 1604, and rebuilt in 1823, affords an asylum to eight women: Williamson's callis, or almshouse, has apartments for ten. All Saints' callis, for men and women, is supported by incidental legacies, and by subscriptions from the corporation; and Peter's Hill callis, for an unlimited number of women, is endowed by the corporation with the interest of £200, arising from the Black Sluice drainage. The principal bequests for charitable purposes are, one of £1800, by John Warrington, Esq., for the benefit, in equal proportions, of the widows of All Saints' callis and Snowden's hospital; £3000, left by Mr. Fryer, for the poor of Snowden's hospital and Peter's Hill callis; the rent of four houses left by Mrs. Williamson, to be paid in sums of three shillings and sixpence a week, to six women; and an estate producing £50 per annum, left by Mr. W. Wells for the education of children under ten years of age belonging to the parish of All Saints. A handsome infirmary for Stamford and the county of Rutland, capable of receiving thirty-two patients, has been erected near the town, by subscription; and towards its support upwards of £7000 stock were bequeathed by Mr. Fryer, and £2000 collected by ladies at a bazaar. The poor law union of Stamford extends into four counties, and comprises 37 parishes or places, of which 14 are in Northampton, 13 in Lincoln, 9 in Rutland, and one in Huntingdon, the whole containing a population of 17,066.

A Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Leonard, and valued at the Dissolution at £36. 17. per annum, is supposed to have been established here in the 7th century, and refounded in the time of William the Conqueror, when it was made a cell to the monastery of Durham; the site is a small distance from the town, though formerly included within it, and a portion of the conventual church still remains. Of a Carmelite friary, instituted in 1291, the west gate exists, a handsome specimen of the architecture of that period; and the infirmary occupies a portion of the site. Part of an outer wall, and a postern, are the only remains of a convent of Grey friars, founded by Henry III. A Dominican priory was founded before the year 1240, a Gilbertine priory in 1291, an Augustine priory before 1346, and an hospital, or house for lepers, in 1493. A custom called bull-running, was, for many years, practised here on St. Brice's-day (November 13th), said to have originated in William, Earl of Warren, having, in the reign of John, granted a meadow for the common use of the butchers of the town, on condition that they should find a bull to be hunted and baited on that day; but this custom has been altogether discontinued. Stamford gives the title of Earl to the family of Grey of Groby.

STAMFORD, a township, in the parish of EMBLETON, union of ALNWICK, S. division of BAMBOURGH ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N. E. by N.) from Alnwick; containing 90 inhabitants. It comprises 1560 acres, of which 230 are rich old pasture: limestone and coal are both wrought on the estate, which is the property of the Earl of Tankerville. The village is small, and situated about a mile north-east from Rennington, Embleton lying to the north; it is also about mid-way between the coast of the North Sea and the road from Belford to Alnwick.

STAMFORD-BARON.—See MARTIN'S, ST.

STAMFORD-BRIDGE, EAST, a township, in the union of POCKLINGTON, parish of CATTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from York; containing 408 inhabitants. Near this place, in 1066, was fought the celebrated battle between Harold and Tosti, from the effect of which, and the long fatiguing march immediately after, to meet William the Conqueror, at the other extremity of the island, the English army became so exhausted as to suffer defeat at the battle of Hastings. The township contains 1076 acres, occupying the left bank of the navigable river Derwent, and is intersected by the road from York to Bridlington; the surface is for the most part level, and the scenery embraces views of the Wold hills. A large fair for cattle and for hiring servants is held on the 1st and 2nd of December. Burtonfield House, a recently-erected mansion, surrounded with plantations, the seat of Charles Albert Darley, Esq., is situated here; and in some gravel-pits on the grounds have been found the skeletons of men slain in the above desperate conflict.

STAMFORD-BRIDGE, WEST, with SCOREBY, a township, in the parish of CATTON, union of YORK, wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from York; containing 150 inhabitants. The navigable river Derwent, on which is an extensive flour-mill, separates this township from that of East Stamford-Bridge. The tithes have been commuted for £40. 12. 6. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Christopher Wharton, in 1787, gave £600 in support of a school, of which the income is about £22; and the expense of a school-house, erected in 1795 was defrayed out of previous accumulations.

STAMFORD-HILL.—See HACKNEY.

STAMFORDHAM (ST. MARY), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of CASTLE ward, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTH-UMBERLAND, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 1777 inhabitants. This is the finest champaign part of Tindale ward, and is about $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length from east to west, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth from north to south. The parish comprises the townships of Bitchfield, Black Heddon, Cheeseburn-Grange, Fenwick, Hawkwell, Heugh, Ingoe, Kearsley, East and West Matfen, Nesbit, Ouston, Ryall, and Walridge; it is well cultivated, and contains abundant seams of coal and limestone, both of which are wrought, the latter for agricultural purposes. The village, situated in the township of Heugh, is principally of modern erection, and consists chiefly of one long broad street, in the centre of which is a covered market-cross, erected in 1736, by Sir John Swinburne, Bart., for a market, now discontinued. A fair is held for cattle and pigs, on the second Thursday in April; and there are statute-fairs on the Thursday before Old May-day, November 14th, and the last Thursday in February. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 18. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £574. The church, erected about the 13th century, is in the early English style, and stands on the west side of the market-cross; the chancel was built by the Fenwicks, of Fenwick Tower, and contains several effigies and monumental inscriptions belonging to that ancient family and the Swinburnes. At Ryall is a chapel of ease; and a church has just been consecrated at Matfen. There is a place of worship in the village for Presbyterians, at Matfen one for Wesleyans, and at Cheeseburn-Grange one for Roman Catholics. A free school was founded in 1663, by Sir Thomas Widdrington, Knt., who endowed it with seventy-six acres of land, now producing about £160 per annum; and a rent-charge of £12, left by Henry Paston, in 1698, is distributed among the poor.

STANBRIDGE.—See HINTON, PARVA.

STANBRIDGE, a tything, in the parish of ROMSEY-EXTRA, union of ROMSEY, hundred of KING'S-SOMBOURN, Romsey and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 124 inhabitants.

STANCILL, with WELLINGLEY and WILSICK, a township, in the parish of TICKHILL, union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Tickhill; containing 59 inhabitants. It is called in Domesday book Stemesale, and appears to have been about that time a portion of the estate of Seward, one of the co-lords of Tickhill. The monks of Roche and Nostell anciently possessed some lands here; and among the families that have owned property in the place, occur those of Fitzpaine, Hoton, Copley, Higgins, and Jarrat. The township comprises by computation 1200 acres, under superior cultivation, and the soil rests principally upon limestone. Wilsick Hall is the property of William Walker, Esq.

STAND, a chapelry, in the parish of PRESTWICH, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £170; patron, the Rector of Prestwich. Here is a national school.

STANDBRIDGE, a chapelry, in the parish and union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leighton-Buzzard; containing 519 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Leighton-Buzzard. The chapel is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

STANDERWICK, a parish, in the union and hundred of FROME, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Frome; containing 89 inhabitants. Standerwick Court, the seat of Admiral Harry Edgell, is a handsome mansion, in the grounds of which are the remains of an ancient encampment, supposed to have been the connecting station between Alfred's tower at Stourton and Bath. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Beckington, and valued in the king's books at £2. 9. 7.: the tithes have been commuted for £73. 3., and the glebe comprises 14 acres.

STANDFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Hythe; containing 235 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1181 acres, of which 34 are common or waste land. The village is situated on the ancient Stane-street; and there are still remaining here, the entrance gateway, tower, and gallery, with the garden-walls and moat, of the old mansion of Westenhanger, in which fair Rosamond, previously to her removal to Woodstock, Queen Elizabeth, and other sovereigns of England, are said to have resided. The South-Eastern railway passes to the south of the village. The living is annexed, with that of Paddlesworth, to the rectory of Lyminge: the tithes have been commuted for £170. 11., and the glebe comprises 9 acres.

STANDGROUND (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, partly in the hundred of NORTH WITCHFORD, ISLE of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, but chiefly in the hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 1 mile (S. E. by S.) from Peterborough; containing, with the chapelry of Farcett, 1415 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £1299; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Emanuel College, Cambridge; impropiators, the Landowners. The tithes were commuted for land in 1801. There is a chapel of ease at Farcett.

STANDHILL, a hamlet, in the parish and hundred of PIRTON, union of HENLEY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Tetsworth. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £128. 13.

STANDISH (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WHEATENHURST, Upper division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. W.) from Stroud; containing 540 inhabitants. The Cheltenham and Great Western Union railway passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, with that of Hardwick consolidated, valued in the king's books at £44. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £527; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is principally in the decorated English style.

STANDISH (ST. WILFRID), a parish, in the unions of WIGAN and CHORLEY, hundred of LEYLAND, N. division of the county of LANCASTER; containing 8686 inhabitants, of whom 2565 are in the township of Standish with Langtree, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Wigan. The parish comprises the townships of Adlington, Ander-ton, Charnock-Heath, Charnock-Richard, Coppull, Duxbury, Shevington, Standish with Langtree, Welsh-Whittle, and Worthington. In the township of Standish with Langtree are 3040 acres, of which 223 are common or waste land. An intermediate station on the North-Union railway is situated here. Fairs for horses, cattle, toys, &c., are held on June 29th and November 22nd. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £45. 16. 8.; net income, £1874; patron, Dr. Brandreth. The church was built in 1584, by the Rev. Richard Moodie, the first Protestant rector, and is an elegant structure of the Tuscan order. A church was built at Adlington in 1838, a neat structure in the Norman style; and an old chapel in the township of Coppull was thoroughly repaired in 1840. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Standish Hall. The free grammar school, founded in 1603, by Mary Langton, is endowed with lands, &c., producing an income exceeding £100; and Mary Smalley, in 1794, bequeathed £1000 for a girls' school, of which the revenue is £50 per annum. One of the twelve ancient castles of Lancashire stood here, but its site only can now be distinguished.

STANDLAKE (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of BAMPTON, county of OXFORD, 5½ miles (S. S. E.) from Witney; containing, with the hamlet of Brittonton, 707 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2237*a.* 36*p.*, of which 330 acres are meadow and pasture, and the remainder, with a little woodland, chiefly arable. Gaunt House, here, now occupied by a farmer, but said to have been originally built by John of Gaunt and Johan his wife, to whose memory there is a brass in the church, was garrisoned for Charles I. in 1643 and 1644, by Dr. Fell, Dean of Christ-Church, to whom it then belonged. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 10. 10.; net income, £373; patrons, the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church is a handsome cruciform structure in the early and decorated English styles, with a lofty octangular tower crowned by a pierced parapet, from within which rises a low spire; the arched timber roof is supported by springers resting on corbels ornamented with heraldic devices. Some children are instructed for about £25 per annum, arising from gifts of William Plaisterer in 1711, and John Chambers in 1732.

STANDLINCH, a parish, in the union of ALDERBURY, hundred of DOWNTON, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Salisbury; containing 40 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west and south-west by the river Avon, and comprises about 500 acres; the soil is a light sand, alternated with chalk; the surface is elevated, and the scenery pleasingly diversified. A chantry was founded here by Queen Elfrida, in expiation of the murder of Edward the Martyr, and on the site a small chapel was erected in 1147, and rebuilt in 1677; but, though still in existence, no living is attached to it, nor is it used for divine service, except occasionally by the family of the lord of the manor, Earl Nelson, of Trafalgar House. A rent-charge of £3. 6. 8. is payable to Winchester College, in commutation of tithes.

STANDON (St. MARY), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of WARE, hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 8 miles (N. E.) from Hertford; containing, with the hamlets of Colliers-End, High-Cross, and parts of Puckeridge and Wadesmill, 2299 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 7500 acres. The village is neatly built; the manufacture of paper is carried on, for which there is a mill affording employment to about 14 persons, and a few children. The market, granted by Charles II., has been discontinued; but a fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held on the 25th of April. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 4., and in the gift of the impropiator, R. P. Ward, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £1310, and the vicarial for £520; the glebe comprises six acres. The church is a large ancient building, with a tower on the north side, and contains a handsome monument to Sir Ralph Sadlier, who was interred here. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a free school, endowed by Thomas Fisher, in 1612, with £35 per annum, which, with subsequent benefactions, now produces £65. About five miles from Ware, on the Cambridge road, in the parish, is St. Edmund's College, established on the expulsion of the English Roman Catholics from Douay, at the commencement of the French revolution in 1789; it is for the education of the sons of the nobility and gentry of the Roman Catholic religion; the edifice was erected in 1795, and consists of a range of buildings four stories high, and, with its two wings, 300 feet long. The ancient Ermin-street runs through the parish.

STANDON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Eccleshall; containing 382 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by the river Sow, comprises 2548*a.* 34*p.*; the soil is partly a stiff clay, and partly a deep-rich loam, alternated with light gravel. The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence, and the surrounding scenery is finely varied. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the gift of J. Stevenson Salt, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £480, and the glebe comprises 90 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style.

STANDON, or STONDON-MASSEY (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (E. S. E.) from Chipping-Ongar; containing 291 inhabitants. It takes the adjunct to its name from the ancient proprietor of the manor. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £461; patron, John Hubbard, Esq. The church is a small edifice, with a belfry turret surmounted by a spire of wood.

STANE, formerly a parish, now a hamlet in the parish of WITHERN, union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 6½ miles (N.) from Alford; comprising about 250 acres. The living was a rectory, united to that of Mablethorpe St. Mary, and valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; the ancient church was dedicated to All Saints.

STANFIELD (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 6 miles (N. W. by N.) from East Dereham; containing 259 inhabitants. It comprises 903*a.* 1*r.* 4*p.*, of which about 761 acres are arable, and the remainder pasture and meadow. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 2., and in the gift of the Rev. James Royle: the tithes have been commuted for £258, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is chiefly in the early and later English styles, with a square tower.

STANFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of SOUTHILL, union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of WIXAMTREE, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Biggleswade; containing 435 inhabitants.

STANFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SWAFFHAM, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 8 miles (N. E.) from Brandon; containing 184 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2565 acres, of which 1200 are arable, 630 meadow, pasture, and sheep-walks, 60 wood, chiefly plantation, 44 furze, and 580 rabbit-warren; the surface is varied, and the low lands are watered by the river Wissèy. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the appropriator, the Bishop of Ely: the great tithes have been commuted for £77, and the vicarial for £75. 13. The church, built of brick, now much decayed, has a tower of flint at the west end, circular at the base, and octangular above; the north aisle and chancel are dilapidated.

STANFORD (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, hundred of GUILSBOROUGH, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (S. E.) from Lutterworth; containing 32 inhabitants. The river AVON and the Grand Union canal pass through the parish, which consists of 2056*a. 2r. 33p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 5., and has a net income of £85; the patronage and impropriation belong to Mrs. O. Cave.

STANFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 8 miles (S. W. by W.) from Stourport; containing 164 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the small river Teme, and comprises 1278*a. 2r. 19p.*, of which the substratum contains limestone, quarried for building and for the roads, and also burnt into lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 4. 2., and in the patronage of Sir T. E. Winnington, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £230, and the glebe comprises 68 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church was erected in 1768, and contains some handsome monuments. There is a rock of singular formation, apparently a petrification, from which issues a spring of remarkably pure water.

STANFORD, BISHOP'S (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Bromyard; containing 233 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1480 acres, of which 230 are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Bromyard, with a net income of £58; appropriator, the first Portionist of Bromyard, whose tithes have been commuted for £105, and those of the vicar of Bromyard for £100. There are 7 acres of glebe.

STANFORD-DINGLEY (ST. DENIS), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS, 10 miles (W.) from Reading; containing 151 inhabitants. It comprises 941*a. 2r. 36p.*, of which 654 acres are arable, 85 meadow and pasture, and 129 woodland; the soil is clay, alternated with chalk and gravel; the surface is hilly, and the lower grounds are watered by the small river Fawley. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8., and in the patronage of Mrs. Valpy: the tithes have been commuted for £270. 6., and the glebe comprises 18 acres. The church is principally in the Norman style.

STANFORD-IN-THE-VALE (ST. DENIS), a parish, in the union of FARRINGTON, partly in the hundred of OCK, but chiefly in that of GANFIELD, county of BERKS, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Great Farringdon; containing, with the chapelry of Goosey, 1149 inhabitants, of whom 970 are in Stanford township. The parish comprises 2821*a. 2r. 1p.*: the village is neatly built, and had formerly a market on Thursday, and a fair on the festival of St. Denis, granted in 1230, by Henry III., to Ferrars, Earl of Derby. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £21. 1. $10\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £337; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. There is a chapel of ease at Goosey; and a national school is endowed with £6. 5. per annum. A quarry of stone in the parish is remarkable for its variety of fossil remains.

STANFORD, KING'S, a township, in the parish of BISHOP'S-FROOME, union of BROMYARD, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Bromyard; containing 93 inhabitants. Here is a petrifying spring.

STANFORD-LE-HOPE (ST. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ORSETT, hundred of BARSTABLE, S. division of ESSEX, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by S.) from Horndon-on-the-Hill; containing 336 inhabitants. The parish takes its name from a stone ford across the stream which separates it from Mucking and Horndon-on-the-Hill, and has its adjunct from a bay formed by the river Thames, called the Hope; the ancient ford has been superseded by a bridge, kept in repair at the joint expense of the three parishes. It comprises 2418 acres, of which 159 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 19. $9\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £591; patrons, Trustees. The church, situated on the village green, is an ancient edifice, with a tower on the south side. Mrs. Elizabeth Davison bequeathed £950 three per cents., and £300 South Sea annuities, for instruction.

STANFORD-RIVERS (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from Chipping-Ongar; containing 972 inhabitants. It derives its name from an ancient stone ford across the river Roden, and its adjunct from the family of Rivers, to whom the manor at one time belonged. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 13. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £1020, and the glebe comprises 54 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a shingled spire. There is a place of worship for Independents; and the workhouse of the Ongar union is situated here. Dr. John Crayford, Master of University College, Oxford; Dr. Thomas Cole, Dean of Salisbury; Dr. Richard Montague, Bishop of Norwich; Dr. Roger Manwaring, Bishop of St. David's; and the learned Drs. Richard Mulcaster and Nathaniel Lancaster, were rectors of the parish.

STANFORD-UPON-SOAR (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, S. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 1 mile (N. by E.) from Loughborough; containing 146 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the river Soar, at the southern extremity of the county, comprises by measurement 1500 acres; the soil is sandy, and the surface undulated; the scenery is enriched with wood, and the views from Stanford Hall, overlooking the vale of Loughborough, and embracing the Charnwood Forest hills, are extensive and finely varied. The Soar navigation passes within half a mile of the parish, and the Midland-Counties' railway through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 7. 6., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. S. V. Dashwood: the tithes have been commuted for £420, and the glebe comprises 14 acres. The church is a spacious and venerable structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, and is beautifully situated in a secluded spot embosomed in foliage. Roman coins have been discovered.

STANGHOE, a township, in the parish of SKELTON, union of GUIBOROUGH, E. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Guisborough; containing 109 inhabitants. This place was once the property of the family of de Brus, from whom it passed by marriage to the Fauconberges; the Nevilles next held the estate, and among more recent proprietors have been the families of Conyers, Trotter, and Hall. It is situated a little to the north of the road between Whithy and Guisborough, and upon a stream which runs northward, and, after a course of a few miles, falls into the North Sea at Skinningrove.

STANHOE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of SMITHDON, W. division of NORFOLK, 12 miles (N.) from Rougham; containing 445 inhabitants. It comprises 1398*a.* 3*r.* 23*p.*, of which 1317 acres are arable, and 62 meadow and pasture the property of D. Hoste and John Calthrop, Esqrs. Stanhoe Hall, the seat of the latter, is a handsome mansion of brick, finely situated. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16, and in the gift of Mr. Hoste: the tithes have been commuted for £480, and the glebe comprises 18 acres. The church is in the early and decorated English styles, with a square embattled tower, and contains some ancient monuments to the Hoste family; also three stone sedilia and a piscina. There is a school endowed with £7. 10. per annum.

STANHOPE (ST. THOMAS THE APOSTLE), a parish, and the head of the union of WEARDALE, in the N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; containing upwards of 9000 inhabitants, of whom about 2000 are in the township of Stanhope-Quarter, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from Wolsingham. The neighbourhood of this place is remarkable in history as the spot where, on the incursion of the Scots in the reign of Edward III., that monarch encamped his forces; and on an eminence to the west of the village might formerly be seen the remains of an ancient fortress demolished by them upon that occasion. The parish is divided into four quarters, including six townships; Newlandside quarter, which contains 3816 acres of inclosed land, and a common, named Bollihope, of 7000 acres; Stanhope quarter, which comprises 3725 acres inclosed, and 7200 common; Park quarter, which has 12,326 acres of land inclosed, and 500 common, named Sunderland; and Forest quarter, which consists of 8124 acres inclosed, and 11,876 common. The village is situated on the northern side of the river Wear, and near the western extremity is Stanhope Hall, an ancient mansion regularly defended by a curtain, and formerly the residence of the family of Featherstonhaugh, to whom the manor belonged. With the exception of that part of the parish on the banks of the river, the country is rugged and mountainous, exhibiting, however, in parts, much picturesque beauty, diversified with waterfalls, and rocks and caves of limestone fringed with natural wood; and the district is rich in mineral wealth. Lead-ore is wrought upon a very extensive scale, in works near the Wear, belonging to T. W. Beaumont, Esq., and to the London Company, and the vicinity also abounds with iron-stone and limestone of excellent quality: of the produce of Mr. Beaumont's mines, a tenth part belongs to the Bishop of Durham, and a ninth to the rector of the parish. The terminus of the Stanhope and Tyne railway for the conveyance of goods and mineral produce is within a mile of the town, where extensive lime-kilns have been erected; and large quantities of lime are forwarded by the railroad to the northern parts of the county, together with a portion of the lead smelted in the district, and some iron-stone, which last was, till lately, considered to be unprofitable refuse: coal is obtained from Medomsley, in return, but not to any great extent. A market, granted to the place by charter of Bishop Langley in 1421, has been discontinued; but fairs are held on the Wednesday before Easter, the second Friday in September, and December 21st, the last for cattle: petty-sessions for the division take place every month; and a court baron occurs occasionally at Frosterley.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £67. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, with a net income of £4660: the glebe comprises 220 acres; the predial tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £700. The church, which is situated on a slope to the north of the town, has a tower of great thickness, which was probably used as a keep in former times; the nave is of ancient architecture, and has round pillars supporting circular arches; the chancel is large, and studded with oak. At Rookhope is a chapel of ease, built by the late Bishop Barrington; two oratories, one at Eastgate, and the other at Frosterley, where divine service is performed every Sunday, have been built during the incumbency of the present rector; and there are meeting-houses for dissenters in various parts of the parish. A national school, to which a library is attached, was erected by the prelate just named, and endowed with a portion of £2000 assigned by him for the support of six schools in the parish. Dr. Hartwell, a former rector, purchased and endowed a house containing a schoolroom and apartments for a master, giving at the same time a rent-charge of £7 per annum for apprenticing two boys; and Mrs. Chapman, likewise, bequeathed £20, to be employed partly in the education of children, and partly in a dole to the poor on St. Thomas's-day. In the village of Westgate, a free school was founded in 1691, by Richard Bambridge, and is endowed with about £25 a year, which sum is disbursed under the controul of trustees. The union of Weardale, of which the workhouse is at Stanhope, comprises four parishes, and contains a population of 10,174. In the Park quarter is a small camp, evidently of Roman construction; and a Roman altar, said to have been found on Bollihope, stands in the rectory. Among the incumbents of the parish have been, Bishop Butler, whose celebrated Analogy of Religion is said to have been composed in this retirement, and Dr. Phillpotts, Bishop of Exeter; and Sir Henry Hardinge, the present governor-general of India, and his gallant brother, Captain Hardinge, who fell in action in the East Indies, were brought up at Stanhope, of which their father, the Rev. George Hardinge, was rector.

STANION (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of KETTERING, hundred of CORBY, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Rockingham; containing 334 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1574 acres, and is intersected by the road from Kettering to Stamford, and watered by a stream which flows into the river Nene. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Brigstock. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STANLEY, a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLETREE, though locally in that of MORELESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Derby; containing 368 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £64; patron, Sir R. Wilmot, Bart.; improprator, R. Bateman, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1792. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

STANLEY, a township, in the parish and union of LEEK, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (S. W. by W.) from Leek; containing 122 inhabitants. The Rev. Richard Shaw bequeathed £10 a year for teaching children.

STANLEY, with STUDLEY, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 119 inhabitants.

STANLEY, with WRENTHORPE, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish and union of WAKEFIELD, Lower division of the wapentake of AGRIGG, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. N. E.) from Wakefield; containing 6625 inhabitants. This place is supposed to have been the site of a Roman station, and numerous relics of that people have been found here, among which were crucibles, moulds, and silver and copper coins; of the last, about forty pounds' weight were discovered in 1812, and many of the antiquities are deposited in the British Museum. The district comprises about 4800 acres, of which 2870 are in Stanley, and the remainder in Wrenthorpe, and includes many scattered hamlets and agreeable villas, forming the northern suburbs of Wakefield. The surface is boldly varied; the scenery abounds with interesting features, and the soil is fertile and well cultivated; the substratum abounds with coal, and there are some extensive mines in operation, of which the Victoria mines, the property of J. Hatfield, Esq., afford employment to 400 persons. Moor House, the seat of John Maude, Esq., author of a Visit to the Falls of Niagara in 1800, is a handsome residence commanding fine views. The village of Stanley is on the west bank of the Calder; a few of the inhabitants are employed in twine-spinning, and every facility of conveyance is afforded by the Aire and Calder canal, which is here conveyed across the river by a noble aqueduct, built at an expense of £40,000, and communicating with a railroad to Loft-house gate, the Leeds and Manchester railway is also carried over the river by a beautiful viaduct. The Aire and Calder Navigation Company have an establishment here for the general repair of the banks, bridges, &c., of the canal and river; and at Ouchthorp Lane is the reservoir for the Wakefield water-works, excavated at a cost of £25,000, in 1839. The West riding pauper lunatic asylum for 500 patients, is a spacious building in the district. A church was erected by the Parliamentary Commissioners in 1824, at an expense of £12,000; it is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with two turrets, and contains 900 sittings, of which 400 are free. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, the Vicar of Wakefield; net income, £150, with a good parsonage-house. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1793. The scene of the battle fought by Robin Hood, Scarlet, and Little John, against the Pindar of Wakefield, is laid here, according to the ancient ballad.

STANLEY, KING'S (St. George), a parish, in the union of STROUD, Lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Stroud; containing 2200 inhabitants. This place is supposed to derive the adjunct to its name from having been anciently the residence of some of the Mercian kings. The manufacture of woollen-cloth appears to have been introduced here at a very early period, and in the reign of Elizabeth was conducted by Richard Clotterbooke, who was interred in the church, and whose descendants for many generations carried on that business in various parts of the neighbourhood: the Stanley mills now employ from 800 to 1000 persons. The parish comprises 1679a. 2r. 5p., of which 220 acres are woodland, and the remainder arable and pasture; the substratum contains good freestone quarried for building, and also ragstone used for the roads. The Severn and Thames canal passes near the village, and the Gloucester and Bristol railway within a mile, where it has a station, from which a branch diverges, connecting it with the Great Western railway. A fair is held on the 23rd of April. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 15. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Jesus' College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £410, and the glebe comprises 81 acres. The church, an ancient and handsome structure, has been enlarged. There is a place of worship for Baptists; and two national schools, one at each extremity of the parish, are supported partly by bequests producing about £26 per annum. Eight Roman altars, a large brass of Alexander Severus, and other relics of antiquity, were found some years since.

STANLEY ST. LEONARD (St. Swithin), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of STROUD, Lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Stroud; containing 864 inhabitants. This place, before 1686, when a great fire destroyed most of its buildings, was a considerable town, with fairs on St. Swithin's-day and Nov. 6th, which are still held; but the market, which was on Saturday, under a grant of Edward II., renewed in 1620, has been discontinued. The parish comprises by measurement 1025 acres; the soil is generally a stiff clay, the surface boldly undulated, and the scenery richly embellished with wood. There is an extensive manufacture of woollen-cloth in the village. The Gloucester and Bristol railway passes through the parish, and the Stroud navigation within a mile of it. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £200; patron, the Rev. T. P. Jones. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1830; the glebe comprises 130 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, partly in the early and partly in the later English style, with a low tower in the centre, singularly constructed with double walls, and a passage and recesses between them. It formerly belonged to a priory of Benedictine monks, dedicated to St. Leonard, founded here in 1146, as a cell to the abbey of St. Peter, Gloucester, and which, at the Dissolution, possessed a revenue of £126. 9. 8. : there are considerable remains of the conventual buildings, of which the kitchen is now a dairy.

STANLEY-PONTLARGE, a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTS-GATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Winchcomb; containing 75 inhabitants. It comprises 600 acres, of which the soil is a deep clay, and the surface generally flat. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Toddington: the tithes were commuted for land in 1807.

STANLOW-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 8 miles (N. by E.) from Chester; containing 30 inhabitants. It is situated on the navigable river Mersey, which forms its southern boundary. An abbey of Cistercian monks was founded here in 1178, by John Lacy, constable of Chester, but, on account of the inundations of the Mersey in 1296, was removed to Whalley, in Lancashire, when a cell only was left at this place. Some small remains of the conventual buildings are visible in a farm-house.

STANMER, a parish, in the union of NEWHAVEN, hundred of RINGMER, rape of PEVENSEY, though locally in that of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Brighton; containing 120 inhabitants. It comprises about 2840 acres, chiefly arable, with a large tract of down and meadow. The living is a rectory, united by act of parliament to the vicarage of Falmer, and valued in the king's books at £16: the tithes have been commuted for £177. The church, an ancient structure, was rebuilt in 1839, at the expense of the Earl of Chichester, and consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the 24th of October in that year. The present edifice is in the early English style, with a tower surmounted by a graceful and well-proportioned spire; the details are elegant, and the whole displays a rich and beautiful specimen of that style.

STANMORE, a tithing, in the parish of BEEDON, union of WANTAGE, hundred of FAIRCROSS, county of BERKS; containing 68 inhabitants.

STANMORE, GREAT (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, in the union of HENDON, hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX, 10 miles (N. W.) from London; containing 1177 inhabitants. The first meeting, after the conclusion of the late war, of the Prince Regent and his illustrious guests, the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, with Louis XVIII., took place here. The parish comprises 1441a. 1r., of which 170 acres are arable, 1217 meadow and pasture, and 54 woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of George Drummond, jun., Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £444, and the glebe comprises 41 acres. There is a place of worship for Independents. The celebrated Dr. Parr kept a school on the site of a house now belonging to Mr. Barren. Here is a monument in memory of Cassivelaunus; also a mound called Belmont, thrown up at the expense of the late Duke of Chandos.

STANMORE, LITTLE (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of HENDON, hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N. W.) from Edgware; containing 830 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the Rev. G. Mutter, who is also incumbent and impropiator: the great tithes have been commuted for £36. 10., and the incumbent's for £415. The church, situated half a mile from the village, was rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, about 1715, by the Duke of Chandos, whose splendid mansion of Canons was in the parish, but the internal decorations were not completed until 1720. The ceiling and walls were painted by Laguerre; on each side of the altar is a painting of the Nativity, and a dead Christ by Belluchi; and behind it is a recess for the organ, supported by columns of the Corinthian order; in the back ground are paintings of Moses receiving the Law, and Christ preaching. Handel, who resided at Canons as chapel-master, is said to have composed his sacred drama of Esther for its consecration; the anthems used in it were composed by him, and the morning and evening services by Pepusch. On September 25th, 1790, a grand miscellaneous concert of sacred music, selected from Handel's works, was performed to his honour in the church. A vault was constructed on the north side of the chancel by the Duke of Chandos, for the interment of his family; and in a large chamber over it is a monument to his ancestor, James, first duke. The free grammar school was established and endowed by Sir Lancelot Lake, in 1656, and the income is derived from a field producing £50 per annum. Almshouses were founded in 1640, by Dame Mary Lake, for seven persons, having an endowment of about £45 per annum.—See EDGWARE.

STANNEY, GREAT, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N.) from Chester; containing 53 inhabitants. This liberty, which formerly belonged to the adjacent abbey of Stanlaw, comprises some excellent arable and meadow land, in which is found marl of very good quality, composed of alluvial matter, in great abundance; large trees have been dug up in the meadows. The ancient mansion here of the family of Bunbury, called Rake Hall, has been repaired by its present owner, Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart.; several farm-buildings have been erected, and the roads much improved. The Chester canal passes through the liberty.

STANNEY, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of STOKE, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Chester; containing 163 inhabitants. A free school was founded by Sir Thomas Bunbury, Bart., who endowed it with £5 per annum.

STANNINGFIELD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of THIEDWASTRY, W. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 327 inhabitants. It comprises 1344 acres, of which 37 are woodland. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 0. $2\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of J. Gage Rokewoode, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £345, and the glebe comprises 44 acres. The body of the church is of Norman architecture. Mrs. Inchbald, the ingenious novelist and dramatic writer, who died in 1821, was a native of this place.

STANNINGHALL, a hamlet, and formerly a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH, hundred of TAVERHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (N.) from Norwich; containing 53 inhabitants. It comprises 314*a*. 2*p*., chiefly arable, forming part of the Hall farm. The living was a discharged rectory, now annexed to that of Frettenham, and valued in the king's books at £1. 13. 6½. The church has been long in ruins.

STANNINGLEY, a hamlet, partly in the township of BRAMLEY, parish of LEEDS, and partly in the townships of CALVERLEY cum FARSLEY, parish of CALVERLEY, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Leeds. This place, which is supposed to have taken its name from its situation in a district abounding in stone, contains about 4000 inhabitants, and consists chiefly of one long street, built on an eminence overlooking the beautiful vale of Aire-dale, and near the source of a tributary to the river Aire. The houses in the village, and the fences in the adjoining lands, are of stone from the neighbouring quarries; the inhabitants are employed in the worsted and woollen manufactures, in raising and working stone, and in iron-works. A church, dedicated to St. Thomas, and containing 600 sittings, has been built in that part of the hamlet which is in the township of Bramley, on a site given from the glebe land by the Rev. Thomas Furbank, M.A., incumbent of Bramley; it is a handsome structure in the Norman style, erected at an expense of £1700, raised by subscription, and was consecrated on the 29th of March, 1841, by the Bishop of Ripon. Of £300, a grant from the Diocesan Society, £200 are appropriated to the endowment.

STANNINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and W. division of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTH-UMBERLAND, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Morpeth; containing 1121 inhabitants, and comprising the seven townships of Blagdon, Bellasis, Clifton with Coldwell, Duddo, Plessey with Shotton, Saltwick, and Stannington. The parish formed part of the extensive barony of Merlay, and among the proprietors have been the noble families of Greystock and Dacre. It is situated on the river Blyth, over which is a modern stone bridge; the soil is stiff, but generally fertile, and well fenced and tilled, and the substratum abounds with coal, and with freestone. The vale of Stannington is beautifully picturesque, and the village stands in a bold and tolerably dry situation, on the road from Newcastle to Morpeth; it is large and pleasant. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4.; patron, the Bishop of Durham; impropiator, Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart. The great tithes have been commuted for £852, and the vicarial for £342, with a glebe of 21 acres. The church, an ancient structure, had formerly a chantry; one of the windows exhibits some fine specimens of stained glass, inserted in 1772, by the late Sir M. W. Ridley. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school has an endowment of £11 per annum.

STANNINGTON, YORK.—See STAININGTON.

STANSFIELD (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5¼ miles (N. by E.) from Clare; containing 510 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £481, and the glebe comprises 68 acres. There is a small place of worship for dissenters, of ancient date. Dr. Samuel Ogden, a learned divine, who died in 1778, was rector of the parish.

STANSFIELD, a township, in the chapelry of HERTONSTALL, parish of HALIFAX, and union of TODMORDEN, wapentake of MORLEY, W. riding of YORK, 4½ miles (S. W.) from Hebden-Bridge; containing 8466 inhabitants. The township is bounded on the north and north-west by the county of Lancaster, on the east by the Colden brook, and on the south by the river Calder; and comprises by computation 5920 acres, chiefly the property of the Earl of Scarborough, who is lord of the manor. Nearly 2000 acres of moor and common were inclosed in 1816, but have not yet been wholly brought into cultivation; the surface is boldly varied, rising in some parts into hills of considerable elevation, on the summits of several of which are Druidical remains; and in the township is also a large cluster of rocks, called the Bride Stones. There is no village of the name properly so called, but numerous detached houses and scattered hamlets extend to the town of Todmorden, of which a considerable portion is within this township. The inhabitants are partly engaged in agriculture; the soil is fertile, under good management, and the waste lands are rapidly coming into a state of profitable cultivation; ashlar stone, of good quality for building, is found in abundance, and is extensively quarried. The cotton, woollen, worsted, and silk manufactures, for which there are several extensive mills and factories, are carried on; and many persons are employed in the hand-loom weaving of cotton and worsted goods. The Rochdale canal joins the township; and the Manchester and Leeds railway passes through it, for three miles, to Eastwood, where is a station, at which a large tavern has been built. The vicarial tithes were commuted in 1815 for land. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. At Crosstoné is a school, in which six free scholars are educated, and which is also much frequented by the children of the neighbourhood; and there are some small bequests for the poor. The ancient manor-house of the Eastwoods, rebuilt in 1600, is now occupied by a farmer; and the site of another old manor-house is still pointed out at a place called Castle Hill, the summit of which was formerly crowned with a castle.

STANSTEAD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of MALLING, hundred of WROTHAM, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 2 miles (N.) from Wrotham; containing 427 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, annexed to the sinecure rectory of Wrotham; net income, £500.

STANSTEAD (St. James), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 10 miles (S.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 387 inhabitants. The parish is situated near the border of the county of Essex, upon a tributary of the river Stour, and to the west of the road between Bury and Sudbury. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. S. Sheen: the tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe comprises 24 acres.

STANSTEAD, ABBOTS' (St. James), a parish, in the union of WARE, hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 2¾ miles (N. E. by E.) from Hoddesdon; containing 1017 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the navigable river Lea, on the north by the Ashe, and on the east and south-east by the navigable Stort; being nearly insulated. The Rye House here, noted for the plot laid in 1683, against the lives of Charles II. and James, Duke of York, was built in the reign of Henry VI., by Andrew Ogard; but the only remains of the structure now existing are an embattled gate-house of brick, with a handsome stone doorway, long since converted into a workhouse. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; patron and incumbent, the Rev. T. Feilde; improprator, D. Hankin, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £301. 10., and the vicarial for £92, with a glebe of 39 acres. The church, situated on an eminence one mile south-east from the village, was built in 1578, by Ralph Baesh. Almshouses for six widows were founded in 1636, by Sir Edward Baesh, who endowed them with lands and a rent-charge of £25, and also established a free grammar school with £20 per annum.

STANSTEAD ST. MARGARET'S, a parish, in the union of WARE, hundred and county of HERTFORD, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Hoddesdon; containing 92 inhabitants. The parish is situated between the New River and the Lea. A college, or chantry, for a master and four Secular priests, was founded here in 1315, by Sir William de Goldington, Knt., in consequence of the impoverishment of the tithes, and rights of the church; but it was dissolved in 1431, from neglect and misapplication of its revenue. The living is a donative curacy; net income, £6; patron and improprator, the Rev. T. S. Pratt, whose tithes have been commuted for £87. 3. 8.

STANSTED-MOUNTFITCHET (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BISHOP-STORTFORD, partly in the hundred of CLAVERING, but chiefly in that of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Bishop-Stortford; containing, with the hamlet of Bentfield, 1637 inhabitants, of whom 1141 are in Stansted township. The parish takes its name from a branch of the Roman road between Bishop-Stortford and Colchester, which passes through it, and its adjunct from its possessor at the time of the Conquest, Robert Gernon, surnamed Montfitchet, who erected a castle here, of which there are still some remains. It is about forty miles in circumference, comprehending a great variety of surface, and is generally well cultivated: the village, which is extensive, and contains many well-built houses, is chiefly on the road to Newmarket, but partly on that to Takely; and a fair is held in it on the 12th of May. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of E. F. Maitland, Esq., who is also improprator, and whose tithes have been commuted for £315. 15., and those of the vicar for £305. 14.; there are 2 acres of glebe. The church, a small edifice with a tower of brick, has a very ancient font rudely sculptured, some interesting architectural details, and several monuments and brasses. There is a place of worship for Independents. About two miles from the church was the priory of Thremhall, founded by Richard de Montfitchet, and dedicated to St. James.

STANTHORNE, a township, in the parish of DAVENHAM; union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 1¼ mile (W. N. W.) from Middlewich; containing 169 inhabitants.

STANTON, a chapelry, in the parish of YOULGRAVE, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 3¾ miles (N.) from Winster; containing 691 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1809. A church has recently been built.

STANTON, with NEWHALL, a township, in the parish of STAPENHILL, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, 3 miles (S. S. E.) from Burton; containing 1531 inhabitants.

STANTON (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Winchcomb; containing 319 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Snowshill annexed, valued in the king's books at £17. 11. 5½.; net income, £377; patron and incumbent, the Rev. R. Wynniatt.

STANTON, a township, in the parish of LONG HORSLEY, union, and W. division of the ward, of MORPETH, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N. W. by W.) from Morpeth; containing 128 inhabitants. This place, from the discovery of numerous foundations of buildings in the immediate vicinity, appears to have been formerly of greater extent and importance: among the earlier proprietors were the Merlays, Corbets, Mitfords, and Fenwicks. The ancient manor-house, the seat of the last-named family, has been converted into a house for the reception of the poor; and a chapel which stood a little to the north of it, has altogether disappeared. The township comprises about 1875 acres, divided into several small farms; the surrounding scenery is pleasingly varied, and from an eminence on the north bank of the Font is a beautiful prospect over the valley of Witton-by-the-Waters, and the woods of Langshaws and Nunriding. The substratum contains coal and limestone; a colliery is in operation, and there are several quarries of limestone, and kilns for burning it into lime.

STANTON, a township, in the parish of ELLASTONE, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3½ miles (W.) from Ashbourn; containing 393 inhabitants. Gilbert Sheldon, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here in 1598.

STANTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2½ miles (N. E.) from Ixworth; containing, with Stanton St. John, 1029 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3254a. 1r. 12p., and is on the road from London to Norwich. A fair for cattle takes place on the 31st of May and following day; and petty-sessions are held on the several Mondays of the month, except the first, when they are held at Ixworth. The living is a discharged rectory, with St. John united, valued in the king's books at £9. 6., and in the patronage of R. E. Lofft, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £975, and the glebe comprises 36 acres, with a residence. The church is chiefly in the decorated English style, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Edward Capell, editor of Shakspeare's works, was interred here.

STANTON (St. John), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. E.) from Ixworth. The living is a discharged rectory, united to Stanton All Saints, and valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 10.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777. The church is a handsome edifice.

STANTON ST. BERNARD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by N.) from Devizes; containing 362 inhabitants. The Kennet and Avon canal passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £222; patron and impropiator, the Earl of Pembroke. The church is a neat edifice, lately rebuilt at an expense of £500, defrayed by subscription.

STANTON-BURY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Newport-Pagnell; containing 42 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8.; net income, £54; patron and impropiator, Earl Spencer. The church exhibits many Norman remains, particularly a fine and richly-decorated arch between the nave and the chancel.

STANTON-BY-BRIDGE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Derby; containing 205 inhabitants. The distinguishing appellation of this place arises from an ancient bridge over the Trent, termed Swarkstone bridge, which connects two parishes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 8½.; net income, £345; patron, Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church is partly Norman, and partly in the decorated English style.

STANTON-BY-DALE (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of MORLESTON and LITCHURCH, S. division of the county of DERBY, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Ilkeston; containing 480 inhabitants. It is intersected by the Erewash and Nutbrook canals, and comprises about 1300 acres, of which the larger portion is pasture and meadow, with a little wood, and the remainder arable. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with the chapel of Dale-Abbey; net income, £195; patrons, Trustees appointed by the proprietors of the lordship. The church is a plain neat edifice, with a tower. Almshouses for six persons were founded in 1711, by a bequest from Joseph Middlemore, with an endowment of more than £100 per annum.

STANTON-DREW (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (W. by S.) from Pensford; containing 704 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Pensford St. Thomas annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 8½.; patron and appropriator, the Archdeacon of Bath. The great tithes have been commuted for £234. 18., and the vicarial for £237; the appropriate glebe comprises 48 acres, and the vicarial one acre. Richard Jones, Esq., in 1668, bequeathed to his executors a large sum of money for charitable uses, with which they purchased an estate, one-fifth to be appropriated to the instruction of poor children of this parish and that of Stowey, and another fifth to the apprenticing of boys of this parish only: the portion allotted to Stanton-Drew is £72 per annum. Near the church is an extensive Druidical temple of three circles of stones, of which the diameters are respectively 120, 43, and 32 yards, spreading itself over ten acres of ground; and in this parish, also, is the hamlet of Belton, supposed to be a corruption of Belgeton, or the town of the Belgæ, being situated on the line of the Wansdyke, the ancient boundary of their territory.

STANTON, FEN.—See FEN-STANTON.

STANTON-FITZWARREN (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Cricklade and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Highworth; containing 170 inhabitants. It comprises 1340a. 11p., of which the substratum contains stone, quarried for building and for mending the roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 6.; net income, £174; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Dr. Trenchard. The tithes have been commuted for land, under an act of inclosure; the glebe comprises 58 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, with a tower, on which is the date 1003.

STANTON ST. GABRIEL, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, union of BRIDPORT, Bridport division of DORSET, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Bridport; containing 106 inhabitants. It is bounded on the south by the English Channel; and on the shore, upon one of the highest hills in the county, a signal staff has been erected. The living is annexed, with those of Chideock and Marshwood, to the vicarage of Whitchurch-Canonicorum. A church of which the first stone was laid in July, 1840, has been completed at the expense of the Hon. and Rev. W. T. Law, prebendary and chancellor of Wells, being the third church built at the cost of that gentleman.

STANTON-HARCOURT (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W.) from OXFORD; containing, with the hamlet of Sutton, 665 inhabitants. This place was granted by Adeliza, second queen of Henry I., to her kinswoman, Milicent, wife of Richard de Camville, whose daughter Isabel married Robert de Harcourt, from whom it derived the adjunct to its name, and in whose descendants the manor has remained for more than 600 years. It is situated near the confluence of the small river Windrush with the Thames, and abounds in interesting scenery. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 13. 4.; net income, £136; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land in 1773. The church is a handsome and venerable cruciform structure, chiefly in the decorated English style, with a lofty square embattled tower, and some Norman portions; the principal entrance is through a large Norman door-case, contiguous to which is a smaller for women only; the windows in the lower part of the tower are Norman, and those in the upper stages of more recent date. The nave is Norman, and is lighted by a range of clerestory windows in that style: on the north side of the chancel are a rich altar-tomb, and a recessed monument to Maud, daughter of John, Lord Grey, of Rotherfield, with her recumbent effigy in the costume of the time of Richard II.; and on the south side is the sepulchral chapel of the Harcourt family. There is a chapel of ease at South Leigh, in the parish; and a school is supported by the proceeds of benefactions, amounting to £14 per annum. Only a small portion of the ancient mansion of the Harcourts is now remaining, and is in the occupation of a farmer: the chapel, with a chamber over it, and the adjoining tower, are in a very good state of preservation. The tower contains three apartments, one above another, of which the uppermost is called Pope's study, from the poet having passed much of his time in it while employed in his translation of Homer, during the progress of which he spent two summers at Stanton-Harcourt, where he was occasionally visited by Gay, who was then at Cokethorpe, a neighbouring seat of Lord Harcourt's. The kitchen, which bears marks of remote antiquity, was repaired about the reign of Henry IV., and has a great resemblance to the abbot's kitchen at Glastonbury. Some remains here, called the Devil's Quoits, probably commemorate a victory obtained by the Saxon king Cynegils, and his son Cwichelm, over the Britons.

STANTON ST. JOHN (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGDON, county of OXFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oxford; containing 510 inhabitants. This place takes the adjunct to its name from the family of St. John, who held the manor in the reign of Edward III. A hill in the neighbourhood, called Irondon hill, is supposed to have obtained that appellation from Ireton, who lived there after his marriage with the daughter of Cromwell. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 9. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £287; patrons, the Warden and Scholars of New College, Oxford. The church is in the early English style, with a handsome square embattled tower; part of the north aisle is inclosed by a richly-decorated screen, and used as a vestry. Lady Elizabeth Holford, in 1717, gave £500 in support of a school. About a mile to the north-east of the church is the hamlet of Woodpury, in which are some interesting remains of the ancient village and church of that name; and Roman tiles and pottery, with two coins, have been dug up.

STANTON, LACY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from Ludlow; containing 1540 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises by measurement 7000 acres, is situated on the river Corve, and the road from Ludlow to Wenlock also passes through it. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16; net income, £485; patron and impropiator, Earl Craven. The church, an ancient structure, has been repewed. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription. In the hamlet of Hope is a petrifying spring.

STANTON, LONG (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of NORTHSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Cambridge; containing 409 inhabitants, and comprising 1900 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £155; patron, the Bishop of Ely; impropiators, the Hutton family. The tithes were commuted for land in 1811; the glebe comprises 45 acres, with a house. The church is an ancient structure. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. £27 per annum, arising from bequests, are appropriated to the poor. The bishops of Ely formerly had a palace here, at which Queen Elizabeth was entertained on the day after her visit to the university of Cambridge, in August 1564.

STANTON, LONG (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of NORTHSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Cambridge; containing 139 inhabitants, and comprising about 838 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. $8\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £237; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Cambridge. The church is a small thatched building.

STANTON, LONG (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BRIDGENORTH, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Much Wenlock; containing 327 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 2211 acres, of which the substratum contains stone of good quality for building: the river Corve flows through. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7; net income, £134; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Hereford. The church is an ancient cruciform structure.

STANTON-ON-THE-WOLDS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BINGHAM, N. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Nottingham; containing 154 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1300 acres, and is bounded on the east by the old Fosse-road: the village is irregularly built, consisting chiefly of scattered dwellings. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £2. 13. 4.; net income, £109; patron, Sir Robert H. Bromley, Bart.: the glebe comprises 125 acres. The church is a very ancient and plain edifice.

STANTON-PRIOR (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of KEYNSHAM, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Bath; containing 148 inhabitants. The parish comprises 841 acres, of which 83 are common or waste. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 1. $10\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of W. G. Langton, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £187, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. On a long isolated eminence called Stanton Bury, are the remains of an ancient intrenchment, inclosing more than thirty acres: it has been thought a work of the Romans, some of their coins having been found near it; but, being situated on the Wansdyke, it had probably a more remote origin, and was only subsequently occupied by them.

STANTON ST. QUINTIN (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of CHIPPENHAM, hundred of MALMESBURY, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Chippenham; containing 302 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1600 acres; the soil is various, and the substratum furnishes limestone, and stone which is used for tiling. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. $7\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £312; patron, the Earl of Radnor. The tithes were commuted for land and an annual money payment in 1782. The church is an ancient Norman structure, and contains some fine details of that style. There are remains of a monastic building, now a farm-house, of which the old hall has an ascent from the outside.

STANTON-STONEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by N.)

from Hinckley; containing 663 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1470 acres: there are some quarries of stone, used chiefly for mending the roads. The village is situated near the road from Leicester to Hinckley, and the inhabitants are partly employed in weaving stockings at their own dwellings. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½.; net income, £348; patron, the Marquess of Hastings. The tithes were commuted for land in 1764; the glebe comprises 210 acres, with a house.

STANTON-UNDER-BARDON, a chapelry, in the parish of THORNTON, union of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 9 miles (W. N. W.) from Leicester; containing, with Horsepool, 315 inhabitants. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1779. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. £40 per annum bequeathed by Luke Jackson and St. John Cole, Esq., are distributed among the poor.

STANTON-UPON-ARROW (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of KINGTON, partly in the hundred of STRETFORD, but chiefly in that of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD, 5½ miles (E. N. E.) from Kington; containing 376 inhabitants, and comprising 2925 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; appropriator, Bishop of Hereford. The appropriate tithes have been commuted for £120, the impropriate for £52, and the vicarial for £225; the glebe comprises 35 acres.

STANTON-UPON-HINE-HEATH (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of WEM, Whitechurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 669 inhabitants, of which number 264 are in the township, 5½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Wem. The parish is situated on the river Roden, and comprises 5539a. 1r. 6p., of which the substratum is chiefly sandstone, of inferior quality, quarried for building purposes. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 10., and in the patronage of Lord Hill, who is also impropriator: the vicarial tithes have been commuted for £175, and the impropriate for £95. 15., and there are 62 acres of glebe. The church is an ancient structure in the later English style.

STANTON-WYVILLE.—See STONTON-WYVILLE.

STANWAY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of LEXDEN and WINSTREE, Colchester division of the hundred of LEXDEN, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Colchester; containing 807 inhabitants. This parish, which is about nine miles in circumference, forming part of a highly cultivated district, appears, from the remains of a second church, to have been formerly divided into the two parishes of Magna and Parva. A fair is held on the 23rd of April. The living is a rectory, with the chapel of Albright, valued in the king's books at £10. 17. 6., and in the gift of Magdalen College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £776, and the glebe comprises 79 acres. The church, situated near the London road, is a small ancient edifice, with a wooden turret. Here is the workhouse for the union of Lexden and Winstree, built in 1837, at a cost of £6500: the union comprises 35 parishes or places, and contains a population of 20,881. A number of large bones and other remains, probably of elephants brought over by Claudius in the year 43, were found in 1764, lying in a stratum of sea sand and shells.

STANWAY (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Winchcomb; containing, with the hamlet of Taddington, 384 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3023 acres; the soil is in some parts light, and in others a deep clay; the surface is generally hilly, and the substratum limestone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and has a net income of £220; the patronage and impropriation belong to Lady Elcho. The tithes were commuted for land in 1810; the glebe comprises 163 acres.

STANWELL (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 2¼ miles (N. E. by N.) from Staines; containing, with part of Colnbrook chapelry, 1495 inhabitants. The parish comprises by estimation 3963 acres, of which 2466 are arable, 1143 meadow and pasture, and 31 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £301; impropriator, Sir John Gibbon, Bart., and others. The church is principally in the later English style. There is a place of worship for Independents; also a school for boys, endowed in 1624, by Thomas, Lord Knevitt.

STANWICK (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTONE, hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Higham-Ferrers; containing 577 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Nene, and comprises 1953a. 13p., of which 1405 acres are arable, 526 pasture, and 21 woodland; the soil is partly clay, alternated with sand and lime, and the surface generally level. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 9. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £373. The church, originally of Norman architecture, exhibits portions in the early, decorated, and later English styles, and has an octangular tower, strengthened with buttresses of elegant design, and surmounted by an enriched spire. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Richard Cumberland, the dramatist, was born here in 1732.

STANWICK ST. JOHN (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of RICHMOND, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 8½ miles (W. by S.) from Darlington; containing, with the townships of Aldborough, Caldwell, and East Layton, 907 inhabitants, of whom 37 are in the township of Stanwick. This parish, which extends nearly to the river Tees, comprises by computation 5800 acres of arable, meadow, and pasture, interspersed with tracts of woodland and plantations; the surface is beautifully diversified, the soil generally fertile, and game of every kind is found in abundance. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £58. 16. 8.; patron, John Wharton, Esq. The church is a very ancient structure, covered with ivy, and contains some interesting monuments, among which are two finely-executed marble statues of Sir Hugh and Lady Smithson, and, near the pulpit, a beautiful monument erected by Lord Prudhoe, in 1838, to the memory of three daughters of the late Duke of Northumberland. A chapel has just been erected at Caldwell, by the Countess of Bridgewater, by whom it has been endowed. There is an in-trenchment inclosing an area of nearly 1000 acres, ascribed to the ancient Britons, to the Romans, and to the Scots; but nothing of its history is distinctly known.

STANWIX (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CARLISLE, partly in CUMBERLAND ward, but chiefly in ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing, with the townships of Cargo, Etterby, Houghton, Linstock, Rickerby, Stainton, and Tarraby, 2088 inhabitants, of whom 789 are in Stanwix township, $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile (N.) from Carlisle. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Eden, which is crossed by a handsome stone bridge, connecting it with the city of Carlisle: the village is beautifully situated. A soft freestone abounds in the neighbourhood. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £264; patron, the Bishop of Carlisle, who, with the Dean and Chapter, is appropriator. The old church, lately rebuilt, was erected upon the site, and out of the ruins, of the Congavata of the Romans, of which station Severus' Wall formed the northern rampart, and near which many altars and inscriptions have been found. A district church was erected at Houghton in 1841.

STAPELEY, a township, in the parish of WYBUNBURY, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. E.) from Nantwich; containing 448 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £14. 7., and the appropriate for £90, payable to the Bishop of Lichfield.

STAPELEY, with HILLSIDE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of ODIHAM, union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Hartford-Bridge; containing 411 inhabitants.

STAPENHILL (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERNY, 1 mile (S. E.) from Burton; containing, with the chapelry of Cauldwell, and the township of Stanton with Newhall, 2261 inhabitants. The parish comprises by survey 3426 acres, of which 1656 are in the township of Stapenhill; the soil is chiefly of strong quality, well adapted for wheat and beans, with some portions of good turnip soil; the surface is hilly, and the substratum abounds with coal, of which there are several extensive mines in operation. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Marquess of Anglesey: the tithes have been commuted for £137, and the glebe comprises 80 acres, with a pleasant residence. The old church, which had become dilapidated, was taken down and rebuilt in 1839, at the expense of the incumbent, the Rev. John Clay; it is a chaste and handsome structure in the early English style, beautifully situated on an eminence which overhangs the Trent. A church has been erected at Newhall, at the cost of the family of Clay, and was consecrated on the 9th of July, 1833: the living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £100, and in the patronage of the founders; and the entire cost of the church and its endowment, with a parsonage-house and school, was £7000. There is a chapel of ease at Cauldwell, which has been recently improved by the addition of a neat tower, at the expense of the vicar and the parishioners. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

STAPLE, with CHICKSGROVE, a tything, in the parish and union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS.

STAPLE-FITZPAINE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Taunton; containing 361 inhabitants. It consists of 2864 acres, of which 627 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, with Bickenhall annexed, valued in the king's books at £17. 14. 2., and in the gift of Lord Portman. The tithes of Staple-Fitzpaine have been commuted for £383. 10., and the glebe comprises 50 acres; the tithes of Bickenhall have been commuted for £200, and the glebe comprises 8 acres.

STAPLE-NEXT-WINGHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of EASTRY, hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E. by S.) from Wingham; containing 562 inhabitants. This parish, which consists of about 978 acres, is chiefly inhabited by market-gardeners, who supply the watering-places in the Isle of Thanet with vegetables. The living is annexed to the rectory of Adisham: the tithes have been commuted for £599, and there is a glebe of 2 acres. The church contains a very old font, and many handsome monuments to the Lynch family, formerly residing at Grove, an ancient mansion in the parish.

STAPLEFORD (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of THRIPLow, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Cambridge; containing 447 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1673 acres, of which a small portion is meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable: the population is partly employed in the manufacture of straw-plat. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 9.; net income, £181; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1812.

STAPLEFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of HERTFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Hertford; containing 259 inhabitants. It comprises about 1440 acres of land, of which the soil is gravelly, and the surface alternated with hill and dale; the small river Bene flows through the lands, and a large watercourse, called the New Cut, has been made at the expense of S. Smith, Esq., to diminish the violence of the floods. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Mr. Smith: the tithes have been commuted for £250, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is an ancient structure, with some details of the Norman style.

STAPLEFORD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 184 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2171a. 6p.; the soil is chiefly clay, and the subsoil principally gravel; the surface is partly hilly, and partly flat. The river Wreake and the Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal pass through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with the rectory of Saxby, and valued in the king's books at £13. The church was erected in 1783, by Robert, fourth earl of Harborough, and contains some fine monuments to the Sherard family, among which is one by Rysbrach, in memory of Bennet, first earl. An hospital was founded in 1732, by the first earl, for six tenants, and endowed with £48 per annum, subsequently augmented by the fourth earl and Lord Sherard, with £100 per annum, for eight tenants.

STAPLEFORD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTH-BY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Newark; containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 3. 4.; net income, £68; patron and impropiator, Lord Middleton.

STAPLEFORD (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTON, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Nottingham; containing 1837 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the west and north-west by the river Erewash, comprises by measurement 1200 acres; the soil is chiefly a rich clay; the surface is partly hilly, and the scenery pleasingly diversified. The village, which is finely situated on the Erewash, is spacious, and the population is partly employed in the stocking manufacture. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £120. The church underwent a thorough repair in 1785. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. An obelisk, apparently of Saxon construction, and a Druidical monument called the Hemlock Stone, are the only remains of antiquity. Stapleford Hall was the residence of Sir John Borlase Warren, the distinguished admiral.

STAPLEFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WILTON, hundred of BRANCH and DOLE, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Wilton; containing 296 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £105; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Windsor.

STAPLEFORD, ABBOT'S (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Epping; containing 498 inhabitants. The parish is separated from Tawney-Stapleford by the river Roden, over which was once a ford that may have given rise to its name; it takes its distinguishing affix from having belonged to the monastery of St. Edmondsbury, in the county of Suffolk. The fine old mansion of Albyns, the residence of the Abdy family, built by Inigo Jones, is situated here. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 15., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £483. The church has, in the east window, a very ancient figure of Edward the Confessor in stained glass, removed by Dr. Pearce, Bishop of Rochester, from the palace of Havering-atte-Bower. There are also monuments to the family of Abdy; to John, Lord Fortescue, one of the justices of the court of common pleas; and his son, Dormer, the last lord; and in the churchyard is a monument to Sir H. Gould, also a justice of the common pleas. A school is endowed with three old cottages, and £25 a year. Bishop Pearce, and Dr. Godfrey Goodman, Bishop of Gloucester, were rectors of the parish; and John Day, author of Sandford and Merton, resided here.

STAPLEFORD, BRUEN, a township, in the parish of TARVIN, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Second division of the hundred of EDDISBURY, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Tarporley; containing 165 inhabitants. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £56. 6. 6., and the appropriate for £98. 15., payable to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield.

It comprises 1321 acres, of which 48 are common or waste. The tithes have been commuted for £142. 1. 10., of which £61. 19. 10. are payable to the vicar, and £80. 2. to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield.

STAPLEFORD, TAWNEY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of ONGAR, S. division of ESSEX, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Epping; containing 350 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1570 acres, of which 40 are common or waste land: within its limits is Suttons, the residence of the family of Smijth. The living is a rectory, with that of Mount Thoydon united, valued in the king's books at £15. 8. 9., and in the gift of Sir John Smijth, Bart.: the tithes of Tawney-Stapleford have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises $127\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a small edifice, with a belfry turret and a spire of wood.

STAPLEGATE, an extra-parochial district, forming the northern suburb of the city of Canterbury, in the union of BLEAN, hundred of WESTGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT; containing 253 inhabitants.

STAPLEGROVE, a parish, in the union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Taunton; containing 471 inhabitants. This parish, which was separated from Taunton in 1554, comprises 1059a. 3r. 6p., beautifully situated in a richly-wooded portion of the picturesque vale of Taunton-Dean: the population is partly employed in the silk manufacture, in which, on an average, about 100 persons are engaged. The Grand Western canal from Bridgwater to Tiverton passes along the southern boundary of the parish, and the Bristol and Exeter railway through it, in a line nearly parallel with the canal. There is a private asylum for insane patients. The living is a rectory, in the gift of Vincent Stuckey, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £205, and there is an excellent glebe-house. The church is an ancient structure, with a square embattled tower; a gallery has been recently built, and the edifice contains a monument to Mr. Southey, uncle of the poet.

STAPLEHURST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MAIDSTONE, partly in the hundred of CRANBROOKE, and partly in that of MARDEN, Lower division of the lathe of SCRAY, W. division of KENT, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Cranbrooke; containing 1591 inhabitants. A fair for cattle, corn, and hops, is held on October 11th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 5. 10., and in the gift of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £1199. 15., and the glebe comprises one acre. There is a place of worship for Independents. Two schools are supported for about £60 per annum, arising from the bequests of Lancelot Bathurst in 1539, and John Gibson, Esq., in 1707.

STAPLETON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of LONGTOWN, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND; containing, with the townships of Bellbank, Solport, and Trough, 1170 inhabitants, of which number 550 are in Stapleton township, 8 miles (N.) from Brampton. The parish is situated on the river Leven or Line, over which is a neat bridge, and comprises about 13,980 acres, whereof about 50 or 60 are woodland, and the remainder arable and pasture in nearly equal portions: The soil is generally cold, lying on a substratum of retentive clay; the surface is hilly, and the scenery varied. On the north bank of the river are the remains of Shank Castle; and in the vicinity coal has been found, of which a mine is in operation. An act for dividing and inclosing Wakeyhill common here, was passed in 1842. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £1. 8. 11½; net income, £98; patron, the Earl of Carlisle. The church was rebuilt in 1829.

STAPLETON (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of CLIFTON, hundred of BARTON-REGIS, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2½ miles (N. E. by N.) from Bristol; containing, with the village of Fishponds, 3944 inhabitants. This parish is situated on the north-western angle of the South Gloucester and Somerset coal-field, and is bounded on the north side by a range of hills from 150 to 200 feet in height, to which elevation the strata of the coal measures on the south side are lifted up by a mass of mill-stone grit. The road from Bristol to Wotton-under-Edge and Gloucester passes through the village of Stapleton; and another from the same city to Sodbury, Cirencester, and Oxford, through the village of Fishponds. The parish comprises by measurement 2465 acres, and is traversed by the river Frome, flowing through a richly-wooded glen, occasionally interspersed with precipitous rocks; the soil is a stone brash. The district abounds with valuable Penant stone, of which considerable quarries are wrought, and there are several coal-mines in operation: the manufacture of hats, formerly extensive, is now on a small scale. The living is a perpetual curacy, lately endowed by Sir John Smyth, Bart., who is patron and improPRIATOR, with £1000, and by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with £56 per annum; total net income, £112: the tithes have been commuted for £298. 12. The church is a small neat edifice, with a tower crowned by pinnacles. A chapel of ease was built at Fishponds, by subscription, in 1817: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron, the Rev. H. Shute. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Mary Webb, in 1729, bequeathed £450, which sum, with subsequent benefactions, produces an income of £42. 10., appropriated chiefly to instruction. About half way between Stapleton and Fishponds is an extensive building, formerly occupied as a depôt for French prisoners of war. The late Mrs. Hannah More was born in a house now occupied as a free school; and the Rev. John Foster, author of some Essays, resided in the village.

STAPLETON, a township, in the parish of PRESTEIGN, union of KNIGHTON, hundred of WIGMORE, county of HEREFORD; containing 155 inhabitants, and comprising 1271 acres.

STAPLETON, a chapelry, in the parish of BARWELL, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Hinckley; containing 245 inhabitants. It comprises 1299a. 1r. 7p., nearly equally divided between arable and pasture, the soil of which is light. A rent-charge of £240 has been awarded as a commutation for the tithes, and there is a glebe of 53½ acres. The chapel is dedicated to St. Martin, STAPLETON (ST. JOHN), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, hundred of CONDOVER, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury; containing 257 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Hereford, and comprises 2432 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Hon. H. W. Powys: the tithes have been commuted for £464; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 10½ acres. An embankment in the parish is supposed to be Roman.

STAPLETON, a hamlet, in the parish of MARTOCK, union of YEOVIL, hundred of MARTOCK, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 147 inhabitants.

STAPLETON, a township, partly in the parish of BARTON, but chiefly in that of CROFT, wapentake of GILLING-EAST, union of DARLINGTON, N. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (S. W.) from Darlington; containing 117 inhabitants. It is on the south side of Teesdale, and comprises about 920 acres of land. The village is pleasantly situated on the bank of the Tees; and on the green stands the trunk of a large elm which has weathered the storms of several centuries. The tithes have been commuted for £162. 13., of which £160 are payable to the rector of Croft, and £2. 13. to the vicar of Gilling.

STAPLETON, a township, in the parish of DARLINGTON, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLD-CROSS, W. riding of YORK, 4¼ miles (S. E. by E.) from Poutefract; containing 138 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 1760 acres of fertile land in high cultivation. Stapleton Park, the seat of the late John Watson Barton, Esq., was originally the property of Edward Lascelles, Esq., who succeeded to the title of Baron Harewood in 1796, and erected the present spacious and elegant Hall, in the Grecian style, with a handsome portico of four Ionic columns, supporting an entablature and cornice surmounted by a triangular pediment. A portico of the Doric order, which now forms the principal entrance, was added by the Hon. Edward Robert Petre, who, in 1833, sold the estate to Mr. Barton; the Park is richly wooded, and watered by a rivulet.

STARBOTTON, a township, in the parish of KETTLEWELL, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 17 miles (N. E. by N.) from Settle; containing 192 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2520 acres, situated in the deep and narrow part of Wharfedale: the village is north of Kettlewell, about two miles higher up the dale.

STARCROSS, a port and ecclesiastical district, in the parishes of KENTON and DAWLISH, unions of ST. THOMAS and NEWTON-ABBOTT, hundred of EXMINSTER, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 1½ mile (W. by N.) from Exmouth; containing 936 inhabitants. This place is situated on the western bank of the river Exe, near its influx into the English Channel; the surrounding country is richly diversified, and on an eminence is a conspicuous landmark called Belvidere, erected in 1773 by the Earl of Devon, and consisting of a lofty triangular tower, with an hexagonal turret rising from each of the angles. From the advantages of its situation and the beauty of the scenery, it is much frequented as a bathing-place; it is spacious and well built, and intersected by the road between Exeter and Teignmouth, and a pleasure-fair is held in it on the Wednesday in Whitsun-week. The trade consists principally in the importation of coal and timber, for the landing of which a convenient quay has been constructed. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £120; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, and Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church, which was consecrated on the 4th of February, 1828, is a neat substantial structure, containing 680 sittings. An ancient chapel at Cofton, originally founded in the 14th century, and which had for nearly eighty years been in a state of dilapidation, was restored by the Earl of Devon to its pristine elegance, and opened for divine service on the 9th of Jan. 1839.

STARSTON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of DEPWAD, hundred of EARSHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Harleston; containing 482 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2198*a*. 2*r*. 30*p*., of which, 1703 acres are arable, 368 meadow and pasture, and 28 woodland. The village is pleasantly situated on the road from Harleston to Norwich, and contains many handsome houses. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the patronage of the Howard family, who must present a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £651, and the glebe comprises $47\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a house, greatly improved by the present rector. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and contains several interesting monuments.

STARTFORTH (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of TEESDALE, wapentake of GILLING-WEST, N. riding of YORK, $\frac{2}{3}$ of a mile (W. S. W.) from Barnard-Castle; containing, with the townships of Boldron and Eggleston-Abbey, 782 inhabitants. The township is bounded on the north by the river Tees, which separates it from the county of Durham; it comprises 1070 acres, of which two-thirds are pasture, and the rest meadow, with about 30 acres of wood. The surface is undulated, the soil along the river side of a good quality, and in the scenery is embraced a fine view of Barnard-Castle and its fortress, and the hills above the town. The Tees is crossed by a stone bridge of two arches; and there is a bridge of one arch, passing into the township of Westwick. A shoe-thread mill employs about 300 hands. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 0. 10., and in the patronage of the family of Lowther: the great tithes have been commuted for £66. 16., and the vicarial for £112. 5., and the glebe comprises 22 acres. The church is of great antiquity, and was much improved in 1844, when the communion-table, seats, and pulpit were re-arranged; the east window is decorated with brilliant stained glass, presented by R. Harvey, Esq. In the churchyard is a monument to Hannah Latham, who was murdered in 1813.

STATFOLD, a parish, in the union of TAMWORTH, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Tamworth; containing 45 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 450 acres, the property of Stanley Pipe Wolferstan, Esq., lord of the manor; nearly two-thirds of the land are arable, and the remainder pasture, with a moderate portion of ornamental plantation; the soil is generally a red clay, alternated with sandstone. The living is an-nexed to the vicarage of St. Mary, Lichfield: the church, now used only as a chapel for interment, for which purpose it is kept in repair by the proprietor, contains some ancient monuments. This place, under its old name, Stotfold, is one of the prebends in the cathedral, but the revenue has been formed by act of parliament into a Fabric Fund, for repairs, &c., and no prebendary is appointed.

STATHE, a tything, in the parish of STOKE ST. GREGORY, union of TAUNTON, hundred of NORTH CURRY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 629 inhabitants.

STATHERN (St. GUTHLAKE), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 549 inhabitants. This parish, of which the greater part is in the vale of Belvoir, comprises by measurement 2043 acres, whereof 120 are woodland, chiefly plantations, and of the remainder two-thirds are meadow and pasture, and one-third arable; the soil is well adapted for wheat, barley, oats, and beans. The Grantham canal passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 3. $1\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £566; patrons, the Master and Fellows of St. Peter's College, Cambridge: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1792. The church is an ancient structure, containing numerous handsome monuments.

STAUGHTON, GREAT (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT'S, hundred of TOSELAND, county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Kimbolton; containing 1285 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20; net income, £545; patrons, the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford; impropiator, D. Onslow, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents, under acts of inclosure, in 1804 and 1807. A school is endowed with £18. 10. per annum; and an allotment of 24 acres of the town field, awarded for other parcels of land bequeathed for charitable uses, produces £50 yearly.

STAUGHTON, LITTLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT'S, hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, 4 miles (S. by E.) from Kimbolton; containing 485 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres, of which 800 are arable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 8. 4.; net income, £200; patrons, the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

STAUNTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MONMOUTH, hundred of ST. BRIAVELL'S, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (E. by N.) from Monmouth; containing 188 inhabitants. This place derives its name from Stanton (Saxon), "the stony town," or "town of stones;" and in Domesday book mention is made of a castle belonging to Roger de Stanton, the foundations of which were cleared away a few years since. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Wye, and situated on the road from Coleford to Monmouth, and comprises about 1500 acres, of which 1000 are wood; it abounds in limestone and red sandstone, and mines were formerly in operation. On a well-wooded hill, from which are beautiful views, is the remarkable rocking-stone called the Buckstone, 24 feet high, 57 feet in circumference at the upper surface, and 3 feet 3 inches at the base. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of E. Machen, Esq., with a net income of £241, and a good parsonage-house; the glebe consists of about 12 acres. The church is a cruciform structure, chiefly in the Norman and early English styles, with side aisles, and a square embattled tower; it contains a curious stone pulpit, and a piscina of beautiful design in the north aisle, and the font is finely sculptured. An almshouse for three persons was founded in 1680, and endowed with £30 per annum by Benedict Hall, Esq.

STAUNTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Newark; containing, with the chapelry of Flawborough, 172 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, with that of Kilmington consolidated in 1826, valued in the king's books at £16. 13. 11½.; net income, £322; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Dr. Staunton. The tithes were commuted for land in 1759. The church is an ancient structure, containing several interesting monuments, though much mutilated by the soldiers of Cromwell, who converted the edifice into stabling for their horses during the parliamentary war. There is a chapel of ease at Flawborough.

STAUNTON, a hamlet, in the parish of DUNSTER, union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 30 inhabitants.

STAUNTON (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of NEWENT, and forming, with the parishes of Chaseley and Eldersfield, a distinct portion of the Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 8 miles (N. W.) from Gloucester; containing 402 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1447 acres, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the remainder, with the exception of 22 acres of woodland, meadow and pasture; the soil is generally gravel, alternated with loam, and the chief produce wheat, barley, and beans. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 5., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Hill, the incumbent, whose tithes have been commuted for £375; there are 50 acres of glebe. The church is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, with a tower and spire. A rental of £30, the produce of several benefactions, is appropriated to the poor.

STAUNTON-HARROLD, a chapelry, in the parish of BREEDON, union of ASHBY, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Ashby; containing 389 inhabitants. The chapel, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is domestic, belonging to Earl Ferrers.

STAUNTON-UPON-WYE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WEOBLEY, hundred of GRIMSWORTH, county of HEREFORD, $8\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Hereford; containing 548 inhabitants. The parish consists of 2300 acres, and is intersected by the road from Hereford to Kington. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4.; net income, £340; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1783. George Jarvis, Esq., of Thames-Ditton, in 1790, bequeathed £30,000 to the parishes of Staunton, Bredwardine, and Letton, which sum was invested in the three per cent. consols., and had accumulated in 1822 to £92,496: from the proceeds, £1250 are yearly appropriated to this parish in educating children, and providing clothing and fuel for the poor; the total income is upwards of £3000.

STAVELEY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Chesterfield; containing, with the chapelry of Great Barlow, 3315 inhabitants, of whom 2688 are in Staveley township. This place was for many generations the seat of the Frecheville family, of whom Sir John, an active royalist in the reign of Charles I., strongly fortified his mansion, and having raised a battery of twelve pieces of cannon, held it against the parliamentary forces for a considerable time, but in August 1644, was obliged to surrender by capitulation. The parish comprises 6827 acres; the soil is chiefly a loamy clay, with some of lighter quality in the higher lands, and the substratum abounds with iron-stone and coal, of the former of which much is smelted. The village is pleasantly situated on the east bank of the river Rother; the Chesterfield canal runs through the village, and several railroads pass between it and the various collieries in the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Duke of Devonshire: the tithes have been commuted for two rent-charges each of £605. 9. 7., payable, respectively, to the rector and an improprator. The church is an ancient structure, containing monuments of the Frecheville family, and the east window exhibits some stained glass, presented by Lord Frecheville, in 1676. A free grammar school was founded at Netherthorp, in 1537, by Judge Rodes; in support of which, and of two scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge, he bequeathed £20 per annum, since augmented to £30. An hospital for four aged persons of each sex was erected at Woodthorpe, in 1632, by Sir Peter Frecheville, who assigned £4 per annum to each inmate; and Richard Robinson, in 1777, augmented the endowment with £18 per annum.

STAVELEY, a chapelry, in the parish of CARTMEL, union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 9 miles (N. E.) from Ulverstone; containing 382 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £108; patron, the Earl of Burlington.

STAVELEY (All SAINTS), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. by E.) from Knaresborough; containing 347 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1378*a. 1r. 15p.*, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the remainder pasture and meadow, with a moderate portion of wood; the lands belong chiefly to Sir Charles Slingsby and A. Empson, Esq.; the surface is boldly undulated, and the scenery pleasing. Lofthouse Hill, the property of Sir C. Slingsby, and residence of Samuel J. Brown, Esq., and Spellow Hill, the seat of Mr. Empson, are both handsome mansions. There is a limestone quarry, though it has not been wrought for many years; and a mill for spinning flax and grinding corn employs about fifty hands. On the north of the parish is a rivulet which separates it from the parish of Copgrove and the township of Rocliffe. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 17. 11.; net income, £354; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Richard Hartley. The tithes were commuted for land in 1801; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 235 acres. The church was rebuilt in 1831, at a cost of £1000. Here is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a parochial school, which has a small endowment, and a school supported by the Empson family.

STAVELEY, NETHER, a township, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Kendal; containing 201 inhabitants.

STAVELEY, OVER, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 5 miles (N. W. by N.) from Kendal; containing 527 inhabitants. The manufacture of woollens and bobbin is carried on to some extent. Edward III. granted a charter for a market on Friday, and a fair on the festival of St. Luke, but both have been long disused. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron, the Vicar of Kendal. George Jopson, in 1696, gave two tenements, now let for £60 per annum, to the minister, provided he should instruct all the children of the chapelry.

STAVERTON (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of HAYTOR, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Totnes; containing 1069 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south and south-west by the river Dart, and comprises 4820 acres, of which 50 are common or waste land; the soil is various, and the surface hilly. The substratum abounds with blue and grey slate, and marble of the same colours is found, of which there are some valuable quarries; a brown freestone of soft quality occurs in those parts of the parish where the superincumbent soil is most fertile, and good limestone is quarried for manure. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £32. 14. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £366. The church contains some good screen-work.

STAVERTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CHELTENHAM, Lower division of the hundred of DEERHURST, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Cheltenham; containing 296 inhabitants, and comprising 758 acres. The Gloucester and Cheltenham railroad passes through the parish. The living is a vicarage, with Boddington annexed, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £436; patron, J. Blagdon, Esq.

STAVERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Daventry; containing 503 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the Warwick and Northampton road, comprises by measurement 2400 acres; the soil is various; the surface is elevated and hilly, and the surrounding scenery of an interesting character. The river Nene has its source in the parish, and the Leam separates it from the county of Warwick. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes; net income, £549; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for 276 acres of land, under an act of inclosure, in 1774; and there are also 74 acres of old glebe. The church is a handsome structure in the decorated and later English styles, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. The Rev. Francis Baker, in 1767, gave land, to support a school, which land, at the inclosure, was exchanged for 27a. 1r., now producing £52 per annum. The Rev. Sir John Knightley, also, gave £200 for a Sunday school. Dr. Fanshaw, regius professor of divinity at Oxford, was incumbent of the parish.

STAVERTON, a chapelry, in the parish of TROWBRIDGE, union and hundred of MELKSHAM, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford Subdivisions, of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Trowbridge; containing 228 inhabitants. The chapel has been enlarged, and 100 free sittings provided, the Incorporated Society having granted £125 in aid of the expense. Here is a large cloth manufactory.

STAWELL, a chapelry, in the parish of MOORLINCH, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Bridgwater; containing 221 inhabitants. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £105, and the vicarial for £60, and there is a glebe of one acre.

STAWLEY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WELLINGTON, hundred of MILVERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (W. by N.) from Wellington; containing 222 inhabitants. It comprises about 800 acres, nearly equally divided into arable and pasture, interspersed with woodlands; the soil is loamy, alternated with portions of lighter quality. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £150; patron, John Hayne, Esq. The church is a plain ancient structure.

STAXTON, a township, in the parish of WILLERBY, union of SCARBOROUGH, wapentake of DICKERING, E. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from Scarborough; containing 263 inhabitants. It comprises about 1640 acres of land: the village is pleasantly situated on the high road from Hunmanby to Malton. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1801. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STAYLEY, a township, in the parish of MOTTRAM-IN-LONGDENDALE, union of ASHTON-UNDER-LINE, hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 1 mile (N. E.) from Ashton; containing, with a part of the town of Stalybridge, which is described under its own head, 3905 inhabitants. The township comprises 2165 acres, of which 470 are common or waste land: the Huddersfield canal passes through. A rent-charge of £150 has been awarded as a commutation for the appropriate tithes, payable to the Bishop of Chester.

STAYNALL, a township, in the parish of LANCASTER, union of GARSTANG, hundred of AMOUNDERNESS, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Poulton; containing, with Stalmine, 504 inhabitants.

STAYTHORPE, a township, in the parish of AVERHAM, union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (W.) from Newark; containing 68 inhabitants. The township comprises by measurement 632 acres, and the river Trent is about a mile from the village. The tithes have been commuted for £187. 9. There are some vestiges of a grange which belonged to the abbots of Rufford.

STEAN (St. Peter), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (N. W.) from Brackley; containing 26 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Brackley to Banbury, and comprises 1128*a.* 34*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, united to that of Hinton-in-the-Hedges, and valued in the king's books at £5. 9. 7. The church was formerly the chapel belonging to the mansion of Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, and contains many fine monuments to the memory of the family. The park and part of the house still remain.

STEANBRIDGE, a tything, in the parish and union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 1395 inhabitants.

STEARSBY, a hamlet, in the parish of BRANSBY, union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (E. N. E.) from Easingwold; containing 106 inhabitants. Its small village is situated about a mile to the east of Bransby.

STEBBING (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of DUNMOW, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Great Dunmow; containing 1458 inhabitants. The parish is about twenty-five miles in circumference; the surface is elevated, and the soil for the greater portion dry and fertile. It is intersected by a stream that turns several mills; and there are two artificial mounts, one of which is said to have been formerly the site of a castle. A fair for cattle and fat calves is held on the 10th of July. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12: the great tithes, which belong, with the patronage, to Mrs. Batt, have been commuted for £820, and the vicarial for £350; there is a glebe-house, and the appropriate and vicarial glebes contain respectively 124½ and 2 acres. The church is a spacious and lofty structure, situated on an eminence. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STEDHAM (St. James), a parish, in the union of MIDHURST, hundred of EASEBOURNE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Midhurst; containing 557 inhabitants. It is intersected by the river Rother, and under the Reform act is partly within the new boundary of the borough of Midhurst. The living is a rectory, with that of Heyshot united, valued in the king's books at £17. 18. 6½.; net income, £386; patron, the Rev. L. V. Harcourt. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with a tower rising from the centre: in the churchyard is a fine old yew-tree.

STEEL, with PREEs, a township, in the parish of PREEs, union of WEM, Whitechurch division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 3 miles (S.) from Whitechurch; containing 1538 inhabitants, of whom 65 are in Steel.

STEEP, a parish, in the union of PETERSFIELD, hundred of EAST MEON, Petersfield and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1¾ mile (N.) from Petersfield; containing, with the tythings of North and South Ambersham, 885 inhabitants, of whom 563 are in Steep tything. The parish comprises 2642 acres, of which 211 are common or waste. The living is annexed, with that of Froxfield, to the vicarage of East Meon: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £300, and the vicarial for £230. The church contains 117 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £70 in aid of the expense.

STEEP-HOLMES ISLAND, in the parish of UPHILL, union of AXBRIDGE, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 leagues (W. by N.) from Uphill. The island is a vast rock, about a mile and a half in circumference, rising perpendicularly out of the Bristol Channel to the height of 400 feet above the level of the sea, and inaccessible at all points except two. A few rabbits burrow here, and great numbers of sea-fowl build their nests within the recesses of the overhanging cliffs. It is supposed that there was anciently a priory, founded about the reign of Edward II., by Maurice, Lord Berkeley.

STEEPING, GREAT (All Saints), a parish in the union of SPILSBY, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (E. S. E.) from Spilsby; containing, with the hamlet of Monksthorpe, 285 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the river Steeping, and comprises, according to computation, 1300 acres, of which the surface is flat, and the soil clay. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of Firsby, and valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 4: the inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £160, and the vicarial for £129, with a glebe of 4 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The remains of an old mansion, surrounded by a moat, are now occupied as a farm-house; and a moated inclosure in the neighbourhood is said to have been formerly the site of a monastery.

STEEPING, LITTLE (St. Andrew), a parish in the union of SPILSBY, E. division of the soken of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 3¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Spilsby; containing 289 inhabitants, and comprising 1036*a.* 3*r.* 30*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 19. 4; net income, £181; patron, Lord Willoughby de Eresby. The tithes were commuted for land about the beginning of the present century, at the time of the inclosure of the East fen, on the border of which the parish is situated; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 92 acres. The church is an ancient structure, the nave and chancel of which were rebuilt from the old materials in 1639. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is supported by an allowance of £10 per annum out of some charity lands in the parish, and a contribution of £15 from the rector.

STEEPLE (St. Michael), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of HASILOR, Wareham division of DORSET, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Wareham; containing, with the hamlet of West Creech, 272 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3082 acres, of which 830 are common or waste; the south side lies on a bed of fine limestone, which is quarried for buildings, and burning into lime. The living is a rectory, with that of Tyneham united by act of parliament in the 8th of George I., and valued in the king's books at £9. 15. 5.; net income, £382; patron, John Bond, Esq.: the glebe contains about 5 acres. The church has a plain lofty tower. There is a private Episcopal chapel at Grange, in the parish; and schools are partly supported by the minister. West Creech formerly belonged to the abbey of Bindon, and had the privilege of a market and fair, granted by Henry III.

STEEPLE (St. LAWRENCE AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 10 miles (E. S. E.) from Maldon; containing 584 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 274*sa. 1r. 9p.*, includes the island of Ramsey, and is bounded on the north by the river Blackwater, on which a quay, the property of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, has been constructed, where barges of 70 tons deliver cargoes of chalk, and return laden with corn. Fairs are held on the Wednesday in Whitsun-week, and the Wednesday after Michaelmas-day. The living is a discharged vicarage, with Stanesgate, valued in the king's books at £15. 18.; net income, £195; patrons, alternately, Sir Brook W. Bridges, Bart., and another; impropiators, J. K. and T. Hunt; Esqrs., and Miss Hunt. The church is an ancient edifice. At Stanesgate, in the parish, a priory of Clunia monks, subordinate to that of Lewes, existed before 1176; it was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and at the Dissolution had a revenue of £38. 18. 3.; the only remains now form part of the walls of the barn.

STEEPLE-ASHTON, county of WILTS.—See ASHTON; STEEPLE.—And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

STEEPLE-COURT, a manor, in the parish of DROXFORD, hundred of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 21 inhabitants.

STEEPLETON-IWERNE, or PRESTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford division of DORSET; 4¼ miles (N. N. W.) from Blandford Forum; containing 34 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from an ancient proprietor named Steepleton, comprises 701 acres, of which 198 are common or waste land. Steepleton House and estate were the property of the late Peter Beckford, Esq., author of Letters from Italy, &c., and have descended to his grandson, the present Lord Rivers. Part of the female population are employed in the shirt-button manufacture. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 18. 4., and in the gift of his lordship: the tithes have been commuted for £95.

STEETON, a township, in the parish of BOLTON-PERCY, division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK, 3½ miles (E. by N.) from Tadcaster; containing 93 inhabitants. Steeton Hall, one of the mansions of the Fairfax family, is now a farm-house, and the remains of a chapel attached are used as a granary.

STEETON, with EASTBURN, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of KEIGHLEY, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 2¼ miles (N. W.) from Keighley; containing 963 inhabitants. This place is situated in a valley enriched with wood and water, on the road from Keighley to Skipton, and comprises by computation 2160 acres; it is bounded on the north by the river Aire, which is well stocked with trout, and runs through a tract of fine meadow land. Elmsley House, the seat of Thomas Garforth, Esq., and Steeton Hall, that of John G. Sugden, Esq., are both pleasant residences here. Stone is quarried for building; and there are a worsted and a corn mill, the latter of which is the property of Messrs. Bairstow. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. The township contains a mineral spring, used for scrofulous complaints.

STELLA, a township, in the parish of RYTON, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM; 5 miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 563 inhabitants. This place, anciently Stellinglei, was granted in the 12th century by Bishop William de St. Barbara to the nuns of Newcastle, in whose possession it remained till the Dissolution. It subsequently became the property of the Tempest family, who erected the magnificent mansion of Stella Hall, near the river Tyne, and afterwards belonged to Lord Widdrington, on whose joining in the rebellion of 1715, it was forfeited to the crown; it is now the property of Peregrine Edward Towneley, Esq. The township, which is bounded on the north by the river, comprises 281 acres, and abounds with coal, of which there is a pit worked, producing good coal for household use. Stella Hall, the property of Mr. Towneley, and in the occupation of William Clayton Walters, Esq., is beautifully situated, and has lately, with the park and grounds attached to it, been greatly improved. The village is on the bank of the river, which is here navigable for keels; there is a manufactory for coal-waggons, railway-trucks, and similar carriages, and fire-bricks are made in the neighbourhood. The tithes have been commuted for £27. 3. 8. A Roman Catholic chapel was erected in 1831, with apartments for the residence of the priest, who has a stipend of £20 charged upon the estate, to which Mr. Towneley adds £30 per annum; and a school for Roman Catholic children is supported by subscription.

STELLING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, partly in the hundred of LONINGBOROUGH, but chiefly in that of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 6 miles (S. by W.) from Canterbury; containing 341 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1250 acres, of which 762 are arable, 250 pasture, 100 woodland, 30 hops, and 100 common: the ancient Stane-street runs along the western boundary. The living is annexed to the rectory of Upper Hardres: the tithes have been commuted for £257. 10., and the glebe contains 8 acres.

STELLING, a township, in the parish of BYWELL, ST. PETER, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 13 miles (W. by N.) from Newcastle-upon-Tyne; containing 53 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Newcastle and Hexham, and comprises by measurement 300 acres, chiefly arable land; the surface rises gradually from the south for half the extent of the township, and then slopes towards the north; the soil is various; freestone is abundant; and there are several seams of coal, but none at present worked. The Tyne passes on the south, and the Stocksfield station of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway is distant about 3½ miles. The place is tithe-free, having been anciently part of the possessions of Hexham priory.

STELLING MINNIS, an extra-parochial district, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT; containing 62 inhabitants.

STEMBRIDGE, a tything, in the parish of KINGSBURY-EPISCOPI, union of LANGPORT, hundred of KINGSBURY, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 168 inhabitants. The river Parret flows on the east of the tything.

STENIGOT (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Louth; containing 97 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 12. 3½., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. M. Alington: the tithes have been commuted for £274. 14., and the glebe contains $38\frac{1}{4}$ acres.

STENSON, a township, in the parish of BARROW, union of BURTON, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Derby.

STEPHENS, ST., a parish, including the disfranchised borough of Newport, in the union of LAUNCESTON, N. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (N. N. W.) from Launceston; containing 1068 inhabitants. This place derived its name from a collegiate church dedicated to St. Stephen, which was founded prior to the Norman Conquest, for canons of the Augustine order, and was subsequently occupied by Secular canons till 1126, when they were removed by Warlewast, Bishop of Exeter, to a priory he had founded in the parish of St. Thomas. The parish comprises 3642 acres, of which 260 are common or waste land: the village is pleasantly situated on the brow of a lofty hill immediately above Newport, and commands some extensive views. Fairs, chiefly for cattle, are held on May 12th, July 31st, and September 25th. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of Feoffees and the Inhabitants, with a net income of £80: the tithes have been commuted for £356. The church is an ancient structure, and contains some interesting details. John Horwell, in 1717, bequeathed property for maintaining and instructing boys, which, in 1821, produced £6444, afterwards vested in the three per cent. consols., and now yielding an income of £192. 13.

STEPHENS, ST., a parish, in the union of ST. ALBAN'S, hundred of CASHIO, or liberty of ST. ALBAN'S, county of HERTFORD, 1 mile (S. W.) from St. Alban's; containing 1826 inhabitants. It comprises 8140a. 2r. 3p., of which 6238 acres are arable, 1399 meadow, and about 503 wood: the rivers Ver and Colne run through. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15; patron and incumbent, the Rev. M. R. Southwell; impropriator, the Rev. C. Lomax. The great tithes have been commuted for £1420. 9., and the vicarial for £500. The church, situated on the Roman Watling-street, occupies the site of one built in the reign of King Eldred, by Ulsinus, sixth abbot of St. Alban's: a fine brass eagle with expanded wings, on an ornamented pedestal of the same metal, was dug up some years since in the churchyard, and is now used as a stand in the chancel for Fox's Martyrology. A chapel of ease has been just erected at the village of Park-street, in the Norman style, the cost of which was defrayed by subscription, conjointly with £1000 raised by a rate; it was consecrated on October 14th, 1842, and is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. Many Roman coins have been found.

STEPHENS, ST., KENT.—See HACKINGTON.

STEPHENS, ST., BY SALTASH, a parish, in the union of ST. GERMANS, S. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL; containing, with Saltash, 2963 inhabitants, of whom 1422 are exclusively of that town. The parish comprises 5400 acres, of which 293 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £26; net income, £139; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The great tithes have been commuted for £1298, and the vicarial for £29, with a glebe of 7 acres. Here are considerable remains of the ancient castle of Trematon, erected before the Conquest, in a beautiful situation on the bank of the Lyner; the area covered more than an acre of ground, and was inclosed by embattled walls. The keep is on the summit of a conical elevation, and is approached by a circular arched doorway; the principal gateway consists of three arches, supporting a square embattled tower, containing a museum for natural curiosities.

STEPHENS, ST., IN BRANNEL, a parish, in the union of ST. AUSTELL, E. division of the hundred of POWDER and of the county of CORNWALL, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from St. Austell; containing 2643 inhabitants. This parish, which takes its name from the dedication of its church, is situated in the heart of a district abounding with mineral treasure; moorstone of excellent quality, extensively used in building, is found, and a fine white clay is procured in great quantities for the potteries. The living is a rectory, annexed, with the rectory of St. Dennis, to that of St. Michael Caerhays: the tithes have been commuted for £780. The church is an ancient structure, principally in the Norman style, with some later details, and a square detached tower. There is a place of worship for Independents. In 1711, Ellen Mabbott bequeathed a rent-charge of £35. 10. for widows; and in 1726, James Buller endowed four almshouses. There are vestiges of a circular intrenchment comprising an area of about one acre, surrounded with a fosse.

STEPNEY (St. Dunstan and All Saints), a parish, and the head of a union, in the Tower division of the hundred of OSSULSTONE, county of MIDDLESEX, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from London; containing 63,723 inhabitants, of whom 8325 are in the hamlet of Mile-End New Town, 45,308 in Mile-End Old Town, and 10,090 in Ratcliffe. This parish, called in various old records Stebunhithe and Stebenhythe, occurs in Domesday book under the name of Stibenhede, from which its present appellation is obviously deduced. It anciently included a widely-extended district, comprising, in addition to its present parochial limits, the hamlets of Stratford-le-Bow, Limehouse, Poplar and Blackwall, Shadwell, St. George's-in-the-East, Wapping, Spitalfields, Whitechapel, and Bethnal-Green, which, from their increased extent and importance, have been successively separated from it, and at present constitute some of the most populous districts in the vicinity of the metropolis. According to Stowe, Edward I. held a parliament at Stepney, in the mansion of Henry Wallcis, mayor of London, when he conferred several valuable privileges on the citizens. The manor was, in 1380, annexed to the see of London, and the bishops had a palace, called Bishop Hall, now included in the parish of Bethnal-Green, in which they continued to reside till 1550, when it was alienated from the see by Bishop Ridley, who gave it to Edward VI. In the rebellion under Jack Cade, in the reign of Henry VI., the insurgents who attacked the metropolis encamped for some time at the hamlet of Mile-End; and, in 1642, at the commencement of the parliamentary war, fortifications were constructed in the parish for the defence of the city.

From the then pleasantness of its situation, and the beauty of its scenery, which are noticed in a letter from Sir Thomas More to Dean Colet, Stepney was formerly the favourite residence of many persons of distinction. Isabel, Countess of Rutland, had a seat here in the latter part of the sixteenth century, at which time Sir Thomas Lake, secretary of state in the reign of James I., was also a resident; but there are no vestiges of the houses which they occupied. Henry, the first marquess of Worcester, had a mansion near the parsonage-house, of which the gateway, handsomely built of brick, with a turret at one of the angles, is still remaining, and forms part of a house in which Dr. Richard Mead was born, and resided for many years. Sir Henry Colet, father of the dean who founded St. Paul's school, lived in a spacious residence to the west of the church, called the Great Place, the site of which is now partly occupied by a place of public entertainment, called Spring Gardens. During part of the seventeenth century, Stepney suffered severely from the ravages of the plague, of which 2978 persons died in the year 1625; and in 1665, not less than 6583. In the course of the latter year, 116 sextons and grave-diggers belonging to the parish, died of the plague, and so greatly was the place, then principally inhabited by seafaring men, depopulated, that it is recorded, in the life of Lord Clarendon, that "there seemed an impossibility to procure seamen to fit out the fleet." In 1794, a most calamitous fire, occasioned by the boiling over of a pitch-kettle in a barge-builder's yard, broke out, and destroyed more than half of the hamlet of Ratcliffe, communicated to the shipping in the river, and burnt several ranges of warehouses, among which was one belonging to the East India Company, containing more than 200 tons of saltpetre. Of 1200 houses then in that hamlet, only 570 escaped the conflagration; and 36 warehouses, chiefly stored with articles of combustion, were totally consumed. By this dreadful calamity several hundred families were reduced to the utmost distress, deprived of shelter, and made dependent for subsistence on the public benevolence; and a subscription was therefore opened at Lloyd's coffee-house, by which, together with the contributions of thousands who came to visit the extensive ruins, more than £16,000 was collected for the relief of the sufferers.

The PARISH, situated on the northern bank of the Thames, and chiefly inhabited by persons connected with the shipping, extends for a considerable distance from the river to the principal road leading into Essex, and comprises many handsome ranges of building. The Commercial-road, from Whitechapel to the East and West India docks, passes through it; and the basin, or dock, at the junction of the Regent's canal with the Thames, capable of containing 100 ships, occupies a portion of the east side of the hamlet of Ratcliffe. The parish is paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water by the East London Company, from their works at Old Ford, the reservoir of which, excavated in 1827, and covering ten acres of ground, is situated to the north of the high road. On the banks of the Regent's canal, which runs under the Mile-End road, are several coal and timber wharfs; and in the hamlets of Mile-End Old and New Towns are some extensive breweries, a large distillery, a floor-cloth manufactory, a factory for tobacco-pipes, and a very spacious nursery-ground. In the hamlet of Ratcliffe are important manufactories for sail-cloth, sails, chain-cables, and mooring-chains, steam-engines, and machinery connected with the docks and shipping, and large establishments belonging to coopers for the West India trade, timber and hoop merchants, ship-chandlers, sugar-bakers, rope-makers, and various other trades, for which its situation renders it peculiarly favourable. The market, granted by Charles II., in 1664, is now held at Whitechapel; and the fair, bestowed at the same time, and originally held on Mile-End green, was removed to Stratford-le-Bow, and subsequently suppressed. Stepney is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who sit at the police-office in Lambeth-street, Whitechapel, for the despatch of business relating to Mile-End; and at the Thames-office, Arbour-square, for the hamlet of Ratcliffe. It is under the controul of the new police establishment; and within the scope of the court of requests for the Tower Hamlets, held in Osborne-street, Whitechapel, for the recovery of debts under £5.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £73. 6. 8.; net income, £1190; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. The church is a spacious structure of flint and stone, principally in the later English style, with a low broad tower, strengthened by buttresses, and surmounted by a turret crowned with a small dome: near the western entrance is a bas-relief, indifferently executed and much decayed, representing the Virgin and Child, with a female figure in the attitude of supplication; and over the south door is a rudely-sculptured representation of the Crucifixion, in tolerable preservation. There are many ancient monuments in the building: on the north side of the chancel is the altar-tomb of Sir Henry Colet, Knt., under an arched canopy, finely groined; and near it a memorial to Benjamin Kenton, Esq., who died in 1800, at the age of 83, bequeathing to different charitable institutions the sum of £63,550; on the east wall is a monument to Lady Dethic, and on the south a tablet to Sir Thomas Spert, Knt., founder and first master of the corporation of the Trinity. The edifice was repaired and beautified in 1828. The churchyard is spacious, and there are numerous monuments to distinguished persons, including the Rev. Matthew Mead, who was ejected from the living of Shadwell for nonconformity, and Admiral Sir John Leake, Knt., a distinguished officer in the reign of Queen Anne. St. Philip's district church, behind the London Hospital, a handsome edifice in the later English style, with minarets at the angles crowned by finials, was erected in 1822, towards the expense of which the Parliamentary Commissioners granted £3500: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £218; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford. St. Thomas's district church, in Arbour-square, a neat edifice of Suffolk brick, in the early English style, with two octangular turrets, was erected in 1837 by grant from the metropolis church-building fund, and contains 1100 sittings, of which 500 are free. St. Peter's district church, in Mile-End Old Town, also a neat edifice of Suffolk brick, in the early Norman style, was built in 1838, and St. James's, at Ratcliffe, was erected in the same year. The livings of these three last churches are perpetual curacies, in the patronage of the Rector. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Connexion of the Countess of Huntingdon, Calvinistic Methodists, and three for Independents, of one of which, near the church, founded by the lecturer, the Rev. William Greenhill, and built in 1674, the Rev. M. Mead became the first minister. Stepney College, in Mile-End Old Town, was established in 1810, for the education of ministers of the Baptist denomination; the premises, which have been greatly enlarged, include part of an ancient building called King John's Tower, and contain private studies and sleeping-rooms for twenty-four students, with apartments for the masters, and a chapel.

In School-house-lane, Ratcliffe, are almshouses of the Coopers' Company, founded in 1538 by Toby Wood, Esq., and Mr. Cloker, members of that society, for fourteen aged persons of both sexes. Adjoining them is a free grammar school, largely endowed by Nicholas Gibson, master of the company, and sheriff of London, in the reign of Henry VIII., for the instruction of 35 boys; and in this school Bishop Andrews, and several other distinguished persons, received the rudiments of their education. The premises were destroyed by the fire of 1794, but were rebuilt in 1796, and the almshouses, more liberally endowed by the company, now afford an asylum to six men and eighteen women; the buildings occupy three sides of a quadrangle, with a chapel in the central range. Near the churchyard are the Mercers' almshouses, established in 1691, by Jane Mico, relict of Sir Samuel Mico, and endowed for ten aged widows, who receive each £30 per annum. Mrs. Bowry, in 1715, bequeathed a leasehold estate and a sum of money in the South Sea annuities, amounting to £2636. 13., for the erection and endowment of eight almshouses between Mile-End and Stratford-le-Bow, for decayed seamen and their widows; and there are other almshouses in the parish, noticed in the article on Mile-End. The poor law union of Stepney comprises Limehouse, Shadwell, Mile-End Old Town, Ratcliffe, and Wapping, and contains a population of 90,657.

STEPNEY MARSH.—See DOGS, ISLE OF.

STEPPINGLEY (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of AMPHILL, hundred of REDBORNESTOKE, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ampt-hill; containing 377 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 1300 acres: the women and children are principally employed in making lace. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 3., and in the gift of the Crown: the tithes were commuted for a corn-rent of £225, under a late inclosure act; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 36 acres.

STERNDALE, EARL, a chapelry, in the parish of HARTINGTON, union of BAKEWELL, hundred of WIRKSWORTH, N. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Buxton; containing 362 inhabitants. The Peak-Forest and Cromford railroad passes through the chapelry. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £96; patron, the Vicar of Hartington; improprator, the Duke of Devonshire. The chapel was erected in 1829.

STERNFIELD (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S. S. E.) from Saxmundham; containing 193 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 1086 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £297; patron, W. Long, Esq.

STERSCOTE.—See SYERSCOTE.

STERT (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of DEVIZES, hundred of SWANBOROUGH, Devizes and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Devizes; containing 181 inhabitants. It is situated near the road from Salisbury to Devizes. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Urchfont.

STETCHWORTH (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of RADFIELD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Newmarket; containing 673 inhabitants, and comprising 2858a. 3r. 24p. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 1.; net income, £174; patron and improprator, Richard Eaton, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1814. The church contains a handsome monument in white marble to the memory of the Hon. Henry Gorges. An almshouse for two persons of each sex was founded in 1700, by Lord and Lady Gorges, who endowed it with £30 per annum.

STEVENAGE (St. NICHOLAS), a market-town and parish, in the union of HITCHIN, hundred of BROADWATER, county of HERTFORD, 12 miles (N. W. by N.) from Hertford, and 31 (N. N. W.) from London; containing 1725 inhabitants. The ancient name was Stigenhaght, signifying the hills by the highway, evidently derived from six barrows, or hills, near the road-side, half a mile south of the town: about the time of the heptarchy, the place was called Stigenhace, and in Domesday book Stavenach or Stevenadge. It formed a part of the demesne of the Saxon kings, and was given by Edward the Confessor to the abbey of Westminster, on the suppression of which it was granted by Edward VI. to the see of London, to which the manor still belongs. The town is pleasantly situated on the great north road from London to Edinburgh, and consists principally of one long and spacious street, with two or three smaller ones, comprising some well-built brick residences, amply supplied with water. The trade is chiefly that of carcase-butchers, who dispose of the slaughtered cattle principally at Hertford, and in the London market; and the plating of straw furnishes employment to many of the females in the town and its vicinity. In the reign of James I., Montaigne, Bishop of London, procured the grant of a weekly market, and three fairs annually, which was confirmed by a charter of William and Mary; but, from the contiguity of other towns, in which large markets take place, that of Stevenage has fallen into disuse; and the fairs, except one on Sept. 22nd, have also been nearly discontinued. Petty-sessions for the division are held here, and a manorial court annually by the Bishop of London.

The parish comprises by admeasurement 4434 acres, of which 2887 are arable, 900 pasture, 524 wood, and 123 waste. The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the gift of William Baker, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £1023. 7.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 26 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church, situated on a chalky eminence about half a mile from the town, approached by a fine avenue of trees, is a neat well-built edifice, with a square tower surmounted by a spire covered with lead; attached to the chancel are two small chapels. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. The Rev. Thomas Alleyn, in 1558, devised all his estates to Trinity College, Cambridge, in trust for charitable uses, among which was the founding of a grammar school at Stevenage, with an annual income of £13. 6. 8. Shortly after the testator's demise, a free English school was established by the inhabitants of Stevenage, and subsequently endowed with some land by Robert Gynne, in 1614, and a rent-charge of £12 by Edmond Woodward, in 1659; and this school was eventually placed under the master of the grammar school; the income is £37. 6. 8. A national school, also, has been founded; and there are various bequests, amounting to about £50 per annum, distributed among the poor. The six barrows supposed to give name to the town, have been conjectured to be sepulchral monuments; but it is more generally thought that they were erected by the Danes, several battles having been fought between them and the Saxons in this county, and some fields at the distance of about three-quarters of a mile, still retaining the name of Danes' Blood. In a wood half a mile eastward from the barrows, called Humbley Wood, are the apparent remains of an intrenched camp, or fortification, of unknown construction, consisting of a large and perfectly square area, surrounded by a deep moat containing water, with only one entrance on the north side. Richard de Stevenage, abbot of St. Alban's at the Dissolution, was a native of this place.

STEVENTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Abingdon; containing 948 inhabitants. A castle was erected here by Baldwin Wake, in 1281, of which there are no vestiges; and a priory of Black monks, a cell to the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, was founded in the time of Henry I., and, at the suppression of alien houses, was bestowed upon the abbot and convent of Westminster. The parish comprises 2382*a.* 2*r.* 11*p.*, of which 1250 acres are arable, 970 pasture, 106 commons, and 14 woodland. The Berks and Wilts canal, and the Great Western railway, which has a station here, pass through the parish; and in the village is an ancient cross, consisting of a tall shaft rising from a base of several steps. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 5. 2½.; net income, £192; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. There is a place of worship for Baptists; also a school, partly supported by endowments amounting to about £12 per annum.

STEVENTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union and hundred of BASINGSTOKE, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Overton; containing 193 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2100*a.* 3*r.* 6*p.*: the South-Western railroad passes through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 4. 7., and in the gift of Edward Knight, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £522. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 53¼ acres.

STEVIINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of WILLEY, union and county of BEDFORD, 5½ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bedford; containing 602 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4.; net income, £108; patron, the Duke of Bedford; impropiator, Earl Spencer. The tithes were commuted for land in 1805.

STEWKLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKING-HAM, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Leighton-Buzzard; containing, with the hamlet of Littlecote, 1262 inhabitants. The lace manufacture, formerly carried on, is nearly extinct, and the principal part of the female population is employed in the manufacture of straw-plat. There is a lime quarry, in which are occasionally found curious fossil antediluvian remains, especially some specimens of very large spiral fossil shells. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7.; net income, £194; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1811. The church is one of the most enriched and complete specimens of the Norman style now remaining. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a fund of about £25 per annum, arising from bequests, is distributed among the poor.

STEWLEY, a tything, in the parish of ISLE-ABBOT'S, union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 110 inhabitants.

STEWTON (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of LOUTH-ESKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2½ miles (E.) from Louth; containing 55 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 959 acres, chiefly arable, of which the soil is a heavy clay. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the gift of T. Heneage, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe comprises 11 acres.

STEYNING (St. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, the head of a union, and formerly a representative borough, in the hundred of STEYNING, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, 24 miles (E. by N.) from Chichester, and 49½ (S. by W.) from London; containing 1495 inhabitants. The name is supposed to be derived from the Steyne-street, an ancient road which passed through this part of the county from Arundel to Dorking. Camden considers the town to have been mentioned in Alfred's will by the name of Steyningham. It appears in the Saxon age to have been of considerable note, a church, or monastery, having been built here, in which St. Cadman was buried; and in the Catalogue of Religious Houses, ascribed to Gervase of Canterbury, in the time of Richard I., mention is made of a dean and secular canons. It is more certain that King Edward the Confessor gave lands to the monastery of Feschamp, in Normandy, which included this place; and these being taken away by Earl Godwin, and restored by William the Conqueror, some Benedictine monks were sent from that house, who erected an alien priory here, which was given to the monastery of Sion by Edward IV., and continued part of its possessions till the Dissolution. Speed says, the conventual church was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and contained the sacred relics of St. Cuthman (Cadman), and Ethelwulph, father of Alfred the Great: here anciently was also a parochial church of St. Cuthman. Camden speaks of its market as well frequented in his time; but the town afterwards became reduced, and is, in the Magna Britannia, a century later, mentioned as "a mean contemptible place, with hardly a building fit to put a horse in," being said then to have contained not more than 150 families. Since that period, however, it has been considerably enlarged.

It stands at the foot of a lofty hill near the river

Adur, over which is a bridge, and consists of one long street, and two smaller ones branching therefrom; it is supplied with water by a spring. The land in the vicinity is fertile, and the adjoining downs afford good pasturage for sheep. An extensive cattle-market is held on alternate Mondays; there is also a corn-market, and fairs take place on June 9th, September 19th, and October 11th; at the Michaelmas fair, a great number of Welsh and Devonshire cattle are disposed of, exclusively of other kinds, together with sheep, horses, hogs, wheat, seeds, &c. There are two breweries, also a small parchment manufactory. Steyning is a borough by prescription, under the authority of a constable, appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor; and petty-sessions are held on the market-days. The place sent two representatives to parliament until disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45; the members were at one time elected in conjunction with Bramber, but subsequently each town returned two, although one portion of Bramber consists of the north-east part of the town of Steyning. The parish comprises 3381 acres, of which 474 are common or waste land. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the gift of the improprator, the Duke of Norfolk: the great tithes have been commuted for £260. 16., and the vicarial for £410; £15 also are paid to Magdalen College, Oxford; there is a glebe-house, and the vicarial glebe is valued at £80 per annum. The church consists of a portion only of a large cruciform structure, presenting beautiful specimens of the Norman style: the interior was restored in 1831, and is magnificently enriched; at the east end, where the transept is intersected, are clusters of columns and arches supporting a central tower, and a lofty Norman arch leads into the chancel. The present tower on the west, of more modern date, is of chequered flint and rubble stone, with angular buttresses. There is a place of worship for Lady Huntingdon's Connexion. The free grammar school was founded and endowed in 1614, by William Holland, a native of this place, and alderman of Chichester, who bequeathed for that purpose, a garden and messuage called Brotherhood Hall, then used as a school-house, together with his manor of Festoes, &c., to pay from the proceeds of the latter £20 yearly to a master; the income is about £90 per annum. Brotherhood Hall is still standing, and most likely received its name from having been the hall of some guild, or fraternity, prior to the Dissolution; it consists of a centre, with an arched entrance, and two wings. Steyning is the head of a poor law union, which comprises 23 parishes or places, and contains a population of 14,353. In 1826, upon the removal of a barrow on the downs overlooking Steyning, in order to procure the flints, numerous skeletons were discovered, and an urn containing burnt bones, together with several brass coins of Roman emperors. John Pell, the mathematician, was educated here.

STIBBARD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. by S.) from Fakenham; containing 453 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1468 acres, of which 1200 are arable, 50 woodland, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the surface is boldly undulated, and the village is situated on the road from Fakenham to Wells, and is large, but irregularly built, consisting of widely-scattered houses. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Colkerk, and valued in the king's books at £11. 13. 4.: the glebe contains 23a. 2r. 34p. The church is chiefly in the decorated and later styles, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. At the inclosure in 1808, 23½ acres were allotted to the poor.

STIBBINGTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, 1 mile (E. by S.) from Wansford; containing, with Sibson hamlet, 697 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the navigable river Nene, and on the great north road, and comprises good arable and pasture land, the soil of which is incumbent on a layer of gravel. There are numerous quarries, supplying a coarse but durable freestone, which is used for building; and about 50 hands are employed at a paper-mill. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 13. 6½.; net income, £431; patron, the Duke of Bedford: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1807. The church is in the Norman style. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyans.

STICKFORD (ST. HELEN), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, W. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 5½ miles (S. W.) from Spilsby; containing 426 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Spilsby to Boston, and comprises by computation 800 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 6.; net income, £133; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land, at the inclosure of the East fen; the land contains about 70 acres. The church is in the English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STICKNEY (ST. LUKE), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, W. division of the soke of BOLINGBROKE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 9 miles (N.) from Boston; containing 895 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Boston to Spilsby, and comprises 2000 acres, of which about 1200 are pasture, and the remainder arable; the site is elevated, and commands an extensive prospect of a rich and well-wooded tract of country, intersected with fen-drains, supplying facilities of communication with Boston. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 3.; net income, £356; patron, the Rev. George Coltman. The tithes have been commuted, partly for fen land, and partly for corn-rents; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 180 acres. The church is a handsome edifice in the later English style, and contains about 450 sittings. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school, founded and endowed by William Lovell, in 1678. Francis Thurkell, in 1811, left £29 per annum, which, with other bequests amounting to £14 per annum, are distributed among the poor.

STIDD, or STEDE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of PRESTON, Lower division of the hundred of BLACKBURN, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Blackburn. Here are the ruins of an ancient chapel in the early English style, endowed with £25 a year, to preserve which stipend, service has occasionally been performed since the Reformation, by the vicar of Ribchester. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Stidd Lodge.

STIFFKEY (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of NORTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E.) from Wells; containing 487 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the German Ocean, and comprises 2227*a. 1r. 31p.*, of which about 1263 acres are arable, 264 pasture and meadow, 589 salt-marshes, and 78 woodland. The village is beautifully situated in a deep and romantic valley on the banks of the Skiffkey, a rapid stream which discharges itself into Blakeney harbour, about a mile and a half to the north-east. The living comprises the united rectories of St. John and St. Mary, with the rectory of Morston annexed, valued in the king's books at £25, and in the gift of the family of Townshend. The church of St. John is chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and has, on the north side of the chancel, a handsome monument to Nathaniel Bacon: St. Mary's church has gone to decay. A portion of the old Hall, which has been in a state of dilapidation for some years, is now used as a farmhouse; it was built by Sir Nicholas Bacon, Knt., lord keeper of the great seal.

STIFFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ORSETT, hundred of CHAFFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 10 miles (S. E.) from Romford; containing 402 inhabitants. The parish is on the Horndon road, and takes its name from a ford over a stream that flows into the river Thames; it comprises 1547*a. 3r. 9p.*, of which about 1271 acres are arable, 241 pasture, and 35 woodland. Extensive chalk-pits have been worked for the last two centuries. The village is pleasantly situated, and contains many well-built houses. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the gift of R. Wingfield, Esq., and the Embroiderers' Company in fee: the tithes have been commuted for £450, and the glebe comprises 26 acres. The church is a neat structure of the time of Edward I., with a spire; the chancel contains an altar-tomb, with a Norman inscription to David Percy, in Saxon characters, and there is also the effigy of a monk in brass, with an inscription in Latin to Randolph Peachey, formerly rector of the parish.

STILLINGFLEET (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of YORK, partly in the E. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding, but chiefly in the wapentake of OUSE and DERWENT, E. riding, of YORK; including the townships of Acaster-Selby and Kelfield, and containing 921 inhabitants, of whom 418 are in the township of Stillingfleet with Moreby, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by W.) from York. The parish consists of 5820 acres by computation, of which about 2214 are in Stillingfleet with Moreby township; of the latter 200 acres are woods and plantations. The village, which is scattered, lies in the vale of a small rivulet, one mile east of the Ouse. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 7. 6.; net income, £412; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of York, who, as trustees of St. Mary's school, are improPRIATORS. The church is an ancient structure, exhibiting some portions in the Norman style, and attached to it is a chapel, in which is a cross-legged figure in armour, of one of the family of Moreby. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school partly supported by subscription.

STILLINGTON, a township, in the parish of RED-MARSHALL, union of SEDFIELD, S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 8 miles (N. W. by W.) from Stockton; containing 67 inhabitants. Merton College, Oxford, had lands here at a very early date, as in 1367 William de la Pole held some property in Stilyngton, of the master, by the service of one rose; in the 17th century the Morpeths possessed some interest in the place. The township lies to the north-west of Red-Marshall, from which it is separated by a portion of Bishopton; it comprises by measurement 1087 acres, of which 824 are arable, 259 pasture, and 4 roads and waste. The main line of the Clarence railway passes through the township, and the Durham branch strikes off from this place. Rent-charges, as commutations for the tithes, have been awarded, amounting to £121. 6. 8., of which £65 are payable to the rector, and £56. 6. 8. to Christ's Hospital, Sherburn.

STILLINGTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOULD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, 10 miles (N.) from York; containing 748 inhabitants. This parish, the surface of which is rather elevated, consists of 2013*a. 1r. 24p.*, and is watered on the east by the Foss. Stillington Park, the seat of Col. Croft, is a beautiful residence, standing on high ground near the right bank of the river. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of York, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 5.; net income, £120; improPRIATOR, Col. Croft. The great tithes have been commuted for £5. 14., and the vicarial for £41; the glebe comprises $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a good house. The church, which is in the early English style, with a square embattled tower, was rebuilt of stone in 1841, at a cost of £800, and is conveniently situated in the centre of the pleasing and rural village. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a national and an infants' school. The celebrated Laurence Sterne held this living, and resided at Sutton in the neighbourhood.

STILTON (St. MARY), a parish, and formerly a market-town, in the union of PETERBOROUGH, hundred of NORMAN-CROSS, county of HUNTINGDON, $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Huntingdon; containing 817 inhabitants. This place, according to Stukeley, takes its name from Stivecle, signifying stiff clay, and is situated upon the Roman Ermin-street. It gives name to the famous cheese so called, great quantities of which are sold here, though it is made in Leicestershire, twenty miles distant. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 5. 10.; net income, £355; patron, the Bishop of Lincoln: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1805. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A quarter of a mile from the town is a fine spring, at one period celebrated for the cure of ulcerated legs, which properties are said to have ceased; and to the south-east are the remains of an ancient circular encampment.

STINCHCOMBE (St. CYRIL), a parish, in the union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Dursley; containing 393 inhabitants. The parish embraces a portion of the Cotswold hills, and consists of 1393 acres, of which 55 are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £65; patron, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol; improPRIATORS, P. B. Purnell, Esq., and others, whose tithes have been commuted for £240. A school is endowed, and further supported by the parish.

STINSFORD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of DORSET, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. N. E.) from Dorchester; containing 392 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 1.; patron and impropriator, Earl of Ilchester. The great tithes have been commuted for £115, and the vicarial for £190; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises an acre. In the chancel of the church is a stone recording the death of Wadham Strangeways, who was slain at Bridport, whilst opposing the rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth. There are some remarkable circular sand-pits.

STIRCHLEY (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of MADELEY, Wellington division of the hundred of SOUTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Shiffnall; containing 301 inhabitants. The parish comprises 829 acres, of which 39 are common or waste land: the Shropshire canal passes through. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 5. 10., and in the gift of Revel Phillips, Esq., and others: the tithes have been commuted for £190, and the glebe contains $45\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

STIRTON, with THORLBY, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of SKIPTON, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Skipton; containing 132 inhabitants. The township, including the hamlet of Holme-Bridge, contains by computation 3850 acres, most of which is the property of the Earl of Thanet; the lands are chiefly in pasture. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £14, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford.

STISTED (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BRAINTREE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Braintree; containing 911 inhabitants. This parish, bounded by the river Blackwater, exhibits much variety of surface and scenery, and comprises 2913a. 2r. 31p., of which about 2224 acres are arable, 337 pasture, and 288 wood. There are several stately mansions, and the village is beautifully situated on ground sloping gently from the river. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, valued in the king's books at £22: the tithes have been commuted for £750, and the glebe comprises 154 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the Norman style, with a tower on the south side surmounted by a shingled spire, and contains some interesting monuments.

STITHIANS (St. STEDIAN), a parish, in the union of REDRUTH, E. division of the hundred of KERRIER, W. division of CORNWALL, 9 miles (S. W.) from Truro; containing 2530 inhabitants. This parish, which includes a part of the village of Ponsnooth, comprises by computation 3445 acres, whereof 2591 are arable, 59 wood, 693 furze, and 102 moor and waste; the surface is hilly, and the soil overlaid with granite, and in general used for dairy-farming. In Kennall Vale and in Cofawes Wood are mills for making gunpowder, which is chiefly used in the mines, and above the Kennall mills is a paper-mill. A cattle-fair for stock is held on the Monday nearest to the 13th of July. The living is a vicarage, with that of Perran-Arworthal annexed, valued in the king's books at £14. 0. 10., and in the gift of the impropriator, the Earl of Falmouth: the great tithes have been commuted for £255. 7., and the vicarial for £322; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 50 acres. The church, which is 390 feet above the level of the sea, has a handsome embattled tower crowned with pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The parish contains various ancient crosses enriched with sculpture; and in Cofawes Wood was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

STITENHAM, a township, in the parish of SHERRIFF-HUTTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Malton; containing 92 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 1340 acres. The family of Gower, ancestors of the Duke of Sutherland, who is proprietor of the soil, were anciently seated here.

STIVICHALL (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union, and N. division of the county, of WARWICK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. by W.) from Coventry; containing 99 inhabitants, and comprising 724 acres of a highly productive soil. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £90; patron and impropriator, Francis Gregory, Esq.

STIXWOULD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, S. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Horncastle; containing 203 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 10.; net income, £70; patron and impropriator, C. Turnor, Esq. A convent of Cistercian nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded here in the reign of Stephen, by the Countess Lucy, relict of Ranulph, first earl of Chester, and at the Dissolution possessed a revenue of £163. 1. 2.

STOAK, a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of WIRRALL, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing, with the township of Little Stanney, and part of Whitby, 346 inhabitants, of whom 111 are in the township of Stoak, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Chester. The parish is intersected by the Ellesmere canal. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £130; patron and impropriator, Sir H. E. Bunbury, Bart. The church, which is the burial-place of the Bunbury family, has a Norman doorway, some ancient wooden screen-work, and a small chapel attached to the south side of the chancel; it was partially rebuilt in 1827. There are bequests to the poor, amounting to about £25 per annum.

STOAT, a hamlet, in the parish of TIDENHAM, union of CHEPSTOW, hundred of WESTBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 176 inhabitants.

STOBOROUGH, a liberty, in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, borough of WAREHAM, union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, Wareham division of DORSET, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (S.) from Wareham; containing 375 inhabitants. It was formerly governed by a mayor, chosen at Michaelmas; but the inhabitants declining to qualify themselves, when the Schism act came into operation, in 1714, the office no longer exists, although a bailiff is appointed by a jury at the court of the lord of the manor.

STOCK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELMSFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Ingatstone; containing 605 inhabitants. The parish is almost surrounded by that of Buttsbury, in which it is supposed to have been formerly a hamlet, and comprises 1848 acres, whereof 1425 are arable and homesteads, 261 grass, 97 woodland, and 65 waste; the soil is in some parts fertile, and there is abundance of fine clay for making bricks of superior quality. The living is a rectory, with that of Ramsden-Bellhouse annexed, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £658; patron, the Rev. Edward Edison. The tithes of Stock have been commuted for £428. 10., and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church is a large edifice of brick, with a turret of wood, and contains in the south wall a table monument with the recumbent figure of an armed warrior. There is a place of worship for Independents. A house, and two crofts of land, in Downham, were left by a person of the name of James, the rent to be divided between the poor of Stock and Buttsbury. Among former rectors of the parish was the Rev. Charles Hoole, a kinsman of Bishop Sanderson, and who was master of Rotherham and other schools, and editor of several useful school books; he was incumbent from 1660 to 1667, and was succeeded by the learned Mr. Cox, compiler of the Magna Britannia in Essex.

STOCK, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 328 inhabitants. It is situated on a tributary of the river Avon, and to the south of the road leading from Droitwich to Alcester.

STOCK, a hamlet, in the parish of FLADBURY, union of DROITWICH, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Droitwich; containing 91 inhabitants, and comprising, with Bradley, 1096 acres of land.

STOCK-CROSS, a hamlet, in the parish of SPEEN, union of NEWBURY, hundred of KINTBURY, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Newbury. A district church was erected in 1839, and endowed at the expense of the Rev. H. W. Majendie; it is a handsome cruciform edifice in the early English style, containing 400 sittings, of which 300 are free, and, being situated on elevated ground, forms an interesting feature in the landscape.

STOCK-DENNIS, an extra-parochial district, in the hundred of TINTINHULL, union of YEOVIL, W. division of SOMERSET; containing, with Stock-Wyndham, 11 inhabitants. This was formerly a parish, but the church having been destroyed, and the place almost depopulated, it long since lost its parochial rights; it consists of two large farms adjoining the parish of Ilchester. The living, which was a rectory, valued in 1294 at £20, belongs to the Rev. J. H. Wyndham, and yields a net income of £188.

STOCK-GAYLAND, a parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of BROWNSHALL, Sturminster division of DORSET, 7 miles (E. S. E.) from Sherborne; containing 60 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the north by the river Caundle, and intersected in the south by the Lidden, comprises 849*a.* 1*r.* 36*p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 1., and in the patronage of the Rev. H. F. Yeatman, the incumbent, whose tithes have been commuted for £146. 17. 3.: there is a glebe-house, and a glebe consisting of 43 acres. The church is an ancient structure, beautifully situated in the pleasure-grounds of the Manor-house, adjacent to the park, which contains about 120 acres.

STOCKBRIDGE (St. PETER), a market-town and parish, having separate jurisdiction, the head of a union, and formerly a representative borough, locally in the hundred of KING'S SOMBOURN, Andover and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 18 miles (N. by W.) from Southampton, and 66 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 937 inhabitants.

Arms.

The town is situated on the great western road from London to Exeter, and consists of one long street, intersected at the west end by the river Test, and at the east by the Andover and Redbridge canal, over each of which is a bridge; that across the former was rebuilt in 1799, and is a handsome structure. Five smaller streams cross the street in the intermediate space, over which were formerly bridges of one arch, but these have been recently taken down, except one, and the whole has been arched over; the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water. On Houghton Down, about two miles west of the town, was once a race-course; but a new one has been formed immediately adjoining it, in the parishes of Wallop and Longstock, under Danebury Hill, from the area and intrenchments of which the whole of it may be seen. A stand has been erected, which is also used by the members of the Bibury Racing Club, lately removed hither from Gloucestershire; races are held in June, and, for some years past, a plate has been given by the Marquess of Westminster. The streams are particularly favourable for trout-fishing, and the principal nobility and gentry of this and the adjoining counties meet here three or four times a year, and spend several weeks in this favourite recreation, during the season. The preparation of parchment and glue affords employment to a few persons. The market, on Thursday, is well attended; and a large and handsome market-room, adjoining the Grosvenor Arms, has been built at the expense of the Marquess of Westminster. There were formerly three fairs, of which two only are now held, one on July 10th, and the other on the last Thursday in October, the latter of which is among the largest in the county for lambs, several thousands being annually sold; and a fortnight cattle-market has been lately established.

Stockbridge is a borough by prescription, under a bailiff and constable, who are elected by a jury, at the court leet of the manor, held by the steward on Easter-Wednesday. It sent representatives to parliament from the first of Elizabeth, but was disfranchised by the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45. Petty-sessions are held monthly. The town-hall, a neat edifice near the centre of the town, was built in 1810, on the site of a previous structure, at an expense of £1500, defrayed by the inhabitants. The parish comprises 1077 acres, of which 241 are common or waste land. The living is annexed, with that of Little Sombourn, to the vicarage of King's-Sombourn: a rent-charge of £40, in commutation of tithes, is paid to certain impropriators, and one of £3 to the vicar of Barlow. There is a place of worship for Independents. The poor law union of Stockbridge comprises 15 parishes or places, 14 of which are in the county of Hants, and one in that of Wilts, and contains a population of 7096. About two miles and a half from the town is Danebury Hill, a circular intrenchment, in good preservation, inclosing an extensive area, with very high ramparts. On the north and west are several barrows, one of which is named Canute's Barrow; and on the east, at a distance of about a mile and a half, is another circular intrenchment, with a high rampart, inclosing an area of about twenty acres, called Woolberry, on the east side of which is the representation of a white horse, cut many years since, at the expense of W. P. Powlett, Esq., of Sombourn House. Robert, Earl of Gloucester, natural brother of the Empress Matilda, was made prisoner in this town on his flight from Winchester, and, according to tradition, took refuge in the church, after having effected the escape of the empress, who, feigning death, was conveyed thence in funeral procession through the besieging army, and having arrived at a certain distance, mounted a horse and reached Gloucester in safety.

STOCKBURY (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Sittingbourne; containing 603 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2928a. 30p., of which about 618 acres are woodland, and 48 common or waste. A fair, chiefly for toys, is held on the 2nd of August. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 0½; net income, £243, with a house, erected in 1834; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is a spacious cruciform structure in the early English style, the columns and arches of which, on the north side, are of Petworth marble, and peculiarly elegant. A great part of the chancel and north transept was destroyed by fire, in 1836, and the whole has been rebuilt, partly at the expense of the Dean and Chapter, and partly by subscription; the new pillars and arches are of Bethersdon marble, and the ancient carved work, of which some capitals on the south side were elaborately enriched, has been carefully restored. A dreadful tempest, attended with the most destructive effects, happened here in 1746.

STOCKELD, a hamlet, in the township and parish of SPOFFORTH, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 2 miles (W.) from Wetherby; containing 62 inhabitants. The hamlet forms a manor, comprising 970 acres of land, the property of Peter Middelton, Esq., of Stockeld Hall, in the grounds whereof is a lake, near which rises a rock of a peculiar form, 65 feet in girth, and in height 30, that probably gave name to the place, Stockheldt being the Dutch term for a misshapen figure of stone. The sides of the valley through which the water flows, have many sandstone rocks of large size and various forms. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at the Hall.

STOCKERSTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2½ miles (W. S. W.) from Uppingham; containing 48 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the gift of T. Walker, Esq., and two others: the tithes have been commuted for £202, and the glebe contains 37½ acres. Near this place, John Boyvile, in 1465, obtained leave of Edward IV. to erect, in honour of the Blessed Virgin, an almshouse for a chaplain and three persons, and to settle lands upon them in mortmain, of the annual value of £10.

STOCKHAM, a township, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3½ miles (N. E.) from Frodsham; containing 43 inhabitants. It is on the road from Runcorn to Northwich.

STOCKHILL, with MIDDLETON, a township, in the parish of ILKLEY, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 6½ miles (N. W.) from Otley; containing 186 inhabitants. These two hamlets comprise about 2280 acres of land, the property of William Middleton, Esq., of Middleton Lodge, an ancient mansion in the Gothic style, near which is a neat Roman Catholic chapel.

STOCKINGFORD, a chapelry, in the parish and union of NUNEATON, Atherstone division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 1½ mile (W.) from Nuneaton; containing 1386 inhabitants. A district church was erected in 1824, and dedicated to St. Paul, a handsome building with a square embattled tower.

STOCKLAND (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AXMINSTER, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of DORSET, but locally in Devon (to the S. division of which, for electoral purposes, it is annexed), 6 miles (N. E. by E.) from Honiton; containing 1841 inhabitants, of whom 1328 are in the portion of the parish exclusive of the chapelry of Dalwood. The parish comprises by admeasurement 10,000 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil a rich marley earth; dairy-farming prevails, and considerable quantities of wheat are grown. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. 11½; net income, £457; patrons, the Freeholders and Inhabitants. The church is a large ancient structure. There is a chapel of ease at Dalwood; and a national school is supported by subscription, and an allowance of £10 a year from lands left for charitable purposes.

STOCKLAND-BRISTOL, a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 7 miles (N. W. by N.) from Bridgwater; containing 193 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 4., and in the patronage of Thomas Daniel, Esq. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £60, and the vicarial for £151; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 16 acres.

STOCKLEWATH-BOUND, a township, in the parish of CASTLE-SOWERBY, union of PENRITH, LEATH ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 8 miles (S. by W.) from Carlisle; containing 291 inhabitants. Within the township is Castle-Steads, a Roman camp 188 yards long and 160 broad, which has an inner and an outer rampart, and is placed in a triangular position with, and at an equal distance from, two other fortifications, called Whitestones and Stoneraise, the latter whereof, it is supposed, was originally a burial-ground of the Druids, afterwards occupied by the Romans. About a mile from these are vestiges of a Druidical temple, where three stone coffins, containing human bones and other relics, have been found; and a little to the southward are fragments of a large rocking-stone, to which an avenue of stones seems to have once led.

STOCKLEY, a township, in the parish of BRANCEPETH, N. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, union, and S. division of the county of DURHAM, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Durham; containing 53 inhabitants. It comprises about 1160 acres of land: the village is situated near the source of a rivulet to which the township gives name. The tithes have been commuted for £49. 5.

STOCKLEY, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 175 inhabitants.

STOCKLEY-ENGLISH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by E.) from Crediton; containing 161 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £116.

STOCKLEY-POMEROY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CREDITON, hundred of WEST BUDLEIGH, Crediton and N. divisions of DEVON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Crediton; containing 258 inhabitants. It is situated on the road between Crediton and Tiverton, and contains by computation 1300 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 6. 8.; net income, £222; patron, the Bishop of Exeter. There is a glebe-house, and the glebe consists of about 41 acres. The church contains portions of several styles; the nave is the most ancient part, and is entered by a rich Norman doorway; the chancel has an old lancet window, and a piscina with a trefoiled head; there are some specimens of handsomely-carved oak, and the stone steps of a rood-loft still remain.

STOCKLINCH, MAGDALENE (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Ilminster; containing 92 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 4. 7.; net income, £140; patron and incumbent, the Rev. James Upton.

STOCKLINCH, OTTERSAY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHARD, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Ilminster; containing 132 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 9. 2.; net income, £148; patron, Jeffreys Allen, Esq.

STOCKPORT (St. MARY), a newly-enfranchised borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of MACCLESFIELD, N. division of the county of CHESTER; comprising the chapelries of Disley-Stanley, Dukinfield, Hyde, Marple, Norbury, and Romiley, and the townships of Bramhall, Bredbury, Brinnington, Etchells, Offerton, Arms.

Stockport. Torkington, and Werneth; and containing 84,282 inhabitants, of whom 28,431 are in the town, 39 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chester, and 179 (N. W. by N.) from London. This place, from its situation near a common centre, whence several Roman roads diverged, is supposed to have been a Roman military station, and the fort to have occupied the summit of Castle hill, on the site of which the Saxons subsequently erected a baronial castle; from which, expressive of its situation in the woods, the town derived its name Stokeport, or Stockport. Though not mentioned in Domesday book, it is of considerable antiquity, and, till the Conquest, was a military station of some importance, most probably one of those laid waste by the Normans on their conquest of the island, in confirmation of which opinion may be adduced the name of an adjacent vill called Portwood, also omitted in the survey, the first notice of which occurs in the records of the lands of the Baron of Dunham, under the name of Brinnington, or the burnt town. In 1173, the castle of Stokeport was held by Geoffrey de Costenty, against Henry II., but whether in his own right or not, is uncertain. The first baron appears, from the best authority, to have been Ranulph le Dapifer, the progenitor of the family of the De Spencers, from whom it passed to Robert de Stokeport, who, in the reign of Henry III., made the town a free borough. In 1260 it obtained the grant of a fair for seven days, commencing on the festival of St. Wilfrid, and a market on Friday. During the civil war, it was garrisoned for the parliament; but Prince Rupert, advancing against it with a party of the royal troops, expelled the garrison, and took possession for the king; it was, however, subsequently seized by the parliamentarians, who retained it till the termination of the war. In 1745, Stockport was twice visited by the troops of the Pretender, on their approach to Derby; and in their retreat; on which latter occasion, the bridge over the Mersey had been destroyed, and the rebels, with Prince Charles, were compelled to wade through the river, in order to effect their escape. Of the ancient castle not a vestige can be traced: a circular brick edifice was erected on the site by the late Sir George Warren, as a hall for the sale of muslin, for which article of manufacture it was his wish to make this town a mart; but since the failure of that project the building has been converted into an inn.

STOCKPORT is romantically situated on elevated ground, of irregular and precipitous ascent, and the south-eastern portion is intersected by the Goit and Tame, which at their confluence in the centre of the borough form the river Mersey. From the valleys through which these rivers run the houses rise in successive tiers round the sides of the hill, from the base to the summit; and the numerous extensive factories elevated one above another, and spreading over the extent of the town, present, when lighted during the winter months, an appearance strikingly impressive. The most ancient part surrounds the church and market-place, on the high ground overlooking the Mersey, from the bank of which several steep streets, ascending the acclivity, lead to the market-place, whence various other streets diverge in different directions; many of the houses at the base of the hill have apartments excavated in the rock, which is of soft red sandstone. The principal street, here called the Underbank, follows the direction of the old Roman road leading southward to Buxton; and to the north of the church is the site of the ancient castle, and of the Roman military works. The town extends, on the south, a considerable distance along the road to London; and on the north-east, by a bridge over the Mersey, to Portwood; on the west, in the direction of Cheadle; and towards Manchester by another bridge across the Mersey, on the north, on which side of the river is the township of Heaton-Norris, forming part of this town, though in the county of Lancaster. The Wellington road was designed in 1824, with a view to cross the river without the necessity of descending from the high grounds on each side to the level of the vale of the Mersey, and has been accomplished by the construction of a noble bridge, of eleven arches, across the valley and the river, of which nine are on the Cheshire, and two on the Lancashire, side. The arch over the river has a span of more than 90 feet, and is built of hard white stone from the Saddleworth and Runcorn quarries; the arches on the Cheshire side are carried over several of the streets, the thoroughfare being continued underneath, and others are closed up, forming commodious warehouses. The expense of this work, which was completed in less than two years, was £40,000. Between Wellington and Lancashire bridges, is Vernon foot-bridge, over the Mersey, forming an intermediate and more direct communication between the town and the township of Heaton-Norris; it was built by subscription, the first stone having been laid in 1828.

The town is well paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water: an act of parliament for incorporating a gas company, and another for the construction of water-works, were obtained in 1825; and in 1837, the corporation obtained a general improvement act, under which they have purchased the property of the gas company, the profits from which are applied to the purposes of the borough. There are several private newsrooms and libraries; and a library in the Mechanics' Institute, to which purpose a theatre has been converted. The winding and throwing of silk, for which mills were first established here upon the Italian plan, have been nearly superseded by the introduction of the cotton manufacture, which has for some years been the staple trade of the town; of the former there are still some respectable factories, but the latter, since its introduction, has been rapidly increasing, and has attained, both for its extent, and the perfection to which it has been brought, a very high degree of celebrity. There are within the town, including Heaton-Norris and Portwood, not less than fifty cotton-factories, worked by steam-engines and water-wheels; the printing of calico is carried on to a very great extent, and there are many large establishments and dye-houses in the vicinity. The weaving of calico has spread over all the neighbouring villages, which in some instances have become virtually a part of the town. The manufacture of hats has been established; there are also several thread manufactories, and, connected with the various branches of manufacture, the construction of machinery affords employment to a great number of persons.

The importance of Stockport, as a manufacturing town, has been materially promoted by the facility and the abundance of its supply of coal from Poynton, Worth, and Norbury, and the neighbouring districts on the line of the Manchester and Ashton canal, which joins the Peak-Forest canal (a branch of the latter extending to this town), and affords a direct communication with the principal towns in the kingdom. The Manchester and Birmingham railway, also, passes through the borough, and crosses the valley of the Mersey by an immense viaduct, which is considered one of the most magnificent works connected with railways; it is 2180 feet long, 31 broad, and 106 above the level of the stream, and is supported on 22 semicircular arches of 63 feet span, with 2 abutment arches of 18 feet span; the piers are of stone, 10 feet thick, and 40 feet high before the springing of the arches, and the rest of the structure is of brick. The market, on Friday, is more abundantly supplied with corn, meal, and cheese, than any other in the county: in the higher part of the town (the Hill-gate), extensive and convenient shambles, covering an area of 2000 square yards, were built in 1827; but the inhabitants of the vicinity do not avail themselves of this market, preference being given to the general one in the centre of the town. The fairs are on March 4th and 25th, May 1st, and October 23rd, for cattle. Stockport was anciently incorporated, and retained the office of mayor, though little more than nominal, and was within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, until the passing of the Municipal Corporations' act. The government is now vested in a mayor, 14 aldermen, and 42 councillors, under that act; the municipal and parliamentary boundaries, which contain 2505 acres, are co-extensive; the borough is divided into six wards, and the number of magistrates is 17. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, it was constituted a parliamentary borough, with the privilege of sending two members; the mayor is returning officer. A court for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5 has been established; petty-sessions take place every Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; and courts leet and baron are held twice in the year, at which the lord of the manor appoints two constables and other officers, to the number of 50, who are sworn into office at an adjourned court. The churchwardens are chosen by the lords of the manors of Bramall, Bredbury, Brinnington, and Norbury, who from time immemorial have represented the parish in ecclesiastical matters.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £70. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Lady Vernon; net income, £1882. The ancient church, supposed to have been erected in the fourteenth century, of the soft red sandstone in the neighbourhood, having fallen to decay, was, with the exception of the chancel, rebuilt, at an expense of £30,000, by act of parliament passed in the 50th of George III., and an extensive cemetery added to it. The present structure, situated on the eastern side of the market-place, is a handsome building in the later English style, with a lofty square tower, crowned by a pierced parapet and pinnacles; the pillars of the nave are carried up to the roof, producing an unusual but impressive effect, from the loftiness of their elevation: the chancel, which was in the decorated style, has undergone considerable alteration, but still retains some of the ancient stone stalls, which are of elegant design, and several of the old monuments have been preserved. The parish has been divided into two distinct parishes, under the 16th section of the 58th of George III., cap. 45; the church of the new parish having been endowed out of the revenues of the mother church. St. Peter's district church, a neat edifice of brick, was built in 1768, at the expense of William Wright, Esq., of Mottram St. Andrew, to whom a handsome mural monument has been erected in the centre of the north aisle: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £220; patron, Lawrence Wright, Esq. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was erected in 1825, by grant from the Parliamentary Commissioners, at an expense of £14,555, and is in the Grecian style, with a tower surmounted by a cupola; the principal entrance is at the east end, through a noble portico of six lofty Ionic pillars, and the interior of the edifice is handsomely decorated. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £110; patron, the Rector of Stockport. There are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, the New Connexion of Methodists, the Society of Friends, Primitive and Warrenite Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. A public cemetery has been established, of which the grounds are several acres in extent, and a neat chapel has been erected.

The free grammar school was founded in 1482, by Sir Edmund Shaa, citizen and goldsmith of London, who endowed it with £10 per annum, to which several benefactions have been added; and the Goldsmiths' Company, who are the patrons, have erected, on the Wellington-road, a handsome and extensive schoolroom, with a house for the master, in the later English style, at an expense of £4500, on a site presented by Lady Vernon; the master has a salary of £225, and the usher one of £105. The national school, established in 1826, is a spacious edifice of brick, fronted with stone, and 2000 children of both sexes are instructed in the establishment. The Stockport Sunday school, upon a very comprehensive plan, admitting children of all denominations, was established in 1805, and an extensive building of brick, four stories high, was erected for its use, at an expense of £10,000, raised by subscription; there are 4000 children belonging to the institution, and attached to it are four branch schools, in the vicinity of the town, built at a cost of £6000, in which 1500 children are taught. On the eastern side of the old churchyard are six almshouses, founded by an ancestor of the late Sir George Warren, in 1685, for aged men: the allowance was augmented by Humphrey Warren, Esq., who died in the middle of the last century; and the late Lady Bulkeley bequeathed £1200, vested in trustees for the same purpose, and £1000 for the poor of Stockport. An infirmary was erected in 1833, on the Wellington-road, at an expense of £6300, raised by subscription, and is an elegant structure of stone, forming a prominent feature in the approach to the town. The poor law union of Stockport comprises 17 parishes or places, 15 of which are in the county of Chester, and 2 in Lancaster, and contains a population of 85,672.

STOCKSFIELD-HALL, a township, in the parish of BYWELL ST. ANDREW, union of HEXHAM, E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 5 miles (N. W.) from Corbridge; containing 29 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the river Tyne, over which a bridge was built here in 1838, and comprises about 200 acres, mostly arable land; the soil is gravelly, producing, particularly in moist seasons, excellent crops of grain; and the scenery, which is very beautiful, is quite panoramic from the hill. The Newcastle and Carlisle railway has a station in the township. The tithes have been commuted for £40.

STOCKTON, a township, in the parish of MALPAS, union of WREXHAM, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S. S. W.) from Malpas; containing 31 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £26. 4.

STOCKTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of LODDON and CLAVERING, hundred of CLAVERING, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Beccles; containing 129 inhabitants, and comprising about 960 acres, chiefly arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £275; patron, the Duke of Norfolk: the glebe contains 32 acres. The church is in the later English style, with a circular tower.

STOCKTON (ST. CHAD), a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Shiffnall; containing 422 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the west by the river Severn, and traversed by the road from Shiffnall to Bridgenorth, comprises by admeasurement 3163 acres, of which 1760 are arable, about 1146 pasture, and 257 woodland. The soil is a sandy loam, and the chief produce consists of wheat, turnips, and barley; the surface is agreeably diversified with hill and dale, and Apley Terrace, a natural eminence several miles in length, commences here, and commands fine views, particularly of Apley Park, part of which is also situated in this parish. The living is a rectory, with Boningale annexed, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 3., and in the gift of T. Whitmore, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £589. 15., and the glebe comprises 184 acres. The church is an ancient structure, containing about 300 sittings, all free.

STOCKTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SOUTHAM, Southam division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Southam; containing 452 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Southam to Dunchurch, and comprises 1363a. 12p., of which about 1315 acres are cultivated, and chiefly arable; the surface is in general flat, and the soil rests upon blue lias. The Warwick and Napton canal intersects the parish at its northern boundary. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 1.; net income, £338; patrons, the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford: the tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1791, and there is a glebe-house. The church is in the decorated English style. The Rev. Charles Crane, rector in 1807, gave a house for a school, the master of which receives £12 a year, arising from land formerly held in trust for the repair of the church.

STOCKTON (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WARMINSTER, forming a detached portion of the hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 2 miles (W. by N.) from Wily; containing 307 inhabitants. The parish is washed by the small stream Wily, and comprises 2083a. 3r. 2p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 2. 1.; net income, £440; patron, the Bishop of Winchester. The tithes were commuted for land in 1809; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 600 acres. The church is an ancient structure. An almshouse was founded in 1657, under the will of John Topp, sen., who bequeathed £1000 for charitable uses; the revenue of the charity is nearly £200 per annum. There is a mansion, built in the Elizabethan style by the same person, which is still in good preservation, and the principal room contains, in its original state, some fine oak carving. A Roman road crosses the southern extremity of the parish, and there are British and Roman earthworks.

STOCKTON (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Lower division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 14 miles (N. W.) from Worcester; containing 223 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 856 acres, is situated on the river Teme, and the road from Worcester to Ludlow passes through it. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 11½, and in the gift of William Raymond, Esq.: there is a parsonage-house, with a glebe of 21 acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £198. The church, a very old edifice, contains a vault and monument to an ancient family of the name of Walsh.

STOCKTON-ON-THE-FOREST, a parish, in the wapentake of BULMER, union and N. riding of YORK, 4 miles (N. E.) from York; containing 389 inhabitants. It comprises 3270 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder grass land; the surface is level; hedge-row timber, a remnant of the ancient forest of Galtres, grows in abundance, and numerous rare plants are scattered about the common. Stockton Hall, a noble brick mansion, is the seat of George Lloyd, Esq., J.P. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Bugthorpe in the Cathedral of York, with a net income of £140: the tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land and a money payment in 1813. The church was rebuilt in 1843, at an expense of about £650. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a parochial school is supported by subscription, aided by £10 per annum, left by Thomas Wilkinson.

Corporation Seal.

STOCKTON-UPON-TEES (St. Thomas), an incorporated market-town, inland port, parish, and the head of a union, in the S. W. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; containing, with the townships of East Hartburn and Preston, 10,071 inhabitants, of whom 9825 are in the town, 20 miles (S. S. E.) from Durham, and 244 (N. by W.) from London. This place is of considerable antiquity, and the discovery of a Roman coin near the site of the castle has led to the conjecture that it was a station of that people, but nothing to confirm the opinion is recorded; it formed a part of the possessions of the see of Durham at an early period, and the castle was occupied by Hugh de Pudsey, bishop of the diocese in the reign of Richard I. His successor, Philip de Poitou, entertained King John here in 1214, and the charter granted by that monarch to the burgesses of Newcastle bears date at Stockton. It continued to be the occasional residence of the bishops, and seems to have escaped in a great measure the commotions and border feuds which then agitated this part of England, with the exception of an inroad of the Scots in 1322, who plundered and burnt the town. At the period of the civil war in the 17th century, the castle was taken by the royalists, some importance being attached to its commanding the old passage of the Tees; it was afterwards surrendered to the republican forces, and in 1645 was garrisoned by the Scots, but delivered by them to the English; in 1647 it was ordered by the parliament to be dismantled, and about five years subsequently its complete destruction was accomplished, no part of the structure now remaining, although the fosse may still be traced. The town suffered severely from the overflowing of the Tees, in 1771, 1783, and 1822. It is situated on an eminence on the northern bank of the river, and has advanced rapidly in prosperity since the middle of the 17th century, at which period it consisted principally of mean hovels, the better houses being constructed with "post and pile," and not one built of brick. It is now one of the cleanest and handsomest towns in the northern part of the kingdom. The main street, which is about half a mile in length, is broad, and contains numerous well-built houses, chiefly of brick, with a few of stone erected with the materials of the dilapidated castle: from this thoroughfare smaller streets branch off towards the river, and on different sides of the town a great number of new houses have been recently built. The streets are well paved, and lighted with gas, under the authority of an act of parliament passed in 1822. A good stone bridge over the Tees was commenced in 1764, and completed in 1769, at an expense of £8000; it has five elliptical arches, of which the central is 72 feet in span, and 23 above low-water mark. The theatre, in Green-Dragon-yard, Finkle-street, is an inferior building; a mechanics' institute, with a library, was established in 1824, and there are also a subscription library and two newsrooms. Races are held in August, a week after those of York, at Tibbersley, about three miles from Stockton; and assemblies occasionally.

The situation of Stockton, at a distance of twelve miles only from the sea, and on a river navigable eight miles above the town, affords it many advantages; and the increased shipping, and amount of duties, evince the progressive extension of its mercantile interests. The port is a member of that of Newcastle; the dues, from the payment of which vessels belonging to the cinque-ports are exempt, are the property of the bishop, and are held on lease by the corporation. Ships of large size were formerly obliged to receive and unload their cargoes at Portrack, which, though only a mile from the town, is by the circuitous course of the river more than four times that distance; but, in 1808, a company was incorporated by act of parliament, called the Tees' Navigation Company, and a cut was made from Portrack to the town, capable of admitting vessels of 300 tons' burthen. This improvement has greatly benefited the trade, and amply repaid the shareholders; and in 1828 an act was obtained for the extension of the cut to Newport, on the south shore, and for the construction of other works for deepening the river, and facilitating the navigation between Stockton and the sea; all of which have been carried into effect under the superintendance of Mr. W. A. Brooks. The cut to Newport is three-quarters of a mile in length, and 80 yards broad; and at a comparatively small outlay of capital, the navigation of the Tees has been so much improved that vessels drawing 15 feet water can, in ordinary spring tides, sail up to the quays at Stockton, whereas previously, trading vessels of 100 tons were obliged to discharge great part of their cargoes before they could approach the town. The shifting sand-banks, also, in the bed of the river, which greatly obstructed its navigation, have been completely removed by the construction of jetties contracting the channel. The great increase in the shipping consequent on the introduction of the coal trade of the Tees, rendered the exhibition of lights at the mouth indispensable; and there are now two leading lights on the Durham shore, one red, and the other bright, as guides to clear the Redcar rocks, and make for the red-bar buoy, from which two other lights on the Bran sand, on the north side of the estuary, lead up the channel, till it becomes necessary to change the course for a floating light near the fifth buoy, where secure anchorage is found in four fathoms at low water. Formerly, the sailing course into the Tees was much more direct and convenient for a southern trade; and the Navigation Company have it in contemplation to restore the course of the river to its old bed, which ranged nearly due east and west. In 1815, the town was made a bonding-port for certain goods. Its principal trade coastwise is with London, Hull, Leith, Sunderland, &c., and comprises the exportation of most articles of agricultural produce, coal, linen and worsted yarn, and particularly lead, of which many hundred tons, brought chiefly from Yorkshire and the borders of Durham and Northumberland, are annually shipped. Lead also forms the chief article of exportation in its foreign trade, which is with the Baltic, Holland, Hamburgh, and the British and American colonies, whence it receives in return materials for ship-building, timber for other purposes, tallow, &c. Two shipping companies have been established in the London, and two in the foreign, trade. The number of vessels registered at the port, of above 50 tons, is 253, and their aggregate burthen 53,353.

The principal branches of manufacture are those connected with the shipping; there are two ship-builders' yards, five factories for sail-cloth, two rope-walks, two iron-foundries, and a block and pump manufactory; also three breweries, some corn-mills, a mill for spinning yarn, and one for worsted. The fishery of the Tees was formerly a great source of prosperity to the town, but it has considerably declined; it belongs to the Bishop of Durham, and is gratuitously open to poor fishermen under certain regulations. A railroad from Witton-Park and other collieries, by Darlington, to this place, twenty-five miles and a half in length, was constructed in 1825, chiefly for the conveyance of coal from the great Auckland field. The line crosses the Tees by a suspension bridge, of which the foundation-stone was laid on the 18th July, 1829; the platform will sustain a weight of 150 tons, and the bridge was completed and opened 27th December, 1836. A branch of the Clarence railway from the inland districts extends to this town; and another branch, commencing in the township of Billingham, and called the Stockton and Hartlepool railway, proceeds in a north-east direction, and afterwards along the sea-coast until it reaches the harbour of Hartlepool; it is chiefly used for the conveyance of coal, for which it was completed November 12th, 1840, but passengers are also conveyed, for whose accommodation, and for traffic in general merchandise, it was opened on the 10th of February, 1841. The market, granted by Bishop Anthony Beck, in 1310, is on Wednesday and Saturday, and is well attended; and the shambles, erected in 1825, in front of the town-hall, form a neat range of inclosed brick buildings: a handsome stone column, of the Doric order, thirty-three feet high, stands in the centre of the market-place. Fairs are held on the last Wednesday before May 13th, and November 23rd, which are general and statute fairs; and there are cattle-fairs on the last Wednesday in every month. The period at which Stockton was incorporated is uncertain, but is supposed to be about the commencement of the 13th century; the last charter was granted by Bishop Cosin, in 1666. The government is now vested in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the borough is divided into two wards; the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and three others have been appointed by commission. The town comprises two constablewicks, one called the Borough, including that part which is wholly freehold, and the other termed the Town, consisting of that portion which is partly held by copy of court roll under the Bishop of Durham, and partly by long leases under the vicar of the parish of Stockton. The bishop is lord of the borough, and by his steward holds courts leet and baron, at which suits of trespass and debts under 40s. are cognizable; a halmote court occurs twice a year, in which similar causes are tried, and petty-sessions for Stockton ward are holden here. The town-hall, built in 1735, and enlarged in 1744, stands nearly in the centre of the main street, and is a handsome quadrangular building of brick, surmounted by a light clock-tower and a spire, with a piazza stretching along the lower story on its north side.

Stockton was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Norton, from which it was separated by an act of parliament obtained in 1713. The LIVING is a vicarage not in charge; net income, £400; patron, the Bishop; impropiator, R. W. Myddleton, Esq. The ancient chapel, supposed to have been erected about the year 1237, was taken down, and the building of the present church was completed in 1712, at an expense of about £1600: it is a neat and commodious edifice of brick, with a tower 80 feet high, at the western end; in the vestry-room is a small library, chiefly of theological works. A church dedicated to the Holy Trinity, to which a district has been assigned, containing a population of 4000 persons, has been erected on a site given by Bishop Van Mildert, under the management of a committee, and endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; it is a handsome structure in the decorated English style, with an octagonal tower surmounted by a graceful spire, and contains 1200 sittings, of which 400 are free, in consideration of a grant of £600 from the Incorporated Society. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £300. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive Methodists, Unitarians, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics: the Roman Catholic chapel on the road from Stockton to Norton is a handsome structure after a design by Welby Pugin, and is of recent erection. A charity school was founded by subscription, in 1721, since which period it has been endowed with various bequests and donations, among which are £1100 by George Brown in 1811, £950 by George Sutton in 1815, £700 by the Bishop of Durham in 1824, £200 by John Swainson, and £100 each by the Trustees of Lord Crewe's Charity and Nicholas Swainson, altogether producing an annual income of £250; the building was erected in 1819, and the school is conducted on the national system. A school of industry for girls, instituted in 1803, is supported partly by endowment. Stockton, in conjunction with Norton, is entitled to a scholarship at Brasenose College, Oxford, with an endowment of £8 per annum, founded by Dr. Claymond, formerly vicar of Norton. Some almshouses, originally erected about the year 1682, were rebuilt in 1816, from a gift of £3000 by George Brown, Esq., and contain a committee-room and dispensary, and thirty-six apartments. Elizabeth Bunting, in 1765, bequeathed £300 for the benefit of poor persons, which sum was invested in the purchase of £378. 13. three per cent. consols. The union comprises 41 parishes or places, of which 30 are in the county of Durham, and 11 in the N. riding of York, and contains altogether a population of 33,743. Stockton is the birthplace of Joseph Ritson, a refined critic, and author of Ancient Songs and Metrical Romances; of Brass Crosby, lord mayor of London at the period of the commotions occasioned by Wilkes; and of Joseph Reed, a dramatic poet.

STOCKWELL, a suburban district, and a chapelry, in the parish and union of LAMBETH, E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON and of the county of SURREY, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from the heart of London. This place, which consists of ranges of handsome houses extending on both sides of the road from Kennington to Clapham, has within the last few years been greatly increased by the erection of numerous pleasing villas and elegant cottages. The streets are partially lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from the South London water-works: there is an extensive ale brewery; and in a spacious assembly-room, concerts and public meetings are held. The chapelry is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests held in the borough of Southwark, and included in the limits of the new Police act. The chapel, erected by Archbishop Secker, is dependent on the mother church at Lambeth; it has been repaired within the last few years, and a district has been recently assigned to it. An additional church, dedicated to St. Michael, was consecrated November 18, 1841, and is a commodious structure, with a steeple 106 feet high, and cost £3721; the organ and clock were presented by Mr. S. B. Brooke. There is a place of worship for Independents; also a proprietary grammar school, in Park-road, Clapham-road, erected at an expense of £1658, and which is a handsome building, fronted with Bath stone, in the Elizabethan style. A national school, of which the first stone was laid by Archbishop Sutton, was erected in 1818.

STOCKWITH, EAST, a township, in the parish and union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Gainsborough; containing 266 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOCKWITH, WEST, a chapelry, in the parish of MISTERTON, union of GAINSBOROUGH, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from Gainsborough; containing 651 inhabitants, and comprising in the township about 630 acres. The village forms a long line of buildings on the west bank of the Trent, at the point where the Idle and the Chesterfield canal fall into that river. It has risen from the rank of a small hamlet to that of a flourishing river-port, or creek, under Hull, since the Idle was made navigable to Bawtry, and since the formation of the Chesterfield canal, which has a commodious basin at the south end of the village. The chapel was built in 1722, pursuant to the will of William Huntington, and is endowed with a house and 6 acres of land, and a farm at Gunhouse, consisting of 76a. 2r. 27p. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOCKWOOD (St. EDWOLD), a parish, in the union of SHERBORNE, liberty of SUTTON-POINTZ, Sherborne division of DORSET, 9 miles (S. S. W.) from Sherborne; containing 28 inhabitants. It comprises 692a. 2r. 12p., about one-third of which is arable, and the remainder meadow, pasture, and coppice; the soil is clay, and the parish, the surface of which is generally level, is surrounded with hills. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4., and in the patronage of Miss E. Bellamy: the tithes have been commuted for £125, and the glebe contains $42\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church has sittings for about fifty persons.

STODDAY, with ASHTON, a township, in the parish and union of LANCASTER, hundred of LONSDALE, south of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Lancaster; containing 185 inhabitants.

STODMARSH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRIDGE, hundred of DOWNHAMFORD, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. N. E.) from Canterbury; containing 145 inhabitants. It comprises 690a. 1r. 9p., of which 259 acres are arable, 321 meadow, 61 pasture, 20 woodland, 11 hop-grounds, and 7 orchard and homesteads. The living is a donative, endowed with the rectorial tithes; net income, £128; patron, the Archdeacon of Canterbury. The church is in the early English style.

STODY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ERPPINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 3 miles (S. W. by S.) from Holt; containing 187 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1276a. 3r. 26p., of which the greater portion is the property of Lady Suffield; 51 acres are common or waste. The village is in a picturesque dell, watered by a rivulet running into the Glaven. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Hunworth united, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 4., and in the patronage of Lady Suffield: the tithes have been commuted for £230, and the glebe contains 31 acres. The church is a cruciform structure, with a circular embattled tower.

STOFORD, or STOLFORD, a hamlet, in the parish of STOGURSEY, union of WILLITON, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 122 inhabitants.

STOGUMBER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 13 miles (N. W.) from Taunton; containing 1384 inhabitants. This parish, which is of considerable extent, is on the west of the Quantox hills, and some good red stone is found in it fit for building purposes: the village, which is large, contains a post-office. A market was formerly held, on Saturday; and a fair still takes place, on May 6th, chiefly for cattle. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 18. $7\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £239; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church is a handsome edifice, consisting of a nave and aisles, in the later English style; some of the pillars, and the rood-loft, are richly ornamented, and the ancient open oak seats present good specimens of carving. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A parochial school is supported by subscription; and there is an almshouse for 6 poor women, each of whom receives a small weekly allowance. Roman coins have been discovered here.

STOGURSEY, or STOKE-COURCY (St. Andrew), a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Bridgwater; containing, with the hamlets of Burton, Knighton, Shurton, Stoford, and Week, 1467 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the Bristol Channel, and comprises 5853 acres, of which 275 are common or waste land. The living is a vicarage, with that of Lilstock annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 7. 6., and in the gift of Eton College. Certain tithes belonging to the rector of Huntspill were exchanged for corn-rents in 1800, under an inclosure act; and rent-charges, in commutation of tithes under the recent act, of £50, £800, and £370, are payable respectively to an impropiator, to the college, and the vicar. A Benedictine priory, a cell to the abbey of L'Onley, in Normandy, was founded here in the reign of Henry II., and at the suppression was valued at £58 per annum, and granted by Henry VI. to Eton College.

STOKE, near CHESTER.—See STOAK.

STOKE, a township, in the parish of ACTON, union and hundred of NANTWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Nantwich; containing 119 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Watson family, with a net income of £216: the rectorial and impropriate tithes have each been commuted for £30.

STOKE-ASH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (S. W.) from Eye; containing 423 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Norwich, by way of Ipswich, and comprises 1167*a.* 3*r.* 29*p.* Petty-sessions are held monthly. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 3., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. John Ward: there is a glebe-house; the glebe contains about 15½ acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £358. The church consists of a nave and chancel, with an embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

STOKE-BARDOLPH, a township, in the parish of GEDLING, union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Nottingham; containing 216 inhabitants.

STOKE-BISHOP, a tything, in the parish of WESTBURY-UPON-TRYM, union of CLIFTON, Lower division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Bristol; containing 2651 inhabitants. The river Avon bounds the place on the south-west.

STOKE, BISHOP'S (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WINCHESTER, hundred of FAWLEY, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (S.) from Winchester; containing 1137 inhabitants. The London and South-Western railway passes on the west, and at a short distance a branch diverges to Gosport: the Winchester canal runs through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 17. 6., and in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester: the tithes have been commuted for £612. 10.; there is a parsonage-house, and the glebe contains 21 acres.

STOKE-BLISS, a parish, in the union of TENBURY, partly in the Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, but chiefly in the hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 6 miles (S. E.) from Tenbury; containing, with the chapelry of Little Kyre, 351 inhabitants, of whom 207 are in Stoke-Bliss township. The parish is situated on the road from Tenbury to Bromyard, and comprises by admeasurement 2077 acres, of which 1071 are in the Herefordshire portion. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £360; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 35 acres.

STOKE-BRUERNE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TOWCESTER, hundred of CLELEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3½ miles (E. N. E.) from Towcester; containing 800 inhabitants, of whom 436 are in the township. The whole parish consists of 2282 acres, of which 1126 are in the township, exclusively of the chapelry of Shuttlehanger. The Grand Junction canal passes through a tunnel two miles long, partly in this parish, and partly in that of Blisworth. At the inclosure of land in 1840, 5 acres were appropriated for recreation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £30; net income, £422; patrons, the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford.

STOKE-BY-CLARE (St. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 12 miles (N. W. by N.) from Halstead; containing 868 inhabitants. Richard de Clare, Earl of Hereford, in 1124, removed the monks of Bec, whom his father had placed in the castle of Clare, to this village, first into the parochial church of St. Augustine, and afterwards to a church built for them, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist. In 1415, Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, then patron, procured power to change the society into a college of Secular priests, for a dean, six prebendaries, eight vicars, and other officers; and this was valued in the 26th of Henry VIII. at £324. 4. 1. per annum: Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, was the last dean. A modern house now stands upon the site, which was the residence of the well-known miser, John Elwes. The parish comprises 2361 acres, of which 48 are common or waste land: the navigable river Stour passes on the south. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £130; it is in the patronage of Lady Rush, and the tithes have been commuted for £740. 18. Sir Gervaise Elwes, Bart., in 1678, bequeathed a rent-charge of £10 for teaching children; and there is a fund for apprenticing them, amounting to £33 per annum, the rent of twelve acres of land. An almshouse, consisting of three cottages, occupied by six widows, was founded by Richard Brown, in 1526, and has an endowment of £8 per annum.

STOKE-CANNON (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of St. THOMAS, hundred of WONFORD, Wonford and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Exeter; containing 490 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1100 acres, and is crossed by the rivers Exe and Culm, the latter of which intersects the village, and turns a paper-mill giving employment to about 30 persons: the railroad from Bristol to Exeter also passes through the village. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter, the appropriators: the great tithes have been commuted for £140, and those of the perpetual curate for £128. The church and manor were given by King Athelstan to the Cathedral of Exeter: the edifice, with the exception of the tower, was rebuilt in 1836, and corresponds in style with the more ancient portions; the altar is much admired, and was formed of a red stone from Sir T. Acland's quarry; the font is also an object of great interest, supposed by antiquaries to be at least 700 years old, and there is a monument to the memory of a son of Bishop Hall.

STOKE-CHARITY (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINCHESTER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Whitchurch; containing 167 inhabitants. The South-Western railway passes on the south. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 13. $6\frac{1}{2}$, and in the gift of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £420; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 20 acres. The church is a very ancient massive edifice, and contains several curious monumental inscriptions.

STOKE-CLIMSLAND, a parish, in the union of LAUNCESTON, N. division of the hundred of EAST, E. division of CORNWALL, 3 miles (N.) from Callington; containing 2073 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the north by the river Inney, which runs into the Tamar on the east, is situated on the road from Launceston to Callington, and comprises 8717*a. 1r. 12p.*, of which about 5500 acres are arable, 800 pasture, 760 woodland, coppice, and plantation, 180 orchard, 1300 common, and the rest waste, &c.; the soil is light; the surface is hilly, and the scenery picturesque and beautiful. A fair for cattle is held on May 29th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £40, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall; net income, £621. The church is a very spacious structure, with a fine tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOKE-D'ABERNON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, second division of the hundred of ELMBRIDGE, W. division of SURREY, 1 mile (S. E. by E.) from Cobham; containing, with the hamlet of Oxshot, 352 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 3.; net income, £418; patron, the Rev. Hugh Smith. The church contains monuments to the Vincent family; the pulpit is richly embellished.

STOKE-DAMERALL, a parish, in the hundred of ROBOROUGH, Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON; adjoining the borough of Plymouth, and containing 33,820 inhabitants. This parish, which includes Devonport and Morice-Town, is one of the most extensive in the county; the village occupies an elevated site, and comprises several rows of excellent houses, a crescent, and some private mansions of more than ordinary beauty. Among the important public structures are, the immense reservoir of the Devonport Water Company, which supplies the government establishments and the neighbourhood in general; the military hospital, a spacious edifice of grey marble, erected in 1797, on the west side of Stonehouse Creek, comprising four large square buildings, of similar size and form, connected by a piazza of forty-one arches; and the Blockhouse, occupying an eminence north of the village, surrounded by a fosse and drawbridge, commanding a most magnificent prospect. On the eastern bank of the Hamoaze is Morice-Town, consisting of four principal streets, and so named from a former lord of the manor, where a ferry was established in 1800, to communicate with Cornwall, at Torpoint, on the opposite shore: a floating bridge, worked by steam, and held in its course by chains across the bed of the river, was completed a few years since. The sides of the harbour are lined with various wharfs, and in the town is a large establishment called the Tamar Brewery. At a short distance is the powder-magazine, which, although it covers an area of five acres, was insufficient in time of war, when line-of-battle ships were fitted up as floating magazines. A fair is held on Whit-Monday: In the vicinity, at Cross Hill, is a very extensive quarry of durable slate. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 18. 9., and in the gift of Sir John St. Aubyn, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £628, and the glebe contains $23\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a mean but spacious edifice, with a low square tower. Two additional churches have been erected; and there are places of worship for Independents, Calvinistic Methodists, and Wesleyans.—See DEVONPORT.

STOKE-DOYLE (St. RUMBALD), a parish, in the union of OUNDLE, hundred of NAVISFORD, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (S. W. by S.) from Oundle; containing 169 inhabitants. It is bounded on the east by the navigable river Nene, and comprises 1600 acres, of which about 40 are wood, and the rest arable and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 2. 11.; income, £142; patron, G. Capron, Esq. There is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 36 acres. The church is in the Grecian style, built about 1715, and contains a fine monument to the memory of Judge Ward.

STOKE, DRY (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of UPPINGHAM, partly in the hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, but chiefly in the hundred of WRANDIKE, county of RUTLAND, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Uppingham; containing, with the liberty of Holy-Oakes, 51 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 2. 1., and in the gift of the Marquess of Exeter: the tithes have been commuted for £385, and the glebe contains $28\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

STOKE, EARL.—See EARL-STOKE.

STOKE, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of WINFRITH; Wareham division of DORSET, 4 miles (W. by S.) from Wareham; containing 590 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Wareham to Dorchester, and comprises 5860 acres by admeasurement, consisting of about equal portions of arable, pasture, and heath; the soil is various, comprehending several sandy and gravelly mixtures, with a little clay. The situation is pleasant, commanding a distant view of the Purbeck hills, and embracing a fertile valley watered by the river Froome. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 12. 11.; net income, £326; patron, Sir W. Oglander, Bart. The church is a neat edifice, rebuilt by subscription, in 1827, at an expense of £1700. Bindon Abbey, in the parish, was founded in 1172, by Robert de Newburgh and Maud his wife, who endowed it for monks of the Cistercian order; it was dedicated to St. Mary, and at the Dissolution its revenue was valued at £229. 2. 1., and the site granted to Sir Thomas Poyning. The beautiful remains consist principally of an angle of the tower of the church, and part of the walls, with the foundations.

STOKE, EAST (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Newark; containing 385 inhabitants.

On Stoke field was fought, in 1487, the decisive battle between the armies of Henry VII. and John de la Pole, Earl of Lincoln, who had espoused the cause of Lambert Simnel; the earl and 4000 of his followers were slain. This is said to be the first action wherein cannon was used with success. The village is pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the river Trent, and on the old Roman Fosse-road. The living is a discharged vicarage, with those of Coddington and Syerston annexed, valued in the king's books at £8. 13.; net income, £372; patron and appropriator, the Chancellor of the Cathedral of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land in 1795; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 250 acres. The church is on an eminence in front of the Hall, which is a handsome mansion, with beautiful grounds overlooking the vale of the Trent. There is a chapel of ease at Elston. An hospital dedicated to St. Leonard, was founded here before the time of Henry I., for a master and brethren, chaplain, and several sick persons, whose revenue at the Dissolution was valued at £9.

STOKE-EDITH (St. MARY), a parish, in the hundred of RADLOW, union and county of HEREFORD, 7 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Hereford; containing 347 inhabitants. It comprises 1674 acres, of which 20 are common or waste land; the subsoil is a deep clay; the surface is flat, except that of Stoke Park, which is elevated, and commands extensive and beautiful prospects. The living is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of Westhild annexed, valued in the king's books at £15, and in the gift of Edward T. Foley, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £320; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 103 acres. An ancient sword, some curious beads, several human skeletons with their faces downwards, and other relics, have been found at Radlow Bush, here.

STOKE-FERRY (ALL SAINTS), a market-town and parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 38 miles (W. by S.) from Norwich, and 88 $\frac{1}{2}$ (N. N. E.) from London; containing 663 inhabitants. The town is situated on the banks of the river Wissey, which is navigable up to it, and on the road from Lynn to Thetford and Bury. An extensive traffic is carried on in malt, corn, timber, and coal. In the reign of Henry III. it obtained a grant for holding a weekly market and an annual fair, which was confirmed by Henry VI.: the market was for a long period disused, but has been recently revived, and is now held on Friday, principally for corn; a large fair takes place on Dec. 6th, for horses, cattle, &c., and there is a statute for hiring servants on the Thursday after Old Michaelmas-day. The parish comprises 2059a. 3r. 25p., of which about 1232 acres are arable, 674 pasture and meadow, and 59 woodland; the substratum is chiefly limestone. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Crown: the great tithes have been commuted for £247, and the small tithes for £227. 9. The church consists only of a nave, and had formerly a square tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOKE-FLEMING (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Dartmouth; containing 736 inhabitants. It is situated on the sea-coast, and comprises 3013 acres, of which 2300 are arable, 500 pasture, and 200 woodland; the soil is light and thin, but of good quality. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £31. 6. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £649; patron, Charles Farwell, Esq. The church has a Norman tower, built apparently at a much earlier period than the body of the edifice, which is much dilapidated, and contains some interesting monuments.

STOKE-GABRIEL (St. GABRIEL), a parish, in the union of TOTNES, hundred of HAYTOR, Paignton and S. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Totnes; containing 691 inhabitants. It comprises about 2000 acres, the surface of which is hilly, and the soil in general a rich loam: the navigable river Dart runs on the south. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 11. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £163; patrons, Sir S. H. Northcote, Bart., the Executors of the Rev. J. Templar, and the Rev. F. Belfield, in turn; appropriator, the Chancellor of Exeter Cathedral. The church contains an ancient wooden screen. There is a place of worship for Baptists; also a national school. Capt. John Davis, the discoverer of Davis' Straits, was born here.

STOKE-GIFFORD (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of CLIFTON, Upper division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Bristol; containing 480 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bristol to Gloucester, and comprises 3000 acres by computation; the surface is flat, and the soil in one part is sandy, and in the other clayey. There are several quarries; and here is found a stone called "the landscape stone," which is sold at Clifton as the produce of that parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; total net income, £60; patron, the Duke of Beaufort, who holds all the tithes, and pays to the vicar a stipend of £25. The church was built in 1150, and has been the burial-place of several noble families. John Silcocks, in 1741, bequeathed £200, directing the interest to be applied for teaching children.

STOKE-GOLDING, a chapelry, in the parish of HINCKLEY, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W.) from Hinckley; containing 663 inhabitants. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal passes through it. The chapel is dedicated to St. Margaret. A free grammar school was endowed by Hester Hodges, in 1678, with 74 acres of land, now producing about £100 per annum.

STOKE-GOLDINGTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Olney; containing, with the hamlet of Eakley-Lanes, 855 inhabitants, of whom 754 are in the township of Stoke-Goldington. The parish comprises 1675 acres by computation, the soil of which is strong, suited especially to the growth of wheat and beans; the substratum, to a considerable extent, consists of limestone. The river Ouse runs through the parish. The living is a rectory, united in 1736 to that of Gayhurst, and valued in the king's books at £14. 6. 3.: the tithes of the commons were commuted for land in 1770. There was formerly a chapel at Eakley, which place is said to have been once a distinct parish.

STOKE-HAMMOND (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LEIGHTON-BUZZARD, hundred of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (S.) from Fenny-Stratford; containing 407 inhabitants. It is situated near the London and Birmingham railway, and comprises by admeasurement 1523 acres, nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. 4½; net income, £249; patron, the Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1774. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOKE-HILL, a hamlet, in the parish of STOKE ST. MARY, union of TAUNTON, hundred of TAUNTON and TAUNTON-DEAN, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 80 inhabitants.

STOKE-LACY (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BROMYARD, hundred of BROXASH, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. W. by S.) from Bromyard; containing 413 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bromyard to Hereford, and comprises 1992*a*. 1*r*. 8*p*., of which nearly half are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture, with the exception of 64 acres of hop-grounds. The surface is hilly, and the subsoil a strong clay; stone of excellent quality is quarried for building, and limestone is extensively used for agricultural purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the gift of John Kempson, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £315. 12.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 20 acres. The body of the church is dilapidated, but the chancel has lately been rebuilt by the incumbent, and is considered one of the finest specimens in the county of the early English style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOKE-LANE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WHITESTONE, E. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 1056 inhabitants. The parish is situated about a mile north of the road from Wells to Frome, and comprises 2074 acres, of which about 256 are arable, 1607 meadow and pasture, and 165 woods and plantations. The soil in general is shallow and damp; that portion of it lying on the north side of the Mendip Hills rests upon a layer of red gravel, and in the other parts there is a substratum of limestone and freestone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron, the Vicar of Doulting; improprator, Richard Strachey, Esq.: the great tithes have been commuted for £75, and the vicarial for a like sum. The church, rebuilt in the early English style in 1838, contains 500 sittings, of which 256 are free.

STOKE, LIMPLEY, with WINSLEY, a chapelry, in the parish of GREAT BRADFORD, union and hundred of BRADFORD, Westbury and N. divisions, and Trowbridge and Bradford subdivisions, of WILTS, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Bradford; containing 2646 inhabitants, of whom 377 are in Limpley-Stoke. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary.

STOKE-LYNE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 4¼ miles (N. by W.) from Bicester; containing, with the hamlets of Bainton and Fewcott, 601 inhabitants, of whom 347 are in Stoke-Lyne township. The living is a discharged vicarage; net income, £173; patrons, the Trustees of J. Bullock, Esq.; improprators, the family of Coles. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1793.

STOKE-MANDEVILLE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2¾ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wendover; containing, with the hamlet of Prestwood, 493 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with those of Buckland and Quarrendon, to the vicarage of Berton. There is a national school.

STOKE-NEAR-NAYLAND (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SUDBURY, hundred of BANERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. E. by N.) from Nayland; containing 1362 inhabitants. A monastery existed here in the middle of the 10th century, to which Earl Alfgar, and his daughters, Æthelfled and Ægelfled, made considerable donations, it being the burial-place of that noble family. In the parish is Gifford Hall, an ancient structure, with a fine entrance gateway, built in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII.; and Tending Hall, the seat of Sir J. R. Rowley, Bart., was formerly the residence of the dukes of Norfolk, where the Earl of Surrey wrote his poems. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £19. 0. 10., and in the gift of Sir J. R. Rowley: the great tithes, belonging to P. Mannock, Esq., have been commuted for £1254, and the vicarial for £305. The church is a spacious structure in the later English style, with a finely-proportioned tower, and contains numerous monuments and some ancient brasses. A chapel for the inhabitants of Leavenheath has lately been erected by subscription, and is endowed with three acres of land, and £1100 in the funds. There is a Roman Catholic chapel. Sir John Capel, lord mayor of London in 1503, was a native of the place; and the Rev. William Jones, the well-known author, was vicar.

STOKE-NEXT-GUILDFORD (St. JOHN THE EVANGELIST), a parish, in the union of GUILDFORD, First division of the hundred of WOKEING, W. division of SURREY, ¾ of a mile (N.) from Guildford; containing 2054 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2314 acres, of which 88 are common or waste; it is intersected by the Wey canal, and situated on the road by Kingston to Portsmouth; part of it is included within the limits of the borough of Guildford. There are a paper and a flour mill. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 0. 5., and in the gift of certain Trustees: the tithes have been commuted for £679. The church is in the later English style, and contains several neat monuments. James Price bequeathed Bank annuities to the poor, producing a dividend of £96; and three almshouses for six women above 60 years of age, were founded and endowed by Henry and William Parsons, Esqrs. Mrs. Charlotte Smith, the celebrated novelist, was buried here.

STOKE, NORTH, a township, in the parish of SOUTH STOKE, union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2¾ miles (N. by W.) from Colsterworth; containing 118 inhabitants. It comprises 1834*a*. 27*p*. of land, the property of Christopher Turnor, Esq., M.P., whose fine seat and park here greatly enhance the beauty of the scenery. The tithes were commuted in 1796, for land and corn-rents.

STOKE, NORTH (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of LANGTREE, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S.) from Wallingford; containing 160 inhabitants, and comprising 800 acres by computation.

The living is a vicarage, with that of Newnham-Murren annexed, valued in the king's books at £14. 10.; net income, £568; patrons and impropriators, the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. There is a chapel of ease at Ipsden.

STOKE, NORTH (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of KEYNSHAM, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Bath; containing 173 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 800 acres, the soil of which, in the upper part, rests upon oolite, and in the lower has a clayey subsoil. It is bounded on the west by the Avon, the ground gradually rising from the river to the heights of Lansdowne, which give the title of Marquess to the family of Petty. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 6., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £100; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 26 acres.

STOKE, NORTH, a parish, in the hundred of POLING, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Arundel; containing 89 inhabitants. The parish comprises 930 acres, of which 482 are arable and woodland, 281 meadow, and the remainder down: the river Arun separates it from South Stoke. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 14. $4\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £57; patron and impropriator, Colonel Wyndham. The church is a cruciform structure in the later English style. A canoe, or ancient vessel, was found in 1834, under an old drain, lying in the course of an arm or tributary of the Arun, and was presented by the Earl of Egremont to the British Museum; it is 35 feet 4 inches in length, nearly 2 feet in depth, and between 4 and 5 in breadth. There are several ancient barrows on the downs.

STOKE-ORCHARD, a chapelry, in the parish and hundred of BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, union of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Tewkesbury; containing 231 inhabitants, and comprising 1331 acres. The tithes have been commuted for £275. 10., and there is a glebe of three-quarters of an acre.

STOKE-PERO, a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CARHAMPTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Porlock; containing 84 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 4000 acres, most of which is common; the soil rests on a bed of red gravel, and the rusty appearance of the water among the hills indicates the probability of iron-ore lying beneath. Dundry Beacon, a large mountain, is partly in the parish; its base is about twelve miles in circuit, and its height above the sea at high water is 1770 feet, being the loftiest eminence in the western part of England; it serves as a distant landmark, but the summit is often obscured by clouds. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 10. 10., and in the gift of John Quick, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £68, and the glebe contains 8 acres. The church is a small edifice, with a low tower.

STOKE-POGES (St. GILES), a parish, in the union of ETON, hundred of STOKE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 miles (N.) from Slough; containing, with the chapelry of Ditton, and part of the town of Slough, 1528 inhabitants. A fair is held on Whit-Tuesday. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 17., and in the patronage of Lord Godolphin

(the impropriator), with a net income of £319: the great tithes have been commuted for £150, and the vicarial for £68. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by bequests producing an income of £30. An hospital for four men and two women was founded in 1557, by Lord Hastings, of Sloughborough, who endowed it with a rent-charge of about £53, for a chantry priest and four bedesmen. It was originally in Stoke Park, and its noble founder, becoming one of its inmates, ended his days within its walls, and was buried in the chapel attached; but the ancient building was pulled down in 1765, and the hospital re-founded on its present site. The revenue, since augmented, is £142; the inmates are three brethren and two sisters, with a master. The churchyard, the scene of Gray's Elegy, contains the remains of the poet; and in the field adjoining a large sarcophagus was erected in 1799, by the late Mr. Penn, of Stoke Park, to his memory.

STOKE-PRIOR, a parish, in the union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD; containing, with the township of Wickton, and part of Risbury, 468 inhabitants, of whom 320 are in Stoke-Prior township, 3 miles (S. E.) from Leominster. The parish is situated on the left bank of the river Lug, and comprises 2308 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, with that of Docklow annexed, and in the patronage of the Vicar of Leominster, with a net income of £132: the tithes, payable to the Bishop of Hereford, have been commuted for £142.

STOKE-PRIOR (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BROMSGROVE, Middle division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Droitwich and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 2 miles (S.) from Bromsgrove; containing 1576 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3808a. 3r. 24p., of very good land, mostly arable, and of which the surface is undulated, and the scenery picturesque; it is situated near the road from Birmingham to Worcester, and traversed by that from Bromsgrove to Stratford-on-Avon, by way of Hanbury, Feckenham, and Alcester. There is a good sandstone, which has been much used for building railway-bridges and houses. On the bank of the Worcester and Birmingham canal here, are works belonging to the British Alkali Company, commenced in 1828; in 1830, a dry rock-salt shaft, from 10 to 40 feet in thickness, was reached, at a distance varying from 120 to 150 yards below the surface; and subsequently, a spring of saturated brine broke into the mine, since which the supply has appeared inexhaustible. Salt, alkali, soap, and soda, with a variety of other chemical productions, are manufactured at these works, which occupy nearly nine acres of ground, consume about 500 tons of coal per week, and employ several hundred hands; and among the buildings is a chimney, which for gigantic dimensions and beautiful proportion, is perhaps unequalled in England. On the other side of the canal is a similar concern, carried on by the Imperial Alkali Company; and there are two manufactories for needles. The Birmingham and Gloucester railway has here the Bromsgrove and the Stoke-works stations. The living is a discharged vicarage, with St. Godwald's chapel at Finstal, in the parish, united, valued in the king's books at £12; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The great tithes for the inclosures, and all the small tithes, were commuted for land in 1772; there is a glebe-house, with 150 acres of glebe land, valued at £300 per annum. The church is a handsome structure in the Norman and early English styles, with a good tower, and contains a very ancient and beautiful font. A national school is supported by subscription, aided by £18 per annum from land bequeathed by Henry Smith, of London, in 1606.

STOKE-RIVERS (St. Bartholomew), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SHERWILL, Braunton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Barnstaple; containing 299 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 2300 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 14. 7., and in the patronage of the Rev. Henry Hiern, incumbent: the tithes have been commuted for £245; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 63 acres, 13 of which are oak coppice. The church, exclusive of the tower, was rebuilt in 1831. An ancient earthwork in a wood here is supposed to have formed part of one of the cities of the Britons; it measures 84 yards in length, and 60 in breadth, and has a deep ditch along three of its sides. There is also a circular encampment called Burah Castle, the diameter of which is 138 yards, situated on a very high hill, and commanding most beautiful views.

STOKE, RODNEY (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of WELLS, hundred of WINTERSTOKE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5¼ miles (N. W. by W.) from Wells; containing, with the hamlet of Draycott, 356 inhabitants. This was long the seat of the knightly family of Rodney, whose descendant, the distinguished admiral, was elevated to the peerage as Baron Rodney, of Rodney-Stoke, in 1782, for the memorable victory he had achieved over the French fleet commanded by the Comte de Grasse. The parish is situated on the road from Wells to Axbridge, and comprises 2338*a. 1r. 9p.* The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 12. 8½., and in the gift of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £330; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 20¼ acres. The church is a small neat edifice, chiefly in the Norman style, with a handsome tower: the late Mr. Rickman considered the date of the stone font to be about 1220. In a chapel adjoining the chancel are several monuments of the Rodney family.

STOKE, SEVERN (St. Denis), a parish, in the union of UPTON, Lower division of the hundred of PERSHORE, Upton and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Upton; containing 744 inhabitants. Situated on the left bank of the river Severn, and intersected by the road between Worcester and Tewkesbury, the parish presents some pleasing scenery, and consists of 3230 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 17. 4.; net income, £746; patron, the Earl of Coventry. A market and a fair were granted by Edward II., but both of them have been long disused.

STOKE, SOUTH, or STOKE-ROCHFORD (St. Andrew and St. Mary), a parish, in the union and soke of GRANTHAM, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Colsterworth; containing, with the township of North Stoke, and the hamlet of Easton, 456 inhabitants, of whom 159 are in South Stoke township. This place, which, from the discovery of coins and other relics of the Romans, is supposed to have been in the occupation of that people, has, for the last two or three centuries, been the property of the Turnor family, one of whom, Edmund, was knighted in 1663, as a reward for his loyalty to Charles I. The parish derives the latter adjunct to its name from the family of Rochford, who were anciently proprietors of the lordship; it comprises about 4700 acres, of which the soil in the higher grounds is loam, and in the lower, clay, incumbent on limestone. The river Witham runs through the district; and the surrounding scenery is enlivened by the seat of Christopher Turnor, Esq., M.P., a splendid mansion in the Elizabethan style, situated in a park of 400 acres, displaying much richly-varied beauty. The living is a rectory, formerly in mediety, which were united in 1776, valued jointly in the king's books at £18. 15.; net income, £685; patron, the Prebendary of South Grantham in the Cathedral of Salisbury. An allotment of about 610 acres of land was made in 1800, in lieu of the tithes for that part of the parish, comprising the townships of South Stoke and Easton. The church is a spacious and handsome structure, containing monuments to the Rochford family, by whom it was partly built; to the Cholmeley family, of Easton, and the Turnors, of Stoke. An almshouse was founded in 1677, by Sir Edmund Turnor, who endowed it for six persons; and the poor have the dividends on £1608 three per cents., left by the Rev. W. Dodwell.

STOKE, SOUTH (St. Andrew), a parish in the union of WALLINGFORD, hundred of DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 4¼ miles (S. by W.) from Wallingford; containing, with the liberty of Woodcote, 907 inhabitants, of whom 405 are in South Stoke township. The Great Western railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0½.; net income, £136; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. At Woodcote is a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. Leonard. There is a place of worship for Independents. Ten children are taught for £18 a year, arising from a bequest in 1659, by the Rev. Griffith Higgs, D.D., who also left £100, which have been invested in land for the poor.

STOKE, SOUTH (St. James), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Bath; containing 330 inhabitants. It comprises 800 acres by computation; the soil is thin, and is incumbent on a substratum of stone, of which there are several quarries. The river Avon and the Radford canal run through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, with Moncton-Combe and Combe-Down annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 9., and in the patronage of the Trustees of Charles Johnson, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £165, and there is a glebe of 15 acres.

STOKE, SOUTH, a parish, in the hundred of AVISFORD, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 2¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Arundel; containing 102 inhabitants. It comprises 1286*a. 2r. 13p.*, including part of Arundel Park: the river Arun runs along the northern and eastern boundary, and a cut was made across a narrow neck of land near the church in 1840, for the purpose of shortening the navigation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 15. 10.; net income, £162; patron, the Earl of Albemarle. On the downs are some ancient earthworks.

STOKE-TALMAGE (ST. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of PIRTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Tetsworth; containing 101 inhabitants. It comprises by admeasurement 844 acres, of which 252 are arable, 580 pasture, and 12 wood; the low lands are indifferent pasture, but the high grounds form good strong corn land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 1.; net income, £248; patron, the Earl of Macclesfield. The tithes were partly exchanged for land and corn-rents in 1811, and a commutation has taken place recently for a rent-charge of £53; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 16 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres.

STOKE-TRISTER, a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, 2 miles (E.) from Wincanton; containing 436 inhabitants. A few persons are employed in the manufacture of dowlas and ticking. The living is a discharged rectory, united to Cucklington, and valued in the king's books at £7. 15. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.

STOKE-UNDER-HAMDON (ST. DENIS), a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of TINTINHULL, W. division of SOMERSET, 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from Yeovil; containing 1367 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1366 acres by admeasurement, exclusive of Hamdon Hill, of which the soil is rich, bearing grain and green crops in abundance. About 700 acres are arable, 350 pasture, 100 orchards, and 30 wood; the surface is marked by gentle undulations, and the scenery agreeably interspersed with elm and other trees. There is a considerable manufacture of gloves. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £89; patrons and impropriators, the family of Hawkesworth. The church is a very ancient edifice in the early English style, containing 350 sittings. A free chapel, or chantry, for a provost and four priests, in honour of St. Nicholas, was founded in 1304, by Sir John Beauchamp, Knt., in a castle here, of which, in the time of Leland, there were extensive remains near the village, as also in the chapel, many old monuments, statues, &c.

STOKE-UPON-TERN (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of DRAYTON, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing, with the townships of Eaton, Ollerton, and Westanswick, 1000 inhabitants, of whom 528 are in Stoke township, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Drayton. The parish comprises 5000 acres of good land, the soil of which is varied with sand, gravel, and clay: the river Terne runs along the western boundary. The ancient manor-house of the Corbets has been demolished, and a farm-house erected on its site. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the gift of R. Corbet, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £939; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 50 acres. The church contains a handsome monument of alabaster to the memory of Sir Reginald Corbet, a judge of the common pleas in the reign of Elizabeth.

STOKE-UPON-TRENT (ST. PETER AD VINCULA), a newly-enfranchised borough, market-town, and parish, forming a union of itself, in the N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 1 $\frac{3}{4}$ mile (E.) from Newcastle-under-Lyme, and 150 miles (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 46,342 inhabitants, and including the chapelries of Hauley, Lane-End, Longton, and Shelton, and the townships of Boothen, Botteslow, Clayton, Fenton-Calvert, Fenton-Vivian, Peak-hull, and Seabridge. This parish comprises about two-thirds of the populous district called the Potteries, and the town, in common with various others in the parish and in this part of the county, is indebted for its increase and importance to the numerous potteries established in the neighbourhood. It is pleasantly situated on the river Trent, is amply supplied with water, and, with the adjoining townships of Fenton and Longton, is lighted with gas from extensive works recently erected by subscription on the bank of the Trent and Mersey canal. Very considerable improvements have taken place within the last few years; many handsome houses have been built, and new streets formed opening into the glebe and other lands. A spacious and elegant pile of stone buildings, also, has been erected for an additional market-house and town-hall, of which the first stone was laid in September 1834, by the late John Tomlinson, Esq., of Cliff Ville, chairman of the subscribers to the undertaking. The principal manufactures are china and earthenware in all their various branches, for which there are several very extensive establishments; the largest are those of Messrs. Copeland and Garrett, Messrs. William Adams and Sons, and Messrs. Minton and Boyle. The Trent and Mersey canal, and a branch from it to Newcastle, pass through the town, affording great facility of communication; and on their banks are numerous wharfs, warehouses, mills, and other buildings. In connexion with the canal is a railway to Lane-End, for the conveyance of goods. The market is on Saturday. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, this place, with others, was constituted a borough, with the privilege of sending two members to parliament; the right of election is vested in the £10 householders of a district comprising 7084 acres; the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff. In 1839, an act was obtained for establishing an effective police in this town, Fenton, Longton, and Trentham, and for improving and cleansing the streets; commissioners with certain qualifications are appointed for carrying the act into operation, and out of their body a chief bailiff is appointed.

The rectory of Stoke was originally much more extensive, but has at different times been subdivided, and parts of it formed into distinct parishes and rectories. In the year 1807 an act was passed for separating from it the chapelries of Newcastle, Burslem, Whitmore, Bucknall with Bagnall, and Norton-on-the-Moors, which are all now distinct rectories, though Bucknall and Bagnall still form part of this parish for all except ecclesiastical purposes. In 1827, the late Mr. Tomlinson, patron, procured an act of parliament authorising the sale, to the respective landowners, of all tithes and dues belonging to the rectory, and for the endowment of two new churches, which have been built at Shelton and Longton. The living of Stoke is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £41. 0. 10.; net income, £2717. The old church, a very ancient structure, is supposed to have been built before the Conquest, and is mentioned in the Taxation of Pope Nicholas in 1291, with its chapels annexed, and valued at 60 marks. Being not only too small for the increased population, but also in a state of decay, it was taken down, and in 1826 a new church was erected near its site, at an expense of more than £14,000, of which the greater part was raised by subscription, £3300 were given by Dr. Woodhouse, the rector, and the remainder was obtained by the sale of pews, and by parochial rates. It is a handsome structure in the later English style; the east window, presented by Dr. Woodhouse, is a fine specimen of stained glass, after the antique, containing fifteen well-executed figures of the Apostles and Evangelists; and in the four side windows are the arms of the bishop, archdeacon, rector, and patron, and also of some of the principal contributors. There are several good monuments in the chancel by eminent sculptors, and those of the late Josiah Wedgwood, Esq., of Etruria, and Mrs. Wedgwood, were removed from the old church. The churchyard contains nearly five acres, and is fenced with a stone-wall and iron-railing. The parsonage-house, at a small distance from the church, has been enlarged and modernised from the funds of the rectory. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Methodists of the New Connexion; and a national school is supported by subscription, and by an allotment of one-third of the proceeds arising from Dr. Woodhouse's permanent endowment. Dr. John Lightfoot, an eminent Hebrew scholar, and one of the principal persons employed in finally arranging the Liturgy of the Church of England, was born here in 1602; and Fenton, the poet, was interred at the place.

STOKE-WAKE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STURMINSTER, hundred of WHITEWAY, Sturminster division of DORSET, 10 miles (W.) from Blandford-Forum; containing 156 inhabitants. It comprises 1021 acres, of which 141 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. S. 9., and in the gift of H. K. Seymour, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £170, and the glebe contains 13 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres.

STOKE, WEST, a parish, in the union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of BOSHAM, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chichester; containing 98 inhabitants. It is conjectured that this is the site of the dreadful slaughter of the Danes by the men of Chichester, about the year 900. The parish contains the picturesque valley of Kingley Bottom, where is a grove of yew-trees of great size and luxuriance. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £170. The church, which is beautifully situated in Stoke Park, is in the early English style, and contains a handsome monument to the Stoughton family.

STOKEHAM, a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, South-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 7 miles (S. E. by E.) from East Retford; containing 49 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 564 acres, of which the surface is undulated, and the soil clay. The living is annexed, with that of Askham, to the vicarage of East Drayton: the tithes have been commuted for £120, and the glebe contains 20 acres.

STOKEINTEIGNHEAD (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of NEWTON-ABBOTT, hundred of WONFORD, Teignbridge and S. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (S. S. W.) from Teignmouth; containing 591 inhabitants. The parish is situated about a mile from the coast, in a deep, narrow, and thickly-wooded valley, and comprises by admeasurement 2040 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36. 15. 10.; net income, £467; patron, the Bishop of Exeter: there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 40 acres. The church is a cruciform structure, containing some ancient screen-work, and was formerly collegiate, for a warden and several chaplains, established in honour of the Virgin Mary and St. Andrew, by John de Stanford, in the reign of Edward III. Fossil remains are frequently discovered, among which are madrepores in great abundance.

STOKENCHURCH (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of WYCOMBE, hundred of LEWK-NOR, county of OXFORD, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from High Wycombe; containing 1334 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from London to Oxford, through Wycombe. The village, which consists only of a few scattered houses, is on one of the highest points of the Chiltern hills; the manufacture of common chairs is carried on to a considerable extent, principally for the London market. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Aston-Rowant. The church contains monuments to two members of the Morley family, who distinguished themselves in the wars of Edward III. and Richard II. There is a place of worship for Independents. Twelve children are educated, clothed, and apprenticed for a rent-charge of £41, the bequest of B. Tipping, in the year 1675.

STOKENHAM (ST. BARNABAS), a parish, in the union of KINGSBRIDGE, hundred of COLERIDGE, Stanborough and Coleridge, and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Kingsbridge; containing 1619 inhabitants. It comprises 5225 acres, of which 275 are common or waste. The living is a vicarage, with Chivelstone and Sherford annexed, valued in the king's books at £48. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £625; impropiator, A. H. Holdsworth, Esq. The church has an ancient wooden screen.

STOKESAY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 7 miles (N. W.) from Ludlow; containing 556 inhabitants. The parish is situated upon the road from Ludlow to Bishop's-Castle, and on the banks of the river Onny, not far from the border of the county of Hereford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; patron, R. Marston, Esq.; impropiator, H. O. Davies, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £192, and the vicarial for £140, and the glebe contains 5 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres. A school is partly supported by an endowment of £7. 8. per annum, and partly by the Earl of Craven.

STOKESBY (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the EAST and WEST FLEGG incorporation, hundred of EAST FLEGG, E. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (E.) from Acle, by the ferry across the Bure; containing, with the parish of Herringby, 366 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the south and west by the navigable river Bure, and on the north by the stream Mockfleet, is chiefly fertile marsh land, comprising about 2000 acres. The living is a rectory, with that of Herringby united, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. Lucas Worship: the tithes have been commuted for £522. 16., and the glebe contains 46 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated style, with a square embattled tower, and contains memorials to the family of Clere. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The poor have a right of pasturage on twenty acres of marsh allotted at the inclosure.

Arms.

STOKESLEY (ST. PETER), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Busby, Easby, and Newby, 2734 inhabitants, of whom 2310 are in Stokesley township, 41 miles (N. by W.) from York, and 242 (N. by W.) from London. This place anciently belonged to the family of Fitz-Richard, lords of Stokesley, one of whom, in the reign of Henry III., obtained from that monarch the grant of a weekly market, and of an annual fair to be held on the eve of the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr; the manor is now the property of Lieut.-Col. Robert Hildyard, but a large portion of the land belongs to others. The town, which is pleasantly situated on the road from North-Allerton to Whitby, and nearly in the centre of the fertile vale of Cleveland, consists of one spacious street, extending from east to west, along the north bank of the river Leven; the houses are chiefly modern, and of handsome appearance. Till lately, the inhabitants were partly employed in the linen manufacture, which was carried on to a considerable extent, and also in the spinning of yarn, and the manufacture of patent thread, for which an extensive mill was erected in 1823, but which has been lately taken down, and the site converted into a garden. The market is on Saturday; fairs for cattle are held on the Saturdays before Palm and Trinity Sundays, and on every alternate Saturday between those periods; and statute-fairs are held on the two Saturdays next preceding May-day and Martinmas. It is in contemplation to open a communication with Middlesbrough, by a line connecting Stokesley with the Middlesbrough branch of the Stockton and Darlington railway, which will add greatly to the prosperity of the place. Petty-sessions are held here for the division, on the second and fourth Saturdays in every month; and the town has been made a polling-place for the North riding of the county.

The parish comprises about 5960 acres, of which 1744*a.* 1*r.* 2*sp.* are in Stokesley township; the lands are rich, and generally level, forming an extensive plain adorned with thriving plantations, and enlivened by the winding streams of the Leven and Tame, which abound with trout of excellent quality. The manor-house, the residence of Lieut.-Col. Hildyard, is a handsome mansion pleasantly situated near the church. The LIVING is a rectory, of which the curacy of Westerdale forms a part; it is valued in the king's books at £30. 6. 10½, and is in the patronage of the Archbishop of York. The tithes of Stokesley have been commuted for £956, and the glebe comprises 76 acres; the tithes of Westerdale have been commuted for £250, and the glebe comprises 11 acres. The church is an ancient structure, rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, in 1771. There are places of worship for Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. The free grammar school was founded by John Preston, Esq., who, in 1814, bequeathed £2000 for its endowment; the validity of the bequest was disputed by the next of kin, and the funds consequently accumulated to £4000. The school-house was rebuilt by the trustees, in 1833, and the school has been since conducted by a head master, who has a salary of £80, and an under master who has a salary of £50; it affords gratuitous instruction in the classics, and in writing and arithmetic, to about twenty-seven boys, and the building, which is in the early English style of architecture, is well adapted to its purpose. A national school is supported by subscription. The West Langbaugh savings' bank was established here in 1823, and has deposits to the amount of £17,000, belonging to several charitable societies and about 600 individuals; there is also a dispensary for the relief of the sick poor. The union of Stokesley comprises twenty-eight parishes and places, containing a population of 9046.

STONALL, OVER, a chapelry, in the parish of SHENSTONE, union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 6 miles (S. W.) from Lichfield; containing 722 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, the Vicar of Shenstone. There is a parsonage-house.

STONAR (ST. AUGUSTINE), a parish, in the union of the ISLE of THANET, hundred of RINGSLOW, or ISLE of THANET, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, ¾ of a mile (N. by E.) from Sandwich; containing 52 inhabitants. It is supposed that the site of this place, in the time of the Romans, was entirely covered with water. On the sea retiring from Ebbs-fleet, at an early period, it became a common landing-place, and, in consequence, a town of considerable importance; and had, in 1090, so increased, that the seignory of Stonar was claimed by the citizens of London as subject to that port. But, after sustaining repeated injuries from the Danes and other marauders, as well as from inundations of the sea, it began about the reign of Richard II. to decay; and Leland, who wrote in the time of Henry VIII., describes it as "sometime a pretty town," but then "having only the ruin of the church, which some people call Old Sandwich." Salt-works are carried on, the produce of which serves all the purposes of bay-salt. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8.; but the church has been destroyed, and no presentation has lately been made.

STONDON, LOWER, a hamlet in the parish of SHITLINGTON, union of AMPHILL, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 3 miles (S. by E.) from Shefford; containing 137 inhabitants.

STONDON-MASSEY.—See STANDON-MASSEY.

STONDON, UPPER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, 2¼ miles (S.) from Shefford; containing 38 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 10½; net income, £125; patrons, J. and T. Smith, Esqrs. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1820.

STONE (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union and hundred of AYLESBURY, county of BUCKINGHAM, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Aylesbury; containing 809 inhabitants. It is separated from Waddesdon by the river Thame, and comprises 2464*a.* 2*r.* 26*p.*, of which about two-thirds are arable, and the rest pasture. The manufacture of lace, which was formerly more considerable, is still carried on. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9; net income, £149; patron, Dr. Lee: the tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1776. The church is partly Norman, and partly in the early English style. There are two places of worship for Methodists; and a national school is supported by subscription.

STONE, a chapelry, in the parish and Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, union of THORNBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (S. by W.) from Berkeley; containing 296 inhabitants. The road from Gloucester to Bristol passes through the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £54; patron, the Vicar of Berkeley; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The chapel, dedicated to All Saints, is partly in the early and partly in the later English style.

STONE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of TENTERDEN, hundred of OXNEY, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Tenterden; containing 467 inhabitants. The Grand Military canal passes through the parish. A fair for pedlery is held on Holy-Thursday. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 14. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury: the great tithes have been commuted for £263, and the vicarial for £440, with a glebe of $5\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a spacious and handsome structure.

STONE (St. Michael), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. by W.) from Stafford, and 141 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 8349 inhabitants, of whom 7437 are in the town. The name is traditionally reported to be derived from a monumental heap of stones placed, according to the custom of the Saxons, over the bodies of the princes Wulfurd and Rufinus, who had been here slain by their father Wulfhere, King of Mercia, on account of their conversion to Christianity. The king himself becoming subsequently a convert, founded, in 670, a college of Secular canons, dedicating it to his children, in expiation of his crime; and to this institution the town is supposed to owe its origin. The canons having been expelled, during the war with the Danes, the college fell into the possession of some nuns, who established themselves here. No mention is made of it in Domesday book, but it appears to have been granted by Henry I. to Robert de Stafford, who displaced the nuns, and made it a cell to the monastery of Kenilworth, which it continued to be until 1260, when it became independent, with the exception of paying a small sum annually to that monastery, and an acknowledgment of its patronage; its revenue was valued, at the Dissolution, at about £119. The town, situated on the road from London to Liverpool, and on the eastern bank of the river Trent, over which is a bridge to Walton, is paved, and well supplied with water, and consists chiefly of one long street, with several others branching off. Races are occasionally held in the neighbourhood, and assemblies sometimes in the town. The prevailing branch of manufacture is that of shoes; there are two considerable breweries, and on a stream which falls into the Trent are four corn-mills. The Trent and Mersey canal passes through the town, running parallel for several miles with the river; and the principal office of the company of proprietors of this prosperous and important navigation is here. The market, which is on Tuesday, was, about fifty years since, a great mart for corn, but it has very much declined, owing, probably, to the rapidly-increasing population and additional markets in the neighbouring potteries. The fairs are on the Tuesday after Mid-Lent, Shrove-Tuesday, Whit-Tuesday, and August 5th. Petty-sessions are held by the county magistrates every fortnight; and two constables are annually chosen at the court leet of the lord of the manor.

The parish comprises the townships of Aston with Burston and Stoke, Darlaston, Hilderstone, Stone, and part of Beech; the chapelry of Fulford; and the liberties of Kibblestone, Normicott, Stallington, Tittensor, and Walton. The LIVING is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £214. The church is a modern structure in the later English style, with a square tower; the altar-piece is a fine painting, by Sir William Beechey, of St. Michael binding Satan, and there is a marble monument surmounted by a bust, to the memory of Earl St. Vincent, the celebrated naval commander, who was born at Meaford, in the parish, and was buried in the churchyard. The old church fell down about the middle of the last century, occasioned, it is said, by the undermining of one of the pillars in digging a vault, in consequence of which no interment is allowed to take place within the walls of the present edifice. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans of the Old and New Connexions; and at Aston Hall is a Roman Catholic chapel. The free school was founded and endowed with a small income by the Rev. Thomas Alleyn, in 1558. A bequest of £100 per annum to ten widows, charged on the Stone Park estate, is paid by Earl Granville, though void by the mortmain act; and there are other small charitable endowments. The poor law union of Stone comprises ten parishes or places, and contains a population of 18,837: the workhouse is a large and handsome brick building near the town. The remains of the abbey adjoin the churchyard, and consist of one perfect arch and rather extensive cloisters. In a field now allotted to the poor, at a short distance from the town, the army under the Duke of Cumberland was encamped in 1745, expecting the Pretender to pass that way, but he avoided them by taking the rout by Leek.

STONE (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of KIDDERMINSTER, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Kidderminster and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Kidderminster; containing 469 inhabitants. This place was formerly a chapelry in the parish of Chaddesley-Corbet; it consists of 2326 acres, and is intersected by the road between Kidderminster and Bromsgrove. The spinning of yarn, connected with the manufactures of Kidderminster, is carried on, for which there are two mills. The living is a vicarage, in the patronage of the Crown, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £15; net income, £827. The old church, taken down in 1830, was, in 1831-2, replaced by the present structure, and a spire has since been added by the incumbent, the Rev. John Peel, who has also presented a beautiful painted window for the chancel; the cost of both exceeding 400 guineas. The free school, founded pursuant to the will of the Rev. Mr. Hill, B.D., is endowed with 24 acres of land, let for £32 per annum; and the parish possesses land near Stourbridge, which, containing clay for making fire-bricks, &c., was let upon a lease of 14 years, and produced upon an average nearly £700 per annum; but the lease having expired and the mines having been worked out, the surface rent is now not more than £40 a year, which sum, with the dividends of about £5000 three per cent. stock, is applied to repairing the church, and charitable purposes.

STONE-DELPH, with ALMINGTON, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. E.) from Tamworth; containing 276 inhabitants.

STONE-EASTON, a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEWTON, E. division of SOMERSET, 14 miles (S. W.) from Bath; containing 430 inhabitants. It comprises 1374a. 2r. 16p., about 100 acres of which are arable, and the remainder pasture. The living is annexed, with those of Emborrow and Paulton, to the vicarage of Chewton-Mendip: the tithes have been commuted for £36 and £84, the former of which rent-charges belongs to the impropiator.

STONE-NEAR-DARTFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 2 miles (E. by N.) from Dartford; containing 751 inhabitants. The river Thames bounds the parish on the north. Stone Castle stands to the south of the Dovor road, and is said to be one of the 115 castles which were not dismantled, in accordance with an express stipulation to that effect between Stephen and Henry II. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 10., and in the gift of the Bishop of Rochester: the tithes have been commuted for £929; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 7½ acres. The church is much admired as a peculiarly fine specimen of the later English style, and contains several ancient stalls, remarkable for the elegance of their workmanship and the delicacy of their pillars, which are of crown marble.

STONE-NEXT-FAVERSHAM, a parish, in the union and hundred of FAVERSHAM, Upper division of the lathe of SCRAX, E. division of KENT, 2½ miles (W. by N.) from Faversham; containing 86 inhabitants. It comprises 745a. 2r. 4p., of which 362 acres are arable, 293 meadow and pasture, 50 woodland, 21 hop-plantations, and 16 orchard. The living is a perpetual curacy: there are but slight remains of the ancient church, which has long been in ruins.

STONEBECK, DOWN, a township, in the chapelry of MIDDLESMOOR, parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, union of PATELEY-BRIDGE, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 14 miles (W. by S.) from Ripon; containing 429 inhabitants. It is situated on the southern side of the valley of the river Nidd, and comprises 14,710 acres, of which 8650 are common or moorland, 5592 meadow and pasture, 286 arable, and 182 wood. A valuable lead-mine is wrought in the township, and the substratum contains much iron-stone, but it is not worked: there is also a quarry of marble. John Yorke, Esq., is lord of the manor; and in the centre of the township is Gowthwaite Hall, the ancient residence of his family, presenting a very venerable appearance, and now inhabited by three families, who hold farms under Mr. Yorke. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £54, and the vicarial for £44. A neat district church was built in 1842, near the site of an old chapel, of which the east end is preserved; the cost of its erection, £686, was raised by subscription, together with a fund of £790 for endowment and repairs. Gowthwaite Hall was the birthplace of William Craven, D.D., master of St. John's College, Cambridge, an eminent scholar and divine, who died in 1815, aged 84; and at Ramsgill, in the township, was born Eugene Aram, executed at York, in 1757, for the murder of Daniel Clarke.

STONEBECK, UPPER, a township, in the chapelry of MIDDLESMOOR, parish of KIRKBY-MALZEARD, union of PATELEY-BRIDGE, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 16 miles (W. by N.) from Ripon; containing 373 inhabitants. The township includes the village of Middlesmoor, and comprises 14,160 acres, of which 9180 are common or moorland, 4874 meadow and pasture, 91 arable, and 15 wood, the whole the property of John Yorke, Esq.; the surface is boldly undulated, and the lofty height of Great Wherside borders on the township. Lead and coal mines are wrought, employing about 50 persons. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £42, and the impropriate for £64. 10., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. Here is a cavern called Eglin's Hole: when first discovered, it presented a curious and pleasing appearance, the roof being hung with stalactites, which by candlelight had a very striking effect; but in consequence of its being left open to the public, the roof has been stripped of these appendages, and it now possesses little attraction.

STONEFERRY, a township, in the parish of SUTTON, union of SCULCOATES, Middle division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 1½ mile (N. by E.) from Hull; containing 237 inhabitants. It is situated on the east bank of the river Hull, and contains many scattered farms. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Ann Waters, in 1720, bequeathed property for the erection and endowment of almshouses for seven widows or old maids, who each receive £13 per annum.

STONEGRAVE, a parish, in the union of HELMSLEY, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of West Ness, and East Newton with Laysthorpe, 351 inhabitants, of whom 194 are in Stonegrave township, 4¾ miles (S. E. by S.) from Helmsley. The land consists of about 900 acres, in equal portions of arable and pasture, the soil of which is rich, the surface undulated, and the scenery picturesque, and agreeably interspersed with wood: stone of good quality is quarried for building and for burning into lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £495. The tithes of the townships of Stonegrave and West Ness were commuted for land and money payments in 1776. The church, an ancient structure on the declivity of a hill, is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, and has a square tower. A school is aided by an allowance of £5 per annum from the proprietor of the estate.

STONEHAM, NORTH (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of SOUTH STONEHAM, hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Southampton; containing 871 inhabitants. It comprises 5250 acres, consisting of about equal portions of arable, pasture, and woodland: the Itchen navigation and the London and South-Western railway pass through. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21. 9. 7.; net income, £536; patron, John Fleming, Esq. The church contains the remains of the celebrated admiral, Lord Hawke, to whose memory there is a superb monument, composed of white and variegated marble, bearing the family arms and appropriate emblems, with a sculptured representation of his victory over the French admiral, Conflans, in Quiberon bay. Two miles south of the village is an old mansion, formerly the residence of his lordship.

STONEHAM, SOUTH (St. MARY), a parish, and the head of a union, partly in the county of the town of SOUTHAMPTON, but chiefly in the hundred of MANSBRIDGE, Southampton and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Southampton; containing, with the tythings of Allington, Barton, Bittern, Eastley, Pollack, Portswood, and Shamblehurst, 3763 inhabitants. The river Itchen, which is navigable from Winchester to its influx into the Southampton Water, passes through the parish, which is also intersected by the London and South-Western railway. At Wood Mills, blocks and pumps were formerly manufactured for the supply of nearly the whole of the royal navy, but the factory was destroyed by fire some years since, and there is now a flour-mill upon its site. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £250; patron and appropriator, the Rector of St. Mary's, Southampton. A district church dedicated to St. James, was recently erected at West End, containing 610 sittings, 380 of which are free; and the living was augmented in 1841, with £60 per annum out of the Canonry and Prebend Suspension Fund. The poor law union comprises 9 parishes or places, and contains a population of 12,692. At Swathling is a mineral spring.

STONEHOUSE (St. CYRIL), a parish, in the union of STROUD, Lower division of the hundred of WHITSTONE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (W.) from Stroud; containing 2711 inhabitants. The parish is situated in a pleasing and fertile vale, on the road from Gloucester to Bath, and intersected by the river Frome and the Stroudwater canal, and comprises 1520*a.* 2*r.* 1*p.*; the surface is in some places varied with elevations, in which parts the substratum is limestone; the soil in other portions is loamy, and favourable to the growth of apples for cider. The cloth manufacture appears to have been introduced at an early period, as, in the reign of Henry VIII., a fulling-mill in the parish formed part of the possessions of the abbey of Gloucester. During the 17th century, and the greater part of the 18th, the place was celebrated for its scarlet cloth, which was considered the finest in the kingdom; and its clothing establishments still rank among the most extensive and flourishing in the district. Fairs are held on May 1st and October 11th. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £22; net income, £510: it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the glebe contains about 28 acres. The church, though much modernised, retains portions of its original Norman style, of which the north door is a good specimen. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. John Elliott and others, in 1774, subscribed £612. 10. for establishing a free school in the village of Stonehouse, and another in the hamlet of Ebley; two rooms were built in 1831, and the income arising from the endowment is £47 per annum.

STONEHOUSE, EAST (St. GEORGE), a parish, forming a union of itself, in the borough of DEVONPORT, and suburbs of PLYMOUTH, Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON; containing 9712 inhabitants. This place originally called Hipperston, was, in the reign of Henry III., the property of Joel de Stonehouse, from whom it derives its present name. It includes several good streets, lighted with gas, and one of which is paved; the houses are of neat and respectable character, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water from the reservoir of the Devonport Water Company in the parish of Stoke-Damerall, and from a fine stream brought into the town under an act passed in the 35th of Elizabeth. A very handsome quadrangle of Grecian architecture, inclosing the new church of St. Paul, was lately commenced in the south-western part of the town. There is a communication with Devonport by means of a stone bridge across Stonehouse creek, erected at the joint expense of the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe and Sir John St. Aubyn; the tolls are let, and the income derived from them is very considerable. Higher up the creek, to the north, a bridge has been recently erected, affording a passage to Stoke. On Crimhill Point, which commands, perhaps, the finest prospect of Mount-Edgumbe, is the picturesque ruin of a blockhouse erected in the time of Elizabeth, and over it is a modern battery, occupied by the Royal Marine Artillery. At a short distance is Eastern King's battery, commanding the mouth of the Hamoaze: there is also a fort for the protection of the creek. The three towns of Stonehouse, Plymouth, and Devonport are brilliantly lighted from works in this parish, and the gasometer presents a conspicuous object from the road between Plymouth and Devonport. In Stonehouse Pool are convenient quays for merchant vessels; and in addition to the general business arising from the maritime relations of the town, and its naval and military establishments, there are some large manufactories for varnish used in the dockyards, soap, and tallow. A customary market is held on Wednesday, in a neat and convenient building in Edgumbe-street; and there are fairs on the first Wednesday in May, and the second Wednesday in September.

Among the most important public establishments is the Royal Naval Hospital, for the reception of wounded seamen and marines, opened in 1762. It is situated on an eminence near the creek, and comprises ten buildings, each containing six wards, each ward affording accommodation for about twenty patients, with a chapel, store-room, operating-room, small-pox ward, and dispensary; they form an extensive quadrangle, ornamented on three sides with a piazza, and the entire edifice, with its spacious lawn, is said to occupy an area of twenty-four acres. The Royal Marine barracks, on the west shore of Mill bay, comprise a handsome range of buildings forming an oblong square, and are adapted for the accommodation of about 1000 men. A new victualling establishment has been erected at Crimhill Point, upon a scale of great magnitude; it is approached through a granite gateway and double colonnade of singular beauty, and the various ranges are surprisingly magnificent. Among the more remarkable features of the work are, the removal of 300,000 cubic yards of limestone rock, and the erection of a granite sea wall, 1500 feet in length, the foundation of which was laid by means of a diving-bell. The water for the brewery is supplied at the rate of 350 tuns per day, from the Plymouth Leat; it first runs into a reservoir capable of receiving 2000 tuns, and is thence conveyed through iron pipes into a second basin of 6000 tuns. Stonehouse was formerly a chapelry, in the parish of St. Andrew, Plymouth: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £197; patron, the Vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth; improPRIATORS, the Corporation of Plymouth. The church was built when the old chapel was taken down, about 1790, and is a plain edifice, containing 1100 sittings. An additional church in the early English style, with a tower, was erected in 1831, at an expense of £2899, and was consecrated and dedicated to St. Paul in 1833; it contains 1000 sittings, of which 460 are free. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics.

STONELEIGH (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WARWICK, Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S.) from Coventry; containing 1371 inhabitants. This place, anciently called Stanlei, from the rocky nature of the soil, was in former times chiefly distinguished for its venerable abbey, founded in 1154 by Henry II., for monks of the Cistercian order, who were removed hither from Radmore, in the county of Stafford. In 1245 the abbey suffered greatly from an accidental fire, and was repaired by Robert de Hockele, the sixteenth abbot, who in 1300 built the gateway tower and entrance, now almost the only portion remaining entire: the revenue of the establishment, at the Dissolution, was valued at £178. 2. 5. The parish is crossed by the London and Birmingham railroad, and comprises by admeasurement about 9700 acres, of which the substratum abounds with good red sandstone, though none is quarried: the rateable annual value of the railway property in the parish is £1500. The village is intersected by the river Sowe, which, after passing under an ancient stone bridge of eight arches, unites with the Avon about half a mile beyond, and flows through the grounds of Stoneleigh Abbey, the elegant seat of Lord Leigh, erected on the site of the monastery, in a park well stocked with deer, and enriched with a profusion of stately oaks. Of the ancient monastic buildings, the principal remains are found in the cellars and domestic offices of the modern mansion, and consist chiefly of groined arches resting upon massive pillars, and of numerous details in the latest and most finished period of the Norman style. A market and a fair, granted to the abbots by Henry II., were formerly held in the village. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 15. 5., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £510; improPRIATOR, Lord Leigh. The church is a venerable structure, partly Norman, with a low massive tower, strengthened by angular buttresses, and surrounded by another tower of smaller dimensions; near the altar are, a splendid monument to Lady Alice Leigh, Duchess of Dudley, and a recumbent figure of stone, which was recently found in an upright position when digging the foundation for the handsome mausoleum of the Leigh family, and is supposed to be that of Geoffrey de Muschamp, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield in the reign of John. A chapel of ease has been erected, towards the expense of which Lord Leigh gave £1000. A free school was established in 1708, by Thomas, Lord Leigh, who endowed it with land; and there are almshouses for five aged men and five women, founded in 1576, by Dame Alice Leigh, whose endowment is augmented with a portion of the Duchess of Dudley's charity at Bidford.

STONERAISE, with BROCKLEBANK, a township, in the parish of WESTWARD, union of WIGTON, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 2¼ miles (S. S. E.) from Wigton; containing 617 inhabitants, of whom 446 are in Stoneraise. In the township are the ruins of Old Carlisle, where was a considerable Roman city, supposed by Horsley to have been the Olenacum of the Notitia.

STONESBY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 7 miles (N. E.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 283 inhabitants. It comprises 1350 acres, of which 600 are arable, 25 woodland, and the remainder pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 0. 7½.; net income, £90; patron and improPRIATOR, R. Norman, Esq. The tithes of the commons were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1780, under an inclosure act; and an allotment of church land yields £9. 9. per annum.

STONESFIELD (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (W.) from Woodstock; containing 553 inhabitants. It comprises 938 acres, of which about 738 are arable, and 200 woodland: a large proportion of the population is employed in slate-pits. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 9½.; net income, £139; patron, the Duke of Marlborough: the tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1801. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Among the fossil remains of the oolite limestone formation in the parish, bones of animals of the opossum genus have been discovered.

STONEY-MIDDLETON.—See MIDDLETON, STONEY. —And all places having a similar distinguishing prefix will be found under the proper name.

STONHAM, ASPAL (ST. LAMBERT), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 772 inhabitants, and comprising 2399a. 2r. 25p. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 10. 2½., and in the gift of Sir W. F. F. Middleton, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £666. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises about 40 acres. The church is a handsome edifice, with a square tower containing a fine peal of ten bells. Here is a free school, endowed in 1612, by the Rev. John Metcalf, rector, with land producing £100 per annum; and the same benefactor left 2s. 6d. each per week to four persons, and about £50 a year for the general purposes of the parish.

STONHAM, EARL (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Needham-Market; containing 878 inhabitants. This place, with Aspal-Stonham and Stonham Parva, was the property of the earls of Norfolk, who had a seat here, from which circumstance the parish takes its name. The road from London to Norwich, by way of Ipswich, runs through the parish, which comprises by admeasurement 2520 acres, the soil whereof in some parts rests upon a subsoil of clay, and in others on gravel. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 2. 6., and in the gift of Pembroke College, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £659; there is a glebe-house erected in 1824, and the glebe comprises 33 acres. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with an embattled tower; the roof is elaborately carved, and there is a curiously-sculptured font. The Baptists have a place of worship. John Punchard, about 1475, gave a house for the use of a school, which George Reeve, in 1599, endowed with land now producing more than £20 a year, which benefaction is part of estates worth upwards of £100 per annum, the residue of which was left by other persons for general purposes.

STONHAM PARVA (St. Mary), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, 12 miles (N. by W.) from Ipswich; containing 368 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1195 acres, and the road from London to Norwich, through Ipswich, intersects the village, in which is a general post-office. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 11½., and in the patronage of William Hayden, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £330, and there is a glebe-house, with a glebe of about 40 acres. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with a south transept and a lofty embattled tower. A school is supported by the rector; and about £100 per annum, derived from houses and land, are applied to the repair of the church, and general parochial uses.

STONTON-WYVILLE (St. Denis), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5½ miles (N. by E.) from Harborough; containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. 11½.; net income, £190; patron, the Earl of Cardigan.

STONYHURST.—See MITTON.

STOODLEIGH (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of TIVERTON, hundred of WITHERIDGE, Collumpton and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (S. W.) from Bampton; containing 513 inhabitants, and consisting of 5000 acres by computation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20. 0. 2½., and in the gift of Thomas Daniel, Esq.: there is a glebe-house; the glebe contains 30 acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £400. The church is an ancient structure. On Warbrightsleigh Hill, in the parish, are the remains of an ancient beacon said to have been erected by Edward II.

STOPHAM (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of THAKEHAM, hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Petworth; containing 135 inhabitants. The parish comprises 827*a. 1r. 13p.*, of which about 406 acres are arable, 224 pasture, 159 wood, and 33 waste; it is watered by the river Arun, over which is a bridge of seven arches, built in the reign of Edward II. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 12. 8½., and in the gift of George Barttelot, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £146; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with a square tower; the pavement is almost entirely composed of large slabs of Sussex marble, inlaid with brass figures and memorials of the Barttelot family, and in the windows are representations of some of the Barttelots and Stophams, with several escutcheons, of stained glass, said to have been removed from the hall windows of the old manor-house.

STOPSLEY, a hamlet, in the parish and union of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Luton; containing 563 inhabitants.

STORETON, a township, in the parish of BEBINGTON, union, and Lower division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 4¾ miles (N. by E.) from Great Neston; containing 214 inhabitants. It comprises 1298 acres, of which 67 are common or waste land. The tithes have been commuted for £156.

STORITHS, with HAZLEWOOD, a township, in the parish and union of SKIPTON, Upper division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (E.) from Skipton; containing 220 inhabitants. It is situated a little to the east of the river Wharfe, and on the road from Skipton to Ripley.

STORKHILL, with SANDHOLME, a township, in the parish of St. JOHN, union, and liberties of the borough, of BEVERLEY, E. riding of YORK, 1¼ mile (N. E.) from Beverley; containing 61 inhabitants. It is situated on the west side of the river Hull, and on the road from Beverley to Tickton.

STORMORE and WESTRILL, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of RUGBY, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER; containing 8 inhabitants.

STORRINGTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of THAKEHAM, hundred of WEST EASWRITH, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 8½ miles (N. E.) from Arundel; containing 990 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Petworth to Brighton, and comprises by computation 2956 acres, of which 1788 are arable and pasture, 707 down, 236 common, and 225 belonging to Harston warren, which is partly cultivated. The village consists principally of a long street, crossed by another at right angles; a market formerly took place on Wednesdays, and there are at present a corn-market on alternate Tuesdays, and fairs on May 13th and November 11th. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the gift of the Duke of Norfolk: the tithes have been commuted for £600; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 23 acres. The church was rebuilt in 1746, with the exception of the chancels and north aisle, the former edifice having become a ruin in consequence of the fall of the tower, which had been left insecure on the repair of the steeple in 1731. There are some charitable bequests. In 1826, a fine British urn containing burnt bones, was discovered in a barrow on the downs, 21 inches in height, and measuring 13 inches across the top and 6½ at the base.

STORTFORD, BISHOP (St. Michael), a market-town and parish, the head of a union, and formerly a borough, in the hundred of BRAUGHIN, county of HERTFORD, 14 miles (E. N. E.) from Hertford, and 30 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 4681 inhabitants. This place derives its name from its situation on each side of a ford on the river Stort, now crossed by two bridges, and its prefix from having been bestowed by William, soon after the Conquest, upon Maurice, Bishop of London, and his successors. In the reign of Stephen the Empress Matilda negotiated to obtain, by exchange, from the Bishop of London, the castle erected here by William the Conqueror, and not succeeding, threatened its demolition; it, however, remained till the eighth year of King John's reign, who, exasperated at the bishop's promulgation of the pope's menace of laying the kingdom under an edict, razed it to the ground, seized the town into his own hands, incorporated the inhabitants, and granted them the elective franchise, which they continued to exercise from the fourth of Edward II. till the reign of Edward III., when their privileges ceased. In the reign of Mary the place became the scene of religious persecution, and Bishop Bonner made use of a prison, formerly attached to the castle, for the confinement of convicted Protestants, of whom one was burnt on Goose Green adjoining. The town is situated on two gentle acclivities, called respectively Windhill and Hockerhill, in a fertile valley upon the river Stort, and consists principally of four streets, in the form of a cross, of which Windhill is the western, and Hockerhill the eastern, extremity; the inhabitants are well supplied with water from springs. There is a public library, instituted in 1827. The trade consists chiefly in malt and other grain, whereof considerable quantities are sent to London by the river, which is navigable, and by a canal, on the banks of which are commodious wharfs and quays. The market is on Thursday; and a very handsome market-house was erected in 1828, of the Ionic order, containing an assembly and coffee rooms, and magistrates' chamber, on the first floor, and underneath a spacious hall, where the corn-exchange is held. Fairs are held on Holy-Thursdays, the Thursday after Trinity-Sunday, and on October 11th, for horses and cattle. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-session every fortnight.

The parish comprises, 3241a. 3r. 11p. The LIVING is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of the appropriator, the Precentor of St. Paul's Cathedral, London: the great tithes have been commuted for £536, and the vicarial for £338, with a glebe of 208 acres. The church is an elegant structure, standing at the south-west angle of the town, with a fine tower surmounted by a lofty spire; it was erected in the reign of Henry VI., and partly rebuilt in 1820, and contains many ancient and curious monuments, among which are those of Charles Denny, grandson to Sir Anthony Denny, Knt., privy councillor to Henry VIII.; and Sir George Duckett, who was the last surviving proprietor of the Stort navigation. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Methodists. A free grammar school formerly existed in High-street, to which an excellent library was presented by Thomas Leigh, Esq., increased by the Rev. Thomas Leigh, vicar, and other benefactors, and of which many valuable portions still remain, preserved in the tower of the church: Sir Henry Chauncey, a native of the town, and author of the History and Antiquities of Hertfordshire, was educated in the school. There are five newly-erected almshouses, which have been established with the proceeds of the sale of two almshouses in Potter-street endowed by R. Pilston, in 1572; and several estates, producing about £120 per annum, are appropriated to the apprenticing of children, the relief of the poor, and the repair of the church; to which last-named purpose about £75 per annum, arising from the revenue of a dissolved chantry, and some ancient guilds formerly established here, are also applied. The union of Bishop-Stortford comprises 20 parishes or places, half in the county of Essex, and half in Herts, and contains altogether a population of 19,380. There are some small remains of the castle, in the garden of which Roman coins have been found; and near the castle is an ancient well, dedicated to St. Osyth, the water of which is esteemed beneficial in diseases of the eyes. Hoole, the translator of Tasso, was born here.

STORWOOD, a township, in the parish of THORNTON, union of POCKLINGTON, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Pocklington; containing 93 inhabitants. It comprises about 1120 acres of land belonging to various owners, of whom some have neat residences. The village is on the eastern acclivity of the vale of the Derwent. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777.

STOTFOLD (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BIGGLESWADE, hundred of CLIFTON, county of BEDFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Baldock; containing 1026 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 1.; net income, £185; patrons and improprators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £20 per annum.

STOTFOLD, an extra-parochial district, in the union of DONCASTER, S. division of the wapentake of STRAF-FORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 7 miles (N. W.) from Doncaster; containing 9 inhabitants. A stot, in the language of the north, is a young ox, and this was a place in the Saxon times where the stots were folded. Among the families once connected with the spot, occur those of Stotfold and Stanhope: it comprises about 270 acres of land, now chiefly the property of Sir F. L. Wood.

STOITESDEN (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, hundred of STOTTESDEN, S. division of SALOP, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N.) from Cleobury-Mortimer; containing, with the chapelry of Farlow, 1578 inhabitants, of whom 1217 are in Stottesden township. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. 10.; net income, £670; patron and improprator, the Duke of Cleveland. The church, rebuilt by Robert de Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbury, who gave it to the abbey of that place, was repewed in 1838. There is a chapel of ease at Farlow.

STOUGHTON, a chapelry, in the parish of THURNBY, union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Leicester; containing 121 inhabitants. The chapel is dedicated to St. Mary, and consists of a nave, chancel, and aisles, with a south porch, and an embattled tower surmounted by a handsome crocketed spire; the interior contains many monuments to the Beaumont family, and one, in excellent preservation, to the memory of Thomas Farnham, teller of the exchequer in the reign of Mary. In the chapelyard is an ancient cross, the shaft of which is lofty, and formed of one entire stone. A capital mesuage, farm, and lands, with other large estates, were left about the year 1626, by Henry Smith, Esq., for charitable uses, which property the trustees appropriated, in 1641, to the poor of certain places, who received no parochial relief. £36 per annum, arising from land left by John Zouch and Sir Thomas Beaumont, are applied to the uses of the church.

STOUGHTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WEST BOURNE, hundred of WESTBOURNE and SINGLETON, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Chichester; containing 578 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the west by the county of Southampton, and on the south by the range of lofty downs called Bowhill. Standsted, with its extensive forest, chiefly in the parish, has been honoured by several royal visits: Queen Elizabeth was once entertained here; the Prince of Wales, afterwards George II., on the 20th of September 1716, and his father, George I., on the 31st of August 1722; and George III. and Queen Charlotte took refreshment here on their way from Portsmouth. The mansion, situated in a well-wooded park of about 900 acres, commanding most extensive land and sea views, was erected about the close of the 17th century, by Richard, Earl of Scarborough: besides carvings by Grinlin Gibbons, there is a suite of Arras tapestry, representing the battle of Namur, the largest of six sets wrought at Arras for the Duke of Marlborough and five of his generals. The village is pleasantly seated in a valley, and formerly had a weekly market and three fairs, granted by charter of Henry IV. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the patronage of the Crown; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Chichester. The great tithes have been commuted for £412. 14., and the vicarial for £257. 10.; the appropriate and vicarial glebes contain respectively $64\frac{1}{4}$ and $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is a cruciform structure in the early and later English styles, the chancel separated from the nave by a fine circular arch.

STOULTON (St. Edmund), a parish, in the union of PERSHORE, Lower division of the hundred of OSWALDSLOW, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Pershore; containing 346 inhabitants. It is intersected by the road from Worcester to Evesham, and consists of 1900 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £100; patron, Earl Somers; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Worcester. The tithes have been commuted for £218; the glebe comprises 11 acres.

STOURBRIDGE, a chapelry, in the parish of St. ANDREW THE LESS, or BARNWELL, union of CAMBRIDGE, hundred of FLENDISH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E. by N.) from Cambridge. This place is remarkable for its celebrated fair, one of the largest in the kingdom, which is held in a field to the eastward of Barnwell, and commences on September 18th, on which day it is proclaimed by the vice-chancellor, doctors, and proctors of the university of Cambridge, and the mayor and aldermen of that borough; it continues more than three weeks, and the staple commodities exposed for sale are, leather, timber, cheese, hops, wool, cattle, and, on the 25th, horses. The hospital of St. Mary Magdalene, here, for lepers, was anciently at the disposal of the burgesses of Cambridge; but, about 1245, Hugh, Bishop of Ely, possessed the patronage of it, which was enjoyed by his successors till the suppression in 1497; its chapel, called St. Mary's chapel, has been converted into a barn.

STOURBRIDGE, a market-town, and the head of a union, in the parish of OLD SWINFORD, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 21 miles (N. by E.) from Worcester, and 124 (N. W.) from London; containing 7481 inhabitants, and comprising 200 acres. This place, originally called Bedcote, which name the manor still retains, derives its present appellation from the erection of a bridge, about the time of Henry VI., across the small river Stour, which here separates the counties of Worcester and Stafford. The surrounding country abounds with coal and iron-stone, the mines of which appear, by a manuscript in the possession of the Lyttelton family, to have been worked so early as the reign of Edward III.; and the manufacture of glass was established here in 1557, about the period it was introduced into this country from Lorraine. The town consists chiefly of one long street, called the High-street, which is well flagged and macadamized, and lighted with gas, and the lower part of which is spacious, and contains some good houses. A subscription library was established in 1790, which has upwards of 3000 volumes, and of which Parkes, the self-taught and celebrated chymist, was the first president. There are races on two days in the last week in August, during which the theatre is open. The principal branches of trade and manufacture are those of glass, iron, and fire-bricks, of which the first is carried on to a very great extent, there being twelve houses in the immediate neighbourhood, where the different varieties of flint, crown, bottle, and window glass are manufactured, besides several cutting-mills. The flourishing state of this branch of manufacture is chiefly owing to the plentiful supply of fuel, and to the existence, near the town, of that superior species of clay used in making glass-house pots, crucibles, and fire-bricks, which is found here in large quantities, and furnishes a considerable article of export, by the name of "Stourbridge fire-clay:" the best lies at about 150 feet below the surface of the earth, in strata three or four feet thick, in the compass of about 200 acres, near the town. Large quantities of these fire-bricks are made, and sent to London and other places. The manufacture of iron forms also a most important branch of the trade of the town and neighbourhood, and the manufactories are generally on a most extensive scale, particularly that of Bradley and Co., which covers nearly four acres, and gives employment usually to more than 1000 hands, nearly every article in wrought or cast iron being manufactured. In the other factories are made the various articles of hammered iron, besides scythes, spades, anvils, and vices, plantation tools, chains, called gearing, &c.; but that branch which is carried on to the largest extent is the making of nails, which, in the town and its vicinity, affords employment to some thousand men, women, and children.

The trading interests are greatly benefited by a canal which, running from the town to the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, connects it with the extensive line of inland navigation which spreads in various branches over the mining and manufacturing districts of the country, and also with the Severn; affording an opening for the transit of goods to all parts of the kingdom. The market, granted in 1486, by Henry VII., is on Friday, and is well attended: the market-house, erected at an expense of about £15,000, is a handsome modern brick building, of which the principal front, towards the High-street, is stuccoed, and of the Doric order of architecture; it consists of a spacious triangular area, having on each side an arcade; the centre is open, and that portion of the front not occupied by the entrance is disposed in shops. The fairs are on March 29th and September 8th, of which the former, continuing several days, is a celebrated horse-fair; the latter is for horses, horned-cattle, sheep, and pedlery. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under 40s. is held, and petty-sessions take place on Wednesday and Friday. St. Thomas's church here, erected in 1736, and enlarged and repaired at a cost of £2300, in 1837, is a neat brick edifice, with a square tower, and has a very handsome interior, with a good organ; the incumbent possesses a net income of £134, and is appointed by the inhabitant householders. A district church was opened at Amblecoat, adjoining the town, on August 7th, 1842; it is built of fire-brick, and the cost of its erection, £4300, was raised chiefly by subscription; it has been endowed by the Earl of Stamford, and is in his gift. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Wesleyans, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The free grammar school was founded and endowed by letters-patent granted in 1553, by Edward VI., and has an endowment of about £40 per annum: Dr. Johnson received a part of his education in the establishment, but the report of his having been an unsuccessful candidate for the head mastership is void of truth. A national school was erected in 1815, and is maintained by subscription; a school was built in 1844, on a site given by James Foster, Esq., on the Enville road, and several other schools are supported. The poor law union of Stourbridge comprises 14 parishes or places, of which 4 are in Worcestershire, 8 in Salop, and 2 in Stafford; the whole containing a population of 47,948. In a sandy tract of ground to the westward of the town, numerous detached portions of jasper, porphyry, rock-salt, granite, chalcedony, agate, cornelian, and several varieties of marble, supposed to be diluvial remains, have been discovered.

STOURMOUTH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EASTRY, hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Wingham; containing 253 inhabitants. It comprises 877*a.* 3*r.* 8*p.*, which are nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land, with the exception of 15 acres of hop-grounds: the navigable river Stour passes through. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19, and in the gift of the Bishop of Rochester: the tithes have been commuted for £416, and the glebe comprises 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres.

STOURPAIN (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BLANDFORD, hundred of PIMPERNE, Blandford division of DORSET, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Blandford-Forum; containing, with the tything of Ashe, 637 inhabitants. This parish comprises 2365*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.*, of which 549 acres are common or waste land; it derives its name from its situation near the river Stour, which runs on the west and south, and from one of its earliest proprietors, named Paine. Lacerton, a tything in the northern part of the parish, united to Stourpain in 1431, was formerly distinct; and in a field called Chapel Close, adjoining a farm-house, the foundations of its ancient parochial church, which was dedicated to St.

Andrew in 1331, may still be traced. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £7. 18. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$: the great tithes have been commuted for £277, and the vicarial for £144. 12.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebes contain respectively 45 and 9 acres. The church is in the decorated style. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. On an eminence called Hod Hill are the remains of a Danish camp, in the form of the letter D, defended by a double rampart and fosse, which, on the north and south sides, are almost inaccessible; there are five entrances, and within the area, which comprises several acres, are many circular trenches, four and five yards in diameter, and some round pits, contiguous to each other, supposed to have been so deep and numerous, at one period, as to be capable of concealing a large army. British and Roman antiquities, also, have within the last few years been discovered, consisting of British pottery, a Roman amphora, brass rings ornamented with stained glass, fibulæ, or cloak clasps, brooches of iron washed with silver, spear-heads, and other articles.

STOURPORT, a market-town, in the chapelry of MITTON, parish and union of KIDDERMINSTER, borough of BEWDLEY, Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Kidderminster and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Kidderminster, and 130 (W. N. W.) from London; containing 3012 inhabitants. This place, which is of modern origin, derives its name from its situation on the river Stour, near its confluence with the Severn, and from being a principal depôt for the manufactures and agricultural and mineral produce of the adjoining counties, which are hence transmitted to the various commercial towns in the kingdom. Prior to the construction of the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal in 1770, it consisted only of a few scattered cottages forming the lower part of the hamlet of Mitton; but since that period, from the advantages of its situation affording a communication with most parts of the kingdom, by means of the Grand Trunk canal, which connects the Severn with the Trent, it has risen into importance, and become an inland port of considerable trade. The town is neat and well built, and the chief streets are paved, and lighted partly with gas. A handsome iron bridge of one arch, 150 feet in span and 50 in height, with several land arches affording a free course for the water in case of floods, has been constructed over the Severn, connecting the town with Areley-King's, and replacing a bridge of three arches, which had been swept away by a flood after a sudden thaw. A subscription library was established in 1821, and there are three reading societies well supported. The trade consists principally in the conveyance, by canal navigation, of the produce of the adjoining counties, for the reception of which extensive warehouses have been erected, and basins on a large scale have been formed, with wharfs for the loading and unloading of the craft employed in the trade; the building of boats and barges, for which several small docks have been constructed, is carried on extensively, and there is a considerable iron-foundry belonging to Messrs. Baldwin. A canal to Kington, in Herefordshire, was projected some time since, but has been completed only as far as Mamble. The market is on Wednesday, and in 1833 was made a corn-market; there is also a market on Saturday, and both are well supplied with meat, poultry, vegetables, and fruit. The market-house, a commodious edifice, was erected upon a site purchased by a proprietary, who receive the tolls, and a room over it has been built for the transaction of the public business of the town. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in October, and are abundantly supplied with sheep and cattle. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STOURTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of MERE, partly in the hundred of NORTON-FERRIS, E. division of SOMERSET, but chiefly in the hundred of MERE, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Mere; containing, with the tything of Gasper, 645 inhabitants, of whom 357 are in Stourton township. This place, which is of considerable antiquity, was the scene of some memorable events during the earlier periods of English history. In 656, Cenwalh, King of the West Saxons, here encountered an army of the Britons, which he defeated with great slaughter, and compelled to retreat to Petherton, on the river Parret; and in 879, Alfred the Great, issuing from his retreat in the Isle of Athelney, erected his standard on an eminence in this parish, since called Kingsettle hill, while on his route to Edington, where he obtained a signal victory over the Danes. In 1001, an obstinate and sanguinary battle was fought near Kingsettle hill, between the Danes and the Saxons under the command of Cola and Edsigus, in which the latter were defeated; and, in 1016, another engagement took place between the Danes under Canute, and Edmund Ironside, when the latter was victorious. A castle was anciently built by John de Stourton, to whom the manor belonged, on the site of which a spacious and elegant mansion has been erected, in the Italian style, by the Hoare family. The parish comprises 3545*a.* 34*p.*, whereof 212 acres are common or waste land: stone is quarried for building. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17, and in the gift of Sir H. R. Hoare, Bart.: there is a glebe-house; the glebe contains 91 acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £500. The church is partly Grecian, and partly in the early English style, and contains monuments to the families of Stourton and Hoare. Some bequests have been made to the poor of the parish. At the south-western extremity, in the county of Somerset, is a wide boggy tract, containing many curious excavations called Pen Pits, of which there are not less than several thousands scattered over a surface of nearly 700 acres. Stourton gives the title of Baron to the family of that name, created in 1448.

STOUTING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of STOUTING, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Ashford; containing 276 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east by the Roman Stane-street, and a branch of the river Stour rises here; it comprises 1300 acres by computation, about half consisting of chalky hills, the soil of which on the north side is a poor sandy earth, but on the south of much better quality. In the neighbourhood is a mound overgrown with wood, around which was once a double moat. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 11.; net income, £252; patron, the Rev. Jacob George Wrench, D.C.L.: there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 10 acres. The church is principally in the early English style, and has been recently repaired, and enlarged by the addition of a gallery. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. Some urns and Roman coins have been discovered.

STOVEN (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLYTHING, E. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (N. W.) from Wangford; containing 127 inhabitants. It comprises 793*a.* 3*r.* 39*p.*, of which 30 acres are common or waste. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £63; patron, incumbent, and impropriator, the Rev. G. O. Leman: the tithes have been commuted for £200. The church, which is chiefly in the early style of English architecture, contains two Norman arches of great beauty.

STOW, a hamlet, in the parish of THRECKINGHAM, union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Falkingham; containing 34 inhabitants.

STOW (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (S. E.) from Gainsborough; containing, with the townships of Bransby, Normanby, and Sturton, 943 inhabitants, of whom 418 are in Stow township. This place is generally supposed to be the Sidnacester of the Romans, and the seat of a Saxon bishopric from about 678 to 959. A nunnery was founded here by Godiva, wife of Leofric, Earl of Mercia, who also, with her husband, greatly augmented the revenue of the church, which had been built and endowed for Secular priests by Eadnorth, Bishop of Dorchester. These religious, after the conquest, became Benedictine monks, under the government of an abbot, and Bishop Remigius obtained for them, from William Rufus, the then desolate abbey of Eynsham, in Oxfordshire, where they soon settled. King Henry III. passed the night at Stow, previously to the engagement, under the walls of Lincoln Castle, with the forces of Lewis, and the turbulent barons. The parish comprises 4737*a.* 3*r.* 11*p.*, and is intersected by the middle road from Lincoln to Gainsborough: there is a fair for horses on the 10th of October. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £102, with a house; patrons, alternately, the Prebendaries of Corringham and Stow in the Cathedral of Lincoln. The tithes have been commuted for £936, of which £563 are payable to the first-named prebendary, and £373 to the second; the prebendary of Stow has a glebe of about 4 acres, the prebendary of Corringham one of nearly 6, and $9\frac{3}{4}$ acres belong to the incumbent. The church is a spacious and massive structure, principally in the Norman style, with a central tower; the south and west walls of the nave have each a highly-ornamented doorway, and the chancel contains fine details, especially in the mouldings of the arches. There is a meeting-house for Wesleyans; and a school is endowed with £12 per annum. The ancient Watling-street passes near the place.

STOW (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of KNIGHTON, hundred of PURSLOW, S. division of SALOP, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. E.) from Knighton; containing 185 inhabitants. It comprises 2693 acres, of which 1350 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 7. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £252, of which £204 are payable to the vicar, and £48 to the warden of Clun Hospital.

STOW-BARDOLPH (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 2 miles (N. N. E.) from Downham-Market; containing 1076 inhabitants. This parish, which is on the road to Lynn, and is intersected by the greater river Ouse, comprises 6041*a. 3r. 1p.*, whereof 5152 acres are arable, 778 pasture and meadow, and 111 wood; the lands are the property of Sir Thomas Hare, Bart., whose seat, Stow Hall, is a handsome mansion, finely situated. About two miles from the village is a bridge over the river, in the immediate neighbourhood of which a considerable village has recently arisen, and a fair for horses and cows is held there on the eve of the festival of the Holy Trinity. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Wimbotsham annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 6. 8., and in the patronage of Sir T. Hare, who is impropiator of Stow-Bardolph: the great tithes, with some exception, have been commuted for £350, and the vicarial for £158; there is a glebe of 20 acres, with a house. The church is chiefly in the later English style, with a square embattled tower; on the north side of the chancel is the mausoleum of the Hare family, in which are many splendid monuments. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also six almshouses for widows erected in 1603, by Sir Ralph Hare, who in 1622, endowed them with 80 acres of land now producing £80 per annum. To the south of the church are the remains of an ancient hermitage of brick and flint, now part of a farm-house.

STOW-BEDON (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union and hundred of WAYLAND, W. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. E. by S.) from Watton; containing 300 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1700 acres, of which the surface is boldly undulated, and the lower grounds are watered by a small rivulet. Stow-Bedon Hall, a mansion formerly of some importance, is now a farm-house. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £4. 19. 4½.; net income, £295; patron, the Rev. E. Goddard: the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church, anciently appropriated to Marham Abbey, and in which was a guild in honour of the Virgin Mary, is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles; the tower fell down in 1797, and has not been rebuilt; the font is large, and beautifully sculptured. In the churchyard are three coffin-shaped tombs, with crosses fleuri. At the inclosure of the parish, 30 acres were allotted to the poor for fuel.

STOW CUM QUY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHESTERTON, hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5 miles (N. E.) from Cambridge; containing 445 inhabitants. It comprises 1918*a. 2r. 29p.*, of which 1469 acres are arable, 364 pasture, 37 wood, and the remainder common, roads, &c. An act was passed in 1839, for inclosing waste lands, when 4 acres were appropriated for recreation. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £52; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Ely. The tithes have been commuted for £530, and the glebe comprises 64½ acres. Jeremy Collier, the celebrated nonjuring divine, was born here in 1650.

STOW-LANGTOFT (St. GEORGE), a parish, in the union of STOW, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 2 miles (S. E.) from Ixworth; containing 183 inhabitants, and comprising by computation 1304 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 7. 8½.; net income, £307; patron, H. Wilson, Esq. There is a glebe of 63 acres, and an excellent rectory-house was built in 1833, by the Rev. Samuel Rickards, assisted by the patron. The church is in the decorated and later English styles; the chancel contains several richly-carved stalls and handsome monuments to members of the family of D'Ewes. The church and parsonage-house stand upon the site of a Roman encampment, and numerous coins have been discovered at different times. Here was the seat of Sir Symonds D'Ewes, Bart., the eminent antiquary, who lived in the Hall, now the residence of Mr. Wilson, proprietor of the parish; and Tillemans, the Dutch painter, was buried in the church.

STOW, LONG, a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of LONGSTOW, county of CAMBRIDGE, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Caxton; containing 276 inhabitants. It is situated on the old north road, and comprises 1400 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 8. 4.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. H. A. Bishop. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1798; the glebe-house was rebuilt in 1840, by the incumbent, and the glebe contains 406 acres. An hospital for poor sisters was founded here, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, in the reign of Henry III., by Walter, then vicar. Fossil remains abound in the neighbourhood, consisting principally of ammonites and bones of large animals.

STOW, LONG (St. BOTOLPH), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT's, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, 2½ miles (N. by E.) from Kimbolton; containing, with the chapelry of Little Catworth, 263 inhabitants, of whom 188 are in the hamlet of Long Stow. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Prebendary of Long Stow in the Cathedral of Lincoln, with a net income of £70: the tithes, payable to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, have been commuted for £143. 6. 8.; the governors have also 191 acres of glebe.

STOW-MARIES (St. MARY AND St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of MALDON, hundred of DENGIE, S. division of ESSEX, 7 miles (S. by W.) from Maldon; containing 257 inhabitants. This parish, which takes the adjunct to its name from the family of Marey, to whom the lands at one time belonged, is situated on the river Crouch, and comprises by admeasurement 2466 acres, whereof 1755 are arable, 99 pasture, 155 meadow, and 82 wood. A fair is held on the 24th of June. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 6. 8., and in the gift of the Rev. T. H. Storie: the tithes have been commuted for £660; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 40 acres. The church is an ancient edifice.

STOW-MARKET (St. PETER AND St. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of the union of STOW, in the hundred of Stow, W. division of SUFFOLK, 12 miles (N. N. W.) from Ipswich, and, by way of that town, through which the mail travels, 81 (N. E.) from London, but only 75 through Sudbury; containing, with the chapelry of Gipping, 3136 inhabitants. This place is very ancient, and at the time of the Norman survey was called Thorna or Thorne Market, the former term being derived from the Saxon divinity Thor, and ea, water, alluding to the adjoining river; it was afterwards named Stow-Market, from its being the market for the hundred of Stow. Two churches are mentioned in Domesday book as existing here. The town, which is the most central in the county, is situated at the confluence of three rivulets which form the river Gipping, on the road from Ipswich to Bury and Cambridge, and consists of several streets, for the most part regularly built, and lighted with gas; many of the houses are handsome, and the inhabitants are supplied with water from land-springs and wells. The commercial interests of the town are essentially promoted by its locality, and have been much improved by making the Gipping navigable to Ipswich, which was effected under an act obtained in 1790. From the basin extends a pleasant walk, about a mile in length, passing through the extensive hop-plantations in the neighbourhood. The trade consists chiefly in the making of malt, for which there are more than twenty houses, and which is rapidly increasing; and corn, malt, and flour to a great extent, are exported to London, Hull, Liverpool, and other places. A brewery has been established, and there are small manufactories for rope, twine, and sacking; a patent saw-mill, and three iron-foundries, one of which is also used for making agricultural implements. By means of the navigation to Ipswich, grain and malt are conveyed thither, and the returns consist of timber, deals, coal, iron, salt, oil-cake, and slate, for the supply of the central parts of the county. The market is on Thursday, for corn, cattle, and provisions: a building for a corn-exchange and reading-room, which is also used on public occasions, has recently been erected at a cost of £3000, raised by shares of £25 each. A fair is held on August 12th, chiefly for lambs, and on July 10th is a pleasure-fair. The county meetings are held in the town; and the magistrates hold a petty-session every alternate Monday.

The LIVING is a discharged vicarage, with that of Stow-Upland annexed, valued in the king's books at £16. 15.; patron, incumbent, and improprator, the Rev. A. G. Harper Hollingsworth. The great tithes have been commuted for £89, and the vicarial for £185; the glebe contains 6 acres, with a house, in the grounds of which is a fine mulberry-tree, planted by the poet Milton, while on a visit to Dr. Young, the vicar. The church was rebuilt about the year 1300 by the abbey of St. Osyth, Essex, which then held the advowson; it was enlarged in 1838, and is a spacious and handsome structure in the centre of the town, partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style. It consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a square embattled tower, surmounted by a slender wooden spire of tasteful appearance, 120 feet in height, which was erected from the proceeds of a legacy left in the reign of Anne. At the east end of the south aisle is the Tyrell chapel, separated by a carved screen, and containing interesting monuments to that family. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents; and several benevolent institutions for the relief of the poor, who also receive about £260 per annum from bequests made at different periods. The union of Stow comprises 34 parishes or places, and contains a population of 19,675. In a stone-pit near the entrance to the town, the tusks and bones of a species of elephant have been found. There is a spring slightly impregnated with iron. Dr. Young, tutor to the poet Milton, and master of Jesus' College, Cambridge, was vicar of the parish from 1630 to 1655, and was interred here.

STOW-ON-THE-WOLD (ST. EDWARD), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 25 miles (E. by N.) from Gloucester, and 82 (W. N. W.) from London; containing, with the hamlets of Donnington and Mangersbury, 2140 inhabitants, of whom 1465 are in the town. This place, in old records denominated Stow St. Edward, was the scene of a battle between the royalists and the parliamentary forces in the great civil war, when the former were put to flight. The town is situated on the summit of a steep elevation; the houses in general are of stone, but low, irregularly built, and of ancient appearance; and being indifferently supplied with fuel and water, and having no common field attached, the place is vulgarly remarked to have only one of the four elements, namely, air. A charter for a market was procured in the reign of Edward III., by the abbot of Evesham, then lord of the manor; it is on Thursday, and fairs are held on May 12th and October 24th, for the sale of hops, cheese, and sheep, of which last 20,000 are said to have been sold at one fair. The inhabitants were incorporated by Henry VI., but at present the town is governed by two bailiffs, who are appointed annually at the manorial court leet. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18; net income, £525; patron, the Rev. H. Hippisley: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1765. The church is a spacious edifice in the ancient English style, erected at different periods in the 14th and 15th centuries; the tower is conspicuous at a great distance. There is a place of worship for Baptists; also a school endowed with £13. 9. per annum for teaching Latin. An almshouse for nine persons, on the south side of the churchyard, was founded in the sixteenth of Edward IV., under the will of William Chestre, and subsequent endowments have been given for the maintenance of its inmates. The poor law union comprises 28 parishes or places, 25 of which are in the county of Gloucester, and 3 in that of Worcester; the whole containing a population of 9522. A park, house, and garden, named St. Margaret's Chapel, at a place called Merke, in the parish, constituted part of the estates of Charles I. and his queen. The Fosse-way intersects the northern part of the parish.

STOW-UPLAND (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of Stow, W. division of SUFFOLK; adjoining Stow-Market, and containing 903 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Stow-Market: the great tithes have been commuted for £257, and the vicarial for £175; the impropriate glebe contains 29 acres. A church has been erected by subscription.

STOW, WEST (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of THINGOE, hundred of BLACKBOURN, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Bury St. Edmund's; containing 279 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the right bank of the river Lark, and consists of 2926*a*. 3*r*. 36*p*. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Wordwell united, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 3½., and in the gift of R. B. de Beauvoir, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £191, and the glebe comprises 29 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres. The church contains numerous memorials of the ancient family of Croft. The remains of the Hall here convey some idea of its former magnificence, and the gateway-entrance is a fine specimen of brick-work of the time of Henry VIII. The Rev. John Boys, one of the learned divines employed in the translation of the Bible, was rector of the parish.

STOW-WOOD, a parish, in the union of HEADINGTON, hundred of BULLINGDON, county of OXFORD, 4 miles (N. E.) from Oxford; containing 33 inhabitants, who attend the adjoining parochial church of Beckley.

STOWE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Buckingham; containing, with the hamlets of Boycott, Dadford, and Lamport, 410 inhabitants. This place is celebrated for the princely mansion of the Duke of Buckingham. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11. 14. 7.; net income, £95; patron and impropiator, his Grace. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school, in which 50 children of both sexes are educated and clothed, at the expense of the Duchess of Buckingham. Hammond, the elegiac poet, died whilst on a visit here, in 1742.

STOWE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Stamford; containing 11 inhabitants, and comprising 400 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, united in 1772 to that of Barholme, and valued in the king's books at £4. 3. 9. A school held from time immemorial in the court-house of the lord of the manor, is endowed with £12 per annum, under a bequest of Edward Burgh.

STOWE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the S. division of the hundred of PIREHILL, union, and N. division of the county, of STAFFORD, 7 miles (N. E. by E.) from Stafford; containing, with the townships of Amerton and Grindley, and part of the townships of Drinton, Great and Little Haywood, and Hixon, 1267 inhabitants, of whom 156 are in Stowe township. The parish comprises 5008*a. 2r. 31p.*, and includes Chartley Hall, situated near the castle, which latter was built in 1220, by Ranulph Blunderville, Earl of Chester. Of the Chartley estate 2000 acres are extra-parochial, and the park, which is altogether uncultivated, is celebrated for its breed of wild cattle, the superiority of its venison, and the abundance of its black game. Chartley Moss, comprehending 100 acres, is prolific in cranberries. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £61; patron, Sir John Cave, Bart.; impropiator, John Fitzgerald, Esq. The church is an ancient building, the nave of which is separated from the chancel by a handsome arch, said to be Saxon; it contains an alabaster monument to Devereux, first Viscount Hereford, and his two wives, whose effigies are in a recumbent posture. The viscount, who was celebrated in the wars against France, in the reign of Henry VIII., resided and was buried here. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STOWE-NINE-CHURCHES (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of DAVENTRY, hundred of FAWSLEY, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Weedon; containing 392 inhabitants. This place, which is a short distance to the west of the road from London to Holyhead, obtained the adjunct to its name from the circumstance of the manor having nine advowsons appended to it in the reign of Henry VII. It was for some time in the possession of Sir John Danvers, a principal parliamentary leader, and one of those who signed the warrant for the execution of Charles I. The parish comprises about 2000 acres, which, exclusively of 100 of woodland, are about equally divided between arable and pasture: the Grand Junction canal and the London and Birmingham railway pass through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18, and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. J. L. Crawley: the tithes of the incumbent have been commuted for £500, and £133 are paid to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy; the glebe contains 85 acres, and there is a glebe-house. The church, which is situated on the brow of a steep declivity, is a very ancient edifice, partly in the Norman style, and contains a sumptuous monument to the memory of Elizabeth, fourth daughter of John, Lord Latimer. The Roman Watling-street forms the ancient boundary of the parish.

STOWELL (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of NORTHLEACH, hundred of BRADLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 2 miles (W. S. W.) from Northleach; containing 42 inhabitants, and comprising 800 acres. The river Colne washes the extremity of the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed in 1660 to that of Hampnett, and valued in the king's books at £5. 17. 1. Sir William Scott, late judge of the court of admiralty, was created Baron Stowell, of Stowell Park, in 1821: the title is now extinct.

STOWELL (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of HORETHORNE, E. division of SOMERSET, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Wincanton; containing 117 inhabitants, and consisting of 903 acres by admeasurement. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 15., and in the gift of W. M. Dodington, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £169, and the glebe comprises 27 acres. The church was rebuilt in 1834.

STOWELL, a tything, in the parish of OVERTON, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS, 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Marlborough; containing 57 inhabitants.

STOWER, EAST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of REDLANE, Shaston division of DORSET, 4 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Shaftesbury; containing 554 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with those of Motcomb and West Stower, to the vicarage of Gillingham: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £146, and the vicarial for £273. The church, rebuilt in 1841, is a cruciform structure in the Norman style, with a tower at the intersection, and contains accommodation for 400 persons. Henry Fielding, the celebrated novelist, resided for some time on his estate in the parish.

STOWER-PROVOST (St. MICHAEL), a parish and liberty, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, Shaston division of DORSET, 5 miles (W. by S.) from Shaftesbury; containing 892 inhabitants. It comprises about 2700 acres, 500 of which are arable, 200 woodland, and the rest pasture. The living is a rectory, to which that of Todbere was annexed in 1746, valued in the king's books at £16. 4. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £655; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge. The church contains 300 sittings. In the reign of William the Conqueror, a cell to the nunnery of St. Leger de Pratellis, or Preaux, in Normandy, was founded here, which at the suppression was granted to Eton College, and then to King's College.

STOWER, WEST (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of REDLANE, Shaston division of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W.) from Shaftesbury; containing 237 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Gillingham: the improper tithes have been commuted for £92, and those of the incumbent for £183. William Watson, M.D., author of some theological productions, was a native of this place, where he practised as a quack, though he had regularly graduated as a physician, and was distinguished for knowledge of his profession.

STOWERTON, a hamlet, in the parish of WHICHFORD, union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (S. E.) from Shipston; containing 189 inhabitants, and comprising 950 acres.

STOWEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CLUTTON, hundred of CHEW, E. division of SOMERSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Pensford; containing 188 inhabitants. Stowey Mead, a cottage residence of Lord Mount-Sandford, and Stowey House, the property of William Jones Burdett, Esq., to the latter of whom nearly all the parish belongs, are both very pleasantly situated here. The village, also, is much admired, and is enlivened by a stream of water running through it which is said to be efficacious in lithontriptic complaints. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £6. 12., and in the gift of the Bishop of Bath and Wells: the tithes have been commuted for £163. 10.; the glebe contains $35\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and a rent-charge of £3. 3. is paid to the vicar of Chew Magna. Richard Jones, Esq., in 1692, bequeathed £3000 for charitable uses in different parishes, part of which is applied to the instruction of children and the relief of the poor in this parish; and Mrs. Mary Jones, in 1787, left £1500, the interest of £500 of which she directed to be distributed among the poor of Stowey. Robert Parsons, the celebrated Jesuit, was born here, of humble parents.

STOWEY, NETHER (St. MARY), a market-town and parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WILLITON and FREEMANNERS, W. division of SOMERSET, 8 miles (W. N. W.) from Bridgwater, and 147 (W. by S.) from London; containing 787 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on a stream tributary to the river Parret, consists of three streets diverging obliquely from the market-place, and is neat and well built. At the western extremity is a hill said to have been the site of an ancient castle, of which, however, nothing but a circular earthwork remains; it commands a fine view of the channel, with the Mendip hills, and the surrounding country, which is agreeably diversified. The manufacture of silk is carried on to a limited extent. The market is on Saturday, but, from its proximity to Bridgwater, very little business is transacted; the market-house is a rude building, in the centre of the town. A fair for cattle takes place on September 18th; and a court leet and baron is held at Michaelmas, when constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, and valued in the king's books at £5. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$.; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The tithes have been commuted for £300; there is a glebe-house, built by the present incumbent, and the glebe contains 50 acres. The church is situated at the entrance into the town from Bridgwater. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school has been established. Samuel Taylor Coleridge, the gifted poet and moral philosopher, resided here at the close of the last century, where he first became acquainted with Wordsworth.

STOWEY, OVER (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 1 mile (S. S. W.) from Nether Stowey; containing 568 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3647a. 3r. 35p.: greywacke stone is abundant, and red sandstone is found with detached portions of limestone. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with part of the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £7. 1. $5\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Bishop of Bath and Wells; improprators, the Corporation of Bristol. The great tithes have been commuted for £130, and the vicarial for £165; the rectorial lands comprehend $65\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and the vicarial $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre. The church is a neat building, lately repaired and beautified.

STOWFORD, a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, 8 miles (E. by N.) from Launceston; containing 647 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 12. 6., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. John Wollocombe: the tithes have been commuted for £240, and the glebe comprises 50 acres. The church contains a monument, on which are marble statues of Christopher Harris, Esq., in the ancient Roman costume, and his wife Mary. Margaret Doyle, in 1777, bequeathed the interest of £200 for teaching children. On the north side of the road to Exeter are the remains of a circular encampment. Dr. John Prideaux, a learned divine, was born here in 1578.

STOWICK, a tything, in the parish of HENBURY, union of CLIFTON, Lower division of the hundred of HENBURY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 552 inhabitants.

STRADBROOK (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E.) from Eye; containing 1637 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Woodbridge to Norwich: there is a corn-market every Tuesday, and petty-sessions are held monthly. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 18. $6\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £712, including the great tithes, which the vicar holds of the Bishop of Ely at the rent of £8 per annum, originally granted in 1661, as an augmentation; patron, the Bishop. There is a handsome glebe-house, erected by the late Rev. W. White, with a glebe of six acres. The church is a fine structure, chiefly in the decorated English style, with a lofty embattled tower; the chancel was recently beautified at a great expense. There is a place of worship for Baptists. William Grenling, in 1599, bequeathed land to be applied, among other purposes, in support of a school; and Mary Warner, in 1746, left an annuity of £15 for teaching children. Michael Wentworth, in 1587, gave the town-house for the use of the poor, with a chamber for a school; and there is a sum of £70 per annum, derived from 60 acres of land, for the repairs of the church, and general purposes. The union workhouse is situated here. Robert Grostete, Bishop of Lincoln, who died in 1253, was a native of the parish. The Earl of Stradbroke takes his title from the place.

STRADISHALL (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union and hundred of RISBRIDGE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Clare; containing 379 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1376 acres, of which 27 are common or waste. Stradishall Place, the seat of the lord of the manor, is a handsome residence, situated in a small park. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 0½., and in the gift of Sir Robert Harland, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £350; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 52¼ acres. Dr. Valpy, master of Reading school, was long rector of the parish.

STRADSETT (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOWNHAM, hundred of CLACKCLOSE, W. division of NORFOLK, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Downham-Market; containing 194 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bury St. Edmund's to Lynn, and comprises 1325 acres, of which about 555 are arable, 673 pasture and meadow, and 89 woodland and water. The Hall, an ancient mansion, in an extensive and well-wooded park, with a lake of 24 acres, is the residence of W. Bagge, Esq. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the gift of Mr. Bagge, who is also impropiator: the great tithes have been commuted for £220, and the vicarial for £110; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains nearly 4 acres. The church, beautifully situated in the park, is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, with a square embattled tower surmounted by a lantern and spire.

STRAGGLESTHORPE (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (E. by S.) from Newark; containing 85 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the rectory of Beckingham.

STRAGGLETHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of COTGRAVE, union, and S. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM; containing 47 inhabitants.

STRAMSHALL, a township, in the parish and union of UTTOXETER, S. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW, N. division of the county of STAFFORD, 1¾ mile (N. N. W.) from Uttoxeter. St. Modwenna, on her arrival from Ireland, early in the ninth century, founded a nunnery here, and presided as abbess in it.

STRANTON (All SAINTS), a parish, in the union of STOCKTON, N. division of STOCKTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM; containing, with the townships of Brierton and Seaton-Carew, 2106 inhabitants, of whom 1491 are in Stranton township, 2½ miles (S. W. by W.) from Hartlepool, on the road from Stockton. Since the formation of the new harbour at Hartlepool, this place has become the scene of busy employment in iron-foundries, ship-building yards and docks, and other works connected with maritime trade; limestone abounds, and used formerly to be quarried to a great extent, and the lime shipped for sale coastwise. The Stockton and Hartlepool railway approaches close to the sea-coast at New Stranton, and is carried along the verge of the sea by an embankment of puddled clay. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 16. 0½., and in the patronage of Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart., with a net income of £303; incumbent, the Rev. Rowland Webster, M.A.; impropiators, John Stephenson, Esq., and others. The church, situated on an eminence in the centre of the village, exhibits specimens of various styles, and the tower serves as an excellent landmark to mariners. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. There is an excellent school at Stranton, founded by the Rev. Christopher Fulthorpe, with an endowment of £30 per annum, for which fifteen children receive instruction; and in the hamlet of Middleton, in the parish, is a commodious national school, built in 1840. An immense quantity of human bones was discovered in draining a morass adjoining the Slake, supposed to have been those of the Scots who fell at the siege of Hartlepool in 1644; and there are vestiges of an encampment on a farm called Tunstal, about two miles to the south-west of the spot.

STRATFIELD-MORTIMER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, partly in the hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, but chiefly in the hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 8 miles (S. W. by S.) from Reading; containing, with the tythings of Wokefield and Mortimer West-End, 1169 inhabitants, of whom 723 are in the tything of Stratfield-Mortimer. The parish comprises 5975a. 1r. 16p., of which about 800 acres consist of fir-plantations and commons. A fair for cattle is held on the 7th of November. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 19. 4½.; net income, £176; patrons and impropiators, the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The great tithes have been commuted for £941, and the vicarial for £244; there is a glebe-house, and the impropriate glebe comprises 83 acres, and the vicarial 32. The Independents have a place of worship. There are some remains of a Roman amphitheatre attached to the station of Silchester.

STRATFIELD-SAYE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, partly in the hundred of READING, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7¾ miles (N. E. by N.) from Basingstoke; containing, with Beechhill tything, 839 inhabitants, of whom 578 are in the tything of Stratfield-Saye. In this parish is the noble mansion belonging to the Duke of Wellington, the grounds of which measure about a mile in average breadth, and about 1½ mile in average length. The river Loddon winds through the park, dividing it into unequal parts, in the smaller of which stands the mansion; the church is situated at the south-west corner of the domain. This estate was formerly the property of Lord Rivers, from whom it was purchased by government, and presented to his grace as a token of gratitude for his great military achievements. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £24. 13., and in the gift of the Duke: the tithes have been commuted for £962; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 12½ acres. Lora Pitt and others, in 1739, erected a school-house, and endowed it with £400, now producing an income of about £18. 18.; and there is an annuity of £5, the bequest of James Christmas, for the education and relief of the poor. A Benedictine priory in honour of St. Leonard was founded here in 1170, by Nicholas de Stotville, as a cell to the abbey of Vallemont, in Normandy, and at the suppression was granted to Eton College.

STRATFIELD-TURGIS (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BASINGSTOKE, hundred of HOLDSHOTT, Basingstoke and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Hartford-Bridge; containing 243 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10. 2½., and in the gift of the Duke of Wellington: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe contains 17¾ acres.

STRATFORD (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. W.) from Saxmundham; containing 201 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £5, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster; net income, £137. Ranulph de Glanville, justiciary of England in the reign of Henry II., was born here.

STRATFORD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 7 miles (N. E. by N.) from Colchester; containing 647 inhabitants. It comprises 1454*a. 2r. 37p.*: the river Stour is navigable on the west, and also on the south, where it is crossed by a bridge. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £320; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 18¾ acres. Stratford Hall was, by purchase, the seat of Major-Gen. Philip Skippon; and Dr. William Nicholson, Bishop of Gloucester, who died in 1672, was a native of the parish.

STRATFORD ST. ANTHONY or TONY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of ALDERBURY, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Salisbury; containing 156 inhabitants. This parish, which took its affix from a family of the name of Tony, who formerly possessed it, is situated about a mile west of the road from Salisbury to Blandford, Dorchester, and Weymouth, and comprises 1579*a. 1r. 9p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the gift of Corpus Christi College, Oxford: the tithes have been partly commuted for 47*a. 3r. 18p.* of land, and the remainder for a rent-charge of £242; there is a glebe-house. John Bampton, founder of the celebrated Bampton Lectures, in the university of Oxford, and canon residentiary of Sarum, was rector of the parish.

STRATFORD, FENNY, a market-town and chapelry, in the union of NEWPORT-PAGNELL, partly in the parish of BLETCHLEY, and partly in that of SIMPSON, in the three hundreds of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 13½ miles (E.) from Buckingham, and 45 (N. W.) from London; containing 1033 inhabitants. The distinguishing prefix is derived from the nature of the surrounding land; the town itself, comprising two streets, stands on an eminence. In 1665, it was much depopulated by the plague, on account of the ravages of which the inns were shut up, and the road turned in another direction. The Grand Junction canal crosses the high road at the bottom of the town; and about three-quarters of a mile distant, is a second-class station of the London and Birmingham railway. Lace-making employs a considerable number of females. The market, which has not flourished since the time of the plague, is on Monday; and fairs for cattle are held on April 19th, July 18th, October 10th, and November 28th. The living is a perpetual curacy; patron, John Willis, Esq. The chapel, dedicated to St. Martin, and situated in Bletchley, having been dilapidated since the reign of Elizabeth, was rebuilt by subscription, through the exertions of Browne Willis, the antiquary, who resided here, and by whom the first stone was laid on St. Martin's-day, 1724; his remains are interred within the rails of the communion table. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans.

STRATFORD-LANGTHORNE, a ward, in the parish and union of WEST HAM, hundred of BECONTREE, S. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (N. E. by E.) from London. About 1135, a Cistercian abbey was founded here by William of Montfitchet, but, from its low situation in the marshes, being damaged by the floods, the society removed to a cell at Burghstead, near Billericay; on its repair, however, they returned, and continued till the Dissolution, at which period the revenue was valued at £573. The village is situated on the road to Harwich, and on the bank of the river Lea, over which is a bridge connecting it with the village of Bow; it is well lighted with gas by the trustees of the road, and supplied with water from the East London works. The printing and dyeing of calico and silk are extensively carried on; and there are also two chymical establishments, and a porter brewery, on the river Lea, which is navigable to the Thames. A church in the early English style, with a tower and spire, was erected in 1833, at an expense of £7100; and there are places of worship for Independents, Wesleyans, and Roman Catholics.

STRATFORD-LE-BOW, MIDDLESEX.—See BOW.

STRATFORD, OLD, a hamlet, in the parishes of COSGROVE, FURTHO, PASSENHAM, and POTTERS-PURY, union of POTTERS-PURY, hundred of CLELEX, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, ¼ of a mile (N. W.) from Stony-Stratford. At Chapel Close formerly stood a hermitage, and free chapel.

STRATFORD, OLD (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of STRATFORD, Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK; comprising the town of Stratford, and the hamlet of Luddington with Dodwell; and containing, 6022 inhabitants, of whom 3321 are in the township of Old Stratford. The parish comprehends by admeasurement 7359 acres, of which 6276 are in the township of Old Stratford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of the Countess of Plymouth; net income, £239; impropiators, the Corporation of Stratford-upon-Avon, which see. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1786.

STRATFORD, STONY, a market-town, comprising the united parishes of St. Giles and St. Mary Magdalene, commonly called West, and East, Side, in the union of POTTERS-PURY, three hundreds of NEWPORT, county of BUCKINGHAM, 8 miles (N. E.) from Buckingham, and 51 (N. W.) from London; the whole containing 1757 inhabitants, of whom 1227 are in the West, and 530 in the East, side. At or near this spot appears to have been the boundary of King Alfred's kingdom, running from Bedford along the river Ouse, and ending at the Watling-street. Camden is of opinion that the Lactodorum of the Itinerary was at this town, because its derivation, in the ancient British language, agrees with the present name, both signifying "a river forded by means of stones;" but Dr. Stukeley supposes it was at Old Stratford, on the Northamptonshire side of the river; and Dr. Salmon, at Calverton, an eminence close by, near the ford to Passenham, an adjoining parish, where the army of Edward the Elder was stationed, whilst he fortified Towcester. Stratford is intersected by the Roman Watling-street, in a direct line through the county from Dunstable. One of the crosses of Eleanor, queen of Edward I., was erected here, in memory of the body resting at the place in its way from Lincolnshire to Westminster; but it was demolished in the great civil war. At an inn in the town, Richard III., when Duke of Gloucester, accompanied by the Duke of Buckingham, seized the unfortunate young prince, Edward V., and in his presence arrested Lord Richard Grey, Sir Thomas Vaughan, and Sir Richard Hawt. In 1736, an accidental fire destroyed 53 houses; and, in 1742, a similar catastrophe consumed 113, with the church of St. Mary Magdalene, of which the tower only escaped the flames, and is yet standing: the damage was estimated at £10,000, of which £7,000 were raised for the sufferers by a brief and subscriptions.

The town, which is situated on the parliamentary road to Birmingham and Holyhead, consists of one long street, which is macadamised, with a good market-square and two back streets; the houses are principally of brick. It comprised originally only a few inns, and was a noted place of rendezvous for pack-horses, prior to the introduction of waggons, for the conveyance of goods to London. There is a bridge over the Ouse, supposed to have been built by the Romans, and consisting of five arches; having been partially destroyed during the civil war of the 17th century, and become very dilapidated, an act was obtained in 1834, enabling the justices of the counties of Buckingham and Northampton to rebuild it on an enlarged plan. The manufacture of bone-lace was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but has greatly declined, and very little is now made. The Grand Junction canal passes about two miles north-east of the town, where it is carried over the Ouse, across Wolverton valley, by a large embankment and aqueduct of cast iron; and about half a mile from the aqueduct terminates a branch canal from Buckingham, constructed under the authority of an act, procured in 1794, and extending along the north side of the valley of the Ouse, by Old Stratford, to its junction with the main land at Cosgrove. The London and Birmingham railway, also, runs within two miles, and on this part of its course is the largest viaduct throughout the entire line. Henry III., in 1257, granted to Hugh de Vere, Earl of Oxford, a fair to be held on the eve, day, and morrow of St. Giles; and Edward I., in 1290, bestowed another fair, to take place on the eve and festival of St. Mary Magdalene. Charles II., in 1663, granted to Simon Bennett, Esq., fairs to be held in the west part of the town, on the Friday next before the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, on the feast of All Saints, April 9th, and the Wednesday next before Whitsuntide; and he also gave permission for a market on Friday, with a court of pie-poudre. The magistrates for the counties of Buckingham and Northampton preside at a petty-session on alternate Fridays.

The livings of the two parishes, having been united, form a perpetual curacy; net income, £130; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Lincoln. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1782. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, formerly a chantry, was erected in 1451, and endowed in 1482, but was rebuilt, except the tower, in 1776, by Mr. Irons, of Warwick; it was once considered a chapel to the mother church of Calverton, on the west side of the street, and that of St. Mary Magdalene belonged to Wolverton, on the east side. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans; also a school founded and endowed with property now producing £28 per annum, by Michael Hipwell, in 1610. John Whally, in 1670, left an estate consisting of a farm of nearly 169 acres, for apprenticing boys. Edmund Arnold, Esq., devised the manor of Furtho, and all his lands there, in trust, among other things, to pay £20 per annum for apprenticing children, and to assist in setting them up in business; £5 towards the relief of the poor; and £20 to an orthodox minister to perform certain duties in one of the churches of Stony-Stratford: the bequest for apprentices has been augmented by the court of chancery, and about £100 a year are now appropriated out of the estate for that purpose. Serjeant Piggott in 1519, John White in 1674, and John Mashe, gave estates for keeping in repair the bridge and highways, and the proceeds were invested in the purchase of a farm at present let for £240 per annum. There is also a fund of about £60, for the poor, arising from bequests by Sir Simon Bennett and others.

STRATFORD-UNDER-THE-CASTLE (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of ALDERBURY, hundred of UNDERDITCH, Salisbury and Amesbury, and S. divisions of WILTS, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W. by W.) from Salisbury; containing, with Old Sarum, extra-parochial, and the hamlet of Avon, 352 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1476 acres, of which 73 are common or waste land. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury.

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, an incorporated market-town, and the head of a union, in the parish of OLD STRATFORD, having separate jurisdiction, though locally in the Stratford division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 8 miles (S. W.) from Warwick, and 94 (N. W.) from London; containing 3321 inhabitants. This place, originally called Streat-ford and Stretford, derived its name from its situation on the great north road, and from a Saxon ford on the river Avon, at the entrance to the town. It was of considerable importance prior to the Conquest, and was distinguished for its monastery, founded in the reign of Ethelred, on or near the site of the present church. In 1197, Richard I. granted the inhabitants a weekly market; and during the succeeding reigns, various other privileges were conferred upon the town. In the 36th and 37th of Elizabeth, it suffered materially from accidental fires, which destroyed the greater part of it; and again, in 1614, it experienced a similar calamity. In 1588, both ends of the bridge over the Avon were carried away by a flood that inundated the lower part of the town. During the civil war, a party of royalists stationed here was driven out by a superior force of parliamentarians, under the command of Lord Brooke, in 1642; but the inhabitants still maintained their adherence to the cause of the king, and, in the following year, Henrietta Maria, queen of Charles I., at the head of 3000 infantry, 1500 cavalry, and with a train of artillery and 150 waggons, advanced to the town, where she was met by Prince Rupert; and, after remaining for three days at New Place, then the residence of Shakspeare's daughter, where she was hospitably entertained by the family, proceeded to Kington, to meet the king, whom she accompanied to Oxford. The parliamentarians, having subsequently obtained possession of the town, demolished one of the arches of the bridge, over the deepest part of the river, to prevent the approach of the royalists.

The town is beautifully situated on the south-west border of the county, upon an eminence rising gently from the west bank of the Avon, and occupies a considerable space. The entrance from the London road is over a handsome stone bridge of fourteen pointed arches, built by Sir Hugh Clopton, in the reign of Henry VII., and widened by act of parliament in 1814; and nearly parallel with this, is another of nine cycloidal arches, built of brick, and exclusively used as a railroad to the wharfs at the extremity of the town. There are several spacious streets, intersecting each other, some at right angles, and others crossing obliquely; the houses in that part which is called the Old Town, though rather ancient, are commodious and well built, occasionally interspersed with modern buildings of large dimensions and handsome appearance, and in some of the streets are smaller houses of frame-work timber and plaster. Among these last, part of the ancient house in which Shakspeare is said to have been born is still preserved in its antique state, and is an object of much interest. The house in which he lived in retirement, for a few years previously to his decease, was originally the mansion of the Clopton family, and was purchased by the bard, who, after repairing and improving it, called it New Place; it was taken down by a late proprietor, who also cut away the mulberry-tree planted by Shakspeare in the gardens. The town is partially paved, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from pumps attached to their houses. A public library and reading-rooms are supported by subscription; the Shaksperian library, maintained in a similar manner, was established in 1810, and is a useful institution. There is a theatre, a neat building of brick, within the precincts of Shakspeare's garden; and assemblies are held occasionally, during the winter, at the town-hall. To the south of the town is a race-course, where races took place so early as 1691, and were in general well attended; but since 1786 they have been discontinued. A jubilee in honour of Shakspeare was instituted by Garrick, in 1769, when the town-hall, which had been recently rebuilt, was dedicated to the poet; this festival has been recently revived, to be celebrated every third year.

The environs, abounding with diversified scenery and objects of considerable interest, afford many beautiful walks; and the salubrity of the air, and its central situation in a neighbourhood enlivened with the elegant villas of respectable families, and the mansions of the wealthy, make the town eligible as a place of residence. About a mile to the west, in the hamlet of Bishopton, is a mineral spring, which, when analysed in 1744, was found to be of a saline quality, strongly impregnated with sulphur, in its properties like the water of Leamington. A pump-room has been erected at the spring; and for the accommodation of invalids, to whom the distance from the town may be inconvenient, a handsome hotel has been built, affording every requisite comfort for visitors of rank. The spa, which is designated the Victoria Spa, is a tasteful erection in the embellished rustic style; and the grounds are laid out with great variety, sheltered from the north, north-east, and north-west, by richly-wooded hills. The Stratford canal, passing close to the north of the town, and joining the Birmingham, Warwick, and Worcester canals, connects them with the Avon, which is navigable; and near the bridge are some extensive wharfs for lime, timber, coal, and other articles of merchandise. A railway, also, sixteen miles in length, has been constructed from the town to Moreton-in-the-Marsh, in the county of Gloucester, from which a branch of two miles and a half has been formed to Shipston. The market, which was formerly on Thursday, is now, by charter granted in the 59th of George III., held on Friday, and is very considerable for corn and other grain, and for cattle. The fairs, to which are attached courts of pie-poudre, are on May 14th and the three following days, for cattle, horses, and toys; and September 25th, for cattle and cheese; besides which there are great cattle-markets on the third Monday in February, the Friday after the 25th of March, the last Monday in July, the second Friday after the 25th of September, and on the second Monday in December; also a statute-fair on the morrow after Old Michaelmas. The corn-market is held in the area near the town-hall, and the poultry-market in a neat stuccoed building erected at the east end of Wood-street, near the site of the ancient cross, and surmounted by a cupola and vane, representing a falcon grasping a tilting-spear, Shakspeare's family crest; the cattle-market is held in Rother-street. The town received its first regular charter of incorporation from Edward VI., in 1553, which, reciting and confirming former grants of privileges, was extended by James I., in 1611, and by Charles II., in the 16th and 26th years of his reign. The corporation now consists, however, of a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the number of magistrates is three. The guildhall is an old building, occupying the west side of a small quadrangular area, of which the chapel of the ancient guild of the Holy Cross forms the north side, the vicar's and grammar schoolmaster's houses the east, and the entrance to the school the south side; above the hall are rooms appropriated to the use of the school. The town-hall was built in 1768, by the corporation, assisted by the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, on the site of a former hall, of which the upper room, having been used during the civil war as a magazine, by an accidental explosion was destroyed, and the building greatly damaged. The edifice is plain and substantial, of the Tuscan order, on piazzas; the west front bears the arms of the corporation, and in a niche at the north end of the building is a finely-sculptured statue of Shakspeare, presented by Garrick; the upper story comprises a handsome banquetting-room, decorated with paintings, including a full-length portrait of Shakspeare, sitting in an antique chair, by Wilson, and, at the opposite end, one of Garrick, reclining against a bust of the poet, by Gainsborough.

The parochial church, which was formerly collegiate, is a spacious and venerable cruciform structure in the early English style, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, and surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire; the west entrance is through a deeply-recessed archway, above which is a large window in the later style, having the lower central compartment filled up with three richly-canopied shrines. The nave, of which the fine oak roof is carved, is very lofty; in the south aisle, in the decorated style, is a chapel dedicated to St. Thomas à Becket; and in the north aisle is a sepulchral chapel, separated by a stone screen, containing several altar-tombs, with recumbent figures of the Clopton family, sculptured in marble. Massive piers of clustered columns and lofty arches support the tower, and separate the chancel from the nave; the chancel has a roof of oak, and is lighted by handsome windows. On a slab at the entrance to the altar, covering the ashes of the bard, is an inscription written by Shakspeare; and on the north wall is his monument, in which is his bust representing him in the act of composing, with a pen in the right hand, and the left arm resting upon a scroll on a cushion. This bust, which is a well-attested likeness, and originally bore a strict resemblance to the complexion, and colour of the eyes and hair, of the poet, was, by the direction of his commentator Malone, painted in imitation of stone, and now forms a lamentable contrast to the complexioned monuments of the Clopton family and others in the church. The edifice has lately undergone a thorough repair, in which a due regard to its primary character has been preserved, under the superintendence of a committee appointed by the Shakspearian Club, at an estimated expense of £3000, raised by subscription, aided by grants from the National and Incorporated Societies; the renovation of the chancel and its monuments, which was peculiarly the work of the committee, was effected at a cost of £1100, contributed in donations not exceeding £1 each. The chapel of ease at Stratford, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, a handsome edifice in the later English style, formerly belonged to the guild of the Holy Cross, and was rebuilt by Sir Hugh Clopton, in the reign of Henry VII.; it has a square embattled tower, and a beautiful north porch, of which the entrance is a deeply-recessed and highly-enriched arch, surmounted by a canopy embellished with scrolls and flowers. The master of the free grammar school is usually appointed chaplain, to whom the congregation pay the pew rents. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. The grammar school was established in 1482, by Thomas Jolyffe, a native of the town, and one of the brethren of the guild of the Holy Cross: at the Dissolution the estate was seized by Henry VIII., but was afterwards restored to the corporation by charter of Edward VI., who refounded the school, of which the income is about £345 per annum. Here Shakspeare received his education, but he was removed at an early age. Some almshouses nearly adjoining the guildhall, and in a similar style, were refounded and endowed under the charter of Edward, for twelve men and twelve women; and there are numerous charitable bequests for distribution among the poor. The union of Stratford comprises 36 parishes or places, 29 of which are in the county of Warwick, 6 in that of Gloucester, and one in that of Worcester; the whole containing a population of 20,202. At Welcombe, about a mile to the north of the town, are the remains of a military intrenchment; and in the neighbourhood are several tumuli, in which human bones, spear-heads, and other military weapons have been found, and in opening one of which, in 1795, the proprietor discovered a human skull, transfixd with a spear, that appeared to be the gilded head of a standard-pike. On the surface of Borden Hill, about a mile to the west, astroites, or star-stones, are obtained in profusion; and to the north-west, large specimens of testaceous fossils are found. Of the ancient monastery, or of the college that succeeded it, not the slightest vestige is discernible.

Stratford is pre-eminently distinguished as the birth-place and residence of the immortal Shakspeare, who was born in April, 1564, and of whose baptism there is an entry in the parochial register, dated April 26th, which is supposed to have been three days after his birth. As already stated, a house is still pointed out by tradition, in Henley-street, as that in which the dramatist first saw the light, and it is certain that his father, John Shakspeare, bailiff of Stratford in 1568-9, owned two copyhold dwellings in Henley-street and Greenhill-street, whence it may, perhaps, be reasonably concluded that the tradition is founded upon fact. About 1586, four years after his marriage with Ann Hathaway, Shakspeare quitted Stratford for London, which, however, did not prevent him from often visiting his native place, and displaying his partiality towards it. About 1597, he was able, having prosperously exercised his talents, to buy one of the best houses in the town, the before-mentioned New Place; and a short time afterwards, he made additions to his property here, by the purchase of some land and houses, and by obtaining a lease of the tithes. In 1612 or 1613, the poet took up his permanent residence with his family at Stratford, where he passed the rest of his days in tranquil retirement; he died here on the 23rd of April, 1616, and was buried in the parochial church, a circumstance which, coupled with that of Stratford being the birthplace of the "myriad-minded" dramatist, has conferred upon the town a dignity superior to that of any other spot in the kingdom. Among other natives have been, John de Stratford, lord treasurer in the reign of Edward II., and chancellor in that of Edward III., who promoted him to the see of Canterbury; Robert de Stratford, his brother, archdeacon of Canterbury, and afterwards chancellor on the translation of John to the primacy, and who was subsequently promoted to the see of Chichester; Ralph de Stratford, Bishop of London; John Huckell, educated in the free school, author of a poem on the Avon, and who assisted Garrick in the composition of the Ode and other poetical addresses, delivered at the celebration of the jubilee, in 1769; and Francis Ainge, a memorable instance of longevity, who died in North America, on the 13th of April, 1767, having attained the extraordinary age of 137 years.

STRATFORD, WATER (St. GILES), a parish, in the union, hundred, and county of BUCKINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Buckingham; containing 172 inhabitants. It comprises 1082*a.* 39*p.*, of which about 69 acres are wood and brakes, and the remainder nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7.0.5., and in the gift of the Duke of Buckingham: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and the glebe contains 38 acres. The church is partly Norman.

STRATTON, a hamlet, in the parish, union, and hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile (E. by S.) from Biggleswade; containing 84 inhabitants.

STRATTON (St. ANDREW), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, including the small seaport of Bude, in the hundred of STRATTON, E. division of CORNWALL, $17\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. W.) from Launceston, and 223 (W. by S.) from London; the whole containing 1959 inhabitants. This place was the scene of a great victory obtained in the early part of the civil war, by the royalist forces over the parliamentarians. In consideration of the eminent services rendered by Sir Ralph Hopeton on the occasion, he was created Lord Hopeton, of Stratton, in 1643; and after his death, in 1654, Sir John Berkeley, to whose prowess and courage the victory was mainly owing, was, in 1658, created Baron Berkeley, of Stratton, by Charles II., who was then in exile. The town is situated in a flat country; the streets are paved, though indifferently. The Bude canal passes within a mile of it, and extends to Draxton bridge, about three miles north of Launceston: upon it are six inclined planes, worked by very powerful machinery, particularly that near Bude. The market is on Tuesday, and fairs take place on May 19th, November 8th, and December 11th; a court leet is held annually by the lord of the manor, and a court baron by the lord of the manor of Efford, and petty-sessions for the hundred occur on the first Tuesday in every month. The parish comprises 2500 acres, of which 1710 are arable, 60 waste, and the remainder pasture. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10.11.8., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall: the great tithes have been commuted for £240, and the vicarial for £200; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 2 acres. The church is in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles: in the north aisle is the effigy of a Knight Templar, supposed to be that of Ranulph de Blanchminster, constable of Ennour Castle, in Scilly; and at the east end of the south aisle is a tomb of black marble, on the lid of which are the effigies in brasses of Sir John Arundel, Knt., his two wives, and thirteen children. A church has been built and endowed at Bude by Sir T. Dyke Acland, Bart., in whom the patronage is vested; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Some lands now let for about £115 per annum, are vested in feoffees for the benefit of the poor. The union of Stratton embraces 11 parishes or places, and contains a population amounting to 9432. About half a mile to the west of the town are the remains of Binhammy Castle, the occasional residence of Ranulph de Blanchminster, occupying an elevated site surrounded by a deep fosse; there are vestiges of Roman roads in the parish, and several coins and tessellated pavements have been discovered.

STRATTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DORCHESTER, hundred of GEORGE, Dorchester division of DORSET, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Dorchester; containing 331 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1683 acres, of which 190 are common or waste. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Charminster: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £275.10., and those of the incumbent for £5.12. The church has a lofty tower; the chancel was pulled down in 1547. A Roman road from Dorchester to Ilchester passes through the parish.

STRATTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of CIRENCESTER, hundred of CROWTHORNE and MINETY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Cirencester; containing 546 inhabitants, and comprising 1356 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12.7.6., and in the patronage of the family of Masters: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1771; net income, £300. The church is a small structure, with a low slated tower rising from between the nave and the chancel. The ancient Ermin-street passes through the parish.

STRATTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWADE, E. division of NORFOLK; adjoining Long Stratton, and containing 273 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1050 acres by admeasurement, of which about 120 are pasture, and the rest arable; it is situated on the road from London to Norwich, and forms a part of what is usually called the town of Long Stratton. The living is a rectory, with that of St. Peter consolidated, valued in the king's books at £6.12.8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of New College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £330, and a rent-charge of £10 is paid to the rector of Long Stratton; there is a good glebe-house, erected in 1842 by the Rev. C. H. Bayly, and the glebe contains about 26 acres. The church of St. Peter has been long since demolished: that of St. Michael consists of a nave and chancel, with a low embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

STRATTON, an extra-parochial liberty, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of COLNEIS, E. division of SUFFOLK; adjoining the parish of Levington, and containing but one house, the ancient hall. In Chapel-field, between Levington and Trimley, are the ruins of a church.

STRATTON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Swindon; containing, with the tything of Upper Stratton, 1565 inhabitants, and comprising 2905a. 13p. The village is situated on the Roman road from Marlborough downs to Cheltenham, and the Wilts and Berks canal and the Great Western railway pass through the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8.12.3 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £216; patrons, the Warden and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford (the impropriators), on the nomination of the Bishop of Salisbury. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1798; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 126 acres. The church is an ancient edifice of plain appearance. The Baptists, Independents, and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship; and there is a parochial school. An alien priory was founded here soon after the Conquest, and, at the Dissolution, was given by Henry VI. to King's College, Cambridge.

STRATTON-AUDLEY (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of BICESTER, partly in the hundred and county of BUCKINGHAM, but chiefly in the hundred of PLOUGHLEY, county of OXFORD, 3 miles (N. E. by N.) from Bicester; containing 319 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises 2268*a. 1r. 37p.*, is supposed by Bishop Kennet to have derived its name from a Roman road or street, an opinion strengthened by the discovery of Roman coins and arms in the vicinity. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £89; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The church contains a monument to Admiral Sir John Borlase Warren, Bart.

STRATTON, EAST (All Saints), a parish, in the union of NEW WINCHESTER, hundred of MITCHELDEVER, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 11 miles (N. N. E.) from Whitchurch; containing 419 inhabitants. This place, which includes within its limits the splendid seat of Sir Thomas Baring, Bart., is situated on the road from Basingstoke to Winchester, a little to the east of the London and South-Western railway. The living is annexed, with those of Northington and Popham, to the vicarage of Mitcheldever. The church has been repaired by Sir T. Baring, and contains some windows embellished with beautifully-painted glass representing the Four Evangelists.

STRATTON, LONG (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWAD, E. division of NORFOLK, 10½ miles (S. by W.) from Norwich; containing 690 inhabitants. This town, which is situated on the road from Norwich to London, by way of Ipswich, and consists of one long street irregularly built, was chosen, during Wat Tyler's rebellion, as a place of meeting for the magistrates and gentry of the county. It was for many centuries appointed for holding the petty-sessions of the hundreds of Depwade and Henstead, but those of the former district only are now held here. A corn-market is held every Tuesday; fairs occur on Whit-Tuesday and Oct. 12th, and there is also a statute for hiring servants. The parish comprises 1517*a. 3r. 6p.*, of which about 1097 acres are arable, 361 pasture, and 32 wood and waste. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10, and in the gift of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge: the incumbent's tithes have been commuted for £413. 10., and a rent-charge of £42. 10. is payable to the rector of Stratton St. Michael; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains 40 acres. The church, built about the year 1330, is chiefly in the decorated and later styles, with a circular tower surmounted by a low spire. There is a place of worship for Independents. The Roman road leading to the station Ad Tuam, or Tasburgh, passes through the parish; and several Roman urns, of which one was curiously ornamented, were found in 1773, on opening a gravel-pit, near which a sepulchral hearth has been since discovered. There was anciently a hermitage, with an oratory attached to it.

STRATTON-ON-THE-FOSS (St. Vigor), a parish, in the union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of KILMERSDON, E. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from Shepton-Mallet; containing 464 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1108*a. 1r. 37p.*, of which the surface is agreeably diversified with hill, dale, and woodland, and the soil consists chiefly of a red loamy earth, producing excellent pasture for cattle. The village is situated on the ancient Fosse-way, now part of the road from Bath to Shepton-Mallet. Stone is quarried for building, and repairing roads; a coal-mine is in operation, and iron-stone and marl are found in abundance. The Bath market is principally supplied with butter from the dairy-farms in the neighbourhood. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 11. 5½., and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Cornwall: the tithes have been commuted for £60, and the glebe contains about 40 acres.

STRATTON, OVER, a tything, in the parish of SOUTH PETHERTON, union of YEOVIL, hundred of SOUTH PETHERTON, W. division of SOMERSET; containing 279 inhabitants.

STRATTON, STONEY, a hamlet, in the parish of EVERCREECH, union of SHEPTON-MALLET, hundred of WELLS-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET; containing 285 inhabitants.

STRATTON-STRAWLESS (St. Margaret), a parish, in the union of AYLISHAM, hundred of SOUTH-ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 4¾ miles (S. S. E.) from Aylsham; containing 277 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Aylsham to Norwich, and comprises 1571 acres, of which 458 are common or waste land. The Hall, a large mansion of white brick, in a well-wooded park, is the seat of R. Marsham, Esq., in whose family it has remained since the time of Edward the First: Robert Marsham, F.R.S., who died in 1797, aged 90, was a distinguished naturalist. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 8., and in the gift of Mr. Marsham: the tithes have been commuted for £280, and the glebe comprises 32½ acres. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and south aisle, with a low square embattled tower, and contains numerous monuments, and some curious specimens of ancient stained glass.

STRATTON, UPPER, a tything, in the parish of STRATTON ST. MARGARET, union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE, and STAPLE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 4¼ miles (S. W.) from Highworth; containing 383 inhabitants.

STRATTON, WEST, a tything, in the parish and hundred of MITCHELDEVER, union of NEW WINCHESTER, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 6¾ miles (N. W. by N.) from New Alresford; containing 187 inhabitants.

STREATHAM (St. Leonard), a parish, in the union of WANDSWORTH, E. division of the hundred of BRIXTON and of the county of SURREY, 6 miles (S. by W.) from London; containing 5994 inhabitants. This parish, which derives its name from its situation near the great Roman road from Arundel to London, extends along the principal road to Brighton for nearly three miles, and comprises 2832 acres, of which 221 are common or waste. The houses, mostly modern, are well built, and interspersed with several detached villas and stately mansions, particularly in the neighbourhood of the common, between which and the lower part of the village was once an ancient mansion of red brick, the residence of Lord William Russell. Streatham Park, where Dr. Johnson spent much of his time, was formerly the seat of Mrs. Thrale, afterwards Madame Piozzi. The neighbourhood is richly wooded, and diversified with hills and valleys; and the air, which is considered particularly salubrious and invigorating, combined with other local advantages, has rendered the village a favourite residence of many opulent families. Among the attractions is a mineral spring, which was discovered in 1660, and is still held in esteem, being highly efficacious in scorbutic eruptions, and in many other cases. The only branch of manufacture is that of silk, recently introduced. Streatham is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the Eastern division of the hundred of Brixton, held in the borough of Southwark, for the recovery of debts under £5; and is under the controul of the new police establishment. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £18. 13. 9., and in the gift of the Duke of Bedford: the tithes have been commuted for £1200, and the glebe contains 1½ acre. The ancient church, with the exception of the tower, which is of flint, surmounted by a spire of shingles, forming a picturesque object in the landscape, was taken down in 1830, and handsomely rebuilt upon an enlarged scale in the later English style. A church has been erected at Upper Tooting, within the last few years, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the rector. There is also a church on Brixton Hill, about 100 yards to the east of the high road, which was consecrated Nov. 19th, 1841, and is in the Eastern or Byzantine style, with a campanile tower; the cost, amounting to £8000, was raised by subscription, aided by a grant of £1300 from the Church Commissioners. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; and four almshouses for aged women have been lately erected in the Elizabethan style, by a bequest of the late Mrs. Henry Thrale, of Streatham Park. The celebrated Dr. Hoadley, Bishop of Bangor, was rector of the parish.

STREATLAM cum STANTON, a township, in the parish of GAINFORD, union of TEESDALE, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Barnard-Castle; containing 373 inhabitants, of whom 261 are in the hamlet of Streatlam. The township is on the road from Staindrop to Barnard-Castle, and comprises by estimation 2907*a.* 29*p.*, of which 1321 acres are arable, 1343 meadow and pasture, 230 wood and plantations, and 11 roads. Its surface is undulated and hilly, and the scenery embraces extensive views of the surrounding country, including Raby Castle, and in the distance the Cleveland hills; the soil, which has been efficiently drained, is rather heavy. Here are large quarries, from which stone has been raised for the principal buildings in this part of the county; also a bed of clay from which good draining-tiles are manufactured. Streatlam Castle, a stately structure, erected by Sir William Bowes, Bart., in the seventeenth century, on the site of a former castle, is the seat of John Bowes, Esq., M.P., and stands in a deep vale, embosomed in a fine park, with high and irregular hills on every side, in some parts covered with forests. There was anciently a chapel, but no traces of it now remain.

STREATLEY (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Luton; containing, with the hamlet of Sharpenhoe, 345 inhabitants, of whom 173 are in Streatley township. The parish is on the road from London to Bedford, and comprises by computation 2200 acres, of which 250 are pasture, 50 woodland, and the rest arable; the substratum is principally chalk. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 15. 2.; net income, £79; patron, Sir G. P. Turner, Bart.; improPRIATORS, Messrs. Smyth and others. The church is in the decorated English style, and contains 200 sittings, of which 150 are free. Richard Norton, in 1686, gave a rent-charge of £10 in support of a school.

STREATLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of MORETON, county of BERKS, 5½ miles (S. by W.) from Wallingford; containing 597 inhabitants, and comprising 3294*a.* 1*r.* 21*p.* This place is supposed to have taken its name from its situation on the ancient Ikeneld-street, which here crosses the Thames to Goring, in Oxfordshire. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10. 7. 6., and in the gift of the Bishop of Salisbury: the great tithes, belonging to P. Pusey, Esq., have been commuted for £82. 10., and the vicarial for £5; the glebe of the vicar consists of 290 acres. Here was formerly a Dominican convent.

STREET (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WELLS, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, 1½ mile (S. S. W.) from Glastonbury; containing 1219 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Bath to Exeter, and comprises 2768 acres, of which 223 are common or waste land; the blue lias limestone is found, and supplies an excellent material for paving and building. There is a manufactory for rugs; and a small fair is held on the Monday-week after St. Andrew's-day. The living is a rectory, with that of Walton annexed, valued in the king's books at £24. 12. 3½., and in the gift of the Marquess of Bath: the tithes have been commuted for £489, and the glebe contains about 16 acres. There are places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyans, and the Society of Friends.

STREET, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Ringwood and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 308 inhabitants.

STREET, a parish, in the union of CHAILEY, hundred of STREET, rape of LEWES, E. division of SUSSEX, 6¾ miles (N. W.) from Lewes; containing 197 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Lewes to Ditchelling, and comprises 1234*a.* 2*r.* 4*p.* of arable and pasture land in nearly equal portions, with a little wood. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 7., and in the gift of H. C. Lane, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £198, and the glebe comprises 31 acres, valued at £23 per annum. The church is an ancient structure of flint, containing several monuments to the Dobell family and others.

STREET, LONG, a tything, in the parish of ENFORD, union of PEWSEY, hundred of ELSTUB and EVERLEY, Everley and Pewsey, and S. divisions of WILTS; containing 81 inhabitants.

STREETHALL, a parish, in the union of SAFFRON-WALDEN, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 3½ miles (W. N. W.) from Saffron-Walden; containing 37 inhabitants. It is situated on elevated ground commanding a richly-diversified prospect over the surrounding country, and comprises by computation 520 acres, chiefly arable. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £155; patron and incumbent, the Rev. W. Forbes Raymond: the glebe comprises about 65 acres. The church is a substantial edifice of stone, and contains several ancient monuments.

STREETHAY, a township, in the parish of St. MICHAEL, LICHFIELD, union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Lichfield; containing 125 inhabitants.

STRELLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of BASFORD, S. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Nottingham; containing 284 inhabitants. The Hall, a neat and modern mansion, surrounded by well laid-out pleasure-grounds, commands fine views of the romantic scenery in the vicinity. About one mile to the north-west is Strelley Park colliery. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 8.; net income, £90; patron, T. Webb Edge, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land in 1808. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, with a lofty tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by a richly-carved oak screen; there are several tombs of the Strelley family, and the windows exhibit some ancient stained glass in good preservation.

STRELLINGTON, a tything, in the parish of BOXGROVE, union of WEST HAMPNETT, hundred of Box and STOCKBRIDGE, rape of CHICHESTER, W. division of SUSSEX; containing 23 inhabitants.

STRENSALL (St. MARY), a parish, in the wapentake of BULMER, union and N. riding of York, 6 miles (N. N. E.) from York; containing 430 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation about 2700 acres, of which 1400 are common or open moor on the east of Galtres forest; the greater portion of the cultivated land is arable. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Haxby annexed, valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4., and the net income, as recently augmented by a grant from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, is £260: the patronage, until lately, was vested in the Prebendary of Strensall, but the prebend having been surrendered to the commissioners, the Archbishop of York has the presentation. A school has an endowment of 20 acres of land, with a school-room and small orchard; and the poor's estate consists of eight tenements and about 70 acres, producing £46 per annum, and the interest of £72, left by Mrs. Elizabeth Cobb in 1809, but which has been transferred, under the poor law, to the parish funds.

STRENSHAM (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union, and Upper division of the hundred, of PERSHORE, Pershore and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Pershore; containing 304 inhabitants. This place, which is pleasantly situated on the river Avon, between the hills of Malvern and Bredon, is renowned in history for the siege it sustained against the parliamentary forces, and for the signal bravery displayed here by the then lord of the manor, Sir William Russel. The parish comprises 1878 acres of rich land, of which the soil consists of light earth, loam, and marl, with various modifications; blue lias and gravel abound in every part, and, in some places, fossils and minerals are met with. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12; net income, £200; patron, John Taylor, Esq.: the tithes were commuted for land in 1814. The church is a noble structure, containing many memorials of the Russel family, among which are some fine specimens of Italian sculpture, in Parian and other marbles. There are nine almshouses, endowed by Lady Ann Russel, and her father, Sir Francis Russel; the income amounts to about £43 per annum. Samuel Butler, author of Hudibras, was born here in 1612.

STRETFORD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of WEODLEY, hundred of STRETFORD, county of HEREFORD, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Leominster; containing 35 inhabitants. The parish comprises 424a. 37. 18p.: the road from Leominster to Weodley runs through it from east to west, and that from Wigmore to Hereford from north to south. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 8., and in the gift of A. H. Wall, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £94. 14., and the glebe comprises 15 acres.

STRETFORD, a hamlet, in the parish and union of LEOMINSTER, hundred of WOLPHY, county of HEREFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Leominster; containing, with Henner, 88 inhabitants.

STRETFORD, a chapelry, in the parish of MANCHESTER, union of CHORLTON, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 4 miles (S. W.) from Manchester; containing 3524 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 3121 acres, of which 85 are common or waste land; it is separated by the river Mersey from Cheshire, and situated on the road from Manchester to Northwich and Chester. There is a large paper-mill; and the place is a celebrated mart for pigs, of which from 600 to 700 are sent weekly to the Manchester market. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through the chapelry. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £163; patrons, the Dean and Canons of Manchester, whose tithes have been commuted for £430: the glebe comprises 18 acres. The original chapel, supposed to have been built by the Trafford family, having fallen down in 1718, the present edifice was erected. An additional church, in the early English style, with a tower, was erected in 1842, on a site given by T. J. Trafford, Esq., and contains 917 sittings, of which 351 are free. There is an asylum for the blind, deaf, and dumb, to which a chapel is attached; and the Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists, have each a place of worship. A school is endowed by Mrs. Hind with £35 per annum.

STRETHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the hundred of SOUTH WITCHFORD, union and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Ely; containing, with the chapelry of Thetford, 1357 inhabitants, of whom 1107 are in Stretham hamlet. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Ely, valued in the king's books at £22; net income, £756. At Thetford is a chapel of ease; and there are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and two free schools.

STRETTON, a township, in the parish of TILSTON, union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Higher division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Malpas; containing 84 inhabitants. The tithes have been commuted for £97. 4.

STRETTON, a chapelry, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Warrington; containing 362 inhabitants. A church in the early English style, with a tower, was erected in 1827: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £63; patron, the Rector of Great Budworth.

STRETTON, a township, in the parish of NORTH WINGFIELD, union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4½ miles (N. by W.) from Alfreton; containing 482 inhabitants.

STRETTON (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of OAKHAM, hundred of ALSTOE, county of RUTLAND, 8¼ miles (N. E. by E.) from Oakham; containing 220 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 17. 1., and in the gift of Sir G. Heathcote, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £299. 10.; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 3 acres.

STRETTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of PENKRIDGE, W. division of the hundred of CUTLESTONE, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 8 miles (N. by W.) from Wolverhampton; containing 272 inhabitants. This place, now a mere hamlet, is thought to occupy the site of the Pennicocium of the Romans, with the situation of which, as laid down by Antoninus in his Itinerary, it perfectly agrees; and the supposition is further strengthened by the discovery of several coins, and other relics of Roman antiquity. The chapelry comprises 1500 acres by admeasurement: the road from Shrewsbury to Coventry passes along its south side, and the river Penk, the Grand Junction railway, and the Stafford and Worcester canal, at a short distance on the east. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £96; patron and improPRIATOR, Lord Hatherton. The chapel is dedicated to St. John.

STRETTON, a township, in the parish and union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 2½ miles (N.) from Burton; containing 410 inhabitants. It is bounded on the north by the river Dove, and on the east by the Trent. A church has been lately built.

STRETTON-BASKERVILLE (All Saints), a parish, in the union of HINCKLEY, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (E. by S.) from Nuneaton; containing 75 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the border of Leicestershire, from which it is separated by the Watling-street; it consists of 1012 acres, and is intersected by the Ashby canal. The living is a sinecure rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of Miss Pinchin and Mrs. Wilcox: the church is in ruins.

STRETTON, CHURCH (St. Lawrence), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 13 miles (S. by W.) from Shrewsbury, and 153 (N. W.) from London; containing 1604 inhabitants, of whom 860 are in the township. This place, which by its adjunct is distinguished from its townships as the seat of the parochial church, derived its name Stretton, or Street-town, from its situation within a quarter of a mile of the ancient Watling-street, which passes in a direction parallel with the road from Shrewsbury to Ludlow. The town is romantically seated in a rich and fertile vale, inclosed on one side by a bold range of mountains, among which is the Caer Caradoc, the lofty and precipitous retreat of Caractacus, and on the other by the extensive chain of hills called the Longmynd, flat on the summit, but deeply indented on the south-eastern acclivity with numerous valleys, from which many mountain streams descend with impetuosity. It consists of one street, in the wider part of which is the market-house; the houses are in general built of brick, and of neat and modern appearance, occasionally interspersed with handsome dwellings and small cottages; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water. The secluded and romantic situation of the place, its proximity to spots of deep interest, its fine mountain scenery, and various other attractions, render it a favourite resort for parties from the neighbouring towns. But little trade is carried on: a manufactory for flannel was established in 1816, which is now flourishing; large flocks of sheep are depastured on the neighbouring hills; and a fair for wool was instituted in 1819. The market is on Thursday, chiefly for provisions: the fairs are on March 10th, for cattle, horses, and sheep; May 14th, a statute-fair; July 3rd, a great wool-fair; September 25th, a very large sheep-fair; and the last Thursday in November, for cattle, sheep, and horses. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions on the third Thursday in every month; and two constables for each township are annually appointed at the court leet held in the old manor-house, now an inn. The town has been made the place of election for the southern division of the county, in consequence of which the old dilapidated market-hall, erected in 1617, has been replaced by a handsome edifice of brick and stone, supported on columns and arches.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 10., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. R. Norgrave Pemberton: the tithes have been commuted for £500, and the glebe comprises 68 acres. The church is an ancient and venerable cruciform structure, principally in the early English style, with a square embattled tower rising from the centre, strengthened by buttresses and crowned with pinnacles: in the buttress at the south angle is a figure of St. Lawrence, and in other parts of the tower are groups of figures well sculptured. The south porch and the entrance on the north are Norman, and the interior contains several portions in the same character, with insertions in the decorated English style. The chancel is beautifully ornamented with richly-carved oak in antique devices, put up by the present rector, who has bestowed much care and expense on the embellishment of the church; and the windows, principally in the decorated style, with flowing tracery, are embellished with stained glass. The rectory-house, a handsome mansion, is beautifully situated at the foot of the Longmynd; and the grounds have been laid out by the Rev. Mr. Pemberton with a due regard to the characteristic features of the surrounding scenery. The free school was endowed by successive benefactors, in addition to whose legacies, of which a portion is appropriated to apprenticing the children, it has an endowment of twenty-seven acres of land, under a late inclosure act; the building was erected in 1779, upon the site of an old school, and the income is about £43. The poor law union of Church-Stretton comprises fourteen parishes or places, and contains a population of 6069. On Caer Caradoc are the remains of a large encampment, defended on the steepest acclivities with one, on the more accessible ascents with two, and in some places with three, intrenchments, hewn out of the solid rock: this was probably an exploratory station of Caractacus, from whom the hill received its name. On the Longmynd, which commands a panoramic view of wide extent, are many low tumuli and cairns of stones; and on one of the eminences called Bodbury, is a large intrenchment of earth: this mountain was the scene of many battles between the Romans and the Britons, and afterwards between the Welsh and the English. On an eminence at Minton is a very lofty tumulus, supposed to be one of those mounts upon which, in the earlier times of the Britons, justice was administered to the people. One mile to the south-west of Church-Stretton was Brockard's Castle, of which the site, the intrenchments, the moat, and foundations, with the approaches from the Watling-street, may be traced. Among the eminent natives of the town have been William Thynne, receiver of the marches, in 1546; Sir John Thynne, Knt., who founded Longleat House in the county of Wilts; and Dr. Roger Mainwaring, chaplain to Charles I., and Bishop of St. David's.

STRETTON-EN-LE-FIELDS (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of ASHBY, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, though locally in the W. division of the hundred of Goscote, county of Leicester, 5 miles (S. W.) from Ashby; containing, with part of Oakthorpe hamlet, 354 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Atherstone to Burton-upon-Trent, and contains about 1000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 10. 5.; net income, £196; patron, Sir John Robert Browne Cave, Bart. There is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 50 acres.

STRETTON-GRANDISOME (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of LEDBURY, hundred of RADLOW, county of HEREFORD, 7 miles (N. W.) from Ledbury; containing 139 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 1100 acres: the river Frome bounds it on the south; the road from Ledbury to Leominster passes through it from north to south, and the line of the Ledbury and Hereford canal crosses its south-west corner. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, with that of Ashperton annexed, and valued in the king's books at £9. 4. 2.; net income, £479; patron, the Rev. J. Hopton. The tithes were commuted for land in 1812; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains about 160 acres.

STRETTON MAGNA (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5½ miles (S. E. by E.) from Leicester; containing 38 inhabitants. Stretton Hall, the property of Sir George Robinson, Bart., is a fine mansion, embellished with plantations of oak. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Glen Magna: the church contains monuments to the Hewitt family. The Roman Via Devana passes through the parish.

STRETTON-ON-THE-FOSS (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON-UPON-STOUR, forming a detached portion of the Brails division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Shipston; containing 434 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1100 acres, surrounded on all sides, except the north, by portions of the counties of Gloucester and Worcester, and is intersected by the roads from Shipston to Chipping-Campden and to Moreton; the surface is hilly, and the soil chiefly a stiff clay. The living is a rectory, with that of Ditchford annexed in 1642, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the patronage of Mrs. Jervoise: the tithes have been commuted for £184, and there is a glebe-house. The church was rebuilt in 1841, when 144 sittings were added, of which 136 are free. There is a spring in the neighbourhood, the water of which is slightly impregnated with salt. Ditchford Friary is divided into three farms, but there are no remains of its ancient chapel.

STRETTON PARVA, a chapelry, in the parish of KING'S-NORTON, union of BILLESDON, hundred of GARTREE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Leicester; containing 108 inhabitants. It is on a tributary of the river Soar, to the north-east of the Harborough and Leicester road.

STRETTON-SUGWAS (St. MARY MAGDALENE), a parish, in the hundred of GRIMSWORTH, union and county of HEREFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by W.) from Hereford; containing 190 inhabitants. It comprises 797 acres by admeasurement, and is situated on a small tributary of the river Wye. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 7. 1., and in the gift of Guy's Hospital, London: the tithes have been commuted for £200, and the glebe contains about 40 acres. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Wesleyans.

STRETTON-UNDER-FOSS, a hamlet, in the parish of MONKS-KIRBY, union of LUTTERWORTH, Kirby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6¼ miles (N. W. by N.) from Rugby; containing, with Newbold-Revel, 336 inhabitants, and comprising 1138 acres. The village is intersected by the road between Coventry and Lutterworth; and the Oxford canal is crossed by the old Fosse-road to the westward of this place, the rateable annual value of canal property here being £800. There is a place of worship for Independents.

STRETTON-UPON-DUNSMORE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of RUGBY, Rugby division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 6 miles (S. E. by E.) from Coventry; containing, with the township of Princethorpe, 1080 inhabitants, and comprising 1808 acres. This parish, which derives its name from its situation on the Roman Fosseway, nearly in the centre of what was formerly Dunsmore heath, extends for about two miles and a half on the London and Holyhead road, and the village is about half a mile to the south-west of it. Plaster of Paris is made from gypsum, of which a considerable stratum is found in the parish, and large quantities of lime are burnt from limestone, which abounds. The living is a vicarage; net income, £438; patrons, the Rev. H. T. Powell, vicar, for one turn, and other parties for two turns; impropiators, several Proprietors of land. The late Rev. William Daniel, vicar, bequeathed £4000, subject to the life of his wife, to the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry and the Archdeacon of Coventry, in trust for building a new parochial church, which has been erected, from a design by Mr. Thomas Rickman, and was opened for divine service on Whit-Tuesday, 16th May, 1837. It consists of a nave, chancel, aisles, and tower, and the whole cost was £5232, the balance having been supplied by the sale of the materials of the old edifice, a charge on the rents of the church lands, the sale of pews, collections at the doors, and subscriptions. A national school is supported from the proceeds of land bequeathed by William Herbert, in 1694. There is a spring strongly impregnated with lime, which will incrust rough substances with limestone formation if left in the water for a considerable time. In this vicinity was Brandon Castle, supposed to have been founded either by Geoffrey de Clinton, or by Norman de Verdune, who had married the daughter of that nobleman. During the rebellion of Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, who then held Kenilworth Castle against Henry III., his followers, understanding that John de Verdune had a commission from the king to raise forces in Worcestershire to oppose them, assaulted and destroyed his castle; but it was rebuilt by Theobald de Verdune, his successor, who had the privilege of court leet and gallows, with assize of bread and beer, to all of which, in the reign of Edward I., he claimed prescriptive right, which was allowed. The only remains of the castle are the moat and some heaps of rubbish. At Knightlow Hill, on the boundary of the parish, is an ancient stone called Knightlow Cross, one of the oldest memorials of feudal tenure existing, and on which certain fines are annually paid by the surrounding parishes.

STRICKLAND, GREAT, a township, in the parish of MORLAND, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (W. N. W.) from Morland; containing 277 inhabitants. This place takes its name from the ancient family of Strickland, who were lords of the manor, and resided here. The moduses and the vicarial tithes were commuted for land in 1830; and under the late act, the appropriate tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £81. 14. 4½, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. There is a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends.

STRICKLAND-KETTLE, a township, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 2 miles (N. by W.) from Kendal; containing 466 inhabitants. This township, which, with that of Strickland-Roger, constitutes the chapelry of Burneside, is bounded on the east by the Kent river, and comprises 2275 acres, whereof about 1842 are arable, 400 pasture, and 32 woodlands. The chapel of Burneside is within the township; and a school is endowed with £24 per annum.

STRICKLAND, LITTLE, a township, in the chapelry of THRIMBY, parish of MORLAND, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 3 miles (N. E.) from Shap; containing 134 inhabitants. The chapel and school-houses are situated in the township.

STRICKLAND-ROGER, a township, in the parish, union, and ward of KENDAL, county of WESTMORLAND, 4 miles (N.) from Kendal; containing 412 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Kent, and on the east by the Sprint, and comprises 5399a. 3r. 13p., of which 1291 acres are arable, 200 pasture, 33 woodland, and about 1600 common, now being inclosed. Near Garnet-bridge is a mill for the manufacture of bobbin, and at Cowen Head is a paper-mill. At a place called Hundhow was anciently a chapel, named Chapel-en-le-Wood.

STRINGSTON, a parish, in the union of WILLITON, hundred of CANNINGTON, W. division of SOMERSET, 10 miles (W. N. W.) from Bridgwater; containing 143 inhabitants. It is near the road between Bridgwater and Dunster, and comprises 1193 acres, of which 84 are common or waste: limestone is quarried, chiefly for agricultural purposes. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Kilve: the tithes have been commuted for £188. 10., and the glebe contains 43 acres. There is a place of worship for Baptists. In the churchyard is a curious ancient cross, and in the neighbourhood is a fortification called Danes-burrow, or Douse-borough, Castle, with a double embankment and wide ditch; it is about three-quarters of a mile in circumference, and wholly covered with oak coppice wood, among which a prætorium may be distinctly traced.

STRIXTON (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of WELLINGBOROUGH, hundred of HIGHAM-FERRERS, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4¼ miles (S. by E.) from Wellingborough; containing 55 inhabitants. It comprises about 970 acres, of which the surface is varied by a portion of hilly ground, and the soil is in general cold and heavy. The living is a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Bozeat, and valued in the king's books at £7. The church is a small edifice, affording a good specimen of the early English style.

STROOD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of NORTH AYLESFORD, partly within the jurisdiction of the city of ROCHESTER, and partly in the hundred of SHAMWELL, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, ½ a mile (N. W.) from Rochester; containing 2881 inhabitants. The village consists of one principal street, on the road from London to Rochester, to which latter place it is joined by a bridge over the Medway, at its eastern extremity: the houses are irregularly built, and destitute of uniformity and respectability of appearance; but since the last act of parliament for paving, watching, and lighting the village, it has been considerably improved. The adjoining heights command interesting and extensive prospects. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in maritime pursuits, in the fisheries on the Medway, and in dredging for oysters, of which large quantities, as well as shrimps, are sent to the London and other markets. A fair is held on August 26th and two following days, by grant of King John, and has become very considerable. That part of the parish called Strood-Extra, which is not within the city of Rochester, is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and within that of a court of requests at Rochester, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. The living is a perpetual curacy; gross income, about £240; patrons, the Dean and Chapter; appropriator, the Bishop of Rochester. The old church, situated at the western extremity of the village, was rebuilt in 1812, at the expense of the parishioners. There is a place of worship for Independents. Francis Barrel, Esq., residuary legatee of Sir John Hayward's estate, in 1718, bequeathed £1100 for the endowment of three charity schools, two to be in the parish of St. Nicholas, Rochester, and one in Strood; and there are some small bequests for the poor. Of Strood Temple, originally a preceptory founded for Knights Templars, and valued at the Dissolution at £52. 6. 10., there are interesting remains on the Temple farm; and of Strood hospital, established by Bishop Gilbert de Glanville, in the reign of Richard I., for infirm and indigent travellers, the almonry, which has been converted into a stable, and some other portions, yet exist. About two miles from Strood, on the London road, is Gadshill, celebrated by Shakspeare as the scene of Falstaff's valorous exploits.

STROUD, a tything, in the parish of CUMNER, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 58 inhabitants.

STROUD, or STROUDWATER (St. LAWRENCE), a newly enfranchised borough, a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 10 miles (S. by E.) from Gloucester, and 102 (W. by N.) from London; containing, with the tythings of Upper and Lower Lyp-piatt, Pakenhill, and Steanbridge, 8680 inhabitants. The first notice of this place in any records extant occurs in an agreement in 1304, between the rector of Bisley and the inhabitants of La Stroud, which, at the time of the Norman survey, formed part of Bisley parish. It derives its name from its situation on the Slade or Stroud water, near its confluence with the Frome. It stands on a considerable declivity, in the midst of a most beautiful country, and consists principally of a long street extending up the side of the hill, with another diverging from it at the base; the streets are paved, and lighted with gas; there are many handsome houses, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water conveyed by pipes from two springs in the neighbourhood. The town has long been famous as the centre of the woollen manufacture in Gloucestershire, and is supposed to owe much of its prosperity to the peculiar properties of the stream called the Stroud water, which is admirably adapted for dyeing scarlet, and which, consequently, was the means of attracting, at an early period, many clothiers and dyers to its banks. It possesses great advantages in water-carriage, the Thames and Severn canal passing close to the south. The inhabitants of the surrounding villages are employed in different processes of this manufacture; and at the distance of a mile from the town, on the Bath and Birmingham road, are Light Pool Mills, an extensive establishment for the manufacture of solid-headed pins, consisting of five stories, each 100 feet long, and ingeniously adapted to the making of pins without manual assistance. The town has been greatly improved in consequence of an act of parliament obtained, within a few years, for paving, lighting, and widening the streets; and many new roads have been formed, extending in various directions, to connect it more closely with contiguous towns. The market, which is on Friday, is well supplied; and there are fairs on May 10th and August 21st, for cattle, sheep, and pigs. Stroud has been constituted a borough, with the privilege of sending two members to parliament, and the right of election is vested in the £10 householders of a large manufacturing district, comprising an area of 42,356 acres: the returning officer is appointed by the sheriff. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here, on the first and third Fridays in every month; and the town is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., held at Cirencester, on Thursday every three weeks.

The parish was separated from that of Bisley in the reign of Edward II., and comprises 3711 acres, of which 1340 are arable, 1552 meadow and pasture, 797 woodland, and 22 waste and water. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £132; patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol; impropiators, the family of Goodlake. There is an endowed lectureship, in the gift of the parishioners. The church is a large building, erected and enlarged at several different periods, with a tower at its west end, surmounted by a lofty octangular steeple. A church containing 1000 sittings, of which 700 are free, was built at Stroudshill, in 1839, in the early English style, with a bell-turret, at a cost of £3170, of which £500 were granted by the Incorporated Society, and the remainder supplied by the Church Commissioners and by subscription. A church also was consecrated at Whiteshill in 1841, the first stone of which had been laid November 18th, 1839; it is in the Norman style, and contains 500 sittings, of which 396 are free, a grant having been made by the Incorporated Society, which, with aid from the commissioners and subscriptions, defrayed the expense. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans. Thomas Webb, in 1642, gave an endowment now amounting to about £54 per annum, by means of which four boys are boarded and educated; and in 1734, Henry Windowe bequeathed £21, for two more. The union of Stroud comprises 15 parishes or places, and contains a population of 38,920. An act was passed in 1840 to amend a former act for enlarging the work-house or erecting a new one, for maintaining and employing the poor, and for repairing or rebuilding the church. Stroud is the birthplace of John Canton, F.R.S., a celebrated natural philosopher, who died in 1772; and of Joseph White, D.D., professor of Arabic at Oxford, who died in 1814; both of whom were the sons of weavers.

STROUD-END, a tything, in the parish of PAINSWICK, union of STROUD, hundred of BISLEY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 850 inhabitants.

STROXTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Grantham; containing 94 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 8. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £250; patron, Sir W. E. Welby, Bart.

STRUBBY (St. OSWALD), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Wold division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.) from Alford; containing, with the hamlet of Woodthorpe, 268 inhabitants, and comprising 1995 acres by computation. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln (the appropriators), valued in the king's books at £4. 13. 4.; net income, £150. The glebe contains 18 acres, and a glebe-house has just been erected. The church is an ancient stone edifice, to which a brick tower was recently added: the family of Ballot, who resided at Woodthorpe Hall, lie buried in it, and to the memory of one of them there is a stone in the wall near the south door, dated 1431; the rest of the family, of whom one was an alderman of London in the 16th century, and died at the age of 99 years, have been buried within a beautiful wooden screen-work. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

STRUMPSHAW (St. PETER), a parish, in the union and hundred of BLOFIELD, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Blofield; containing 412 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the navigable river Yare, and comprises 1391a. 28p., of which 851 acres are arable, 502 pasture, and the remainder water and roads: the Norwich and Yarmouth railway inter-seets it. The village is seated on an eminence; and there is a windmill, standing on the highest ground in the county, and forming a conspicuous landmark. The living is a discharged rectory, with that of Bradseton united, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £474; patron, L. Josselyn, Esq. The glebe contains about 64 acres, and there is a good house, considerably improved by the incumbent, the Rev. E. S. Whitbread. The church contains portions of the early and later English styles, with a lofty embattled tower.

STUBBY-LANE, a hamlet, in the parish of HANBURY, union of BURTON, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Uttoxeter; containing 137 inhabitants.

STUBLACH, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Middlewich; containing 71 inhabitants.

STUBTON (St. MARTIN), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Newark; containing 170 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1152*a. 3r. 30p.*, chiefly the property of Sir Robert Heron, Bart., who is lord of the manor; the surface is varied, and the lower grounds are watered by several streams tributary to the river Witham. Stubton Hall, the seat of Sir Robert, is a spacious and handsome modern mansion, in the grounds of which is an extensive collection of birds and quadrupeds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 3. 9., and in the gift of Sir Robert: the tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe comprises 44 acres. The church, a neat structure with a tower, was rebuilt in 1800, by the patron. John Hargrave, in 1680, bequeathed land, now producing £58 per annum, for the repair of the church, and for the poor.

STUDHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUTON, partly in the hundred of DACORUM, county of HERTFORD, but chiefly in the hundred of MANSHEAD, county of BEDFORD; containing, with the hamlet of Humbershoe, 817 inhabitants, of whom 206 are in Studham hamlet, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Market-Street. The parish comprises 1431 acres, of which 154 are common or waste land. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9, and has a net income of £129; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the impropiators are the Rev. J. Wheeldon and others.

STUDLAND (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of ROWBARROW, Wareham division of DORSET, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Corfe-Castle; containing 453 inhabitants. This parish comprises 5834 acres, of which 4105 are common or waste; it includes Brownsea and several smaller islands, and is bounded on the north by Poole harbour, on the east by Studland bay, and by Swanwich bay on the south-east, where is a signal station, on a hill called Ballard down. The bay, though an open roadstead, affords excellent anchorage for ships drawing fourteen or fifteen feet of water. Brownsea island is of an oval form, about three miles in circumference, and anciently contained a hermitage and chapel, dedicated to St. Andrew, of which there are now no remains. The castle, at its eastern extremity, was built in the reign of Elizabeth, by the inhabitants of Poole, for the defence of that port; and adjoining it is a platform, upon which, in time of war, a few pieces of ordnance are mounted. There is also a quay, where vessels of considerable burthen can lie conveniently for taking in, or discharging, their cargoes. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 5., and in the gift of E. Morton Pleydell, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £135. 10., and the glebe comprises 22 acres. The church is supposed to have been built about the time of the Conquest. On Studland common are many barrows, either British or Danish, the principal of which is 90 feet in perpendicular height, and is called Agglestone, or Stone Barrow, from its being surmounted by an enormous circular red sandstone, eighteen feet high, and computed to weigh 400 tons.

STUDLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of BECKLEY, union of HEADINGTON, chiefly in the hundred of ASHENDON, county of BUCKINGHAM, but partly in that of BULLINGDON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (N.) from Wheatley; containing, with the hamlet of Horton, 418 inhabitants. A priory of Benedictine nuns, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded in the reign of Henry II., by Bernard de S. Walerico, and, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £102. 6. 7. The remains of a Roman villa were discovered in a wood here, belonging to Sir Alexander Croke; and various pieces of masonry, as window-slabs, apparently parts of some ancient edifice, have been found.

STUDLEY (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of ALCESTER, Alcester division of the hundred of BARLICHWAY, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Alcester; containing 1992 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the river Arrow, and on the road from Birmingham to Alcester, and comprises by accurate computation 4500 acres. There are good mines of clay within its limits, and though no external symptoms of minerals are visible, it is supposed that coal and stone, if sought for at a sufficient depth, would be found, as a large portion of the district was anciently covered with forests, said by mineralogists to indicate coal formations. The manufacture of needles and fish-hooks, for which Studley is celebrated, is carried on extensively; and the works, among others, of James Pardow, Esq., established in 1800, at the cost of many thousand pounds, and in which is a powerful steam-engine, employ about 250 hands. In the parish are the two manors of Skilts and Gattax, the property of J. L. Moilliet, Esq., and which anciently belonged to the Sheldon family: the Upper Skilts House, at the top of the hill, with its farm of 215 acres of good strong land and marl, commands a magnificent view of a rich and fertile country, with the Malvern, Abberley, and Gloucestershire hills in the distance, and is surrounded by woods which add greatly to the beauty of the scenery. The Lower Skilts House, an old building of large dimensions, now occupied, with about 170 acres of wheat and bean land, by Josiah Rock, Esq., stands in a conspicuous situation on the south side of the hill, and was in former times the grange to a priory at Studley: of two large fish-ponds below the mansion, such as were usually attached to religious houses, one still remains, and the other has been drained, and converted into productive soil. A fair for sheep and cattle, which is also a very large statute-fair, is held on the 28th of September. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £87, with a glebe of 10 acres; patron, R. Knight, Esq. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later English styles, with a beautiful Norman arch at the north entrance, now closed up. There is a chapel licensed by the bishop, in which divine service is performed every Sunday evening, the church being distant, and not affording sufficient accommodation. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. Six children are taught free, and two are annually clothed, from bequests; the school-house was built in 1810. There are considerable remains of the priory, which was founded in honour of St. Mary, early in the reign of Henry II., by Peter de Studley, who translated hither a society of Augustine canons whom he had previously established at Wicton, in Worcestershire. The house, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £181.3.6.; and at its gate William de Cantilupe erected an hospital for the reception of infirm poor.

STUDLEY, a tything, in the parish, union, and hundred of CALNE, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS; containing 550 inhabitants.

STUDLEY-ROGER, a township, in the parish of RIPON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (W. S. W.) from Ripon; containing 152 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 500 acres, the property of Mrs. Lawrence, lady of the manor; the village is small, but neatly built, and the surrounding scenery is of pleasing character. The inappropriate tithes have been commuted for £117. 13., and the appropriate for £21, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Ripon. Here is a national school.

STUDLEY-ROYAL, a township, in the parish of RIPON, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Ripon; containing 50 inhabitants. The township comprises by computation 590 acres of rich and fertile land, lying wholly within the inclosure of Studley Park, for many generations the seat of the Aislabe family, of whom William, who married Elizabeth, daughter of the Earl of Exeter, represented the borough of Ripon in parliament for more than sixty years. After his decease, in 1781, the estate descended to his second daughter, Mrs. Lawrence, on the death of her sister in 1808, and that lady's daughter, Mrs. Eliza Sophia Lawrence, is the present possessor. The mansion is an elegant and spacious structure in the Grecian style, consisting of a centre and two wings, having in the former a stately portico of four lofty Corinthian columns supporting an enriched entablature and cornice, surmounted by a triangular pediment; it contains many handsome apartments, and a valuable collection of paintings by the most eminent masters. The park comprises 650 acres, partly in the township of Markington with Wallerthwaite, and is richly wooded, and well stocked with deer; the surface is beautifully undulated, and the grounds are watered by the Skell rivulet, which forms some picturesque cascades.

In the southern portion of the park, in a deep vale, through which the Skell pursues its course, are the venerable remains of Fountains Abbey, established for brethren of the Cistercian order by thirteen Benedictine monks of the abbey of St. Mary, near York, who, leaving their house for the purpose of observing a more strict course of discipline, in 1132, obtained from Thurstan, Archbishop of York, a grant of land at this place. The abbey was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and flourished till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £1173. 0. 7.; the site and demesne were granted in the 32nd of Henry VIII. to Sir Richard Gresham, and in 1767 were purchased by William Aislabe, Esq., for £18,000. The remains of this once magnificent structure are beautifully situated, and occupy an area of nearly two acres, within the township of Markington with Wallerthwaite; they are partly Norman, and partly in the early English style, and consist chiefly of the church, with its lofty tower, part of the cloisters, the chapter-house, refectory, dormitory, and other portions of the conventual buildings, together forming one of the most extensive and interesting specimens of monastic remains in the country. Near the ruins is Fountains Hall, a large mansion in the Elizabethan style, formerly the seat of the Messenger family, proprietors of the abbey lands.

STUKELEY, GREAT (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Huntingdon; containing 417 inhabitants, and comprising about 2730 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 2., and in the gift of Trinity Hall, Cambridge; impropiator, J. Heathcote, Esq. The glebe comprises 77 acres of land, assigned in 1813, in lieu of tithes, and valued at £125 per annum; there is a good glebe-house. The church is principally in the Norman style. Eight acres, yielding £14 per annum, have been allotted in lieu of other land appropriated to the repairs of the church; and the income is applied to that purpose, and occasionally to the relief of the poor.

STUKELEY, LITTLE (ST. MARTIN), a parish, in the hundred of HURSTINGSTONE, union and county of HUNTINGDON, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Huntingdon; containing 396 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated in a valley between two hills, and on the old north road, comprises 1383*a.* 28*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. $1\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of Lady Olivia Sparrow; net income, £252. The tithes were commuted for land in 1813; the glebe comprises 273 acres, with an excellent house, which, with the land, has been greatly improved by the present incumbent. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a tower richly covered with ivy. John Daniel, in 1619, bequeathed 9 acres of land for the repair of the church, with residue to the poor; and there is some land in Alconbury for the same purposes.

STUNTNEY, a chapelry, in the parish of the HOLY TRINITY, ELY, union, hundred, and Isle, of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E.) from Ely; containing 220 inhabitants. It consists of about 2500 acres, of which the soil is fertile, producing wheat, barley, and oats; the surface generally is flat, and the river Ouse flows within half a mile of the village. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £77; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The tithes have been commuted for £580, and the glebe comprises 32 acres. The chapel is in the Norman style.

STURBRIDGE.—See STOURBRIDGE.

STURGATE, a hamlet, in the parish of SPRINGTHORPE, union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of CORRINGHAM, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN; containing 41 inhabitants.

STURMERE, a parish, in the union of RISBRIDGE, hundred of HINCKFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (S. E.) from Haverhill; containing 333 inhabitants. This place takes its name from a lake, or mere, comprising about 20 acres, that extended from the river Stour, by which the parish is bounded on the north; it comprises about 800 acres, and is watered by a rivulet. Though now obscure, it was formerly of considerable importance, and stretched into the counties of Cambridge and Suffolk, including the parishes of Haverhill and Kedington, each of which now exceeds it in population. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 10., and in the gift of the Duke of Rutland: the tithes have been commuted for £264, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church, an ancient structure of flint and rubble stone, is partly in the Norman and early English styles, with a rich arch of the former character on the south side. Numerous Roman coins of Antoninus Pius and of the Lower Empire have been found; and in widening the road, in 1820, several skeletons of gigantic size were discovered.

STURMINSTER-MARSHALL (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of COGDEAN, Wimborne division of DORSET, 5 miles (W.) from Wimborne-Minster; containing, with the tything of Coombe-Almer, 902 inhabitants. This place derives its name from the situation of its church on the river Stour, and its adjunct from the Earl of Pembroke, earl marshal, to whom it anciently belonged, and who, in the reign of Henry I., obtained for it the grant of a fair. The parish comprises 3465 acres, of which 361 are common or waste; it is bounded on the north-east by the river Stour, over which is a bridge of eight arches. In the centre of the village is an open spot still called the market-place, though no market has been held within the memory of man. The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes of Lytchett-Minster, Corfe-Mullen, and Hamworthy, with the perpetual curacy of Lytchett-Minster annexed, and valued in the king's books at £31. 5.; net income, £920; patrons and impropiators, the Provost and Fellows of Eton College. The great tithes have been commuted for £469, and the vicarial for £120, with a glebe of 122 acres. The church has an embattled tower and a remarkably large chancel, and at the west end of the north aisle a space is partitioned off, in which the royal peculiar court of Sturminster-Marshall is held. In 1799, William Mackrell endowed two schools with the interest of £1200 three per cent. consols., for education. Upon Cogdean Elms, an eminence in the parish, whereon the courts of the hundred to which it gives name were formerly held, are some stately elm-trees.

STURMINSTER-NEWTON-CASTLE (ST. MARY), a market-town and parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of STURMINSTER-NEWTON-CASTLE, Sturminster division of DORSET, 9 miles (N. W.) from Blandford, and 108 (W. S. W.) from London; containing 1920 inhabitants. This place, which derives its name from the river on the northern bank of which it is situated, and from the minster or church, is supposed to be the Anicetis of Ravennas, and was known to the Saxons at an early period. Alfred the Great gave some lands here to his son Ethelwald; and, in 968, Edgar granted the manor of Sturre, or Stour, to the abbey of Glastonbury, which gift was confirmed by Edmund Ironside. In the Norman survey, the place was included in Newton or Newton, from which it appears to have derived the adjunct to its name. At the Dissolution it was presented by Henry VIII. to Catherine Parr, and, after her death, by Edward VI. to his sister Elizabeth, who devised it to Sir Christopher Hatton, from whom it passed to the family of Lord Rivers. In 1645, some hundred clubmen of Dorsetshire and Wiltshire forced the quarters of the parliamentary troops here, and, after slaughter on both sides, were victorious, taking sixteen dragoons, with several horses and arms. In 1681 and 1729, the town suffered by conflagrations, and sustained damage at the latter period to the amount of £13,000.

Sturminster-Newton comprises the two townships of Sturminster and Newton, occupying different sides of the river Stour, and connected by a causeway and a bridge of six arches, of which the latter has been widened and improved, and the former raised, to prevent the inundation to which it was previously subject. The streets are in general narrow, and the houses low and indifferently built, except in the market-place, where is a large oblong market-house, with warerooms above and shambles below. A turnpike-road, lately completed, runs through the town to Sherborne. Some trade is carried on with Newfoundland, and the little manufacture in the town consists of baizes, though woollen goods were formerly made. The market is on Thursday; on every alternate Thursday is a large market for cattle, and fairs are held on May 12th, and October 24th. The parish comprises by estimation 4346 acres; of which 613 are arable, 3410 meadow and pasture, 227 wood, and 96 common; the soil is chiefly clay, and the lands are in good cultivation. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 16. 8., and in the gift of the impropiator, Lord Rivers: the great tithes have been commuted for £185, and the vicarial for £775; the glebe comprises 81 acres. The church, a handsome edifice on the south side of the town, was originally built by John Selwood, abbot of Glastonbury, and has been lately repaired and enlarged at the expense of the Rev. T. H. Lane Fox; it consists of a chancel, nave, and two aisles, with an embattled tower, and contains a painted window which cost 400 guineas. A chapel of ease that stood at Bagbere, in the parish, has fallen into decay. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The poor law union of Sturminster comprises 19 parishes or places, and contains a population of 10,235. The principal object of interest is a fortification or camp called the Castle, situated on an eminence at Newton, near the south bank of the river, and supposed to have been constructed by the Romans, or not later than the Saxon era; it consists of a vallum and deep fosse, in the shape of the Roman letter D, and on the top is a small artificial mount or keep, near which are the ruins of an ancient house where the courts were formerly held.

STURRY (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BLEAN, hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E.) from Canterbury; containing 1001 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3085*a.* 2*r.* 34*p.*, of which 49 acres are roads, and the remainder land in good cultivation: there are some large pits of excellent gravel, used for repairing the roads. The river Stour, which is navigable for barges to Fordwick, flows through the village, which is large and well built, and situated in a valley on the road from Canterbury to the Isle of Thanet. A fair is held on Whit-Monday, for toys and pedlery. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 8., and in the gift of the Archbishop of Canterbury: the great tithes have been commuted for £684, and the vicarial for £255, and there is a glebe-house, with about 2 acres of land. The church is in the early English style, with a tower surmounted by a spire. Here are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by an endowment of £200, and by subscription.

STURSTON, a township, in the parish of ASHBOURN, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 1 mile (E.) from Ashbourn; containing 662 inhabitants.

STURSTON (HOLY CROSS), a parish, in the union of THETFORD, hundred of GRIMSHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W. by S.) from Watton; containing 47 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Wissey, and comprises about 1800 acres, of which 800 are rabbit warren; the soil is sandy. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £28; patron, Lord Walsingham. The church is in ruins.

STURTON, a township, in the parish of SCAWBY, union of GLANDFORD-BRIGG, E. division of the wapentake of MANLEY, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Glandford-Brigg; containing 86 inhabitants.

STURTON, with BRANSBY, a township, in the parish of STOW, union of GAINSBOROUGH, wapentake of WELL, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E.) from Gainsborough; containing 501 inhabitants, of whom 394 are in Sturton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. Endowments amounting to £12 per annum have been bequeathed for education.

STURTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, North-Clay division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 6 miles (E. N. E.) from East Retford; containing, with the hamlet of Fenton, 646 inhabitants, and consisting of about 4100 acres. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £282; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of York. The tithes were commuted for land in 1822; the glebe comprises 127 acres. The church is a spacious structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and contains some handsome monuments to the Thornhaughs, of Fenton Hall. A national school, erected in 1830, is partly supported by a rental of £6. 14., the gift of George Green, in 1710. The Roman road from Lincoln to Doncaster passes through the parish.

STURTON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of WARKWORTH, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 8 miles (S. E. by S.) from Alnwick; containing 108 inhabitants. It comprises about 1100 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the rest pasture, with about 10 acres of woodland; the soil is various, the surface undulated, and the scenery embraces both land and sea views. Stone is quarried for building and for the roads; and there is a brick and draining-tile manufactory. The land consists of three farms, occupied by the respective owners:

the village is about two miles and a half westward from Warkworth.

STURTON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish of ABERFORD, Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of the county of YORK, 7 miles (E.) from Leeds; containing 77 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 760 acres, the property of R. O. Gascoigne, Esq., and comprised in one well cultivated farm; the substratum contains coal of good quality, of which a mine was opened in 1833. A rent charge of £33. 2. 6. has been awarded as a commutation for the vicarial tithes.

STURTON, GREAT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of HORNCastle, N. division of the wapentake of GARTREE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Horncastle; containing 127 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £116; impropiator, R. J. Loft, Esq.

STUSTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of HARTISMERE, W. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (N. by W.) from Eye; containing 252 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from London to Norwich, by Bury St. Edmund's. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8.; net income, £174; patron, Sir Edward Kerrison, Bart. The church is an old structure in the decorated English style, with a circular tower of more ancient date, and contains a handsome monument to the Castleton family.

STUTCHBURY (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Brackley; containing 21 inhabitants. It comprises about 1200 acres, of which the soil is chiefly a heavy loam; the surface is level, and the lands are watered by a small stream. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £3. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £5. The church is in ruins.

STUTTON (ST. PETER), a parish, in the incorporation and hundred of SAMFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 8 miles (S. by W.) from Ipswich; containing 492 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2138a. 3r. 38p., of which the soil in some parts is luxuriantly fertile, and in others dry and gravelly; the surface is undulated, and the scenery pleasingly diversified, and enlivened by handsome seats. The river Stour, which is navigable for vessels of considerable burthen, separates the parish from Essex, and, at high tides, is from two to three miles broad. Here are the gateway and other remains of Stutton Hall, good specimens of the domestic style prevalent in the reign of Elizabeth. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 6.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Thomas Mills; net income, £550, with a parsonage-house delightfully situated in grounds tastefully embellished. Several fossil remains have been dug up.

STUTTON, with HAZLEWOOD, a township, in the parish of TADCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, W. riding of YORK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Tadcaster; containing 380 inhabitants, of whom 190 are in Stutton. The township comprises by computation 2610 acres, of which 600 are in Stutton, and the remainder in Hazlewood; the soil is rich, and the substratum abounds with excellent limestone, extensively quarried and burnt into lime, for which purpose there are several kilns. The hamlet of Stutton is situated in the vale of the Cock rivulet. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £26.

STYDD, a township, in the parish of SHIRLEY, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Ashbourn; containing 40 inhabitants.

STYFORD, a township, in the parish of BYWELL ST. ANDREW, union of HEXHAM, E. Division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (E. by S.) from Hexham; containing 104 inhabitants. It is delightfully situated on the north side of the Tyne, about a mile and a half west from Bywell. The mansion here, which was erected some years since, from an elegant design, consists of three fronts; it is well sheltered on the east and north by rising grounds and plantations, and a beautiful plain, above a mile in length, stretches before the south front.

STYRRUP, a township, in the parishes of BLYTH and HARWORTH, union of WORKSOP, Hatfield division of the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. S. W.) from Bawtry; containing 634 inhabitants. The township comprises 2959a. 2r. 36p., of which 940 acres are in the parish of Blyth; the commons were inclosed in 1802. The tithes, including those of Harworth, have been commuted for £543. 3. 6., of which £279. 10. are payable to the vicar of Harworth, £58. 13. 6. to the vicar of Blyth, and £205 to Trinity College, Cambridge. There are places of worship for Wesleyans here and in the hamlet of Oldcoates.

SUBBERTHWAITE, a township, in the parish and union of ULVERSTONE, hundred of LONSDALE, north of the Sands, N. division of the county of LANCASTER, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Ulverstone; containing 147 inhabitants. Here are quarries of slate.

SUCKLEY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of MARTLEY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTREE, Worcester and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Bromyard; containing, with the chapelries of Alfrick and Lulsley, 1153 inhabitants, of whom 599 are in Suckley township. Bounded on the west by Herefordshire, and on the north by the river Teame, the parish consists of 5125 acres, of which 2600 are in the township. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 19. 4½., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £732 to the rector, and £50. 16. to Stourbridge grammar school; the glebe comprises 9 acres. At Alfrick and Lulsley are chapels of ease; and there is a place of worship for Wesleyans. A free school is endowed with about £10. 10. per annum, arising from bequests by J. Palmer, in 1683, and an unknown benefactor; and Thomas Freeman, in 1794, left £1000, which were vested in land now producing £46 a year, for the poor, who have also a sum arising from minor bequests.

SUDBORNE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from Orford; containing 623 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the east by the river Ore and the North Sea, comprises 5400 acres. Sudborne Hall, formerly the seat of the Viscounts Hereford, is now the occasional residence of the Marquess of Hertford. The living is a rectory, with that of Orford annexed, valued in the king's books at £33. 6. 8., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £478. 8. Dr. Pretymann Tomline, Bishop of Winchester, was rector of the parish.

SUDBOROUGH (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of THRAPSTONE, hundred of HUXLOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. W.) from Thrapstone; containing 332 inhabitants, and comprising 1764 acres. A considerable number of women are employed in lace-making; and an extensive brewery is carried on. Stone is procured for building and for the roads, and there is a large brick-yard. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 5. 10., and in the gift of the Bishop of London: the tithes have been commuted for £359, and the glebe comprises 14 acres. The church is in the early, decorated, and later English styles, and contains some ancient brasses and monuments. A Sunday school was founded by the Marchioness of Bath, in 1788, and endowed with £366. 13. 4. three per cent. reduced annuities; she directed that 30 boys and 30 girls should be instructed in the principles of the Established Church, the master and mistress to be paid one penny a week for each child, and the remainder of the fund to be expended in fringing, and in books and rewards for the children.

SUDBROOK, or SOUTHBROOK (THE TRINITY), a parish, in the union and division of CHEPSTOW, hundred of CALDICOT, county of MONMOUTH, 5 miles (S. W. by S.) from Chepstow. This place, which is situated near the mouth of the Severn, where it joins the Bristol Channel, can now be considered only as a hamlet, as a great portion has been either encroached upon, or washed away, by the combined operations of the tide and the waters of the river. The living, a discharged rectory, is annexed to that of Portscuete, and valued in the king's books at £4. 14. 7. The church is in ruins: near it are the remains of a Roman encampment, the greater part of which has disappeared.

SUDBROOKE, a hamlet, in the parish of ANCASTER, union of GRANTHAM, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 192 inhabitants.

SUDBROOKE (St. EDWARD), a parish, in the wapentake of LAWRESS, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Lincoln; containing 81 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10., and in the gift of the Bishop: the tithes have been commuted for £56.

SUDBURY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of UTTOXETER, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 5 miles (E. by S.) from Uttoxeter; containing 599 inhabitants. Sudbury Hall, the property of Lord Vernon, now held on lease by Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, is a noble mansion containing many stately apartments, and beautifully situated in a richly wooded park, through which is a spacious carriage-drive, two miles in length; the manor extends over 6000 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 13. 1½.; net income, £747; patron, Lord Vernon. The church contains some very ancient monuments. Schools are supported, and there are almshouses for seven persons.

SUDBURY, a hamlet, in the parish of HARROW-ON-THE-HILL, union of HENDON, hundred of GORE, county of MIDDLESEX; containing 566 inhabitants.

able importance, having a market and a mint. A colony of the Flemings, who were introduced into this country by Edward III., for the purpose of establishing the manufacture of woollen-cloth, settled here, and that branch of trade continued to flourish for some time, but at length fell to decay. The town is situated on the river Stour, which is crossed by a bridge leading into Essex. For some time after the loss of the woollen trade, it possessed few attractions, and the houses belonged principally to decayed manufacturers; but it has within the last few years been greatly improved, and was paved and lighted in 1825, under an act obtained for the purpose, and which act was amended and the powers enlarged in 1842, and some good houses have been built. The town-hall, erected by the corporation, in the Grecian style, is a great ornament to the town, in which is also a neat theatre. The trade principally consists in the manufacture of silk, crape, and bunting for ships' flags; that of silk was introduced by manufacturers from Spitalfields, in consequence of disputes with their workmen, and about 1500 persons are now engaged in the silk, and 400 in the crape and bunting business. The river Stour, navigable hence to Manningtree, affords a facility for the transmission of coal, chalk, lime, and agricultural produce. The statute market is on Saturday, the corn-market on Thursday; and fairs are held on March 12th and July 10th, chiefly for earthenware, glass, and toys.

The first charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Mary, in 1554, and confirmed by Elizabeth, in 1559; another was given by Oliver Cromwell, but that under which the corporation till very lately derived its power was bestowed by Charles II. The government is now vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, under the act of the 5th and 6th of William IV., cap. 76; the number of magistrates is five; the freedom is obtained by birth or apprenticeship. The borough, which comprises 1685 acres, first sent members to parliament in the commencement of the reign of Elizabeth, and continued to exercise that privilege until the year 1844, when the inhabitants were disfranchised by a special act of parliament. The recorder holds courts of quarter-session; and a court of record occurs every Monday, for the recovery of debts, to the amount of £20.

Sudbury comprises the parishes of All Saints, St.

SUDBURY, a borough and market-town, and the head of a union, locally in the hundred of BABERGH, W. division of SUFFOLK, 22 miles (W. by S.) from Ipswich, and 56 (N. E. by N.) from London; containing 5085 inhabitants. This place, originally called South Burgh, is of great antiquity, and at the period of the Norman survey was of consider-

Gregory, and St. Peter, containing respectively 1262, 1897, and 1926 inhabitants. The living of All Saints is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 11. 5½.; net income, £119; patron and improprator, S. Sperling, Esq. The living of St. Gregory's is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Peter's annexed; net income, £160; patron and improprator, Sir Lachlan Maclean. The churches are of considerable antiquity, and are spacious and handsome structures, mostly in the later English style, of which they present some fine specimens, though generally much defaced. In that of All Saints is a curious monument to the Eden family, whose pedigree is painted on the walls. St. Gregory's, which is the most ancient, was formerly collegiate, until Henry VIII. granted its site and other possessions, for the sum of £1280, to Sir T. Paston, Knt.; the font is very magnificent, and in a niche in the wall of the vestry-room, inclosed with an iron-grating, is a head supposed to be that of Symon de Theobald, or de Sudbury, Archbishop of Canterbury in the time of Richard II., and a native of this town, who was beheaded by the mob in Wat Tyler's rebellion. A free grammar school was instituted in 1491, under the will of William Wood, warden of Sudbury College, who endowed it with a farm worth about £100 per annum; and there is also a national school, with a small endowment. The hospital of St. Leonard here, for lepers, was founded by John Colneys, and endowed by Symon de Sudbury, with about five acres of land, a chapel, and a dwelling-house; it is now in the possession of the corporation of the poor, and is applied towards their maintenance. From a bequest by Thomas Carter, in 1706, fifty men receive coats, and fifty women gowns, on St. Thomas's-day; and there are several smaller charities for the benefit of the indigent. The union of Sudbury comprises 42 parishes or places, 24 of which are in the county of Suffolk, and 18 in that of Essex, and the population amounts to 30,048. The college of St. Gregory, for secular priests, established by Symon de Sudbury, was richly endowed, and was valued, at the period of the Dissolution, at £122. 18. 3. per annum; its only remains are the gateway, and portions of a wall now forming a part of the workhouse. A gateway which is part of a monastery of Augustine friars, standing in Friars'-street, yet exists; an hospital was founded here in the reign of King John, by Amicia, Countess of Clare, and afterwards given to the monks of Stoke; and there was also a Benedictine cell to the abbey of Westminster, instituted in the reign of Henry II. About half a mile from the town is a spring of pure water, which, from its supposed efficacy in curing many diseases, is called by the inhabitants "Holy water." Sudbury is the birth-place of Gainsborough, the celebrated painter; it gives the inferior title of Baron to the Duke of Grafton.

SUDELEY-MANOR (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WINCHCOMB, Lower division of the hundred of KIRTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Winchcomb; containing 84 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 5½.; net income, £45; patron, Lord Rivers. The church, which has remained in a dilapidated state ever since the injury it sustained in the great civil war, was the burial-place of Queen Catherine Parr, and of several of the family of Bridges. The ancient castle is said to have been built ex spoliis Gallorum, by Boteler, Lord Sudeley, a celebrated warrior in the reigns of Henry V. and VI., who sold it to Edward VI., for fear of confiscation. It was granted by that king to his uncle, Lord Seymour, who espoused Queen Catherine Parr; and Mary bestowed it upon Sir John Bridges, created by her Baron Chandos of Sudeley, whose grandson, the third Lord Chandos, entertained Queen Elizabeth here in 1592. George, the sixth lord, having embraced the cause of Charles I., reduced the castle to its present state of ruin: the remains are considerable and interesting. C. Hanbury Tracy, Esq., was created Baron Sudeley in 1838.

SUFFIELD (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (W. by N.) from North Walsingham; containing 249 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, with the rectory of Gunton and the vicarage of Hanworth united, valued in the king's books at £14, and in the gift of Lord Suffield, who derives the title of Baron from this place: the tithes have been commuted for £350, and the glebe comprises $10\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early and later English styles, with a square embattled tower, and contains some monuments to the Morden and Clough families, and the remains of a richly carved screen. Thomas Bulwer, in 1693, bequeathed property, now let for £12. 10. per annum, for distribution among the poor; and the Rev. Thomas Symonds, in 1682, left land producing £15 per annum, to be divided among six widows.

SUFFIELD, with EVERLEY, a township, in the parish of HACKNESS, union of SCARBOROUGH, liberty of WHITBY-STRAND, N. riding of YORK, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Scarborough; containing 225 inhabitants. The village is situated east of the Derwent, about a mile north-east from that of Everley.

SUFFOLK, a maritime county, bounded on the east by the North Sea, or German Ocean, on the north by the county of Norfolk, on the west by that of Cambridge, and on the south by that of Essex. It extends from $51^{\circ} 56'$ to $52^{\circ} 36'$ (N. Lat.), and from $23'$ to $1^{\circ} 44'$ (E. Lon.), and comprises an area of about 1512 square miles, or 967,680 statute acres. There are 64,041 inhabited houses, 2352 uninhabited, and 574 in progress of erection; and the population amounts to 315,073, of whom 154,095 are males, and 160,978 females. At the period of the Roman invasion, the county formed part of the territory inhabited by the Iceni, or Cenomanni, who, according to Whitaker, were descended from the Cenomanni of Gaul; under the Roman dominion it was included in the division called Flavia Casariensis. After the withdrawal of the Roman legions, Cerdic, one of the earliest Saxon invaders, and founder of the kingdom of Wessex, landed, in 495, at a place subsequently called Cerdic Sand, in the hundred of Mutford and Lothingland, forming the north-eastern extremity of the county, and, having gained some advantages over the opposing Britons, set sail for the western parts of the island. During the succeeding invasions of the Saxons, the territory now comprised in the counties of Suffolk, Cambridge, and Norfolk, was erected by Uffa, about the year 575, into the kingdom of East Anglia, in which the relative position of this district obtained for its inhabitants the name of Suthfolc, or southern people (in contradistinction to those of Norfolk) whence, by contraction, its modern name.

Under the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, Suffolk is partly in the diocese of Norwich, and partly in that of Ely, in the province of Canterbury; it is divided into the archdeaconries of Suffolk and Sudbury, and the number of parishes is 504. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Barbergh, Blackbourn, Blything, Bosmere and Claydon, Carlford, Colneis, Cosford, Hartismere, Hoxne, Lackford, Loes, Mutford and Lothingland, Plomesgate, Risbridge, Samford, Stow, Thedwastry, Thingoe, Thredling, Wangford, and Wilford. It contains the borough, market-town, and sea-port of Ipswich; the borough and market towns of Bury St. Edmund's and Eye; the market-towns and sea-ports of Lowestoft, Southwold, and Woodbridge; the sea-ports of Aldborough and Dunwich; and the market-towns of Beccles, Bungay, Clare, Debenham, Framlingham, Hadleigh, Saxmundham, Stow-Market, and Sudbury. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county was divided into the Eastern and Western divisions, each sending two members to parliament; and two representatives are returned for each of the boroughs, except Eye, which was deprived of one by the act just mentioned. Suffolk is included in the Norfolk circuit: the assizes are held alternately at Bury and Ipswich; and the general quarter-sessions at Beccles, Woodbridge, Ipswich, and Bury, each for its respective district. The county goals and houses of correction are at Bury and Ipswich; and there are houses of correction at Beccles and Woodbridge.

The SOILS are various, but the limits of each may be clearly traced. Strong clayey loams, on a substratum of clay marl, form the largest tract, which is generally called High Suffolk, and extends from the confines of Cambridgeshire and Essex, on the south-west, across the central parts of the county, to those of Norfolk, on the north-east: the bottoms of the vales, traversed by running streams, which are numerous, and the slopes descending to them, are of a soil superior in quality to the rest of the district, generally consisting of a rich friable loam. Rich loams, of various qualities, occupy that portion of the county included between the south-eastern part of the strong loams and the estuaries of the rivers Stour and Orwell, lying to the south of a line drawn from Ipswich to Hadleigh: some of these are of a sandy quality, others much stronger; from Stratford and Higham, on the borders of the Stour, eastward across the Orwell, to the banks of the river Deben, near its mouth, extends a tract of friable and putrid vegetable mould of extraordinary fertility, more especially at Walton, Trimley, and Felixstow. In the projecting north-eastern district, lying between the river Waveney and the ocean, is much land of the same rich quality; but as it is interspersed with many sandy tracts, and on the sea-coast is of a sandy character throughout, it may be considered to form part of the great sandy maritime district extending from the river Orwell, between the clayey loams and the sea, to the north-eastern extremity of the county. The lands in this district, which is called the Woodlands, are generally of excellent staple, and are among the best cultivated in England; although, in the country lying between the towns of Woodbridge, Orford, and Saxmundham, and north-eastward, as far as Leiston, there is a large extent of poor, and in some places even blowing, sands, which have caused this south-eastern part of the county to receive the name of “Sandlings,” or “Sandlands.” The substratum of the eastern district, though sometimes marl, is generally sand, chalk, or crag; which last is a singular mass, consisting of cockle and other shells, found in numerous places, from Dunwich, southward, to the Orwell, and even beyond that river. Another district of sand occupies the whole extent between the clayey soils and the fenny tract, which latter forms the north-western angle of the county, and may be separated from the sand by an irregular line drawn from near where the river Lark begins to form the western boundary of Suffolk, to the Little Ouse, a short distance below Brandon. These western sands, unlike much of the last-mentioned, are seldom of a rich loamy quality, but comprise numerous warrens and poor sheep-walks, and much of that now under tillage is apt to blow, that is, to be driven by the wind, and consequently ranks among the worst soils. The chief exceptions to the general inferiority of this district lie to the south-east of a line drawn from Barrow to Honington, and at Mildenhall; the substratum is throughout a perfect chalk, at various depths. Of the Fens, it is only necessary to observe, that the surface, to the depth of from one foot to six, consists of the ordinary peat of bogs, some of which is very solid and black; but in other places it is more loose, porous, and of a reddish colour: the substratum is generally a white clay, or marl.

By far the greater part of the county is under tillage; the crops commonly cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, buck-wheat, turnips, cabbages, carrots, potatoes, beet, tarcs, cole-seed, red and white clover, trefoil, sainfoin, hemp, and hops. The culture of carrots in the Sandlings is of very ancient practice, great quantities having been formerly sent from that district by sea to the London market; but the chief object for which they are now grown is as food for horses. In the fen district, cole-seed constitutes one of the principal crops; and the cultivation of sainfoin is particularly extensive in the chalky sub-soils. The grass lands were remarkable for their richness, but the best have been ploughed up, and the extent occupied by dairy-farms is not so great as formerly, though much butter is still sent to the London market. Large tracts of grass land are also mown for the supply of the towns with hay: the herbage which springs up after the gathering of the crop, is here called rowings. The woods are of very small extent, and are not generally of luxuriant growth; the strong loams formerly bore considerable quantities of fine oak, a great proportion of which has been cleared off, and various plantations made, but only with a view to ornament. The most important tracts of waste land are those occupying nearly all the country from Newmarket, on the borders of Cambridgeshire, to the confines of Norfolk, near the towns of Thetford and Brandon; and those lying between Woodbridge, Orford, and Saxmundham, in the eastern part of the county; besides which, numerous heaths of smaller extent are scattered in every quarter of it; the chief use of these wastes is as sheep-walks. The Manufactures and commerce are very inconsiderable, in comparison with those of many other counties. The chief manufacture is the combing and spinning of wool, in a great measure for the Norwich manufacturers, which is carried on, though not to any great extent, in most parts of the county, excepting the hemp district before mentioned, where the latter material was extensively spun and woven into linen, but this manufacture is almost extinct. At Sudbury are manufactories for silk and woollen goods; there is also a silk-factory at Mildenhall, a branch of an extensive concern at Norwich, and also at Glemsford. The imports are merely the ordinary supplies of foreign articles for the inhabitants: the chief exports are corn and malt. The principal fishery on the coast is that of herrings, which is the chief support of the town of Lowestoft, where about 40 boats of 40 tons' burthen each, are engaged in it; the season commences about the middle of September, and lasts until towards the end of November. The town also partakes in the mackerel-fishery, in which the same boats are employed, the season commencing about the end of May, and continuing until the end of June. In the Orford river is a considerable oyster-fishery.

This is a well-watered county: the principal rivers are the Stour, the Gipping or Orwell, the Deben, the Ore, the Waveney, the Little Ouse or Brandon river, and the Lark; besides which, the smaller streams are exceedingly numerous. The Stour first meets the tide at Manningtree, in Essex, and begins to expand into a broad estuary, which at high water has a beautiful appearance; but at low water the river shrinks into a narrow channel, bordered by extensive mud banks. Proceeding eastward, it is joined near Harwich by the Orwell, and their united waters having formed the port of Harwich, discharge themselves into the North Sea, between that town, in Essex, and Landguard fort at the south-eastern extremity of Suffolk: this river is navigable up to Sudbury. The Gipping is formed by the confluence of three rivulets at Stow-Market, from which place it was made navigable in 1793; below Ipswich it assumes the name of Orwell, expands into an estuary, and continues its course to its junction with the Stour opposite Harwich; it is navigable for ships of considerable burthen up to Ipswich, and the scenery on its banks is beautiful. The Deben rises near Debenham, and at Woodbridge expands into an estuary, and proceeds thence in a southerly direction to the North Sea: towards its mouth it takes the name of Woodbridge haven, joining the sea about ten miles below that town, to which it is navigable for considerable vessels. The Ore expands into an estuary as it approaches Aldborough, where, having arrived within a very short distance of the sea, it suddenly takes a southerly direction, and discharges its waters into the North Sea, below Orford; it is navigable to a short distance above Aldborough. The Waveney joins the Yare at the head of Bredon-water, an expansion formed by these united rivers, which, contracting again near Yarmouth, pursues a nearly southerly course to the sea, below that town: this river, the meadows on the banks of which are among the richest in England, is navigable for barges as high as Bungay bridge. The Little Ouse, or Brandon river, is navigable up to Thetford; the Lark, to within a mile of Bury St. Edmunds; and the Blythe, to Halesworth. The only artificial navigation is that in the channel of the Gipping, from Stow-Market to Ipswich, 16 miles and 40 rods long, and having 15 locks, each 60 feet in length and 14 in width; the canal was opened in the year 1793, and the expense of its formation was about £26,380.

Within the limits of the county were comprised the Roman stations Ad Ansam, at Stratford, on the border of Essex; Cambretonium, at Brettenham, or Icklingham; Garianonium, at Burgh Castle (though some fix it at Caistor, near Yarmouth); and Sitomagus, probably at Dunwich. Remains of Roman military works exist at Burgh Castle, Brettenham, Icklingham, Stow-Langtoft, and Stratford, on the banks of the Stour; and numerous domestic and sepulchral relics of that people have been dug up in different places, such as pavements, coins, medals, urns, rings, &c. The stupendous work of human labour called the Devil's Ditch, on Newmarket heath, is supposed to have served as the line of demarcation between the kingdoms of Mercia and East Anglia. Near Barnham, on the borders of the Little Ouse, is a range of eleven tumuli, on a spot thought to have been the scene of one of the conflicts between the Danes, under Inguar, and the forces of Edmund, King of East Anglia: others occur in different places, the most remarkable group being that called the Seven Hills, at Fornham St. Geneveve, near Bury. The number of Religious houses, of all denominations, was about 59, including four alien priories; and there are remains of the abbeys of Bury St. Edmund's, Leiston, and Sibtow; of the priories of Blythburgh, Butley, Clare, Herringfleet, Campsey-Ash, Dodnash, Gorleston, Kersey, Ixworth, Orford, Wangford, Ipswich, Mendham, and Sudbury; and of the nunneries of Bungay and Redlingfield. The remains of fortresses are chiefly those of the castles of Bungay, Clare, Framlingham, Haughley, Lidgate, Mettingham, Orford, and Wingfield. Ancient mansions are seen in different parts, of which the most remarkable is Hengrave Hall; and there are many elegant seats, among the most distinguished of which is Euston Park, the residence of the Duke of Grafton; Heveningham Hall, the seat of Lord Huntingfield; Flixton Hall, and Kentwell Hall. Suffolk gives the title of Earl to the family of Howard.

SUGLEY, a township, in the parish of NEWBURN, union, and W. division, of CASTLE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $3\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W.) from Newcastle; containing 212 inhabitants. This place comprises the eastern portion of the village of Lemington, where are the extensive Tyne iron-works, commenced in 1797, and now in full operation, and since the establishment of which the buildings and population have considerably increased.—See LEMINGTON.

SUGNALL MAGNA, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Eccleshall; containing 138 inhabitants.

SUGNALL PARVA, a township, in the parish of ECCLESHALL, union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. W.) from Eccleshall; containing 54 inhabitants.

SULBY, an extra-parochial district, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of ROTHWELL, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Harborough; containing 70 inhabitants, and comprising 1562 acres. An abbey of the Præmonstratensian order, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here about 1155, by Robert de Querceto, Bishop of Lincoln; and its possessions were so much increased by Sir Robert de Paveley, Knt., that, at the Dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £305. 8. 5.

SULGRAVE (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of CHIPPING-WARDEN, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by W.) from Brackley; containing 560 inhabitants. The parish is on the small river Tow, and consists of 1957 acres. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 17.; net income, £231; patron and incumbent, the Rev. W. Harding; impropiator, C. F. Annesley, Esq. There are some small endowments for education, and for the relief of the poor. Near the church, to the westward, is Castle Hill; and about a mile to the northward is an artificial mount called Burrough Hill, crowned with an ancient fortification, 40 feet square, commanding a most extensive prospect, nine counties being visible from its summit.

SULHAM (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, 6 miles (W. by N.) from Reading; containing 124 inhabitants. The parish consists of a narrow slip of land extending from the river Thames to the Kennet, and comprises 692a. 2r., of which 407 acres are arable, 120 meadow and pasture, and 140 wood: the Thames navigation for coal, and the Great Western railway, pass through it. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 4. 2., and in the gift of Frederick Wilder, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £204, and the glebe comprises $25\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church has been recently rebuilt.

SULHAMPSTEAD-ABBOTTS (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of READING, county of BERKS, 7 miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading; containing, with the tything of Graizley, 425 inhabitants, of whom 350 are in Sulhampstead township. The parish comprises 1723a. 3r. 26p., and is intersected by the Avon and Kennet navigation. The living is a rectory, to which, in 1782, that of Sulhampstead-Bannister was annexed, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 0½.; net income, £600; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of Queen's College, Oxford. A school is supported by endowment.

SULHAMPSTEAD-BANNISTER (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BRADFIELD, hundred of THEALE, county of BERKS, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Reading; containing 302 inhabitants, of whom 145 are in the lower, and 157 in the upper, end. The river Kennet runs through the parish. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Sulhampstead-Abbotts, and valued in the king's books at £6. 5.

SULLINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAKEHAM, hundred of EAST EASWRITH, rape of BRAMBER, W. division of SUSSEX, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. by N.) from Steyning; containing 242 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 1700 acres, is intersected in the southern portion by a ridge of chalk hills, forming part of the South Down; the soil is various, and there is a considerable tract of heathy common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 17. 6., and in the gift of the incumbent; the Rev. G. Palmer: the tithes have been commuted for £435, and the glebe comprises 28 acres. The church is chiefly in the early English style, and contains several ancient monuments, on one of which is the mutilated effigy of a knight. Some barrows on the warren were opened in 1809, when sepulchral urns, one of which was perfect, were found containing charcoal and ashes of burnt bones; and in draining land on the north of Southgate, in 1812, spear-heads, and two swords with short blades, supposed to be Roman, were discovered.

SUMMERCOTES, a hamlet, in the parish of ALFRETTON, union of BELPER, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY; containing 1744 inhabitants.

SUMMERFORD, a township, in the parish of ASTBURY, union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (N. W.) from Congleton; containing 99 inhabitants.

SUMMERHOUSE, a township, in the parish of GAINFORD, union of DARLINGTON, S. W. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $6\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Darlington, on the road to Staindrop; containing 165 inhabitants. This place is supposed to derive its name from having been anciently the summer residence of the lords of Raby, of whose mansion, surrounded by a moat, there are still some vestiges in the southern part of the village. The township comprises 779a. 3r. 8p., of which 509 acres are arable, 268 grass land, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ wood; the soil is generally fertile, and there are some good limestone quarries. The impropriate tithes, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge, have been commuted for £115. 15. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$., and the vicarial tithes for £51. 2. There is a national school.

SUMMER-TOWN, formerly a hamlet in the parish of ST. GILES, OXFORD, now a district parish (in the union of HEADINGTON), for which a church was erected in 1838.

SUNBURY (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of STAINES, hundred of SPELTHORNE, county of MIDDLESEX, 15 miles (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 1828 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 2580 acres, of which about 1600 are arable, 800 pasture and meadow, and 180 homesteads and gardens. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8.; net income, £336; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The impropriation belongs to Mrs. Fish, and Messrs. Edwards and Taylor.

SUNDERLAND, a township, in the parish of ISALL, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 6 miles (N. E.) from Cockermonth; containing 81 inhabitants.

SUNDERLAND (HOLY TRINITY), a sea-port, newly-franchised borough, and parish, and the head of a union, in the N. division of EASINGTON ward and of the county of DURHAM, 13 miles (N. E.) from Durham, and 269 (N. by W.) from London; containing 17,020 inhabitants. This place, which is situated on the south bank of the river Wear, was anciently included in the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, of which it continued to form a part till the year 1719, when it was separated, and erected into an independent parish. Soon after the Conquest, Malcolm, King of Scotland, in one of his predatory incursions, traversing this part of the coast, met with Edgar Atheling, heir to the English crown, with his sister Margaret, afterwards

Corporation Seal.

Queen of Scotland, and a numerous retinue of distressed Saxons, who, fleeing from the victorious Normans, were waiting in the harbour of Sunderland for a wind favourable for their escape into Scotland. About the close of the 12th century, the inhabitants of this place, of which the history up to that time is identified with that of Wearmouth, received from Bishop Pudsey a charter of free customs and privileges similar to those exercised by the inhabitants of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and in which deed appears the first authentic notice of Sunderland as a distinct maritime and commercial town and port. Its present name, which it acquired under this charter, is supposed to have been derived from its peninsular situation, being almost separated from the main land by the influx of the river Wear on the north, and Hendon Dene, a deep ravine, on the south, and formerly capable of floating vessels of considerable burthen. Under the privileges of its charter, the town gradually increased in extent and importance, and in the reign of Henry VIII. had become a place of considerable trade; and at the commencement of the 17th century, several Scottish families and many foreign merchants established themselves in the town, which by a charter of Bishop Morton had acquired a municipal corporation. During the war in the reign of Charles I., the inhabitants embraced the cause of the parliamentarians, by whom the town was garrisoned in 1642, in consequence of the seizure of Newcastle by the royalists, and the prohibition of supplies of coal from that place; and a parliamentary commissioner was sent to take up his residence here. Repeated skirmishes occurred in the vicinity between the contending parties, during 1644 and 1645, and the resident Scottish families suffered greatly from want of provisions in consequence of the wreck of some vessels laden with supplies from Scotland, and the capture of others by the royalists in the river Tyne, whither they had been driven by adverse winds.

The town, exclusively of Bishop-Wearmouth, consists of one principal street, called High-street, which is spacious and well built, extending for more than half a mile in length, and of several smaller streets in various directions; the main street is well paved and the foot-paths flagged, and the houses, with the exception of a few in the lower part, are generally of handsome appearance. Considerable improvements have been made under the provisions of an act of parliament obtained in 1809, and the streets are lighted with gas from works erected at an expense of £8000, by a company formed in 1823. The inhabitants are supplied with water from a copious well at the head of Bishop-Wearmouth, raised by steam, at the rate of 150 gallons per minute, into two ample reservoirs, from which it is conveyed by pipes to the houses in the town; these works were constructed by a proprietary of 25 shareholders, at an expense of £5000. A newsroom was opened, originally at the George inn, about 1800, and, on the subsequent erection of the Exchange, was removed into that building. Assemblies were formerly held in Church-street, but since the erection of the Athenæum in Fawcet-street, Bishop-Wearmouth, a handsome and commodious suite of rooms in that building have been appropriated to the purpose; and a neat theatre has been erected in Drury-lane. Barracks were built on the town moor in 1794, and in 1823 a portion of the edifice was taken down, and the remainder new fronted with brick; they contain accommodation for 800 men, with stabling for 10 horses, an hospital for 20 patients, and a good ground for parade.

The increase and prosperity of the town to an extent, and with a degree of rapidity, almost unprecedented, may be attributed to its advantageous situation on the coast, near the mouth of a navigable river, which has its source in the western part of the county, and flows through a rich mineral district abounding with coal, limestone, and freestone. The staple TRADE is the exportation of coal, which appears to have commenced in the reign of Henry VII.: the coal is sent chiefly to London and the western coast of England, but large quantities are also shipped to Holland, France, and other parts of the continent; the principal coal-staiths are those of the Earl of Durham, the Hetton Coal Company, and the Durham and Sunderland Railway Company, and the quantity shipped from the port in the year 1842 amounted to 1,205,332 tons. Next in importance to the coal trade is that in lime, with which the neighbourhood abounds, and of which, upon an average, 30,000 chaldrons are annually shipped for the ports of Yorkshire and the eastern coast of Scotland, employing numerous vessels, averaging from 30 to 130 tons' burthen. The remainder of the export trade consists mostly of the produce of the extensive manufactories in the town and neighbourhood, for which the abundant supply of coal, suitable for their use, though too small for being shipped, and which is sold at a very moderate price, affords ample encouragement. The chief imports are flour, wine, spirituous liquors, timber, tallow, iron, flax, and various articles of Baltic produce. The number of vessels registered as belonging to the port in 1842, was 876, of the aggregate burthen of 174,983 tons; the number of men and boys employed in navigating them was 7365, and the amount of duties paid at the custom-house during the same year was £119,681. The value of shipping insured by the mutual insurance companies in the town was £850,000, exclusively of vessels which were either uninsured, or insured at other places.

The estuary of the WEAR was formerly exposed to all winds from the south to the north-east, and the entrance of the river rendered dangerous by shifting sand-banks at its mouth; but certain dues, now amounting to about £16,000 per annum, have been applied by commissioners appointed under successive acts of parliament, to the cleansing and improvement of the harbour. The entrance is formed by two extensive piers, by which the depth has been so increased, that ships drawing from 15 to 20 feet water can at any time enter or leave the port in perfect safety. The south pier was begun in 1723, and has been successively extended into deep water till it has attained a length of 1950 feet; the eastern portion, for about 600 feet, is 40 feet in width, of solid ashlar masonry, forming a fine promenade, and a handsome parapet divides it from the backing of rubble, which is now being pitched with massive blocks of stone; the western portion having lately shown symptoms of decay, 850 feet are now being removed, and placed farther back, with a view of diminishing the swell of the sea, under the superintendence of Mr. Murray, engineer to the commissioners. The north pier, which was begun in 1787, has during the last 12 years, been gradually extended to 1770 feet in length, in an equally substantial manner, and on its eastern head has been placed an elegant octagonal light-house. This lighthouse was originally built in 1802, at a distance of 450 feet from its present site, to which it was removed in one entire mass, without the slightest appearance of a crack, in 1841, at the suggestion, and under the superintendence, of Mr. Murray; it is 78 feet in height, 15 feet in diameter at the base, and 9 feet at the cornice, and the entire weight is 333 tons. After the completion of this arduous undertaking, Mr. Murray received the thanks of the commissioners, and was presented with a piece of plate of the value of £100. The old custom-house, which was situated in Silver-street, has been abandoned, and a commodious edifice for the purpose erected on a more eligible site, fronting the river, at an expense of £5600, by a company of subscribers; the building was taken by government on a renewable lease of 21 years, and was opened in 1837.

Ship-building is carried on here to a greater extent than at any other port in the empire, and there are not less than 30 yards for building ships, and 5 for building boats, with 11 floating and 4 dry docks, and frequently from 100 to 200 vessels are on the stocks at one time. The salmon-fishery was formerly very extensive, and a few are still found occasionally at the mouth of the harbour, but that source of trade has been wholly abandoned, and the fish now taken are cod, ling, turbot, haddock, skate, herrings, crabs, and a very few lobsters. The manufactures carried on in the town and neighbourhood are numerous and important. There are four large iron-foundries, one of which affords employment to 300 persons; several brass-foundries; some sail-cloth manufactories; a factory for making blocks, which is worked by steam, and has been lately established; roperies, also worked by steam, in which patent machinery has been introduced; manufactories for chain-cables and anchors, and alkali and copperas works. Large potteries are carried on, in which earthenware of every description is made; and there are considerable manufactories of glass bottles, and of flint, crown, and window glass, of which the most extensive is that of Mr. James Hartley, for clear sheet glass, established in 1837, and which pays excise duties amounting to £50,000 per annum, being more than one-half of the amount of duty paid on that article by the whole country. Two paper-mills are also at work, and several flour and saw mills, impelled by steam.

The exchange, situated in High-street, was erected in 1814, at an expense of £8000, by a proprietary of 50 shareholders; it is a handsome structure, comprising on the basement story kitchens and vaults, and on the ground floor an area surrounded with a piazza for the accommodation of the merchants, behind which are apartments for the use of the magistrates, for public sales, and offices for brokers. The principal story contains a newsroom, 68 feet long, and 28 wide, in which is a full-length portrait of Sir Henry Vane Tempest, presented by the Marquess of Londonderry; and there are various rooms for the different boards of commissioners. The market, formerly on Friday, is now on Saturday, and is abundantly supplied with provisions of all kinds; and fairs, chiefly for pedlery, wares, and toys, are held on May 13th and 14th, and October 12th and 13th, and a statute-fair twice in the year. The market-place, for which the site was purchased in 1830, for £4200, is a commodious area with extensive ranges of shambles, and stalls for butchers' meat, poultry, butter, eggs, and other articles; the entrance from High-street is under a handsome arcade, over which is a spacious room for auctions, exhibitions, and other uses. Facility of communication is afforded by good roads, and by the Durham and Sunderland railway, which commences at Sunderland moor, near the town, and is $13\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length; it is worked throughout the whole line by fixed engines and ropes, and passes in its course along three ascending, and five descending planes.

The GOVERNMENT, under the charter of Bishop Pudsey and his successors, was vested in a bailiff appointed by the bishops, till the year 1634, when Bishop Morton granted the inhabitants a charter, under which the town, by the designation of the "New Borough of Sunderland," was placed under the controul of a mayor, twelve aldermen, and a commonalty, which form of government was not, however, practically continued for any length of time. By the charter of the 5th and 6th of William IV., c. 76, the corporation at present consists of a mayor, fourteen aldermen, and forty-two councillors; and the total number of magistrates for the borough, which is divided into seven wards, is eighteen, who hold petty-sessions daily at the new police court in Bishop-Wearmouth, where also the magistrates for the division hold petty-sessions every Saturday. The various properties of the borough are held on two leases under the bishop, of which the one includes the borough-courts, fairs, market-tolls, anchorage and beaconage, and the office of water-bailiff; and the other, the ferry-boats, metage, and tolls of fruit, herbs, and roots. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., the place was constituted a parliamentary borough, with the privilege of returning two members to parliament and the right of election was vested in the resident £10 householders of a populous district comprising an area of 4761 acres, of which the mayor is the returning officer. The municipal borough includes the parish of Sunderland, the townships of Monk-Wearmouth, Monk-Wearmouth-Shore, Bishop-Wearmouth-Pans, and so much of the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth as is included within a circle of one mile radius from the centre of the bridge; and the parliamentary borough contains, in addition to these, the parish of Southwick, and the remainder of the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth.

The LIVING is a rectory, in the patronage of the Bishop of Durham, with a net income of £241. The church, which is situated in the upper part of the town, was erected in 1719, and repaired in 1803, and is a neat structure of brick, with a square tower; the interior is well arranged, and the altar is placed in a recess between two fluted pilasters of the Corinthian order. The chapel of St. John, which occupies a site at the head of Barrack-street, given by Marshall Robinson, Esq., was built in 1769, chiefly at the expense of John Thornhill, Esq.; it is a spacious edifice of brick, with a square tower, and contains sittings appropriated to the use of the soldiers in the barracks. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Bishop; net income, £288. A school for girls was endowed in 1764, by Mrs. Elizabeth Donnison, who bequeathed £1500 for its support, now vested in the three per cents., and producing £120 per annum; and a school for children of members of the Society of Friends was established in 1768, by a bequest of Edward Walton, yielding an income of £36, of which £20 are paid to a schoolmaster at Bishop-Wearmouth. A national school, in Vine-street, instituted in 1822, is supported by the proceeds of £1000 three and a-half per cents., given in 1823 by Mrs. Elizabeth Woodcock, by £20 from Bishop Crewe's trustees, and contributions from the Marchioness of Londonderry and the rector; the building, which is spacious and of handsome appearance, was erected at a cost of £1750. Some almshouses in Assembly Garth, for 38 inmates, superannuated seamen and their widows, belonging to the "Muster Roll," were purchased in 1750, by the trustees of the "Seamen's fund," appointed under an act of the 20th of George II., which compels all masters of vessels to levy sixpence per month from each sailor towards the support of this provident institution, from which more than 700 individuals derive benefit; and there is a new building, called Trafalgar-square, at the east end of the churchyard, appropriated to the same benevolent purpose. In Church-street are houses for eight widows; and there are numerous societies for the relief of the sick and indigent. The poor law union of Sunderland comprises eleven townships and chapelries in the parishes of Bishop and Monk Wearmouth, containing a population of 56,226. The town confers the inferior title of Earl upon the Duke of Marlborough.—See WEARMOUTH, BISHOP, and MONK.

SUNDERLAND-BRIDGE, a township, in the chapelry of CROXDALE, parish of ST. OSWALD, union of DURHAM, S. E. division of DARLINGTON ward, S. division of the county of DURHAM, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Durham; containing, with Croxdale, 262 inhabitants. It is a scattered village, stretching along the south of the deep ravine that separates it from Croxdale, and is chiefly remarkable for a bridge over the Wear on the great north road, which consists of four handsome arches; and for another bridge, of one arch, half a mile nearer Durham, over the Browney, a stream that is tributary to the Wear. The antiquity of the earliest bridge on this spot is unknown, but it probably existed before 1346, when one is noticed in the account of a skirmish here between Douglas and the English; and both bridges are noticed by Leland. The common lands were divided in 1669. The tithes have been commuted for £90. 15., payable to the perpetual curate of Croxdale. On the manor of Butterby are saline and sulphureous springs.

SUNDERLAND, NORTH, a township, in the parish, and N. division of the ward, of BAMBROUGH, union of BELFORD, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Belford; containing 1103 inhabitants. The township comprises about 1040 acres of rich land, mostly arable, and the rest pasture; it has the North Sea on the east, and possesses a small port, subject to Berwick, whence corn, fish, and lime are exported, considerable quantities of the last article being burned at kilns in the neighbourhood: coal is also wrought. There is a large establishment for curing herrings. A church in the purest Norman style, with a parsonage-house, was built in 1833, at a cost of £3500, and endowed by the trustees of Lord Crewe's charities; net income of the incumbent, £220. There is a place of worship for Presbyterians, and a national school.

SUNDERLAND-WICK, a township, in the parish of HUTTON-CRANSWICK, union of DRIFFIELD, Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Great Driffield; containing 41 inhabitants. This was anciently a considerable village: the township comprises about 810 acres of fertile land, situated on the road from Great Driffeld to Watton. The Hall is a neat mansion, in pleasant grounds.

SUNDON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of LUTON, hundred of FLITT, county of BEDFORD, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. W. by N.) from Luton; containing 449 inhabitants. It comprises 2071*a.* 15*p.*, of which about 250 acres are meadow and pasture, 66 woodland, and the remainder arable; the soil is clay, alternated with chalk and gravel. A market and a fair were formerly held, by charter granted in 1316. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 6. 8.; net income, £83; patron and impropriator, Sir G. P. Turner, Bart.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1769. The church is partly in the decorated style.

SUNDRIDGE, a parish, in the union of SEVEN-OAKS, hundred of CODSHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 4 miles (W. by N.) from Seven-Oaks; containing 1254 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4030 acres, including 46 common or waste, and the river Darent flows through the lands, parts of which lie below the great ridge of sand hills in the Weald. The manufacture of paper is carried on. The living is a rectory, in the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury, valued in the king's books at £22. 13. 4.: the tithes have been commuted for £815, and the glebe comprises 19 acres, with a house. The church has some fine windows in the later English style. There are two schools, one endowed with £20 per annum, and the other built by subscription in 1825; and a national school is supported. Bishop Porteus resided in the parish, to which he bequeathed £1600 for charitable uses, and in the churchyard of which he was buried. Sundridge gives the title of Baron to the Duke of Argyll.

SUNK-ISLAND, an extra-parochial district, in the union of PATRINGTON, S. division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK, 4 miles (S. W.) from Patrington, and 20 (S. E. by E.) from Hull; containing 264 inhabitants. This island, which is situated near the mouth of the Humber, has been gradually recovered from that river; it comprised a century since only 800 acres, but now contains by measurement 6000, of which 4000 are arable, and 2000 meadow and pasture, all in a high state of cultivation. It was originally two miles from the opposite shore, and vessels passed through the channel, which is now so narrow as to be crossed by a bridge, to the main land: at the western extremity of the isle is a small creek for vessels and sloops. The surface is level, and the soil produces excellent wheat and beans. There is a chapel, of which the living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Crown, with a net income of £250. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SUNNINGHILL (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of WINDSOR, hundred of COOKHAM, county of BERKS, 8 miles (W. by N.) from Chertsey; containing 2062 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3213*a.* 3*r.* 16*p.*, of which 562 acres are arable, 875 meadow and pasture, 907 woodland, 595 heath, 206 homesteads, and 66 road; the soil is chiefly sand, with some portions of peat mould; the surface is greatly undulated, and the scenery pleasingly varied. Two chalybeate springs in the gardens of an inn called Sunning Wells, were formerly in great repute, and adjoining them is a room which was provided for the accommodation of visitors. The noted race-course of Ascot Heath is situated in the vicinity. The living is a vicarage; net income, £328; patrons and impropriators, the Master and Fellows of St. John's College, Cambridge. The church was lately rebuilt, at an expense of £3000: in the churchyard is a yew-tree, supposed to have been planted before the Conquest. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school is supported partly by an endowment amounting to £43 per annum, of which £40 were given by Augustus Schutz, Esq. At a place called Bromehall was formerly a small convent of Benedictine nuns, founded before the reign of John, but which was deserted by the sisters in 1522.

SUNNINGWELL (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Abingdon; containing, with the hamlet of Bayworth, and part of the chapelry of Kennington, 332 inhabitants, of whom 191 are in Sunningwell township. The parish comprises 1313*a.* 5*p.* The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 14. 7., and in the gift of Sir G. Bowyer, Bart.: the tithes have been commuted for £308, and the glebe contains $19\frac{1}{2}$ acres. The church is an ancient structure, of singular form. There is a chapel of ease at Kennington.

SUNNYSIDE, a hamlet, in the parish of WHICKHAM, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 5 miles (S. W.) from Gateshead; containing about 30 inhabitants. It is situated east of the river Derwent, and on the road from Gateshead to Medomsley. Middleton Grainge, Esq., has a neat mansion here, surrounded by about 100 acres of tolerably fair land, producing good crops.

SURFLEET (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union of SPALDING, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N.) from Spalding; containing 951 inhabitants. The parish comprises 3730*a.* 3*r.* 4*p.*, of which the surface is generally level, and the lands are intersected by a canal, conveying the waters of Pinchbeck to the Welland river, and by the Grand Sluice, which conducts the waters of the fen to Boston. The living is a perpetual curacy, valued in the king's books at £11; net income, £65; patrons and impropriators, J. and T. Pickworth, Esqrs.: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777. The church is partly in the later English style, and partly of earlier date, with a tower and spire. There are two endowed schools; and land producing £82 per annum from various bequests and 14 cottages, with £10. 13. for providing blankets and clothing, have been appropriated to the use of the poor. The parish contains one of the largest heronries in England.

SURLINGHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HENSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from NORWICH; containing 446 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north and east by the navigable river Yare, over which is a ferry, and comprises about 1750 acres, including 100 covered by a fine sheet of water. The living is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of St. Saviour's annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; net income, £40; patrons, the Bishop of Norwich and the Rev. W. Collet, the latter of whom is impropriator and incumbent: the tithes have been commuted for £410, and the glebe comprises 34 acres. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, with a circular tower, and was thoroughly repaired in 1840. A national school is partly supported by an appropriation of £10 from the rents of an estate of 33 acres, left for the repair of the church and other uses; and at the inclosure, 23 acres, producing £16. 10. per annum, were allotted to the poor for fuel. There are some remains of the church of St. Saviour, forming a picturesque ruin.

SURRENDRAL, a tything, in the parish of HULLAVINGTON, union of MALMESBURY, hundred of CHIPPENHAM, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Malmesbury; containing 41 inhabitants.

SURREY, an inland county, bounded on the north by the river Thames, which separates it from Middlesex and the south-eastern extremity of Bucks; on the north-west, by Berkshire; on the west, by Hants; on the south by Sussex; and on the east, by Kent. It extends from $51^{\circ} 5'$ to $51^{\circ} 31'$ (N. Lat.), and from $3'$ (E. Lon.) to $51'$ (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of 758 square miles, or about 485,120 acres. It contains 95,372 houses inhabited, 3982 uninhabited, and 1203 in course of erection; and the population amounts to 582,678, of whom 278,203 are males, and 304,475 females. The most ancient British inhabitants of the district of whom we have authentic information, were the Segontiaci, or, as they are called by Ptolemy, the Regni, a people who had been expelled from Hampshire by the invading Belgæ. Cæsar, in his exploratory invasion of Britain, crossed the north-eastern part of Surrey, from the county of Kent to the Thames, which he is supposed to have passed at a place now called Cowey Stakes, at Walton, into the territory of Cassivelaunus, though the Britons endeavoured to prevent his passage by driving stakes into the bed of the river. Under the Roman dominion, Surrey was included in the division Britannia Prima. On the complete establishment of the Saxon kingdom of Wessex, it appears to have included the greater part of this county. In the year 568, Ethelbert, in defence of his own kingdom, having invaded the territories of Ceawlin, king of Wessex, a great battle was fought between them at Wimbledon, in the county, in which the former was defeated with considerable loss: this was the first battle between the Saxon kings. The county suffered severely from the ravages of the Danes, who entered it in 852, after sacking London, but were defeated with great slaughter at Ockley, near its southern border, by Ethelwulf and his son Ethelbald.

Surrey is included in the diocese of Winchester, and province of Canterbury, excepting the exempt deanery of Croydon, which contains nine parishes, and is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop. Under the new ecclesiastical arrangements provided by the act of the 6th and 7th of William IV., cap. 77, the parish of Croydon will remain in the diocese of Canterbury, to which also the parish of Addington, and the district of Lambeth Palace, will be annexed; and the borough of Southwark, and the parishes of Battersea, Bermondsey, Camberwell, Christchurch, Clapham, Lambeth, Rotherhithe, Streatham, Tooting-Graveney, Wandsworth, Merton, Kew, Richmond, St. Mary Newington, Barnes, Putney, Mortlake, and Wimbledon, will be assigned to the diocese of London. The county forms an archdeaconry, in which are the deaneries of Ewell, Southwark, and Stoke; and the total number of parishes is 141. For purposes of civil government it is divided into the hundreds of Blackheath, Brixton, Copthorne and Effingham, Elmbridge, Farnham, Godalming, Godley, Kingston, Reigate, Tandridge, Wallington, Woking, and Wotton, all having first and second divisions, except Brixton, which is divided into east and west, and Farnham, which has no division. It contains the borough and market towns of Southwark, Guildford, and Reigate; the newly-enfranchised borough of Lambeth, with the populous suburban parishes of Rotherhithe, Bermondsey, Newington, Camberwell, Clapham, and Battersea; the market-towns of Chertsey, Croydon, Dorking, Farnham, Godalming, Haslemere, and Kingston; and the large and elegant town of Richmond. By the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county was divided into the Eastern and Western divisions, each to send two members to parliament; and two representatives are returned for each of the boroughs, except Reigate, which sends only one. Surrey is included in the home circuit: the lent assizes are held at Kingston, and the summer at Guildford and Croydon alternately; the winter assizes have been discontinued since the establishment of the Central Criminal Court at the Old Bailey. The county gaol is in Horsemonger-lane, in the parish of Newington. The winter quarter-sessions take place at the new sessions-house, Newington; the spring, at Reigate; the summer, at Guildford; and the autumn, at Kingston.

The form of the county is nearly oblong, except that the northern border is rendered extremely irregular by the devious course of the Thames. The scenery, celebrated for its beauty, possesses also great variety, presenting in some parts wild and naked heaths, which form a powerful contrast to the adjoining highly cultivated and ornamented districts. The SURFACE, for the most part, is gently undulated, excepting the Weald, a district about 30 miles in length, and varying from three to five in breadth, which extends along the whole southern border, and forms, with the Wealds of Kent and Sussex, an immense plain, the flat surface of which is of very inferior elevation; some of the hills, however, rise to a considerable height, and command rich views. The middle of the county is crossed from east to west by the Downs, which rise with a gentle acclivity from the north, but on the south are broken into precipitous cliffs of great height and romantic irregularity. Southward of the Downs are the hills that overhang the Weald, in the vicinities of Oxted, Godstone, Reigate, and Dorking. Approaching the western side of the county, this range becomes of greater extent, and near Wonersh, Godalming, and Peper-Harrow, is covered with rich woods, and intersected by pleasing valleys, watered by streams tributary to the Wey; the whole forming one of the most picturesque portions of the county. The largest tracts of the very extensive heaths lie in the western part. From Egham, on the bank of the Thames, south-south-westward as far as the village of Ash, the district consists, with little exception, of heath and moor; as likewise does that stretching in a transverse direction from Bagshot, on the north-western confines, by Chobham and Byfleet, to Cobham, Ripley, and Oatlands. The whole south-western angle, also, is of the same barren character, from Haslemere to Farnham in one direction, and from Elstead to Frensham in the other.

The SOILS, which are extremely various, are by no means so clearly discriminated as in many other counties, the different species lying in small patches much intermixed; they may, however, be reduced under the four general heads of clay, loam, chalk, and heath. The proportion of arable land greatly exceeds that of meadow and pasture: the corn and pulse crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans, and peas, of which the first is raised in large quantities. The cultivation of turnips and cabbages is carried on to a great extent, partly for the supply of the metropolitan markets, and partly for the consumption of cattle; and great quantities of carrots are grown in the northern part of the county, to the west of the river Mole, and parsnips on the rich deep lands in the district lying between Wandsworth and Kingston, for the London markets. Red clover has for a considerable period been in general cultivation; trefoil, white clover, and rye-grass are occasionally sown; and large tracts of chalky soil are occupied by sainfoin, most of which is made into hay. The Farnham hops are raised on the border of Hampshire, and have long been celebrated for their excellent quality, always bringing a higher price than any others in the kingdom; the number of acres occupied in the county as hop-plantations, is 1170. Woad flourishes on the chalk hills about Banstead Downs, where it is generally sown with barley. By far the most extensive and valuable tracts of meadow are situated along the banks of the Thames, in the north-western part of the county, and on the banks of the Wey, near Godalming; there is also a small extent of meadow in its north-eastern angle, near the metropolis. Of dairy pastures there are scarcely any: the greatest extent lying together is on the estate of the Duke of Norfolk, in the parishes of Newdigate and Charlwood, on the southern border. The quantity of garden-ground employed in raising vegetables for the London market is very considerable, and it is considered that a greater extent of land is employed in the cultivation of medicinal plants in this county, than in any other in England; those grown in the largest quantity are peppermint, lavender, wormwood, chamomile, aniseed, liquorice, and poppies.

The part most remarkable for its woods is the Weald, on the southern side of the county, which, there is every reason to believe, was formerly wholly covered with wood, much whereof was cleared away at no very remote period. The coppices consist chiefly of oak, birch, ash, chesnut, sallow, hazel, and alder, which are formed into hoops, poles for the hop-plantations, hurdles, and fagots; and great quantities are also made into charcoal, for gunpowder and other purposes. The woodlands in the other parts of the county, particularly on the chalk hills, have a greater proportion of coppice, and fewer timber trees, than those in the Weald. The box in the county, and chiefly on Box hill, near Dorking, attains a considerable size; and its wood is bought principally by the mathematical instrument makers, and by the turners in London and Tonbridge. Surrey is noted for the great number of yew trees that are scattered in a wild state over its chalk hills, and for the size which some of those that have been artificially planted have attained. Besides forming a portion of the underwoods, the birch flourishes on the heaths, and great quantities of brooms are made of its small branches, and sold chiefly at Southwark. Extensive plantations of fir and larch have been made on the heathy lands in the western part of the county. In the western and northern parts the osier and willow are much cultivated, particularly about Byfleet, Chertsey, &c.; and the common furze is also grown in different places for fuel.

It appears surprising, that a county so near the metropolis should contain so large a quantity of waste land. About the commencement of the present century it was computed that one-sixth lay in a wild and uncultivated state; and though this extent has been greatly lessened by numerous inclosures, there yet remains in heaths about 48,000 acres, and in commons about 17,000. A sandstone, commonly called rag-stone, containing oxyde of iron, abounds along the line of junction of the Weald with the sand hills, which skirt that tract on the north. At Purbright, and in many parts of the surrounding country, are found loose blocks of stone bearing a strong resemblance, both in quality and appearance, to those termed the Grey Wethers, on the downs of Berkshire and Wiltshire. In the neighbourhoods of Godstone, Gatton, Merstham, Reigate, and Bletchingley, are extensive quarries of a peculiar kind of stone, in great demand for fire-places; and on the white hills near Bletchingley this stone is softer than elsewhere, and is chiefly dug for glass manufacturers, who, by means of it, have been enabled to produce plate-glass of much larger dimensions than they formerly could. Limestone of a blueish-grey colour, containing a very small portion of flint, is extensively quarried near Dorking, and affords lime of great purity and strength; limestone is also dug and burned at Guildford, Sutton, and Carshalton; and there are extensive chalk pits. The sand about Tandridge, Reigate, and Dorking, is in great request for hour-glasses, writing, and a variety of other purposes, and that about Reigate, more especially, is considered unequalled in the kingdom for purity and colour. Fullers'-earth is found in very extensive beds about Nutfield, Reigate, and Bletchingley, to the south of the Downs, and is of two kinds, blue and yellow, of which the latter and most valuable is chiefly employed in fulling the finer cloths of Wilts and Gloucestershire, and the former is sent into Yorkshire, for coarser manufactures. Brick-earth, also, is found in most parts.

Though Surrey cannot be regarded as a manufacturing county, yet its vicinity to the metropolis, and the convenience of its streams for the working of mills, have caused several Manufactures of importance to be established in it. On the Wandle is situated a great number of flour, paper, snuff, and oil mills, and mills for preparing leather and parchment, and for grinding log-wood; and upon its banks also, chiefly in the parishes of Croydon and Mitcham, are large calico, bleaching, and printing works: this river, which is usually not more than three feet deep and eight broad, is remarkable for turning ninety mills in a course of only ten miles. On the Mole are several flour-mills, some iron-mills at Cobham, and flatting-mills at Ember. There are extensive mills for powder near Malden, to the north of Ewell; and several for paper on the different tributary branches of the Wey. At Godalming are considerable factories for the weaving of all kinds of stockings and the making of patent fleecy hosiery; and also establishments for the combing of wool, and the manufacture of worsteds, blankets, tilts, and collar-cloths. At Stoke, near Guildford, is a sawing-mill for staves, ship-pins, &c.; and at Mortlake a manufacture of delft and stone ware. In the neighbourhood of London, particularly at Battersea and Lambeth, are distilleries on a very extensive scale; and at the latter place, factories for patent-shot and artificial stone. The manufactures carried on in Southwark, and its immediate vicinity, are of different kinds, but chiefly such as are connected with the varied trade of the port of London; and this north-eastern extremity of the county has a very large share in the vast commerce of the port of London, and, besides its numerous wharfs and quays on the banks of the Thames, possesses various large commercial docks, among which may be noticed, more especially, the Grand Surrey docks (Outer and Inner), connecting the Grand Surrey canal with the river.

The principal Rivers are the Thames, the Wey, and the Mole. The Thames, forming the entire northern boundary of the county, first touches it at its north-western extremity, above Egham, whence it takes its course by Chertsey, Richmond, Kew, Mortlake, Barnes, Putney, Wandsworth, and Battersea, and pours its majestic stream through the spacious arches of the magnificent bridges which connect the cities of London and Westminster with the borough of Southwark and the southern suburbs of the metropolis: between Rotherhithe and Deptford it quits Surrey. The Wey, which enters Surrey on its south-western border, near Frensham, becomes navigable at Godalming, and falls into the Thames at Harn Haw, near Weybridge. The Mole is famed for, and is supposed to derive its name from, the circumstance of a part of its waters pursuing a subterraneous passage; which is occasioned by the porous and cavernous nature of the soil over which the river runs during several miles of its course below Dorking. When its waters are at their ordinary height, no particular irregularity in its stream is here observable, but in seasons of drought its current is wholly carried through the swallows, as the subterraneous passages are called, and its ordinary channel, similar to that of any other river of the same size, is left dry, except here and there a stagnant pool. By the bridge at Thorncroft it rises again, and thenceforward the current is uninterrupted.

Under the head of CANALS it may be proper to observe, that the navigation of the Wey is artificial, and has locks upon it, which are supposed to have been the first constructed in the kingdom: the bill for the formation of the navigation up to Guildford was passed in 1651, but the work was not carried into execution until towards the close of the century, and it was extended to Godalming in 1760. The Basingstoke canal, completed in 1796, under an act passed in 1778, enters Surrey from Hampshire near Dradbrook, crossing the river Loddon, whence it derives its chief supply of water; from Dradbrook to its junction with the navigable channel of the Wey, is a distance of about fifteen miles, and from Hook Common is a branch to Turgis-Green, six miles long. The Grand Surrey canal, the act for constructing which was obtained in 1801, commencing a little to the west of the road from London to Camberwell, is carried eastward across the Kent road, and then northward to the Grand Surrey docks, through which it communicates with the Thames. The Surrey and Sussex canal forms a junction between the navigable channel of the Arun, in Sussex, and that of the Wey, a little above Guildford. The Croydon canal, the act for making which was obtained in 1801, was sold to the London and Croydon Railway Company, who have formed their line of railway along the greater portion of its bed. The Croydon Iron railway, connecting Croydon with the river Thames at Wandsworth, and for which an act was obtained in 1801, is nine miles and a half in length, and worked throughout by horses; it has a branch of a mile and a half to Carshalton, and was completed at an expense of £60,000. The London and Croydon railway branches off from the London and Greenwich line, and proceeds to Croydon, where it is joined by the Brighton railway; the line, eight miles and three-quarters in length, and worked by locomotive engines, was completed at an expense of £185,000, and opened to the public in June, 1839. The London and Brighton railway, diverging from the terminus of the Croydon line, takes a course to Reigate, where it is joined by the line of the South-Eastern, or Dovor, railway, and afterwards quits the county for Sussex. The London and South-Western railway has its principal station at Nine-Elms, near Vauxhall Bridge, and proceeds through the north-western portion of the county into Hampshire, and thence to Southampton; the whole line is seventy-six miles and three-quarters in length, and is worked throughout by locomotive engines; it was completed at an expense of £1,330,000, and partly opened to the public in 1838, and wholly in May, 1840. The South-Eastern railway branches from the Brighton railway at Red-Hill, near Reigate, and proceeds in an easterly direction to Crowhurst, where it quits the county for Kent.

Surrey contained the ROMAN station of Noviomagus, situated at Woodcote, near Croydon, besides two others, supposed to have been respectively at Kingston and Walton-on-the-Hill; and it was traversed by the roads leading from the capital to the southern and eastern coasts. These roads diverged from St. George's Fields, near Southwark, and the principal were, the Ermin-street, that ran nearly parallel to, and at a very short distance to the eastward of, the present road through Clapham, Tooting, Merton, Ewell, and Epsom to Ashstead, thence proceeding, nearly in a southerly direction, to Dorking, where it took a westerly course, about a mile southward of Guildford, to Farnham, beyond which town it soon entered Hampshire; the Stane-street, which, branching from the Ermin-street at Dorking, proceeded southward, through the parish of Ockley, into Sussex; and another Stane-street, which from the metropolis passed through Streatham, Croydon, Coulsdon, Catterham, and Godstone, also into Sussex. The Watling-street, from Dovor, crossed its north-eastern extremity to London. Remains of ancient encampments, supposed to be Roman, may be seen at Bottle Hill, in the parish of Warlingham; on Castle Hill, in that of Hascomb; near Chelsham; on Holmbury Hill, in the parish of Ockley; at Ladlands and Oatlands; and on St. George's Hill, near Walton-on-Thames. Foundations of Roman edifices have been discovered at Walton-on-the-Hill, and on Blackheath, in the parish of Albury, both surrounded by intrenchments. Other remains of buildings, thought to be of the like origin, have been traced in the vicinities of Wallington, Carshalton, and Beddington; near Kingston, Roman sepulchral urns, coins, earthenware, and foundations of buildings, have been found; and many Roman coins and pavements also in St. George's Fields, Southwark. Different ancient encampments, the date of the formation of which is uncertain, exist in various places, besides those above-mentioned: that at the south-western angle of Wimbledon Common is supposed by Camden to mark the site of the battle fought in 568; and those of Hanstie Bury, on a projection of Leith Hill, and War Coppice Hill, in the parish of Caterham, are attributed to the Danes.

The number of Religious houses of all denominations, prior to the general dissolution, was about twenty-eight; and remains yet exist of the abbeys of Chertsey and Waverley, and of the priories of Merton, Newark or Newstead, and Southwark. There are extensive remains of the Castles of Farnham and Guildford; the most remarkable ancient residence is Lambeth Palace; and there are also remains of the old mansion of the Archbishops of Canterbury at Croydon. Few counties in England can vie with Surrey in the number and elegance of its Seats of nobility and gentry, and certainly none not exceeding it in size; which circumstance is owing chiefly to its vicinity to the metropolis, and the superiority of its scenery. The mineral Springs are numerous, and were formerly in high repute and much frequented, particularly those of Epsom; and on the northern side of the chalk hills, and in the valleys by which they are traversed, in the eastern parts of the county, copious streams of water, in the shape of remarkably powerful springs, provincially called bourns, are periodically discharged. Surrey gives the inferior title of Earl to the family of Howard, Dukes of Norfolk.

SUSSEX, a maritime county, bounded on the west by Hampshire, on the north by Surrey, on the north-east and east by Kent, and on the south by the English Channel; and which extends from 50° 44' to 51° 9' (N. Lat.), and from 50' (E. Lon.) to 57' (W. Lon.), and comprises an area of upwards of 1463 square miles, or about 936,320 acres. Within its limits are 54,069 inhabited houses, 3650 uninhabited, and 251 in progress of erection; and the population amounts to 299,753, of whom 147,604 are males, and 152,149 females. At the period of the invasion of Britain by the Romans, Sussex formed part of the territory of the Regni. The reduction of this part of the island was effected by Flavius Vespasian, who was commissioned by the Emperor Claudius, about the year 47, to establish the Roman dominion in the maritime provinces, which he accomplished without much difficulty, and fixed his headquarters near the site of the present city of Chichester: this territory was included in the division called Britannia Prima. No particular mention of it occurs in history until after the departure of the Romans from Britain, when, in 477, a Saxon chieftain, named Ælla, landed, with his three sons and a considerable number of followers, at West Wittering, a village about eight miles south-west of Chichester: they soon made themselves masters of the adjacent coasts, but were too weak to penetrate into the country, which was vigorously defended by its inhabitants. Hostilities appear to have been carried on for several years between Ælla and the Britons, the former occasionally receiving reinforcements; and, in 485, a sanguinary but indecisive battle was fought near Mecreadesbourne, in the vicinity of Pevensey. Ælla's forces having, however, been recruited by fresh arrivals of his countrymen, he undertook, in 490, the siege of Anderida, the capital of the Regni (the precise situation of which has not been ascertained), and at last succeeded in taking it by assault; as a punishment for the obstinacy of its defenders, he ordered them all to be put to the sword. From this period may be dated the foundation of the kingdom of the South Saxons, called in Saxon Suth Seaxe, of which Sussex is a contraction.

Sussex is co-extensive with the diocese of Chichester, in the province of Canterbury, and is divided into the two archdeaconries of Chichester and Lewes, the former containing the deaneries of Arundel, Boxgrove, Chichester, Midhurst, Storrington, and locally that of Pagham; and the latter those of Dallington, Hastings, Lewes, Pevensey, and locally that of South Malling. The parishes comprised in the exempt deaneries of Pagham and South Malling, with those of All Saints at Chichester, and St. Thomas in the Cliffe at Lewes, are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop; the total number in the county is 300. The great civil divisions are six rapes, each of which contains several hundreds; and the county includes the city and port of Chichester; the following members of the cinque-ports, viz., Hastings, Rye, Seaford, and Winchelsea, all which have markets except Seaford; the borough, market, and sea-port town of Brighton; the borough and market towns of Arundel, Horsham, Lewes, Midhurst, and Shoreham; the market-town and sea-port of Hastings; and the market-towns of Cuckfield, East Grinstead, Hailsham, Petworth, Steyning, and Worthing. Under the act of the 2nd of William IV., cap. 45, the county was divided into the Eastern and Western divisions, each sending two members to parliament; and two citizens are returned for the city of Chichester; two barons for Hastings, and one for Rye; and two burgesses for each of the boroughs, except Midhurst, Horsham, and Arundel, which return one each. This is one of the counties forming the home circuit: the Lent assizes are held at Horsham, and the summer and winter assizes at Lewes; the county gaols are at Lewes, Petworth, and Horsham. The quarter-sessions take place at Petworth, Horsham, and Chichester, for the western division, and at Lewes for the eastern.

The most remarkable feature in the SURFACE and SCENERY is the bold and open range of chalk hills, called the South Downs, extending into the county from Hampshire, and stretching in nearly an easterly direction for the greater part of its length, gradually approaching the sea. Their northern declivity is precipitous, but on the south their descent is gradual, except in the vicinity of Brighton, where they form a shore broken into stupendous cliffs, terminated on the east by the bold promontory of Beachy-Head, which rises perpendicularly above the strand to the height of 564 feet, and is the most elevated point on the southern coast of England. The rest of the coast is flat, excepting the vicinity of Selsea Bill, where a few rocks present themselves, and the rocks of Hastings. The district generally understood to constitute the South Downs consists only of the chalk hills lying to the east of Shoreham: many parts of the Downs westward of the river Arun are overgrown with much beech wood, chiefly of a dwarf size, furze, &c., so that the herbage is much inferior to that covering them further eastward. Southward of the chalk hills, extending from their base to the sea, lies a fertile and richly-cultivated vale, which, towards its eastern extremity, between Brighton and Shoreham, is, for the most part, less than a mile in breadth: proceeding westward, between the rivers Adur and Arun, this is increased to three miles; and from the Arun to the borders of Hampshire its breadth varies from three to seven miles: its length is about thirty-six. Extensive tracts of marsh land lie adjacent to the coast, between the eastern extremity of the South Downs at Beachy Head and the confines of Kent, in the vicinity of Rye; others also are situated on the lower part of the course of the rivers Ouse, Adur, and Arun. The Weald of Sussex comprises nearly the whole of the level tract lying to the north of the Downs, together with the range of hills running the whole length of the county, at a short distance from its northern and north-eastern boundaries, a great part of which is completely barren. Such is the quantity of timber and other trees in the low plains of the Weald, that, when viewed from the chalk hills, they present to the eye the appearance of one mass of wood; this is, in part, owing to the common practice, at the period that this tract was first reclaimed from a wild forest, of leaving a "shaw" of wood, several yards in width, around each inclosure, as a nursery for timber.

The different soils of chalk, clay, sand, loam, and gravel, are found in this county. The rich arable lands lying to the south of the Downs, and those at the foot of their northern declivity, amount to about 100,000 acres; of down land there are about 68,000 acres, of which a great portion is under its native green sward; the arable and grass lands of the Weald, which are of nearly equal extent, amount together to about 425,000 acres. The corn and pulse crops commonly grown are wheat, barley, oats, and peas. The soil of the extensive tract of the Weald being generally too heavy for the culture of barley, the quantity produced is consequently inferior. Oats are raised on the largest scale in the Weald. Peas are very extensively cultivated, especially on the South Downs, and in the maritime districts: beans are very little grown. Cole-seed, barley, and rye are sown, and are in great esteem among the flock-masters of the Downs, as green food for their sheep. Potatoes are very successfully grown, particularly in the vicinities of Battle, East Bourne, and Chichester. In the eastern and north-eastern parts, hops are very extensively cultivated. The principal artificial grasses are, red and white clover, trefoil, and rye-grass; the meadow lands are mown every year, and afterwards grazed. It is only in the western part of the county that there are any extensive tracts of irrigated meadows, and these are chiefly on the course of the small river Lavant. The marshes, which may be classed among the finest and most profitable of their kind, having undergone great improvement, occupy about 30,000 acres, wholly employed in the feeding of cattle and sheep. The great extent of down land having its native green sward is applied to the feeding of numerous flocks of sheep, and the herbage is short, sweet, and aromatic, and of an excellent kind, peculiar to these hills, which is supposed to give to the flesh of the sheep fed upon them that firmness and exquisite flavour for which it is so remarkable. In the western parts of the county are some considerable orchards, from which cider is made. Sussex has, from the remotest period of antiquity, been celebrated for its fine growth of timber, chiefly oak, and the extent of its woodlands cannot be estimated at less than 170,000 acres, nearly all included within the Weald, the timber produced in which is preferred by the navy contractors to that of any other district: in the Saxon times there appears to have been one continued forest, stretching from Hampshire into Kent. The waste lands are mostly situated on the northern side of the county, occupying an extent of about 100,000 acres, and their principal value is as rabbit warrens.

The chief Mineral Productions are the various descriptions of limestone obtained in the Weald, whereof one is the Sussex marble, found in the highest degree of perfection in the neighbourhood of Petworth, and which, when cut and polished, is equal in beauty to most marbles. The limestone and the iron-stone in contact with it often rise to within a very few feet of the surface. Alternate strata of sandstone and iron-stone occur everywhere in the Weald; and under these, at a considerable depth, are numerous strata of limestone, which, when burned, makes the finest cement in the kingdom. Anciently the iron-stone of this district was very extensively worked as ore, until the successful establishment of the great iron and coal works in the midland and northern districts of the kingdom occasioned the works in the Weald, the fuel of which was supplied by the surrounding woodlands, to be wholly abandoned. Fullers'-earth is found at Tillington, and used in the neighbouring fulling-mills; and red ochre is obtained at Graffham, Chidham, and several other places on the coast. The manufacture of charcoal, chiefly for gunpowder, has been of considerable importance in the county, from which large quantities have been annually sent to London over land. At Chichester a small woollen manufacture is carried on; and sacks, blankets, linen and worsted yarn, cotton and stuff goods, and other articles, are made in the workhouses. There are paper-mills at Iping and a few other places; potash is made at Bricksill hill, near Petworth, for the soap-makers of that town; brick-making is common in many parts of the county, and near Petworth are kilns for burning bricks and tiles to be exported to the West Indies. Ship and boat building is carried on in some of the small harbours of Sussex; yet, notwithstanding the great extent of sea-coast, its maritime commerce is of nearly as little importance as its manufactures. A considerable quantity of timber is exported; as are charcoal, cord-wood, and oak-bark; and horned-cattle and sheep, hides, and wool, are among its agricultural exports. There are several fisheries upon the coast, chiefly for herrings, mackerel, and flat-fish, and much of the produce is sent to London. In the Weald are very numerous ponds for feeding fresh-water fish for the London markets, chiefly carp, though tench, perch, ells, and pike, are also kept: many of the ponds were originally formed for the purpose of working the machinery of the iron-manufactories, long since abandoned. The most fashionable places of resort for sea-bathing are Brighton, Worthing, Hastings, St. Leonard's, Bognor, and East Bourne.

All the principal Rivers rise in the Weald, within the limits of the county, and take a tolerably direct course to the English Channel, so that their length is not great: they are, the Arun, with its tributary, the Rother; the Ouse; and the Adur. The Arun, with the aid of several artificial cuts, has been made navigable up to Newbridge, near Billingham; and the Rother, with the like assistance, to the town of Midhurst. A small canal also branches from the Rother to the village of Haslingbourne, within half a mile of Petworth. The largest barges navigating these rivers are of thirty tons' burthen, and the tide flows up the Arun, a distance of seventeen miles, to the vicinity of the village of Amberley. The Ouse is formed by the junction of two streams, one of which rises in the forest of Worth, and the other in that of St. Leonard, uniting near Cuckfield; it has been made navigable beyond Lewes to within five miles of Cuckfield. The Adur, sometimes called the Beeding, is navigable for ships of considerable burthen to Shoreham, and for barges to the vicinity of the village of Ashurst. The Lavant, a much smaller stream than any of the above, becomes navigable for ships some distance below Chichester, and expands into an estuary, which opens into the sea between the village of Wittering and the south-eastern point of Hayling Island in Hampshire: remarkably fine lobsters are bred in this river, near its mouth. The shores of the south-western part of the county are rendered very irregular by several other arms of the sea, one of which separates Thorney Island from the rest of the county. The Portsmouth and Arundel canal, the act for the formation of which was obtained in 1815, commencing from the river Arun, a little below the latter town, proceeds westward, in nearly a direct line, to the broad estuary of the Lavant, below Chichester, to which city is a short branch northward. From the Lavant the navigation is continued through the channels that separate Thorney and Hayling Islands from the main land to the eastern side of Portsea Island, where the artificial navigation recommences, and proceeds westward to Portsmouth. The London and Brighton railway enters the county at Black Corner, and proceeds in a southerly direction past Balcomb, and east of Cuckfield, to Brighton, whence a branch diverges westward to Shoreham, five miles and a half in length.

The county is supposed to have contained the Roman stations of Anderida Civitas, at Seaford or East Bourne; Anderida Portus, at Pevensey; Cilindunum, at Slindon; Mida, at Midhurst; Mantuantonis, or Mutuantonis, at Lewes; Portus Adurni, at Aldrington; and Regnum, at Chichester. The present roads from Portsmouth, from Midhurst, and from Arundel, to Chichester, are considered to have been originally of Roman formation; and from this city, the Roman road commonly called the Stane-street proceeded in a north-easterly direction towards Dorking, in Surrey, where it fell into the Ermin-street, being traceable in many parts of its course. Various Roman domestic remains have been dug up in different places, particularly at Chichester, Bognor, and East Bourne, including tessellated pavements and baths; and coins of the Lower Empire have been found in other parts. The number of ancient encampments upon the Downs and elsewhere, near the sea, evince that the county has been frequently the scene of military operations: some of these fortifications are supposed to have been made by the Romans, and others by Saxon and Danish invaders; and one on Mount Caburn, about a mile and a half from Lewes, on the northern edge of the Downs, is thought to be British. The number of Religious houses in the county before the general dissolution, including hospitals and colleges, was about fifty-eight; and there are yet extensive remains of the magnificent abbey of Battle, and of that of Bayham, on the confines of Kent; and considerable relics of the priories of Boxgrove, Hardham, Lewes, Michelham, and Shelbred, about four miles north of Midhurst. The most considerable remains of ancient Castles are those of Amberley, Arundel, Bodiham, Bramber, Eridge in the parish of Frant, Hastings, Hurstmonceaux, Ipres at Rye, Lewes, Pevensey, Scotney, and Winchelsea; and the most remarkable ancient mansion is that of Cowdray House, now in ruins. Several of the modern seats of the nobility and gentry are magnificent and the Pavilion at Brighton is distinguished as one of the residences of the sovereign: those most worthy of notice are, Petworth Park, Arundel Castle, the episcopal palace of Chichester, Eridge Castle, Goodwood, Parham Park, Penshurst Place, Sheffield Park, Slindon House, and Stanmer Park. There is a chalybeate spring at Brighton, and another at East Bourne: near Hastings is a singular dropping well, and in the same vicinity, a fine waterfall of forty feet perpendicular. The title of the Duke of Sussex was borne by the late Prince Augustus Frederick, sixth son of George III., upon whom it was conferred in the year 1801.

SUSTEAD (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of ERPINGHAM, hundred of NORTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Cromer; containing 143 inhabitants. It comprises 516 acres, chiefly arable, the property of W. H. Windham, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £34; patron and improPRIATOR, Mr. Windham. The church is chiefly in the decorated and later English styles, with a circular tower.

SUTCOMBE (St. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of BLACK TORRINGTON, Holsworthy and N. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N. by E.) from Holsworthy; containing 523 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 3000 acres, the greater portion of which is arable, and, with the exception of 50 acres of wood, the remainder meadow and pasture; the soil is chiefly clay, and the lands in many parts swampy. A branch of the Launceston canal passes through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 10. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Rev. W. Cohern: the tithes have been commuted for £300, and there are 51 acres of glebe. The church has a Norman doorway, but is mostly of later date, and contains some neat monuments to the family of Davie. An almshouse for six persons was founded and endowed by Sir William Morris, secretary of state to Charles II.

SUTTERBY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of CANDELSHOE, Wold division of the wapentake of CANDLESHOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (N. by W.) from Spilsby; containing 44 inhabitants. It comprises by survey 465 acres; the soil is chalky, and the surface hilly, and there are some quarries of limestone, which are worked for burning into lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £120, and the glebe comprises about 15 acres. The church is an ancient structure.

SUTTERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 6 miles (S. W. by S.) from Boston; containing 1303 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £23. 3. 4., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £885. The tithes were commuted for land in 1772; the glebe comprises nearly 500 acres, with a house. The church is principally in the later English style, with a tower surmounted by an elegant crocketed spire, and is extremely interesting from its elegant details of the various styles of architecture, from the early Norman to the later English. There is a place of worship for Baptists. The poor's estate, arising from bequests, amounts to £162 per annum.

SUTTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union and hundred of BIGGLESWADE, county of BEDFORD, $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile (S.) from Potton; containing 415 inhabitants. The parish comprises upwards of 2000 acres, of which the soil is sandy, and the surface varied. Here were the seat and royalty of the celebrated John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, who conferred Sutton and Potton upon Sir Roger Burgoyne and his heirs, by a curious laconic deed in doggerel verse, which is preserved among the ancient records in the Arches, Doctors' Commons. The manor-house was burnt down in 1826. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £20, and in the patronage of St. John's College, Oxford, with a net income of £362: the tithes have been commuted for £10, and there are 32 acres of glebe, with a house, near which is a fine chalybeate spring. The learned Bishop Stillingfleet was rector of Sutton, about the middle of the seventeenth century, and here wrote his Origines Sacrae.

SUTTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the hundred of SOUTH WITCHFORD, union and Isle of ELY, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Ely; containing 1599 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 6329 acres, of which 2000 are arable, 3296 meadow and pasture, 733 common, and 300 waste, the two latter of which portions are now inclosed. It had anciently a market and a fair, granted to the first abbot of Ely. The living is a vicarage, united to the rectory of Mepal, and valued in the king's books at £10; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Ely. The great tithes have been commuted for £450, and the vicarial for £1175; the appropriate glebe comprises 72 acres, and the vicarial 45. The church, built by Barnet, Bishop of Ely, who died in 1373, is a beautiful specimen of the decorated English style. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a school endowed with £15 per annum. In 1634, some labourers discovered several ancient coins and gold rings, and three silver plates, one of which bore a curious inscription.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish and union of RUNCORN, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (N. E. by E.) from Frodsham; containing 275 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township, in the union and borough of MACCLESFIELD, parish of PRESTBURY, N. division of the county of CHESTER; containing 7035 inhabitants. This was the seat of the family of Holinshed, the historian, and is supposed to have been his birthplace. There are several extensive cotton and silk mills. A district church, dedicated to St. George, was erected and consecrated in 1834, the living of which is a perpetual curacy; net income, £225; patrons, Trustees. The union workhouse is situated in the township.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of MIDDLEWICH, union and hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (S.) from Middlewich; containing 38 inhabitants.

SUTTON (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHESTERFIELD, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, 4 miles (E. S. E.) from Chesterfield; containing, with Duckmanton, 628 inhabitants. Nicholas Deincourt, Earl of Scarsdale, in 1643, fortified a Hall which he had previously erected here, for Charles I., but it was taken by assault, and the works demolished by Sir John Gell, and, some time afterwards, it was plundered by the parliamentary garrison of Bolsover: the mansion is situated in an extensive and beautiful park. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Duckmanton annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 16. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the family of Arkwright, the impropiators of Duckmanton: the tithes have been commuted for £300; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises 58 acres. The windows of the church exhibit some remains of ancient stained glass. Eighteen children are instructed for about £18 per annum, arising from land.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish of GUSSAGE ST. MICHAEL, union of WIMBORNE and CRANBORNE, hundred of BADDURY, county of DORSET; containing 82 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a parish, in the union and hundred of ROCHFORD, S. division of ESSEX, 1 mile (S. E. by S.) from Rochford; containing 120 inhabitants. The parish derives its name, originally South town, from its relative position with respect to Rochford, and comprises about 511 acres of arable, and 124 of pasture, besides which there is a considerable portion called saltings, and marshy land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11, and in the gift of J. Aitkin, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £270, and the glebe comprises 10 acres. The church is a small ancient edifice with a stone tower.

SUTTON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the hundred of BROXASH, union and county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hereford; containing 102 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £64; patrons and impropiators, the Rev. T. Allen and H. Unett, Esq.

SUTTON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the hundred of BROXASH, union and county of HEREFORD, $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E. by N.) from Hereford; containing 269 inhabitants, and comprising with the parish of Sutton St. Michael 1398 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £8. 1. 8.; net income, £195; patron, J. Johnston, Esq. A school is endowed with £6. 13., and a house and garden.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish and union of PRESCOT, hundred of WEST DERBY, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. E. by E.) from St. Helen's; containing 4095 inhabitants, extensively employed in the manufacture of crown and flint glass, earthenware and watch-movements. It comprises 3617 acres, of which 64 are common or waste land: the Liverpool and Manchester railway passes through. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £196, and the impropriate for £350, payable to King's College, Cambridge. A school is endowed with £20 per annum.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish of BECKINGHAM, union of NEWARK, wapentake of LOVEDEN, parts of KESTVEN, county of LINCOLN; containing 70 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of WYMONDHAM, incorporation and hundred of FOREHOE, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. W. by S.) from Wymondham; containing 669 inhabitants.

SUTTON (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of HAPPING, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (S. E. by E.) from Stalham; containing 365 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1500 acres, two-thirds of which are arable, and the rest marsh and water; the river Ant runs on the western boundary, and there is a broad, with a staith. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 16. 8., and in the gift of the Earl of Abergavenny: the tithes have been commuted for £264, and a glebe-house was erected in 1842. At the inclosure, in 1800, about 60 acres were allotted to purchase fuel for the poor.

SUTTON, a chapelry, in the parish of CASTOR, union and soke of PETERBOROUGH, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile (E. by S.) from Wansford; containing 121 inhabitants. It comprises 1400 acres, of which the surface is flat, and the soil a cold clay; the land is nearly equally divided between pasture and arable, and the river Nene runs through the chapelry, in which is a fine quarry, producing stone resembling that found at Ketton. The chapel is dedicated to St. Michael.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish of GRANBY, union, and N. division of the wapentake, of BINGHAM, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 14 miles (E. by S.) from Nottingham; containing 126 inhabitants.

SUTTON (St. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of EAST RETFORD, liberty of SOUTHWELL and SCROOBY, though locally in the wapentake of BASSETLAW, N. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3 miles (N. N. W.) from East Retford; containing, with the township of Lound, 890 inhabitants, of whom 452 are in Sutton township. The parish comprises by admeasurement 4429 acres, of which 2008 are in the township of Sutton; the soil is a black sandy earth, producing fine crops of wheat and turnips, and very early peas and potatoes. The river Idle runs through the parish. There is an ancient mansion of singular appearance, said to have been formerly much larger than at present, and the country residence of some of the ancestors of Earl Fitzwilliam. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Scrooby annexed, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £185; patron and impropriator, the Duke of Portland. The vicarial tithes were commuted for land in 1777; the glebe contains about 110 acres. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans; also a school, erected in 1783, and endowed with about £28 a year. A mound called Danes' Hill, now planted with trees, is supposed to have been an ancient encampment.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STANTON-HARCOURT, union of WITNEY, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD; containing 259 inhabitants.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of DIDDLEBURY, union of LUDLOW, hundred of MUNSLOW, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (N.) from Ludlow; containing 64 inhabitants. It is situated on the river Corve, which flows southward to Ludlow.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish and union of DRAYTON-IN-HALES, Drayton division of the hundred of NORTH BRADFORD, N. division of SALOP; containing 177 inhabitants.

SUTTON (St. JOHN), a parish, in the union of ATCHAM, liberties of the borough of SHREWSBURY, N. division of SALOP, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Shrewsbury; containing 69 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £3; net income, £17; patron and impropriator, Lord Berwick. Sutton Spa, a fine mineral spring issuing from a stratum of ash-coloured clay, close to the village, is nearly similar in its properties to sea water.

SUTTON (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WOODBRIDGE, hundred of WILFORD, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3 miles (S. E. by E.) from Woodbridge; containing 707 inhabitants. It comprises by measurement 7000 acres, and is bounded on the west by the navigable river Deben, where is a ferry to Woodford. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 2. 1., and in the gift of the Rev. Henry Thomas Day, LL.D.: the vicarage-house and offices, which were of a superior description, were some time since destroyed by fire. There is a place of worship for a congregation of Baptists.

SUTTON (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of EPSOM, Second division of the hundred of WALLINGTON, E. division of SURREY, 5 miles (E. N. E.) from Epsom; containing 1304 inhabitants. It comprises about 1700 acres, nearly all arable. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 18. 4., and in the patronage of the Rev. Thomas Hatch: the tithes have been commuted for £520, and there are 33 acres of glebe. The church, partly in the decorated English style, had formerly a wooden tower, now replaced by one of brick, and contains among other handsome monuments, chiefly of the Talbots, one to the memory of Lady Dorothy Brownlow. In Domesday book two churches are mentioned to have existed here. There is a meeting-house for Independents; and a national school is supported by subscription. The parish contains a large chalk-pit, in which many curious fossils have been found.

SUTTON (St. JOHN), a parish, in the hundred of ROTHERBRIDGE, rape of ARUNDEL, W. division of SUSSEX, 5 miles (S.) from Petworth; containing 420 inhabitants. It comprises 2601 acres, of which 250 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 0. 10., and in the patronage of Colonel Wyndham: the tithes have been commuted for £340, and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish and union of TENBURY, Upper division of the hundred of DODDINGTON, Hundred-House and W. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Tenbury; containing 186 inhabitants, and comprising 1849 acres.

SUTTON, a hamlet, in the parish of NORTON, union of MALTON, wapentake of BUCKROSE, E. riding of YORK, 1 mile (S. by E.) from Malton; containing 98 inhabitants. This place, with the hamlet of Welham, forms a township, comprising about 1270 acres, of which 360 are in Sutton: the village is a short distance west of the road from Malton to North Grimston. Whitewall, in the hamlet, has long been noted for its extensive training-stables.

SUTTON (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of SCULCOATES, Middle division of the wapentake of HOL-DERNESS, E. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hull; containing, with the village of Stoneferry, 6384 inhabitants. This parish, which comprises about 4450 acres, is bounded on the west by the river Hull, on the left bank of which is Stoneferry; it also includes Witham, Lime-Street, the Groves, and Somergangs, forming the north-eastern suburbs of the town of Hull, and now part of the borough. Many of the most opulent merchants of Hull have residences in the neighbourhood; and two large spinning-factories, and one for weaving cotton, have been erected in the Groves. The village of Sutton is large and well built, and pleasantly situated on a gently rising and salubrious eminence. The living is a perpetual curacy, with a net income of £98; patron and impropriator, H. Broadley, Esq. The parochial church had formerly a chantry of six priests, endowed by John of Sutton, and valued at the Dissolution at £13. 18. 8. per annum. A church in the English style, with a tower and spire, and dedicated to St. Mark, was erected in 1841, at the Groves, containing 1058 sittings, of which 246 are free, the Incorporated Society having given £500 in aid of the expense. At Witham are places of worship for Independents and Methodists. John Marshall, in 1803, bequeathed £150 for the instruction of children; and at Witham is a British and foreign school. In the village are two hospitals; one founded by Leonard Chamberlain, and rebuilt in 1800, for the maintenance of two aged widowers and eight widows; and the other erected in 1819, by the trustees of the late Mrs. Watson, for widows and daughters of clergymen deceased. A house of White friars existed here in the time of Edward I.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of KIRKCLINGTON, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Ripon; containing 97 inhabitants. The village is situated about half a mile south of the road from Tanfield to Sinderby. The tithes, including those of the township of Howgrave, have been commuted for £135. 4. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SUTTON, with HEALEY, a township, in the parish of MASHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANGEAST, N. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. W.) from Bedale; containing 442 inhabitants. It is a district of scattered houses, comprising 4827*a. 1r. 10p.*, and extending westward to the foot of Witton fell and Broom-beck moor; the land is hilly, and chiefly in farms.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of BROTHERTON, Lower division of the wapentake of BARKSTONEASH, W. riding of YORK, 1 mile (N. E. by E.) from Ferry-Bridge; containing 52 inhabitants. The township comprises about 750 acres, chiefly the property of Sir John Ramsden; the soil is fertile. The river Aire pursues here a very devious course on the east, south, and west.

SUTTON, a township, in the parishes of BURGH-WALLIS and CAMPBALL, union of DONCASTER, Upper division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. by W.) from Doncaster; containing 133 inhabitants. The township contains by computation 730 acres, belonging to several proprietors, of whom M. A. Tasburgh, Esq., is lord of the manor. Rent-charges as commutations for the tithes have been awarded, amounting to £136, of which £113. 6. 8. are payable to the impropriator, and £22. 13. 4. to the rector of Burgh-Wallis, who has also a glebe of $24\frac{1}{4}$ acres. In 1723, Mrs. Middleton bequeathed $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land for the poor.

SUTTON, a township, in the parish of KILDWICK, union of KEIGHLEY, E. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWXCROSS, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Keighley; containing 1292 inhabitants. The township contains by computation 2650 acres; the moor, nearly 1000 acres in extent, was inclosed in 1815, and a considerable portion of it has been brought into cultivation. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of worsted stuffs, which is carried on extensively in a factory belonging to Messrs. Thomas Bairston and Brothers, of Royds Hill. The village is neatly built of stone. A rent-charge of £33 has been awarded as a commutation for the vicarial tithes, and one of £46. 18. 6. for the appropriate, payable to the Dean and Chapter of Christ-Church, Oxford. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SUTTON-AT-HONE (ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. by E.) from Dartford; containing, with the hamlet of Swanley, 1128 inhabitants. This parish, from which the lathe derives its name, is pleasantly situated on the river Darent, by which it is bounded on the east, and is intersected by the road from Dartford to Seven-Oaks; it comprises about 3500 acres, and the manufacture of paper is carried on. The village on the bank of the river has an interesting appearance, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified, and enlivened with some good houses, among which are Sutton Place and St. John's, the latter occupying the site of an ancient commandery; and near the northern extremity of the parish is Hawley House, a mansion of considerable antiquity. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; net income, £519; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. There is a vicarage-house, with a glebe of 22 acres. The church, an ancient structure, with some portions in the decorated English style, was partly burnt down in 1615, having been accidentally fired by some persons while shooting bats. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also an almshouse founded by Katherine Wrott, in 1596. Jeffrey Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, in the reign of Richard I., or of John, gave his estates in the parish, for the establishment and endowment of an hospital for three chaplains and thirteen brethren; and about the same time, Robert Basinge granted the manor to the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who had a commandery here.

SUTTON-BASSETT (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of MARKET-HARBOROUGH, hundred of CORB, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 3 miles (N. E.) from Harborough; containing 179 inhabitants. It is bounded on the west by the river Welland, and consists of 725 acres. The living is a vicarage, united to that of Weston-by-Welland. There is a district church, which was formerly a chapel of ease to Weston, and is endowed with 32 acres of land.

SUTTON-BENGER (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CHIPPENHAM, hundred of MALMESBURY, Chippenham and Calne, and N. divisions of WILTS, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles

(N. N. E.) from Chippenham; containing 526 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Chippenham to Wootton-Basset, and on that from Bristol to London; it comprises 1156 acres, and the river Avon and the Great Western railway run through it. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 3. 4.; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The tithes have been commuted for £300, and there is a vicarage-house, with a glebe of 38 acres, of which 18 are in this parish, and 20 in Brinkworth.

SUTTON-BINGHAM, a parish, in the union of YEOVIL, hundred of HOUNDSBOROUGH, BERWICK, and COKER, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (S. by W.) from Yeovil; containing 66 inhabitants. The parish comprises 549a. 2r. 23p.: stone is quarried for building, and for burning into lime. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 10., and in the gift of W. Helyar, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £129; there is a rectory-house, and the glebe contains about 76 acres. The church, which is very ancient, is principally in the early English style, and was formerly a chapel from Malmesbury Abbey; the nave is separated from the chancel by a handsome arch.

SUTTON, BISHOP'S (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of BISHOP'S-SUTTON, Alton and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 1 mile (E. S. E.) from Alresford; containing 517 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2903 acres, of which the soil is chalky and flinty. Fairs are held on the Thursday after the festival of the Holy Trinity, and on November 6th. The living is a vicarage, with that of Ropley annexed, valued in the king's books at £19. 10. 2½; net income, £350; joint patrons, Sir Thomas Baring, Bart., and John Deacon, Esq.; improprators, several Proprietors. There is a place of worship for Independents. The bishops of Winchester had anciently a palace here, the remains of which have been converted into a malt-house.

SUTTON-BONNINGTON, a parish, in the union of LOUGHBOROUGH, S. division of the wapentake of RUSHCLIFFE and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 2 miles (S. E. by E.) from Kegworth; containing 1307 inhabitants. The living consists of the united rectories of St. Anne and St. Michael, the former valued in the king's books at £4. 17. 6., and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £219: the latter valued at £15. 2. 1.; net income, £462; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. The tithes of the township of St. Anne were commuted for land in 1774, and those of St. Michael in 1776, under inclosure acts. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school, endowed with £40 per annum.

SUTTON-BY-DOVOR (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of EASTRY, hundred of CORNILLO, lathe of St. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, 4 miles (S. W. by W.) from Deal; containing 160 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy, consolidated in 1835 with the rectory of Little Mongeham, according to act of parliament; net income, £47; appropriator, the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church is a small ancient structure in the early English style, with a circular east end.

SUTTON-CHART, county of KENT.—See CHART, SUTTON.

SUTTON-CHENEY, a chapelry, in the parish of MARKET-BOSWORTH, hundred of SPARKENHOE, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 2 miles (S. S. E.) from Market-Bosworth; containing 352 inhabitants. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal passes in the vicinity. The chapel is dedicated to St. James. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also an almshouse consisting of six apartments, founded by Sir William Robarts, in the 11th year of James I., and endowed by him with £24 per annum.

SUTTON-COLDFIELD (HOLY TRINITY), an incorporated market-town and parish, having separate jurisdiction, in the union of ASTON, locally in the Birmingham division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK, 26 miles (N. W.) from Warwick, and 110 (N. W. by N.) from London; containing 4300 inhabitants. This place, which is of remote antiquity, is supposed to have derived its name from its situation to the south of Lichfield, and in the time of Edward the Confessor, belonged to Edwine, Earl of Mercia. After the Norman invasion, the Conqueror retained it in his possession, together with the adjacent woods, then called a forest, which extended beyond the limits of the county; and it continued to form part of the royal demesnes till the time of Henry I., who granted it to Roger, Earl of Warwick, in exchange for the manors of Hockham and Langham, in the county of Rutland. The chase, which extended from the river Tame to the river Bourne, was a favourite resort of the earls of Warwick, who built the ancient manor-house, a noble mansion of great strength, but of which few vestiges can now be traced. In the reign of Edward I., William de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, claimed for the manor and the town which had arisen in the neighbourhood, the privilege of a court leet, with assize of bread and beer, free chase, infangthef, tumbrell, wait, and gallows; and in the 28th of the same reign, Guy, Earl of Warwick, obtained the grant of a weekly market and an annual fair. The manor subsequently became the property of Richard Neville, in right of Anne, his wife, and on his taking part with Henry VI., it was seized by Edward IV., and granted for ten years to Sir Edmund Mountfort, one of his barons, and the rangership of the chase to John Holt, Esq., for life; it was afterwards settled upon the daughters of Lady Anne Neville, and subsequently came to the crown by special grant, confirmed by parliament. The manor-house was then taken down by one of the king's officers, who sold most of the materials to the Marquess of Dorset, for the erection of his seat at Bradgate, in the county of Leicester. The market, also, was forsaken, and the town fell nearly into a state of ruinous decay, from which it was restored in the reign of Henry VIII., by the munificence of John Harman de Veisy, a native of this place, who was successively vicar of St. Nicholas, in Coventry, dean of the chapel royal at Windsor to Henry VIII., and tutor to the Princess Mary, then the only daughter of that monarch, president of Wales, and lastly Bishop of Exeter. Bishop Veisy rebuilt the town in the 19th of Henry VIII., obtained for the inhabitants a charter of incorporation, gave the town, manor, and chase to the corporate body, to be held by them at a fee-farm rent of £58 per annum, built the town-hall and prison, and threw open the chase for the benefit of the poor. He also erected more than 50 houses in the lordship, and attempted to introduce the manufacture of woollen-cloth and kerseys, for which he built several looms, but the forester-like habits of the population prevented its success.

The town is pleasantly situated on a steep acclivity on the road from Birmingham to Lichfield, and consists principally of one long street, of which the houses are mostly modern, well built, and of handsome appearance; the inhabitants are amply supplied with water from springs, and the extensive park immediately adjoining, in which they have the right of pasture, with the privilege of sporting at all times, renders it a desirable place of residence. The chief manufacture now carried on is that of spades, shovels, and saws, in which many of the population are employed; and some mills here, belonging to Messrs. Webster and Son, by whose family they have been conducted for nearly a century, are in great celebrity for the production of steel wire for wool and cotton cards, needles, fish-hooks, and strings for musical instruments. About the year 1826, a superior method of making music-wire was introduced by Mr. John Bird, who had the management of the works; and the wire has, from the unwearied attention bestowed on its manipulation, attained such a degree of perfection as to supersede entirely the use of the celebrated Berlin wire, both in England and on the continent. A hedge of holly, almost three-quarters of a mile in length, has been planted near the premises, and will eventually be a great ornament to the neighbourhood. The Birmingham and Fazeley canal passes the south-eastern extremity of the parish. The market is on Monday; and fairs for cattle, sheep, and pedlery, are held on Trinity-Monday and the 8th of November. Under the charter of Henry VIII., obtained by Bishop Veisy, and confirmed, with additional privileges, by Charles II., the town is governed by a warden, two capital burgesses, and 22 common burgesses; the warden and capital burgesses are justices of the peace, and hold courts of quarter and petty sessions, and the corporation are lords of the manor. The town-hall is a neat brick building, with a small prison attached to it, and in the hall are the armorial-bearings of Bishop Veisy, emblazoned on a shield surmounted with a mitre.

The PARISH comprises about 15,500 acres, of which nearly 2000 are within the park, and the remainder chiefly arable, with a due proportion of meadow, pasture, and woodland; the surface is boldly undulated, and the scenery finely varied, and enriched with stately trees; the soil is generally light and gravelly, and there are some extensive quarries of excellent freestone. The park, part of the ancient royal chase, in which the last of the kings who took the diversion of hunting was John, formerly abounded with valuable timber, a fall of which, some years since, enabled the corporation to purchase £32,000 stock, from which their revenue is chiefly derived; and there are still remaining numerous large oaks and other trees, which add greatly to the beauty of its appearance. The Ikeneld-street enters the park near an artificial mount on which Charles I.

harangued his troops from Shropshire, and which is called the King's Standing, and the road is distinctly traceable for nearly two miles through the grounds, from which it diverges towards the Lichfield road, to meet the Watling-street, near the site of the ancient Etoctum. Many streams issuing from large sheets of water within the park, one of which covers nearly 35 acres, descend in various directions, giving motion to eleven different mills. Newhall, an ancient mansion here, originally built about the year 1200, was held under the Earl of Warwick in the reign of Edward III., by William de Sutton; it was rebuilt in 1360, when it obtained its present appellation, and was enlarged in 1590. In 1796, the tower was built by the late Mr. Chadwick, who also made various additions, after whose decease it was for many years uninhabited, and was falling into decay, when Mr. Jacot (Des Combes), who in 1835 became its occupier, restored it to its present condition. Annexed is a manor of 400 acres. Moor Hall, in which Bishop Veisy was born, has a large park and ornamented grounds in the parish; and Ashfurlong House, Doe-Bank House, and Patimore Hall are also situated here.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £33. 9. 2., and in the patronage of William Riland Kirkpatrick Bedford, Esq., by whose family the advowson has been held since the year 1691; net income, £2500. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1824. The church is an ancient structure, originally built in the 12th century, though subsequently enlarged, and combines various styles of architecture; the aisles were added by Bishop Veisy, and part of the nave which fell down about 70 years since, has been rebuilt by the corporation, at an expense of £1500; in the chancel is a recumbent statue of the bishop, with a mitre on his head, and a crosier in his right hand. There are chapels of ease at Hill and Maney, and a church has been erected at Warmley, in the parish. The Roman Catholics have a chapel. The free grammar school was founded by Bishop Veisy, for the maintenance of a learned layman to teach grammar and rhetoric, and for that purpose he conveyed to the warden and corporation of Sutton certain lands within the parish now producing a rental of £390 per annum. On the decease of the master in 1842, an alteration took place in the arrangements; a second mastership was created, with a liberal salary, and the course of studies was enlarged, and made to comprehend all the branches of classical and commercial education, upon the payment of a small sum by the pupils. The house, which had fallen partly into decay, was, in 1728, rebuilt by the corporation, on a more eligible site at the upper end of the town, near the park; it is a spacious and handsome building, and is also well adapted for the reception of boarders, whom the master has the privilege of taking. Among the most distinguished of the pupils educated in the school, have been, Burton, author of the Anatomy of Melancholy, and his brother William, author of the History of Leicestershire. Six schools, in which more than 400 children, of whom 240 are clothed, are instructed on the national plan, have been built and are supported by the corporation, who distribute nearly all the rest of their revenue in charitable donations. Marriage portions of £24 each are annually given to four poor maidens, residents of the parish; and about 120 neat cottages, mostly with good gardens and a few acres of land attached, are let at very low rents to deserving labourers. £30 are distributed yearly in blankets to the poor; medical attendance and childbed linen are gratuitously supplied to poor lying-in women of good character, and ten almshouses have been erected by the corporation, in which the aged poor may live rent free, a married couple receiving 25s. per week, and a single person 15s., and each 30 cwt. of coal.

SUTTON-COURTNEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, 2 miles (S. by E.) from Abingdon; containing, with the chapelry of Appleford, and the township of Sutton-Wick, 1378 inhabitants, of whom 909 are in Sutton-Courtney township. The parish comprises 5141*a*. 1*r*. 17*p*., and the Wilts and Berks canal passes through it. A paper-mill employs about 25 persons. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £18. 13. 4.; income, £148; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church is very ancient, and has a wooden rood-loft, and a Norman font surrounded by pillars and enriched with sculptured foliage, &c. There is a chapel of ease at Appleford; and at Sutton-Courtney is a place of worship for Independents. Edmund Bradstock, in 1607, bequeathed a house and lands, of the present annual value of £80, for education; and an almshouse was erected in 1820, pursuant to the will of Francis Elderfield, Esq., who endowed it for six widows. Abbey House was formerly a residence for the monks of Abingdon.

SUTTON, EAST (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYHORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 6 miles (S. E.) from Maidstone; containing 387 inhabitants. The parish is crossed by the ridge of hills bounding the Weald, of which its southern side forms a part. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Sutton-Valence: the church is a handsome edifice, and contains some interesting monuments.

SUTTON, ST. EDMUND'S, a chapelry, in the parish of LONG SUTTON, union of HOLBEACH, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 10 miles (E. by N.) from Crowland; containing 776 inhabitants. This place is in Sutton Fen, which was inclosed in 1790; and comprises by computation 6230 acres. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Long Sutton (the appropriator), with a net income of £216, partly arising from land purchased with Queen Anne's Bounty, but chiefly from about 100 acres, of which 39 were private gifts, and the remainder allotted at the inclosure. There are places of worship for Baptists and Primitive Methodists. A free school is endowed with about 15 acres of land; and the poor have nearly £100 per annum, the interest of money and rent of land, the bequests of various donors.

SUTTON, FULL, a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 5½ miles (N. W. by N.) from Pocklington; containing 146 inhabitants. The parish comprises 900 acres by computation, of which two-thirds are arable, and the rest pasture, and is bounded on the north by the York and Bridlington road; the surface is generally flat, and the soil of a productive quality. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 12. 8½.; net income, £136; patron, Lord Feversham: there are 120 acres of glebe and a small glebe-house. The church is an ancient structure in the early English style, and has a Sunday school attached, supported by the incumbent. The Wesleyans have a place of worship.

SUTTON-GRANGE, a township, in the parish and liberty of RIPON, W. riding of YORK, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Ripon; containing 101 inhabitants. The township comprises about 950 acres, the property of Mrs. Lawrence. Sutton-Grange mansion is now a farmhouse.

SUTTON, GREAT, a township, in the parish of EASTHAM, union, and Higher division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Chester; containing 203 inhabitants. The Chester and Birkenhead railway passes by the place.

SUTTON, GULDEN, a parish, in the union of GREAT BOUGHTON, Lower division of the hundred of BROXTON, S. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (E. N. E.) from Chester; containing 180 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 1100 acres, of which the surface is in general flat, and the soil stiff and marly. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £50; patron and impropiator, Lord Stanley.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of MANSFIELD, N. division of the wapentake of BROXTOW and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 3½ miles (W. S. W.) from Mansfield; containing, with the hamlet of Hucknall-under-Huthwaite, 6557 inhabitants, of whom 5670 are in Sutton township. The village is situated on an eminence, and comprises several streets, covering a considerable extent of ground: limestone of excellent quality abounds in the vicinity. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of cotton hose and lace; and a large factory for spinning cotton, and making checks and nankeens, has long been conducted. Some persons, also, find employment in making a coarse kind of red pottery ware; and the Mansfield and Pinxton railway, which passes through the parish, affords facility for conveying the produce. A book society has been established for several years. There is a small customary market for provisions on Saturday. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £118; patron, the Duke of Devonshire; impropiator, the Duke of Portland: the tithes were commuted for land in 1794. The church, which stands on an eminence, has a handsome octagonal spire. There are places of worship for General and Particular Baptists, Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and a national school for boys is partly supported by about £10 per annum from benefactions. Near the village is Mapple Wells, the water of which has been successfully used in rheumatic cases. Joseph Whitehead, a frame-work knitter, remarkable for his attainments in astronomy and mechanics, and who constructed an orrery upon Ferguson's principle, and other complicated pieces of machinery, was born here in 1784.

SUTTON-IN-THE-ELMS, a township, in the parish of BROUGHTON-ASTLEY, union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, 6½ miles (E.) from Hinckley; containing 136 inhabitants. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SUTTON-IN-THE-MARSH (ST. CLEMENT), a parish, in the union of SPILSBY, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. E. by E.) from Alford; containing 274 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 13. 4.; patron and appropriator, the Prebendary of Sutton-in-Marisco in the Cathedral of Lincoln. The great tithes have been commuted for £380, and the vicarial for £17. 18., with a glebe containing 16 acres.

SUTTON, ST. JAMES, a chapelry, in the parish of LONG SUTTON, union of HOLBEACH, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Holbeach; containing 535 inhabitants. It comprises by computation 2870 acres: the South Holland drain passes on the west and north. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of Long Sutton (the appropriator), with a net income of £66: the great tithes have been commuted for £526, and the vicarial for £124. Of the chapel, the chancel and steeple, composed of brick and stone, are the only remains. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Near the chapel is a remarkable stone called Ivy Cross. About £100 per annum are distributed in coal and money to the poor, arising from 40 acres of land, the produce of various bequests.

SUTTON, KING'S (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (S. E.) from Banbury; containing, with the hamlet of Walton, and part of those of Astrop, Charlton, and Purston, 1297 inhabitants. The parish is separated from the county of Oxford by the river Cherwell, parallel to which runs the Oxford canal, and comprises by admeasurement 4416 acres, nearly two-thirds whereof are pasture, independently of between 200 and 300 acres of rich meadow land adjacent to the river; the soil passes through several varieties, from a stiff clay to a light loam. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £83; patron and improprator, William Willes, Esq. The church is a beautiful specimen of the later English style, and the tower is surmounted by a lofty crocketed spire. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. At Astrop is a mineral spring called St. Rumbald's well, which formerly attracted many visitors.

SUTTON, LITTLE, a township, in the parish of EASTHAM, union, and Higher division of the hundred, of WIRRAL, S. division of the county of CHESTER, $7\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Chester; containing 426 inhabitants.

SUTTON, LONG, or ST. MARY'S, a parish, in the union of HOLBEACH, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Holbeach; containing 5845 inhabitants, of whom 3736 are in the township. The parish comprises, exclusively of its three chapelries of St. Edmund, St. James, and St. Nicholas, 8738 acres, chiefly rich marsh and fen land; 427 acres are common or waste. It had anciently a monastic cell, called Ketel; John of Gaunt is said to have had a seat here, and on the marsh is a farm named King's House, where King John halted after he had lost his carriages and baggage in crossing the Wash. There is a considerable market for corn and cattle; and fairs are held on May 13th and 14th, and the Friday after September 25th. The village has risen within the present century, and especially within the last fifteen years, to the rank of a handsome and flourishing market-town, mainly owing to the erection of a bridge, near which is a suburb named Sutton-Bridge, seated at the mouth of the river Nene, and on an embanked road which has been extended to the place from Cross Keys Wash. The bridge is a massive structure of oak, having a platform, with a moveable cast-iron centre 52 feet in the span; the embankment, which was completed in July 1831, is two miles in length, and in addition to connecting the two counties of Lincoln and Norfolk, an immense tract of fertile land has been recovered from the sea by the stupendous undertaking. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £40, and in the patronage of the Rev. T. L. Bennett, who is improprator and incumbent: the great tithes have been commuted for £1973. 13. 6., and the vicarial for £432. 6. 6. The church is a fine structure, with an ancient stone steeple and a lofty spire, serving as a landmark to mariners in the Wash. A handsome church, dedicated to St. Matthew, has been built by subscription at Sutton-Bridge, in the early English style, and consists of a chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and a tower at the west end; the first stone was laid in July 1841, by the treasurer of Guy's Hospital, and the governors of that institution have been the principal contributors to its erection. There are places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians. A free school was endowed, under a bequest of Robert Phillips, in 1492, and is now conducted in a commodious building erected for the purpose by subscription, in 1835, and attached is a girls' school. There are six almshouses for widows, who receive £6 per annum each; and in 1603 Thomas Allen bequeathed estates, now producing about £220 per annum, applied to various purposes in the church, to the apprenticing of children, and the relief of the poor. Other bequests have also been made yielding about £40 per annum, for charitable uses.

SUTTON, LONG (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of SOMERTON, W. division of SOMERSET, $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Somerton; containing, with the tything of Knowle, and the hamlets of Load and Upton, 979 inhabitants. The river Yeo, or Ivel, is navigable along the southern boundary of the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 18.; net income, £229; improprator, the Earl of Burlington. Roman coins, pateræ, and other antiquities, have been found in the neighbourhood.

SUTTON, LONG (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of CRONDALL, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S.) from Odiham; containing 321 inhabitants, and comprising 2244a. 3r. 2p. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £40; patrons and improprators, the Master and Brethren of the Hospital of St. Cross.

SUTTON-MADDOCK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SHIFFNALL, Shiffnall division of the hundred of BRIMSTREE, S. division of SALOP, 6 miles (N.) from Bridgenorth; containing 352 inhabitants. The Several bounds the parish on the west, and the Shropshire canal forms a junction with that river near a china manufactory established on its bank. The living is a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Kemberton, and valued in the king's books at £5: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £145. 11., and the vicarial for £220, with a glebe containing $18\frac{3}{4}$ acres.

SUTTON-MALLET, a chapelry, in the parish of MOORLINCH, union of BRIDGWATER, hundred of WHITLEY, W. division of SOMERSET, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Bridgwater; containing 126 inhabitants. The chapel has been enlarged. A rent-charge of £95 is received as a commutation for the impropriate tithes, and one of £60 for the vicarial, and there is a glebe of $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres.

SUTTON-MANDEVILLE (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of CAWDEN and CADWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 11 miles (W.) from Salisbury; containing 275 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Salisbury to Shaftesbury, and comprises about 1500 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 6. 8., and in the gift of W. Wyndham, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £240; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe comprises about 40 acres.

SUTTON MONTIS or MONTAGUE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of WINCANTON, hundred of CATSASH, E. division of SOMERSET, 6 miles (N. by W.) from Sherborne; containing 191 inhabitants. It comprises 498 acres by computation; the soil is fertile, and the scenery of pleasing character. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. 1., and in the gift of the Rev. W. B. Leach, to whose family the advowson has belonged since the Reformation: the tithes have been commuted for £146. 17., and the glebe comprises 37 acres.

SUTTON-NEAR-SEAFORD, a parish, in the union of EASTBOURNE, hundred of FLEXBOROUGH, rape of PEVENSEY, E. division of SUSSEX, 11 miles (S. E. by S.) from Lewes. It comprises by admeasurement 2235 acres, of which 1298 are arable, 926 meadow and pasture, and 11 woodland and waste. The living is a discharged vicarage, with that of Seaford annexed; patrons, the Prebendaries of Sutton and Seaford in Chichester Cathedral. The tithes belonging to the prebendary of Sutton have been commuted for £500, with a glebe of 8 acres, and those of the vicar for £240, with a glebe of one acre. The church is desecrated.

SUTTON, ST. NICHOLAS, or SUTTON-BOURNE, a chapelry, in the parish of LONG SUTTON, union of HOLBEACH, wapentake of ELLOE, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 5 miles (E. by N.) from Holbeach; containing 798 inhabitants. This village, sometimes called Lutton, which is supposed to be a corruption of Lode town, from lodes or drains in the neighbourhood, was formerly the chief place in the parish. The chapelry comprises 3656 acres, mostly fertile marshes, stretching eastward to the Wash; 85 acres are common or waste. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Long Sutton: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £859. 11. 2., and the vicarial for £166. 2. 10. The chapel is a neat ancient edifice, with some fine Norman arches, and a tower surmounted by a conical spire 159 feet high. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. Dr. Busby, the distinguished master of Westminster school, was born here in 1606.

SUTTON-ON-THE-FOREST (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of EASINGWOLD, wapentake of BULMER, N. riding of YORK; containing, with Huby township, 1123 inhabitants, of whom 567 are in the township of Sutton, 8 miles (N. by W.) from York. This parish, which forms a part of the ancient forest of Galtres, and is skirted by the river Foss, comprises by computation about 10,000 acres; the soil is generally sandy, resting on a gravel and clay substratum. The surface is slightly elevated, and distinct views are obtained of York and its noble cathedral from Sutton Hall, the residence of William Charles Harland, Esq., M.P., who has directed trees to be cut away for some miles, as they obstructed the prospect. The village is on the road from York to Helmsley. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17. 3. 4.; net income, £390, with an excellent house; patron and appropriator, the Archbishop of York. It was endowed with a portion of the great tithes of Huby by Walter de Grey, archbishop in 1227. The church is a very handsome structure, with a square embattled tower. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and parochial schools at Sutton and Huby are supported by subscription. At St. John's well is a strong chalybeate water. The celebrated Lawrence Sterne was vicar of the parish.

SUTTON-ON-THE-HILL (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 8 miles (W. by S.) from Derby; containing, with the hamlet of Ash, and the township of Oseleston with Thurvaston, 594 inhabitants, of whom 138 are in Sutton township. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £4. 16. 8.; patron and incumbent, the Rev. R. R. Ward; impropiator, Thomas Cox, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £167, and the vicarial for £280, with a glebe of $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres. Fourteen children are educated and apprenticed for an annuity of £20, bequeathed in 1722, by Anne Jackson; the school-house was erected by subscription in 1736. All the lands in the township, except one farm, were given by Humphrey Cheetham, Esq., to the Blue-coat hospital at Manchester.

SUTTON-POINTZ, a tything, in the parish of PRESTON, union of WEXMOUTH, liberty of SUTTON-POINTZ, Dorchester division of DORSET, 4 miles (N. N. E.) from Melcombe-Regis. Here was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Giles, some remains of which are still visible.

SUTTON-SCOTNEY, a chapelry, in the parish of WONSTON, union of NEW WINCHESTER, hundred of BUDDLESGATE, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S.) from Whitchurch; containing 448 inhabitants.

SUTTON-UNDER-BRAILS (ST. THOMAS à BECKET), a parish, in the union of SHIPSTON, Upper division of the hundred of WESTMINSTER, county of GLOUCESTER, though locally in the hundred of Kington, county of Warwick, 5 miles (S. E.) from Shipston; containing 232 inhabitants. The parish, for electoral purposes, is wholly annexed to the southern division of Warwick. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4.; net income, £313; patron, the Bishop of London. The tithes were commuted for land and an annual money payment in 1804; there is a rectory-house, built in 1825, and the glebe contains about 180 acres.

SUTTON-UNDER-WHITESTONE-CLIFFE, a township, in the parish of FELIX-KIRK, union of THIRSK, wapentake of BIRDFORTH, N. riding of YORK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by N.) from Thirsk; containing 365 inhabitants. The village is pleasantly situated on the road from Thirsk to Helmsley, and near a high cliff yielding excellent lime and freestone: a lake of about 17 acres abounds in pike and perch. The Archbishop of York is lord of the manor. There is a place of worship for Independents.

SUTTON-UPON-DERWENT (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of POCKLINGTON, Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of HARTHILL, E. riding of YORK, 8 miles (E. S. E.) from York; containing 407 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 3407 acres, including the township of Woodhouse, which contains 1069: the village is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Derwent, which is crossed by a substantial stone bridge. The surface is slightly undulated, and the scenery picturesque, presenting views of the river and the wolds; the soil is a sandy loam, except that of the township of Woodhouse, which is all sand, and is partly covered with heath and plantations. Woodhouse is the property of the crown. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £14. 14. 7.; net income, £470, with a commodious house and good garden attached; patron, Major-Gen. Richard Goddard Hare, K.C.B.: the tithes of the township of Sutton were commuted for land and a money payment in 1776. The church is an ancient structure, with a square tower, and was repaired and improved in 1841. A school is chiefly supported by General Hare and the rector. The springs are strongly impregnated with iron.

SUTTON-UPON-TRENT (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, N. division of the wapentake of THURGARTON, S. division of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Tuxford; containing 1142 inhabitants. The village is large and well built, and is pleasantly situated on the great north road, and on the western bank of the river Trent. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 6. 8.; net income, £200; patron, Sir Charles Hulse, Bart.; improprator, J. E. Denison, Esq. The tithes, with certain exceptions, were commuted for land and a money payment in 1803. The church, which exhibits a mixture of various styles, is a handsome structure, with a tower surmounted by a slender spire. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans. Six children are instructed in a parochial school-house for £6 per annum, the bequest of Mary Sprigg, in 1816.

SUTTON-VALENCE (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of HOLLINGBOURN, hundred of EYBORNE, lathe of AYLESFORD, W. division of KENT, 6 miles (S. E. by S.) from Maidstone, on the road to Tenterden; containing 1138 inhabitants. The soil in the Weald, to a considerable extent, is heavy clay, but on the hill is lighter, and more easily worked; hops, corn, and grass are produced, and fruit is grown in large quantities for the supply of the London market. The village, called Town-Sutton, is situated below the ridge of hills bounding the Weald, and commands fine views of several towns and villages, and an extensive prospect towards the sea, in the direction of Ashford. A strong castle formerly stood here, part of the keep of which still remains, a highly picturesque ruin, overgrown with ivy, and having branches of trees sprouting from its walls. The living is a vicarage, with that of East Sutton annexed, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 7.; net income, £318; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church was rebuilt in 1828, in a plain substantial style, with a square tower. There is a place of worship for Independents; also a free grammar school, founded pursuant to letters-patent of the 18th of Elizabeth, and endowed with £35 per annum, and with £200, the gift of Francis Robins, in 1721, to found two exhibitions, of

£10 a year each, in St. John's College, Cambridge. Mr. Lambe has founded and endowed almshouses for six widows.

SUTTON-VENY (ST. LEONARD), a parish, in the union and hundred of WARMINSTER, Warminster and S. divisions of WILTS, 3 miles (S. E.) from Warminster; containing 855 inhabitants, and comprising by measurement 3404 acres. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £21; net income, £800; patron, G. W. W. Heneage, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1799; there is a rectory-house, and the glebe contains 814 acres. The church has been enlarged. There are places of worship for Baptists and Independents; and a parochial school is supported by subscription.

SUTTON-WALDRON (ST. BARTHOLOMEW), a parish, in the union of SHAFTESBURY, hundred of REDLANE, Shaston division of DORSET, 5 miles (S.) from Shaftesbury; containing 251 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road between Blandford and Shaftesbury, and comprises 1012 acres, of which 297 are common or waste land; the surface is considerably diversified, and is watered by a rivulet which falls into the Stour. A small quantity of copper-ore has been found. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 4½.; net income, £169; patron, H. C. Sturt, Esq. The glebe contains 20 acres.

SUTTON-WICK, a township, in the parish of SUTTON-COURTNEY, union of ABINGDON, hundred of OCK, county of BERKS, 1¾ mile (S. by W.) from Abingdon; containing 282 inhabitants, and comprising 1230a. 1r. 17p. Tithes belonging to the Dean of Windsor were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1801.

SWABY (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of LOUTH, Marsh division of the hundred of CALCEWORTH, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 7½ miles (S. E. by S.) from Louth, on the road to Spilsby; containing, with the hamlet of White-Pit, 391 inhabitants. The parish comprises 1518 acres; the land is chiefly arable, and the soil is a clayey earth, much mixed with flint and stone, with occasional veins of sand, and resting upon a substratum of limestone. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 1. 10.; net income, £330; patrons, the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church is a neat brick edifice, erected in 1828, and contains 150 sittings, of which above half are free. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a national school has been established. At the inclosure of the parish, in 1791, 13 acres of land, producing £10 per annum, were allotted for church purposes.

SWADLINCOTE, a township, in the parish of CHURCH-GRESLEY, union of BURTON-UPON-TRENT, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, 4¾ miles (S. E. by E.) from Burton; containing 858 inhabitants. The township comprises 606a. 2r. 13p., of which about 13 acres are plantations, chiefly of fir, and the remainder arable and pasture; the soil is a strong clay, and the substratum abounds with coal, which is wrought to a considerable extent, and with various kinds of clay for pottery and earthenware, of which extensive works have been established. Railroads have been formed from the coal-mines and potteries to the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal, for the conveyance of the produce. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWAFFHAM (ST. PETER AND ST. PAUL), a market-town, parish, and the head of a union, in the hundred of SOUTH GREENHOE, W. division of NORFOLK, 28 miles (W. by N.) from Norwich, and 95 (N. N. E.) from London; containing 3358 inhabitants. This ancient town is situated on an eminence commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country, and is remarkable for the salubrity of its air, and the longevity of its inhabitants; it consists of four principal and several inferior streets, lighted with gas, and the houses in general are well built, and supplied with water from numerous wells. A book club is supported by the clergy and gentry in the town and neighbourhood, and a neat theatre has been erected; an elegant assembly-room, on the market-hill, has been repaired and modernised, at a considerable expense, and subscription assemblies are held occasionally. On the north-west side of the town is a fine heath, of some thousand acres, admirably adapted for the diversions of racing and coursing; and a meeting for coursing, which is the parent society of others in the county, takes place on the Monday after the 3rd of November, and is numerously attended. A charter for a market and two annual fairs was granted by King John to one of the earls of Richmond, who were anciently lords of the manor, and had a prison in the town; the market is on Saturday, and fairs are held on May 12th, for sheep, and July 21st and November 3rd, for sheep and cattle. The market-place, a fine area surrounded by handsome buildings, contains a beautiful cross, erected in 1783, by Lord Orford, and consisting of a circular dome, supported on eight pillars, and crowned with a figure of Ceres. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions on the first and last Saturdays in the month; the general quarter-sessions take place here, by adjournment from Norwich, and manorial courts leet and baron occur in April or May. This is the chief town for the western division of the county, and the election of the members for the division is held here. A shire-hall has been recently erected, and there is a house of correction for the several adjoining hundreds, built in the reign of Elizabeth. The New Bridewell was erected in 1787, and is adapted for the reception of more than fifty prisoners; attached is a chapel, of which the chaplain, who is elected by the magistrates, has a stipend of £200 per annum. A treadmill was erected in 1822, and a residence for the governor in 1825.

The parish comprises 7563*a. 3r. 28p.*, of which 4524 are arable, 2853 pasture, meadow, and heath, 55 woodland, and 131 roads, buildings, &c. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Threpton annexed, valued in the king's books at £14. 5. 10.; patron, Bishop of Norwich; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The great tithes have been commuted for £1125, and the vicarial for £533. 10.; the appropriate glebe contains 110 acres, and the vicarial 53. The church, which is approached by a fine avenue of lime-trees, is a splendid and spacious cruciform structure in the later English style, with a stately embattled tower crowned by turrets, and surmounted by a well-proportioned spire. The nave is separated from the aisles by lofty ranges of slender clustered columns sustaining the roof, which is richly ornamented with figures of angels, carved in chesnut wood; there are several neat monuments, and in the north transept is an altar-tomb, with the recumbent effigy of John Botewright, D.D. In a library attached to the church, and which was principally the gift of the Spelman family, is a curious missal. The north aisle is commonly reported to have been built by John Chapman, a tinker of the town, concerning which circumstance a curious monkish legend prevails, and there are various devices in different parts of the church, most probably rebuses on the name of Chapman. Here was anciently a free chapel, dedicated to St. Mary; and about half a mile distant, in a hamlet once called Guthlac's Stow, now Goodluck's Close, stood another, dedicated to St. Guthlac. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a free school founded in 1724, by Nicholas Hamond, Esq., who bequeathed £500 for erecting a school-house, and £500 for the instruction of 20 boys. Aspal's manor, comprising 100 acres, with a right of common of 300 acres, was granted to the town by Edward VI., for the repair of the church, high roads, &c., and for the relief of the poor; the income is £160 per annum. Adjoining the churchyard is a large green croft, bequeathed by Dr. Botewright, as a place of exercise for the inhabitants, and on which were formerly butts for the practice of archery. The union of Swaffham comprises 33 parishes or places, and contains a population of 13,084. At a place called Priors Thornes, about a mile distant, was a cell or hermitage, for the reception of pilgrims on their way to the shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham. John de Swaffham, a man of great learning, raised to the see of Bangor by Pope Gregory II., was a native of the town.

SWAFFHAM-BULBECK (ST. MARY), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Newmarket; containing 806 inhabitants. The parish is partly bounded by the Cam, from which river is a cut called Swaffham Lode, navigable to the village. It is situated about two miles from the Cambridge and Newmarket road, and comprises 4000 acres; the soil is chiefly chalk and marl, and a quarry of chalk marl is extensively worked for building purposes. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £16. 10.; net income, £219; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of Ely: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1798. The church, supposed to have been built in the reign of Edward III., contains 400 sittings, of which 300 are free. A charity school, established in 1721, is endowed with £20 per annum, and conducted on the national plan. Here are the remains of a Benedictine nunnery founded before the reign of John, by one of the Bolebecs, and dedicated to St. Mary: at the Dissolution, its revenue was estimated at £46. 18. 10.; the house is now occupied by paupers.

SWAFFHAM-PRIOR (ST. CYRIAC), a parish, in the union of NEWMARKET, hundred of STAINE, county of CAMBRIDGE, 5½ miles (W. by N.) from Newmarket; containing, with part of Reach hamlet, 1226 inhabitants. This parish, which includes a portion of Newmarket heath, is bounded on the north by the Cam; and several navigable drains, or lodes, communicating with that river, pass through it. A market and fair, anciently granted to the prior of Ely, have been long disused. The living consists of the consolidated vicarages of St. Cyriac and St. Mary, the former valued in the king's books at £16. 18. 11½., and the latter at £14. 12. 11.; net income, £301; patrons, alternately, the Bishop, and the Dean and Chapter of Ely, the latter the appropriators. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1805. There were formerly two churches in the same cemetery; that of St. Mary has fallen to ruin, except the tower, which, from the peculiarity of its situation, forms an interesting object; that dedicated to St. Cyriac has been lately rebuilt. There are an endowed school and a national school.

SWAFIELD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the TUNSTEAD and HAPPING incorporation, hundred of TUNSTEAD, E. division of NORFOLK, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. by E.) from North Walsham; containing 167 inhabitants. It comprises £826*a. 3r. 25p.*, of which about 617 acres are arable, and 126 pasture; the river Ant, on which is a flour-mill, bounds the parish on the south, and the Dilham and North Walsham canal passes through it. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6, and in the patronage of the Crown, in right of the duchy of Lancaster: the tithes have been commuted for £220. The church is in the later English style, and has a square embattled tower; the chancel was formerly separated from the nave by a screen, the lower part of which still remains, distinguished by compartments, containing beautifully painted and gilded representations of the Apostles.

SWAINBY, with ALLERTHORPE, a township, in the parish of PICKHILL, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HALLIKELD, N. riding of YORK, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Bedale; containing 31 inhabitants, and comprising 86*8a. 2r. 37p.* The village is said to have been once considerable, and a Præmonstratensian abbey was founded here by Hellewise, daughter of Ranulph de Glanville, in the time of Henry II., but was afterwards removed to Coverham. Some articles of cutlery are manufactured. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £22, and the impropriate for £153. 8., payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. There are places of worship for Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.

SWAINBY, a village, in the township and parish of WHORLTON, union of STOKESLEY, W. division of the liberty of LANGBAURGH, N. riding of YORK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Stokesley. It is situated on the road between that town and Thirsk, and is moderately populous: some quarries are worked in the vicinity. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The tithes have been commuted for £241. 11. 3., of which £226. 16. 6. are payable to the improprators, and £14. 14. 9. to the perpetual curate of Whorlton.

SWAINSCOE, with BLORE, a township, in the parish of BLORE, N. division of the hundred of TOTMONSLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 4 miles (W. N. W.) from Ashbourn; containing 273 inhabitants.

SWAINSTHORPE, a parish, in the union of HENSTEAD, hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. by W.) from Norwich; containing 293 inhabitants. It is on the road from London to Norwich, by way of Long Stratton, and comprises 819*a. 9p.*, of which about 656 acres are arable, 140 pasture, and 21 wood. The living consists of the united rectories of St. Mary and St. Peter, with that of Newton-Flotman, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 4.; net income, £422; patron, R. K. Long, Esq. The tithes have been commuted for £245. The church dedicated to St. Peter is a small ancient structure: that of St. Mary was taken down at the Reformation. The Henstead union work-house is situated here.

SWAINSWICK (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BATH, hundred of BATH-FORUM, E. division of SOMERSET, 3 miles (N. by E.) from Bath; containing 572 inhabitants. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 17. 8., and in the gift of Oriel College, Oxford: the impropriate tithes have been commuted for £56, and the rectorial for £190; the glebe comprises 15 acres. The church contains the remains of the celebrated William Prynne, the active statesman and public writer during the reign of Charles I., and who was born at this place in 1600.

SWALCLIFFE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundreds of BANBURY, BLOXHAM, and DORCHESTER, county of OXFORD, 6 miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury; containing, with the chapelries of Epwell and East Shutford, and the townships of West Shutford, Sibford-Ferris, and Sibford-Gower, 1924 inhabitants, of whom 338 are in Swalcliffe township. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £209; patrons and improprators, the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1789. There are chapels of ease at Epwell and East Shutford; and a district church was consecrated at Sibford on the 17th of June 1840. One-third of the sum of £72. 15. per annum, arising from certain land bequeathed by an unknown individual, is paid in support of a school, and the residue for other charitable purposes.

SWALECLIFFE (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BLEAN, hundred of BLEANGATE, lathe of ST. AUGUSTINE, E. division of KENT, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N.) from Canterbury; containing 165 inhabitants. The village, delightfully situated on rising ground, was the occasional residence of William of Wykeham, and in the old parsonage-house is a mantel-piece said to have been designed by him. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of Earl Cowper: the tithes have been commuted for £315, and the glebe comprises 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a parsonage-house, erected by the late incumbent. The church contains some costly monuments to the families of Wykeham, Loggin, and Duncombe.

SWALLOW (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (E. N. E.) from Caistor; containing 221 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 10. 10.; net income, £408; patron, Lord Yarborough. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1805.

SWALLOWCLIFFE, a parish, in the union of TISBURY, hundred of DUNWORTH, Hindon and S. divisions of WILTS, 8 miles (E. N. E.) from Shaftesbury; containing 282 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Salisbury to Shaftesbury, and comprises about 1250 acres: quarries are in operation, producing an excellent stone, which is applied to the purposes of building and sculpture. The living constitutes the endowment of a prebend in the church of Heytesbury, in the patronage of the Dean of Salisbury, as Dean of Heytesbury, valued in the king's books at £3. 13. 4.; net income, £38. There is a glebe-house, recently built, with two or three acres of land. The old church, which was very ancient, having become much dilapidated, divine service was discontinued for a time; but a new edifice has lately been erected, chiefly at the expense of the Earl of Pembroke and his family. There is an allotment of about 20 acres belonging to the poor, let for £20 per annum.

SWALLOWFIELD (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of WOKINGHAM, partly in the hundred of CHARLTON, county of BERKS, but chiefly in the hundred of AMESBURY, Wokingham and S. divisions of WILTS, 5 miles (S. by E.) from Reading; containing 1134 inhabitants, of whom 722 are in Wilts. The parish comprises 2197*a.* 2*r.* 33*p.*, of which about 1564 acres are arable, 199 meadow and pasture, 200 wood, and 200 waste, &c. A fair is held on June 9th. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Shinfield: the improper tithes have been commuted for £293. 12., and the vicarial for £100. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The celebrated Lord Chancellor Clarendon, after his retirement from public life, resided at the manor-house, then the property of his son, where he wrote The History of the Rebellion.

SWALWELL, a township, in the parish of WHICKHAM, union of GATESHEAD, W. division of CHESTER ward, N. division of the county of DURHAM, 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Gateshead; containing 1611 inhabitants. Here are the extensive iron-works of Messrs. Edward Robson and Co., and those of Crowley Millington, Esq., and Partners, where anchors of the largest size, chain-cables, pumps, ship-windlasses, cabin-stoves, cylinders for steam-engines, cranes, and every other description of cast and wrought iron and steel articles are produced, affording employment to the greater number of the population. The latter factory was founded about the year 1690, by Sir Ambrose Crowley, who was originally a blacksmith. The village lies close to the Derwent, near its junction with the Tyne, and over the former stream is a bridge at this place, which forms a handsome object from the grounds of Axwell Park. There are places of worship for Primitive Methodists, Wesleyans, and Scottish Seceders. William Shield, the celebrated musical composer, was a native of the township.

SWAMPTON, a tything, in the parish of BOURNE, union of WHITCHURCH, hundred of EYINGAR, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 925 inhabitants.

SWANAGE, county of DORSET.—See SWANWICH.

SWANBOURNE (St. SWITHIN), a parish, in the union of WINSLOW, hundred of COTTESLOE, county of BUCKINGHAM, 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E.) from Winslow; containing 679 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £9. 9. 7., and has a net income of £158; it is in the patronage of the Crown, and the improprators are Messrs. Graves and Lamb. The tithes were commuted for land and money payments in 1762. There is a place of worship for Baptists. Nicholas Godwin, in 1712, bequeathed a rent-charge of £15, now carried to the account of a national school.

SWANLAND, a township, partly in the parish of NORTH FERRIBY, and partly in that of KIRK-ELLA, union of SCULCOATES, county of the town of HULL, and locally in the E. riding of YORK, 6 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles (W. by S.) from Hull; containing 456 inhabitants. It comprises by computation nearly 3000 acres, including several scattered farms on the eastern side of the wolds.

Brafford's Hall, a handsome mansion of white brick, is seated at the head of a romantic dell; and Swanland Hall is an elegant seat, commanding an extensive view of the river Humber. The village is most pleasantly situated on a bold acclivity, and on the road from Hull to Welton, about a mile north-by-east of Ferriby. The improper tithes have been commuted for £142. 12.

SWANLEY, a hamlet, in the parish of SUTTON-AT-HONE, union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT; containing 534 inhabitants.

SWANMORE, a tything, in the parish of DROXFORD, hundred of BISHOP'S-WALTHAM, Droxford and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON; containing 405 inhabitants.

SWANNINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish of WHITWICK, union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. by S.) from Ashby; containing 744 inhabitants. One of the termini of the Leicester and Swannington railway is situated here; the line is about 16 miles long, and is used for conveying the coal, limestone, granite, and other kinds of stone quarried in this neighbourhood. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWANNINGTON (St. MARGARET), a parish, in the union of ST. FAITH, hundred of EYNSFORD, E. division of NORFOLK, 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E.) from Reepham; containing 358 inhabitants. It comprises 1424*a.* 13*p.*, of which about 892 acres are arable, 253 pasture, 34 woodland, and 227 common. The living is a discharged rectory, with the vicarage of Wood-Dalling annexed, valued in the king's books at £6. 11. 5., and in the gift of Trinity Hall, Cambridge: the tithes have been commuted for £403. 17., and the glebe comprises 14 acres, with a parsonage-house, considerably enlarged and improved in 1842. The church, which is partly in the decorated and partly in the later English style, has a low square tower.

SWAN, OLD, a chapelry, in the parish of WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, union and hundred of WEST DERBY, county of LANCASTER, 3 miles (E.) from Liverpool, on the road to Manchester and Birmingham. Some extensive glass-works are carried on, and one of the largest roperies in the kingdom; and the Liverpool cattle-market is held here. The living is a perpetual curacy; income, £150; patron and incumbent, the Rev. Thomas Gardner. The chapel, dedicated to St. Ann, is a plain neat edifice, erected in 1831, by the late Thomas Gardner, Esq., at an expense of £2000, aided by a grant of £400 from the Incorporated Society. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

SWANSCOMBE (St. PETER AND St. PAUL), a parish, in the union of DARTFORD, hundred of AXTON, DARTFORD, and WILMINGTON, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 4 miles (E.) from Dartford; containing, with the hamlet of Greenhithe, 1703 inhabitants. The name of this place, anciently Swenes-Camp, is supposed to have been derived from the encampment of Sweyn, King of Denmark, who, on arriving in England, landed his forces here. It is also celebrated as the spot where the Kentish men, carrying boughs of trees in their hands, and prepared for battle, surrounded William the Conqueror, from whom they obtained a confirmation of their ancient privileges, particularly of the law of gavel-kind, the existence of which, then confined almost exclusively to this county, appears, in the opinion of Camden, to confirm the authority of the monkish historian who narrates the event. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Thames, from which the village, surrounded with woods, has an interesting and picturesque appearance: from Greenhithe large quantities of chalk and lime are sent to the neighbouring ports, and in the hamlet of Swanscombe-Cross are a large manufactory of Roman-cement, and some extensive chalk-works, affording employment to more than 100 persons. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £25. 13. 4.; net income, £612; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Sydney-Sussex College, Cambridge. The church is principally in the early English style.

SWANTHORPE, a tything, in the parish and hundred of CRONDALL, union of HARTLEY-WINTNEY, Odiham and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 3 miles (S. E.) from Odiham; containing 72 inhabitants.

SWANTON-ABBOTT (St. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of AYLISHAM, hundred of SOUTH ERPINGHAM, E. division of NORFOLK, 1 mile (N.) from Scottow; containing 501 inhabitants. It is on the road from Cromer to Norwich. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 10., and in the gift of the Rev. W. Jex Blake: the tithes have been commuted for £274. 11., and the glebe comprises 19½ acres. The church has a square embattled tower, and contains a brass with the effigy of Stephen Multon, rector in the 15th century, who was interred in the chancel. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; and a fund arising from bequests is distributed among the poor, to whom, also, 50 acres were allotted at the inclosure for fuel.

SWANTON-MORLEY (ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of MITFORD and LAUNDITCH, hundred of LAUNDITCH, W. division of NORFOLK, 3½ miles (N. E.) from East Dereham; containing 779 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east by the river Wensum, and comprises 2649a. 13p., of which about 2000 acres are arable, and the remainder meadow and pasture. Near the church stood the ancient manor-house of the Morley family, from whom the parish takes the affix to its name. On the banks of the Wensum is an extensive and long-established paper manufactory; and there are also some lime and whiting works. The living is a rectory, with that of Worthing annexed, valued in the king's books at £15. 10. 2½.; net income, £920; patron, Edward Lombe, Esq. The glebe comprises 16½ acres, with a handsome parsonage, built by the Rev. Henry Tacey. The church, erected by Lord Morley, in 1379, on an eminence in the centre of the village, is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a lofty square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. William Small, in 1651, bequeathed a rent-charge of £11 for teaching and apprenticing children; and the town lands yield a rental of £100, of which a moiety is appropriated to the repair of the church, and the remainder to the poor.

SWANTON-NOVERS (St. EDMUND), a parish, in the union of WALSINGHAM, hundred of HOLT, W. division of NORFOLK, 6¼ miles (S. W.) from Holt; containing 293 inhabitants. It comprises 1315a. 3r. 14p., of which about 848 acres are arable, 154 pasture and meadow, and 292 woodland. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Wood-Norton, and valued in the king's books at £4. 15. 2½.: the tithes have been commuted for £223. 10., and the glebe comprises 34a. 2r. 30p. The church contains a neat monument to John Dew, Esq. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWANWICH (St. MARY THE VIRGIN), a market-town and parish, in the union of WAREHAM and PURBECK, hundred of ROWBARROW, Wareham division of DORSET, 6 miles (E. S. E.) from Corfe-Castle, and 122 (S. W. by W.) from London; containing 1990 inhabitants. In the Saxon Chronicle this place is called Swanawic; Asser Menevensis names it Swanavine and Gnavewic, and in Domesday book it is written Suanwic and Sonwic. The earliest and principal historical circumstance on record connected with it is the destruction, by a violent storm in 877, of a Danish fleet of 120 sail, on Peveril Point, at the south-eastern entrance of the bay on which the town stands, when advancing to the relief of the Danish troops in the city of Exeter; and a similar disaster is said to have befallen another of their fleets, after its defeat by Alfred, in the same place and year. The town consists principally of a street about a mile long, with many neat houses, built and roofed with stone; and the bay having of late years become a place of resort for bathing, has led to the erection of some new houses, among which are a library containing more than 2000 volumes, and the Royal Victoria hotel, a spacious building sheltered in its different aspects from all winds, and containing hot and cold sea-water baths. The bay of Swanwich, though not large, is beautiful, and affords security for vessels of 300 tons' burthen, which can ride here very steadily except when the wind blows from the east; the sands afford pleasant walks and drives. Considerable improvements have taken place in the neighbourhood; and the mildness and salubrity of the air, possessing all the advantages of a southern climate, render the place peculiarly desirable as a winter residence. The manufacture of straw-plat and shirt-buttons employs most of the young females, and the chief occupation of the men is derived from working numerous quarries in the southern part of the parish, which produce great quantities of excellent freestone called Purbeck stone. The quarry-men are governed by local laws, or regulations, by which none but their sons, who must serve an apprenticeship of seven years, are allowed to work. The market is on Tuesday and Friday.

The parish comprises 2923 acres, of which 26 are common or waste land. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £27. 9. 9½., and in the gift of John Hales Calcraft, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £400, and there is a glebe-house, with about 15 acres of land, nearly half of which is uninclosed. The church, formerly a chapel to the vicarage of Worth-Matravers, was made parochial in 1500; the tower is lofty and of great strength, and is supposed to have been built as a watch tower when the Danes had possession of the Isle of Wight; the body of the church is of much more recent date. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. Fossils of different fish, particularly bream, are frequently found in the quarries; and among the bones discovered in the isle of Purbeck are large vertebræ and bones of the iguanodon, megalosaurus, and plesiosaurus, a fragment of a femur, bones of large and small crocodiles, and of various reptiles. There are two or three mineral springs, but they have not been used for medicinal purposes.

SWANWICK, a hamlet, in the parish of ALFRETON, union of BELPER, hundred of SCARSDALE, N. division of the county of DERBY, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (S. by W.) from Alfreton; containing 1319 inhabitants. In the neighbourhood are extensive collieries. There are places of worship for Baptists and Wesleyans; also a free school, erected in 1740, and endowed by Mrs. Elizabeth Turner with £500, which were laid out in the purchase of a house and lands of the annual value of £60.

SWARBY (ST. MARY AND ALL SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of ASHWARDHURN, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 4 miles (S. S. W.) from Sleaford; containing, with the hamlet of Crofton, 200 inhabitants. The parish comprises 700 acres, and the road from London to Lincoln runs through it, about half a mile from the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; net income, £60; patron and impropiator, Sir T. Whichcote, Bart. The tithes of the lordship of Swarby were commuted for land in 1795; the glebe contains 49 acres. The church is a handsome structure, principally in the later English style.

SWARDESTON (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of HENETAD, hundred of HUMBLEYARD, E. division of NORFOLK, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. S. W.) from Norwich; containing 359 inhabitants. The road from Norwich to New Buckenham runs through the village. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6; patron and incumbent, the Rev. J. H. Steward; impropiator, I. T. Kemp, Esq. There is a glebe of about 25 acres. The church is chiefly in the early and decorated styles, with a square embattled tower; the nave is separated from the chancel by the remains of a beautifully-carved screen, and the church and burial-ground contain numerous memorials of the Kemp family, who have resided here ever since the Reformation, and of whom is the present impropiator, who occupies the rectory-house, situated in tastefully laid-out grounds near the church. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWARKESTONE (ST. JAMES), a parish, in the union of SHARDLOW, hundred of REPTON and GRESLEY, S. division of the county of DERBY, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Derby; containing 321 inhabitants. This place was distinguished during the civil war by the efforts of Colonel Hastings, in 1643, to secure the passage of the Trent for the royalists, for which purpose he threw up some works at the bridge, and also placed a garrison in the house of Sir John Harpur here, which he fortified for that purpose; but Sir John Gell, marching hither with Sir George Gresley's troops, after an obstinate defence, succeeded in driving the garrison from their post, and obtained the pass of the river for the parliamentarians. The village is pleasantly situated on the river, over which is a bridge 1304 yards in length, comprising additional arches beyond the span of the stream (which is 138 yards in breadth), to secure a passage over the low grounds, which are usually flooded in winter. The Trent and Mersey canal is here joined by the Derby canal. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5; net income, £182; patron, Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church is principally in the Norman style, but much disfigured by the insertion of modern windows.

SWARLAND, a township, in the parish of FELTON, union of ALNWICK, E. division of COQUETDALE ward, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. by W.) from Alnwick; containing 194 inhabitants. It is on the road from Newcastle, by Berwick, to Edinburgh, and comprises about 1760 acres, of which 1370 are arable and pasture, and 390 wood; the surface is undulated, and the soil a strong clay. There is a flour-mill. Swarland Hall, the residence of Captain Coulson, commands fine and extensive views, embracing all the low lands towards the sea, Warkworth Castle, Felton Park, &c. An obelisk of white freestone, erected by the late Alexander Davison, Esq., to the memory of Admiral Lord Nelson, stands in Swarland Park, close to the road.

SWARRATON, a parish, in the union of ALRESFORD, hundred of BOUNTISBOROUGH, Winchester and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. N. W.) from New Alresford; containing 108 inhabitants. The parish is a little to the east of the road from Southampton to Basingstoke, and comprises 743 acres by admeasurement, of which 580 are arable, 100 pasture, and 60 woodland; the soil is a poor chalky earth. A stream from one of the sources of the river Itchen runs through the valley. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 5. $2\frac{1}{2}$, and in the gift of Lord Ashburton: the tithes have been commuted for £110; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains $15\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church, a neat edifice, has been ornamented with a spire within the last thirty years, and contains about 400 sittings, above half of which are free.

SWATON (ST. MICHAEL), a parish, in the union of SLEAFORD, wapentake of AVELAND, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, $5\frac{3}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Falkingham; containing 304 inhabitants. The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Spanby annexed, valued in the king's books at £12. 7. 1.; the net income is £514, and the patronage and impropiation belong to Mrs. Knapp. The tithes were commuted for land in 1805, under an inclosure act.

SWAVESEY (ST. ANDREW), a parish, in the union of ST. IVES, hundred of PAPWORTH, county of CAMBRIDGE, $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles (E. S. E.) from St. Ives; containing 1273 inhabitants. This parish, bounded on the north and north-west by the river Ouse, and on the south by the Huntingdon and Cambridge road, comprises 3891a. 2r. 20p., including 1089 acres of common or waste land. A market and a fair were granted in 1243, to the family of Zouch, the site of whose ancient castle is about half a mile south-west from the church. At the inclosure of the waste, by act of parliament in 1838, an allotment of 5 acres was made for the purpose of recreation. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 6. 8.; patrons, the Master and Fellows of Jesus' College, Cambridge; appropriator, the Bishop of Ely. The great tithes have been commuted for £750, and the vicarial for £265; the appropriate glebe contains 72 acres. The church anciently belonged to a priory of Black monks founded here, soon after the Conquest, as a cell to the abbey of St. Sergius and St. Bachus, and that of St. Briocus, Angiers; at the suppression it was given by Richard II. to the priory of St. Anne, Coventry, and some slight remains of the buildings are still visible. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SWAY, an ecclesiastical district, in the parish of BOLDRE, union of LYMINGTON, hundred of CHRISTCHURCH, Lymington and S. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W.) from Lymington; containing 676 inhabitants. The church was consecrated in March, 1839, having been built in the early English style, at a cost of £900, and endowed with £1000; it contains 380 sittings, of which 300 are free, and the patronage belongs to the Bishop of Winchester. There is a place of worship for Baptists.

SWAYFIELD (St. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (S. by W.) from Corby; containing 265 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 2. 11., and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £391. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1797.

SWEETHOPE, a township, in the parish of THOCKRINGTON, union of BELLINGHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{3}{4}$ miles (E. by S.) from Bellingham; containing 9 inhabitants. This place forms the northern division of the parish, occupied in sheep-walks, and comprises a small lake, the chief source of the river Wansbeck, of which the Sweethope burn is a tributary.

SWEFFLING (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of PLOMESGATE, E. division of SUFFOLK, $2\frac{3}{8}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Saxmundham; containing 308 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £9. 2. $8\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of T. Williams, Esq.; there is a parsonage-house, built in 1831, with a glebe of 10 acres, and the tithes have been commuted for £300. The church is entered on the south by a Norman doorway. There are town lands which let for about £12 per annum, and five small tenements for the poor.

SWELL (St. CATHERINE) a parish, in the union of LANGPORT, hundred of ABDICK and BULSTONE, W. division of SOMERSET, 4 miles (W. S. W.) from Langport; containing 109 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, annexed to that of Fivehead, and valued in the king's books at £5. 10. 5.: the tithes have been commuted for £168. 9., and the glebe comprises 28 acres.

SWELL, LOWER (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of SLAUGHTER, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (W.) from Stow; containing 352 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the Cheltenham and Northampton road, and comprises 2223 acres by admeasurement: stone is quarried for building and for pavements. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 12. $3\frac{1}{2}$.; net income, £100; patrons and appropriators, the Dean and Canons of Christ-Church, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and annual money payments in 1789; a house was erected by the incumbent, in 1838, and the glebe contains 105 acres. The church is a small and very ancient structure, originally built in the early Norman style, but altered in the reign of Henry VII. There is a chalybeate spring, occasionally used for medicinal purposes, and a neat building was erected over it in 1807.

SWELL, UPPER, a parish, in the union of STOW-ON-THE-WOLD, Upper division of the hundred of KIFTSGATE, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 1 mile (N. W.)

from Stow; containing 80 inhabitants. The parish is on the road between Stow and Tewkesbury, and comprises about 1294 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil a thin earth resting upon oolitic limestone. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £6. 14. 6.; net income, £85; patron, Charles Pole, Esq.: the tithes were commuted at the inclosure for a modus, and there is a parsonage-house, with a glebe of about 7 acres. The church is ancient, but was partly rebuilt in 1815. The Roman Fosse-way bounds the parish on the east.

SWEPSTONE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, $4\frac{3}{4}$ miles (S. by E.) from Ashby; containing, with the hamlets of Newton-Burgoland and Newton-Nethercote, 614 inhabitants. It is on the road from Burton to Hinckley, and comprises about 2000 acres, one-third of which is arable; the soil is a mixed loam of good quality, and the river Mease and the Ashby canal run through the parish. The living is a rectory, with that of Snareston annexed, valued in the king's books at £21. 18. 4.; patrons, the family of Charnell; net income, £894. The tithes of Swebstone have been commuted for £550; there is a glebe-house, and the glebe contains $71\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church is in the early English style, with a tower lately rebuilt.

SWERFORD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of CHIPPING-NORTON, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (N. E. by E.) from Chipping-Norton; containing 430 inhabitants. It comprises 1063*a. 3r. 34p.*, of which about three-fifths are arable, and the rest pasture. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £15. 7. 1.; net income, £496; patrons, the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1802. On a hill north of the church, called Castle Hill, are some remains indicating the existence of ancient military works; and according to tradition there was a camp.

SWETTENHAM, a parish, in the union of CONGLETON, hundred of NORTHWICH, S. division of the county of CHESTER; containing, with the township of Kermincham, 420 inhabitants, of whom 229 are in Swettenham township, 5 miles (N. W.) from Congleton. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £5. 1. 3.; and in the gift of the Rev. J. D'Arcey: the tithes have been commuted for £273. 10., and the glebe comprises 16 acres. The church is of brick, with a tower forming a conspicuous object in the romantic scenery on the banks of the Dane.

SWILLAND (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of BOSMERE and CLAYDON, E. division of SUFFOLK, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. by E.) from Ipswich; containing 270 inhabitants, and comprising 951*a. 1r. 9p.* The living is a discharged vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes, valued in the king's books at £7. 8. $4\frac{1}{2}$., and in the patronage of the Crown: the tithes have been commuted for £240, and the glebe contains 42 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, with a richly-ornamented Norman arch leading into it from the porch.

SWILLINGTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the Lower division of the wapentake of SKYRACK, W. riding of YORK, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Leeds; containing 565 inhabitants. This parish, which is bounded on the south by the river Aire, comprises 2487*a. 1r. 30p.*, chiefly the property of Sir John H. Lowther, Bart.; the soil is rich, and the substratum abounds with excellent coal, of which there is a colliery at Astley, a hamlet in the parish; the surface is varied, and the scenery pleasingly picturesque. Swillington Hall, the seat of Sir J. H. Lowther, an ancient mansion, has been greatly improved. The village is on the bank of the Aire, over which is a good bridge of three arches, erected in 1771; and about half a mile to the north-west of it is Leventhorpe Hall, the seat of Kirkby Fenton, Esq. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £16. 1. 8.; net income, £510; patron, Sir J. H. Lowther. The tithes were commuted for land and corn-rents in 1795; the glebe comprises 106 acres, with a house. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles, and contains several neat monuments to the Lowther family. A school was built in 1748, by Sir William Lowther, who, as lord of the manor, endowed it with 16 acres of common land; and almshouses for four widows were built by the same benefactor, and endowed with £110, for which Sir John H. Lowther pays the sum of £12 per annum. Near the glebe-house is a strong chalybeate spring.

SWIMBRIDGE (St. James), a parish, in the union of BARNSTAPLE, hundred of SOUTH MOLTON, South Molton and N. divisions of DEVON, 4 miles (S. E. by E.) from Barnstaple; containing 1746 inhabitants. The parish is on the road from London to Barnstaple, and comprises about 6000 acres: there are two quarries the material of which is burnt into lime, and one for building-stone. The village is in a hollow surrounded by verdant hills of singular formation. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Landkey. The church, surmounted with a spire, is a fine specimen of the later English style; the nave and chancel are separated by a handsomely-carved wooden screen, and the pulpit, which is of stone, is finely sculptured, and ornamented with figures of saints. A room above the vestry contains some suits of ancient armour; and in the body of the church are several monuments to the Chichester family. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Baptists.

SWINBROOK (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of WITNEY, hundred of CHADLINGTON, county of OXFORD, 2 miles (E.) from Burford; containing 218 inhabitants. The parish is situated in a valley, on the little river Windrush, about a mile from the road between Oxford and Cheltenham, and comprises 1130*a. 1r. 26p.*, of which the surface is agreeably diversified with undulations, and the soil is in some parts clayey, and in others a light earth resting upon limestone. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £57; patron and appropriator, the Chancellor of the Cathedral of Salisbury. The tithes were commuted for land in 1813; there is a parsonage-house, recently built, and the glebe consists of about an acre of land. The church is partly Norman, and partly of later date, with a remarkable tower open by an arch to the west; the chancel is separated from the nave by a finely-pointed arch resting upon columns with beautifully-ornamented capitals, and contains numerous memorials, and some costly monuments to the family of Fettiplace, who resided in a mansion here for more than four centuries. Mrs. Anne Pytts, in 1715, endowed a school with £40 per annum.

SWINBURN, with COLWELL, a township, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, union of HEXHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 7 miles (N.) from Hexham; containing 393 inhabitants. The family of Swinburn take their name from this place, which they probably held previously to the year 1272: in the reign of Edward II. it was the seat and manor of Adam de Swinburn, from whom it passed to Sir John de Widdrington, who intermarried with the heiress of the Swinburns, and whose family possessed the estate for many generations, until it was purchased, in 1695, by the Riddells. The township extends for more than three miles along, and is bounded on the west by a rivulet of the same name, tributary to the North Tyne. There is a Roman Catholic domestic chapel at Swinburn Castle, a handsome stone structure, belonging to Mr. Riddell.

SWINBURN, LITTLE, with WHITESIDE-LAW, a township, in the parish of CHOLLERTON, union of HEXHAM, N. E. division of TINDALE ward, S. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, 9½ miles (N. by E.) from Hexham; containing 57 inhabitants. It is situated north-east of the Watling-street, which separates it from the preceding township, and is about a mile and a half from Swinburn Castle.

SWINCOMB (St. Botolph), a parish, in the union of HENLEY, hundred of EWELME, county of OXFORD, 1¾ mile (N. N. W.) from Nettlebed; containing 399 inhabitants. It comprises 830 acres, of which about 200 are arable, 100 meadow and pasture, 330 down pasture, and 200 beechwood and plantation. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 9. 4½, and in the gift of the Rev. C. E. Keene: the tithes have been commuted for £415, and there is a glebe-house. A school is partly supported by endowment.

SWINDALE, a chapelry, in the parish of SHAP, WEST ward and union, county of WESTMORLAND, 12 miles (W. N. W.) from Orton; containing 73 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £56; patron, the Vicar of Shap. The chapel was built at the expense of the inhabitants, in 1749; and near it is a school, founded in 1703, by Mr. Baxter, and endowed with a rent-charge of £25.

SWINDEN, a township, in the parish of GIBBURN, union of SETTLE, W. division of the wapentake of STAINCLIFFE and EWROSS, W. riding of YORK, 7½ miles (S. E.) from Settle; containing 26 inhabitants. It comprises about 1320 acres, divided among various proprietors, of whom the Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor; the lands are wholly in pasture, and the substratum is chiefly limestone of good quality.

SWINDERBY (All Saints), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, Lower division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 8 miles (N. E.) from Newark; containing 490 inhabitants. The parish comprises by computation 2000 acres, and the Lincoln and Newark road runs through it; the surface is undulated; the soil contains several varieties of clayey and loamy earth, and limestone of the lias kind is found, but not quarried. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £3. 19. 9½, and in the gift of S. Solly, Esq.: the vicarial tithes have been partly commuted for £15 per annum; there is a vicarage-house, and the glebe, containing 176 acres, is valued at £1 per acre. The church is an ancient edifice in the Norman style, containing several memorials to members of the Disney family, former lords of the manor. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a school endowed with £5 per annum. At the inclosure of the manor in 1658, allotments were made, portions of which are let to labourers, and the profits of other parts have been appropriated to the erection of a school-house which cost £178: the rent of the land let out is distributed in coal among the poor.

SWINDON (St. LAWRENCE), a parish, in the union and hundred of CHELTENHAM, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile (N. N. W.) from Cheltenham; containing 204 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Cheltenham to Tewkesbury and Worcester, and comprises 722a. 20p., about 100 acres of which are arable, and the remainder pasture and orchard; the soil is partly clay, and partly sand. The Gloucester and Birmingham railway passes through the parish. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Rev. W. Raymond: the tithes have been commuted for £265; there is a parsonage-house, and the glebe contains 32 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church is in the Norman style, with some portions of early English, and has an hexagonal tower; a gallery has been lately built.

SWINDON, a liberty, in the parish of WOMBURN, union and S. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 2 miles (S. S. W.) from Wombourn; containing 419 inhabitants. This place, commonly called Swin, comprises 1773a. 2r. 13p., and is situated on the river Smestall, where are iron-works and several corn-mills. A large common was inclosed in 1796, and is now good turnip and barley land; and the hilly parts have been planted, and are very picturesque. The tithes have been commuted for land.

SWINDON (Holy Rood), a market-town and parish, in the union of HIGHWORTH and SWINDON, hundred of KINGSBRIDGE, Swindon and N. divisions of WILTS, 41 miles (N.) from Salisbury, and 81 (W.) from London; containing, with the tything of Eastcott, 2459 inhabitants. This place, which is mentioned in Domesday book, is pleasantly situated on the summit of a considerable eminence, commanding beautiful views of parts of Berks and Gloucestershire; the principal street is wide, containing some good houses; the general aspect of the town is prepossessing, and there is an adequate supply of water of excellent quality. Extensive quarries are worked in the immediate vicinity, producing immense blocks of a very superior material, among which are large quantities of the species called Purbeck stone, which is much used for building and other purposes. The Wilts and Berks canal passes half a mile from the town; and a reservoir covering about 70 acres, for its supply in dry seasons, has been constructed a mile and a half from it, and is partly in this parish, adding greatly to the beauty of the scenery. The Great Western railway also runs through the parish, and has one of its principal stations here, the buildings combining the accommodations of a first-rate hotel, magnificently fitted up for passengers, with the requisite arrangements for facilitating the general traffic of the line. A branch diverges from the station to Cheltenham. The market is on Monday, for corn, &c., and on every second Monday for cattle; the latter is termed the great market, and a corn-market has been established since the opening of the railway, at which considerable business is transacted. Fairs are held on the Monday before April 5th, the second Monday after May 12th, the second Monday after September 11th, and the second Monday in December, for cattle of all kinds, pedlery, &c.; and the petty-sessions for the Swindon division of the hundred take place here. The parish comprises 3135a. 1r. 31p., of which about 739 acres are arable, 2280 meadow and pasture, and 29 wood; the soil in the centre of the parish, on the hill on which the town stands, is sand, but all below and around is clay. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £17, and in the patronage of the Crown; net income, £302; impropiator, Col. Vilett. The church, situated at the south-eastern extremity of the town, is a small unadorned edifice, with a low tower, and formerly belonged to the priory of Southwick, Hants, by which establishment the vicarage was endowed with the small tithes in 1359. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. A free school, established in 1764, is supported partly by an endowment of about £40 per annum; in 1837, a national school was erected, and the two establishments were united.

SWINDON, a hamlet, in the township and parish of KIRKBY-OVERBLOW, Lower division of the wapentake of CLARO, W. riding of YORK, 6 miles (W. by S.) from Wetherby; containing 43 inhabitants. It comprises 887a. 2r. 22p., the property of the Earl of Harewood, and is on the north side of the river Wharfe, and on the road from Harewood to Ripley, one mile west of Kirkby.

SWINE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of SKIRLAUGH, partly in the N., but chiefly in the Middle, division of the wapentake of HOLDERNESS, E. riding of YORK; containing, with the chapelries of Bilton and South Skirlaugh, and the townships of Benningholme with Grange, Coniston, Ellerby, Ganstead, Marton, North Skirlaugh, Thirtleby, Wyton, and part of Arnold, 1703 inhabitants, of whom 227 are in the township of Swine, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Hull. This place, which is of considerable antiquity, belonged at the time of the Domesday survey to the archbishops of York, under whom the manor was held successively by the Hiltons, Meltons, D'Arcys, and Micklethwaytes, from which last it passed to the family of the Earl of Shaftesbury, the present proprietor. In the reign of Stephen a convent for Cistercian nuns was founded here by Robert de Verli, and dedicated to St. Mary; the church and part of the conventual buildings were greatly damaged by fire in 1367, but the establishment continued till the Dissolution, when its revenue was returned at £134. 6. 9. The parish comprises 13,530 acres by admeasurement, of which about one-third are arable, 200 woodland and plantations, and the remainder meadow and pasture; the surface is generally level, and the soil rich and various. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8; net income, £102; patrons, the Wilberforce family; impropiator, the Earl of Shaftesbury. The church consists of the chancel of the ancient conventual church, to which aisles have been added; the tower was rebuilt in 1787; the east window, of seven cinquefoiled lights, enriched with bold tracery, is of lofty dimensions, and rises above the roof of the chancel, which has been lowered. There is a chapel of ease at North Skirlaugh; and in the village is a place of worship for Wesleyans. The shaft of an ancient cross is still remaining, apparently of the same date as the convent. On the north-west of the village is an inclosure of about 10 acres in extent, supposed to have been a Roman camp; the ramparts and fosse are discernible, and in a field near the site, a Roman urn has been discovered by the plough, containing numerous copper coins in good preservation.

SWINEFLEET, a chapelry, in the parish of WHITGIFT, union of GOOLE, Lower division of the wapentake of OSGOLDCROSS, W. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (E. S. E.) from Goole; containing 1145 inhabitants. This chapelry, which is bounded on the north by the river Ouse, contains by computation 1750 acres of fertile land, of level surface. The village, which is spacious and well built, consists of a long range of houses on the banks of the Ouse, and was formerly of some importance. Henry Laci, Earl of Lincoln, and lord of this place, as part of the honour of Pontefract, obtained for the inhabitants the grant of a market on Thursday, and of a fair for three days, commencing on the morrow after the Exaltation of the Cross; but both have been long discontinued. The chapel, built about 80 years since, is a very homely structure: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £127; patron, the Vicar of Whitgift; impropiator, A. R. Worsop, Esq. There are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; also schools in connexion with them.

SWINESHEAD (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of ST. NEOT'S, hundred of LEIGHTONSTONE, county of HUNTINGDON, though locally in the hundred of STODDEN, county of BEDFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. W. by W.) from Kimbolton; containing 294 inhabitants. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12. 13. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of the Duke of Manchester: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1808.

SWINESHEAD (St. Mary), a decayed market-town and parish, in the union of BOSTON, wapentake of KIRTON, parts of HOLLAND, county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Boston; containing, with the chapelry of Chapel-Hill, 2079 inhabitants. An abbey for Cistercian monks was founded here by Robert de Greslie, in 1134, the revenue of which at the Dissolution was valued at £175. 19. 10.; many valuable coins and several skeletons have, at various periods, been dug up near the spot, and, in 1825, on sinking a well, one of the latter was discovered, which measured six feet four inches. King John, in passing the Cross Keys wash, near this place, lost his carriages and baggage, and escaped to the monastery only with his life, where he died. The ruins of the monastery have entirely disappeared, though its site is still visible; and a mansion, recently modernised, was erected with a portion of its materials, about two centuries since. The sea formerly flowed up to the town; near the market-place was a harbour; and about thirty years since, a bridge was taken down, which crossed a river then navigable for small craft, but now choked up. The South Forty-foot and other drains run through the parish; and an act was passed in 1840, for the more effectual drainage of certain lands. The market, nearly disused, is on Thursday; and a fair is held on October 2nd. The parish comprises 6725 acres, of which the surface is flat, and the soil varies in different parts, containing portions of loam, sand, and clay. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £14. 9.; net income, £240; patrons and impropiators, the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. The glebe contains about 60 acres; the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1773. The church is a handsome edifice, with a lofty spire. A free school was founded in 1720, by Thomas Cowley, Esq., who endowed it with land producing £35. per annum, together with a small surplus for clothing the poor, who also receive from bequests £200 a year. About a quarter of a mile north-westward of the town is a circular Danish encampment, called the Man-war-rings, about 60 yards in diameter, and surrounded by a double fosse.

SWINESIDE, a hamlet, in the chapelry of HORSEHOUSE, parish of COVERHAM, union of LEYBURN, wapentake of HANG-WEST, N. riding of YORK, 7 miles (S. W.) from Middleham. The tithes are attached to the parochial church of Coverham, and a considerable portion of the lands to that of Spennithorne. In 1692, Thomas Foster left an estate here, one-fourth to the incumbent of the parish for his own use, and the other three-fourth parts to him and the churchwardens for distribution among the poor. An allotment of 3 acres was made to the property upon the inclosure of the moor, and the whole of the land now lets for £29 per annum, besides which there is a flag quarry called Gilbert Scarr, that produces £38 a year, and whence many slates for roofing are obtained.

SWINETHORP, an extra-parochial liberty, in the Higher division of the wapentake of BOOTHBY-GRAFFO, parts of KESTEVEN, union and county of LINCOLN, 7 miles (W. by S.) from Lincoln; containing 67 inhabitants. It comprises 1050 acres, of which about 50 are woodland; the soil is in some parts a friable clay, but in general a sandy loam; coal of very considerable thickness has been found, but never worked. The Jungle, a mansion of curious exterior, and deeply embowered in wood, is the seat of Samuel Russel Collet, Esq., lord of the manor.

SWINETHORPE, a hamlet, in the parish of SNELAND, W. division of the wapentake of WRAGGOE, parts of LINDSEY, union and county of LINCOLN; containing 19 inhabitants.

SWINFEN, a hamlet, in the parish of WEEFORD, union of LICHFIELD, S. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lichfield; containing 95 inhabitants. Swinfen Hall, a magnificent structure, built by Mr. Wyatt, father of the celebrated architect, stands in a large and well-wooded park, with a fine lawn and lake, and commands an extensive view of the country around Lichfield.

SWINFORD, a tything, in the parish of CUMNER, union of ABINGDON, hundred of HORMER, county of BERKS; containing 48 inhabitants.

SWINFORD (All Saints), a parish, in the union of LUTTERWORTH, hundred of GUTHLAXTON, S. division of the county of LEICESTER, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by S.) from Lutterworth; containing 444 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 7. 11., and has a net income of £216; the patronage and impropriation belong to Mrs. O. Cave. The church contains 100 free sittings, the Incorporated Society having granted £50 in aid of the expense.

SWINFORD, KING'S (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of STOURBRIDGE, N. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Dudley; containing 22,221 inhabitants. This parish, which is situated on the roads from Dudley to Stourbridge, and from Wolverhampton to Worcester, comprises by admeasurement 7315 acres, of which 3510 are arable, 1607 meadow and pasture, 454 woodland and plantations, and the remainder common and waste. The scenery is greatly diversified, and enlivened by numerous seats and tastefully-embellished demesnes, of which some abound with stately and valuable timber. Prestwood is an elegant mansion beautifully situated in an extensive park separated from the parish of Kinfare by the river Stour. Fir-Tree House, Summer Hill, Ashwood House, and Wordsley House, are good residences; and Lawns-Wood is a handsome structure in the Italian style, erected at a cost of £20,000, on an eminence commanding some fine views, and in a demesne which has been much improved.

The situation of this place in a country abounding with iron and coal mines, has given rise to the establishment of extensive manufactures, of which the principal are iron, tin, and glass. Facility of conveyance is afforded by the Dudley and Stourbridge, and the Staffordshire and Worcestershire, canals, which pass through the parish, and to the latter of which a railway from the principal mines was constructed by the late Earl of Dudley. The Oak-Farm Company's iron and steel works were established in 1835, for the manufacture of all kinds of iron and steel goods, including also those for which patents had been granted to James Boydell, Esq., the managing partner; they afford employment to 1300 persons. The Corbyn's Hall collieries and iron-works were established in 1818, and afford employment to about 800. The Lays iron and coal mines, established in 1835, give occupation to 450 persons; and in the Brockmoor iron and tin works, established in 1844, 300 persons are engaged. There are also some extensive works for blue bricks and tiles, which are remarkable for their durability in subterraneous buildings; numerous potteries for stone and earthenware of every kind; a wire-mill, and manufactories for nails, chains, and scythes. A court leet and baron are held annually for the manor, and the inhabitants claim exemption from tolls, under charter of Queen Elizabeth, confirmed by Charles I.; petty-sessions are held every Monday and Thursday, and a copyhold court occasionally.

The LIVING is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £17. 13. 4., and in the gift of Lord Ward: the tithes have been commuted for £800, and the glebe comprises 165 acres. The church, erected in 1831, at a cost of £10,000, on a site at Wordsley given by the late Earl of Dudley, is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a square embattled tower, and, by a special act of parliament, has been made the mother church: the parsonage-house, erected in 1838, is also a handsome building. The old parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, and now a chapel of ease, is an ancient edifice, with a massive tower, and contains monumental inscriptions to the families of Corbyn, Scott, Hodgetts, and Bendy: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £450; patron, Lord Ward. There are district churches at Brierly-Hill, Brockmoor, and Quarry-Bank; and divine service is also performed in licensed schoolrooms at Pensnett and the Oak-Farm. The Baptists, Independents, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans, have places of worship. Four national schools are supported. Holbeche House, in the parish, the residence of Sir Stephen Littleton, who, being concerned in the gunpowder plot, had fled for concealment to Rowley-Regis, was occupied by Catesby and other conspirators, who defended it as their last retreat, against the sheriff of Worcester; but, by the blowing up of their powder, Catesby and Piarcy were, with two others, killed on the spot, and several dreadfully burnt, and those who made their escape were afterwards taken and publicly executed. On Ashwood Heath are some remains of a Roman encampment; and the spa called Ladywell is partly in this parish.

SWINFORD, OLD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STOURBRIDGE, partly in the S. division of the hundred of SEISDON, S. division of the county of STAFFORD, but chiefly in the Lower division of the hundred of HALFSHIRE, Stourbridge and E. divisions of the county of WORCESTER, 1 mile (S. S. E.) from Stourbridge; containing, with the hamlet of Amblecoat, and the townships of Lye, Stourbridge, Wollaston, and Wollescott, 17,597 inhabitants, of whom 2373 are in Upper Swinford township. The parish comprises by measurement 3034 acres, of which 925 are in Upper Swinford; the inhabitants are partly employed in the making of nails, which is carried on to a considerable extent, and in the various branches connected with the trade of the town of Stourbridge. A court of requests was established under the act of the 17th of George the Third. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £26. 6. 8.; net income, £781; patron, Lord Foley: the tithes were commuted for land in 1780, with the exception of those for Amblecoat. The church was rebuilt in 1843, except the tower and spire, at a cost of £4900, raised by subscription and the profits of sermons published by the rector, aided by grants from the Incorporated and Worcester Diocesan Societies; it contains 1432 sittings, of which 756 are free. There are also churches at Stourbridge, the Lye, and Amblecoat. The Blue-coat hospital here, founded by Thomas Foley, Esq., ancestor of the noble family of that name, and endowed by him with estates now producing nearly £2300 per annum, is a commodious brick edifice, somewhat in the style of a college, pleasantly situated on the road to Bromsgrove; the number of boys is 70, who are boarded and instructed. A school at Red-hill is supported with endowments by John Wheeler and Henry Glover, Esqrs., the former of whom granted property for the instruction of twenty boys, and the latter bequeathed £400, since laid out in land, for six boys; two scholars have since been added by the trustees, who are the governors of Stourbridge grammar school, and the boys on the foundation of both these charities are taught by the same master. The remainder of Glover's endowment, after all necessary charges for the school are deducted, is distributed amongst the poor of that part of the parish which is in the county of Worcester. There are some other small endowments; and a school has been established in connexion with the National Society.

SWINGFIELD (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of ELHAM, hundred of FOLKESTONE, lathe of SHEPWAY, E. division of KENT, 5 miles (N.) from Folkestone; containing 323 inhabitants. The parish is situated near the road from Folkestone to Canterbury, and comprises 2606 acres, of which 582 are common or waste. Under an act of 1840, for the inclosure of the waste, 5 acres were allotted for the recreation of the inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £52. 10.; patron and impropiator, Sir John W. E. Brydges, Bart. A preceptory of Knights Templars was founded here before 1190, to which Sir Waresius de Valoniis and others were considerable benefactors; it subsequently became part of the possessions of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £87. 3. 3. On Swingfield common, during the agitations of 1745, the neighbouring nobility, gentry, and yeomen, to the number of several thousands, accoutred with arms and ammunition, assembled to oppose an expected invasion on the coast of Kent.

SWINHOE, a township, in the parish and N. division of BAMBROUGH ward, union of BELFORD, N. division of NORTHUMBERLAND, $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Belford; containing 118 inhabitants. It comprises 1476 acres, of which two-thirds are arable, and the remainder good pasture land, with about 100 acres of plantation, the whole the property of Mr. Tewart, of Glanton, with the exception of 160 acres belonging to the Duke of Northumberland. The surface is undulated, and the soil a strong loam; coal and limestone are in abundance, and from the clay here, draining-tiles are made to some extent. The North Sea bounds the township on the east. The tithes have been commuted for £63. 8. 8., of which £50. 2. 4. are payable to the impropiators, and £12. 18. to the perpetual curate of Bambrough.

SWINHOPE (St. HELEN), a parish, in the union of CAISTOR, wapentake of BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE, parts of LINDSEY, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (N.) from Binbrooke; containing 117 inhabitants, and comprising by admeasurement 1306 acres. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £4. 17. 8½., and in the patronage of G. Alington, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £226. 7. 7., and there are $15\frac{1}{2}$ acres of glebe.

SWINNERTON (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of STONE, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (W. N. W.) from Stone; containing 961 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 5000 acres, of which the surface is hilly, and the soil in general gravelly: the river Sow runs along the boundary on the west. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 2. 6., and in the gift of the Rev. Christopher Dodsley; the glebe contains about 60 acres. The church is an ancient edifice, in the south aisle of which, used as a parochial school, is a colossal figure of Our Saviour pointing to the wound in his side, which was discovered buried at a short distance from its present situation. There is a Roman Catholic chapel at Swinnerton Park.

SWINSTEAD (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of BOURNE, wapentake of BELTISLOE, parts of KEST-EVEN, county of LINCOLN, 2 miles (S. E.) from Corby; containing 451 inhabitants. It comprises about 1710 acres, more than half of which is arable, and the remainder pasture; the soil over a large part is wet and clayey, and the substratum solid rock and stone. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 19. 7.; net income, £80; patron and impropiator, Lord Willoughby de Eresby. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1777; the glebe contains about 100 acres. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWINTON, a chapelry, in the township of WORSLEY, parish of ECCLES, hundred of SALFORD, S. division of the county of LANCASTER, 5 miles (W.) from Manchester. Coal-mines are in operation, and about 1000 persons are employed in the cotton and silk manufacture. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £126; patron, the Vicar of Eccles. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is a cruciform structure, capable of holding 1000 persons, and was built in 1791, since which it has been twice enlarged. There are places of worship for Wesleyans, Independents, and Unitarians.

SWINTON, with WARTHERMASK, a township, in the parish of MASHAM, union of BEDALE, wapentake of HANG-EAST, N. riding of YORK, 1 mile (S. W.) from Masham; containing 214 inhabitants. The township comprises 1614a. 1r. 30p., including the small hamlet of Roomer. Swinton Park is extensive, and is embellished with fine gardens and pleasure-grounds; the Hall is spacious and very handsome, in the Tudor style, with embattled pediments, towers, and turrets. The village is seated on the west side of the river Ure. The vicarial tithes have been commuted for £36, and the impropriate for £150, payable to Trinity College, Cambridge. Many relics of antiquity have been discovered in the neighbourhood, among which are the handle of a shield of gold, and a Roman battle-axe of brass.

SWINTON, a chapelry, in the parish of APPLETON-STREET, union of MALTON, wapentake of RYEDALE, N. riding of YORK, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles (N. W. by W.) from Malton; containing 387 inhabitants. The township is situated south of the river Rye, and comprises by computation 810 acres of land: the village is distant about a mile eastward of Appleton. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans.

SWINTON, a chapelry, in the parish of WATH-UPON-DEARNE, union of ROTHERHAM, N. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. N. E.) from Rotherham; containing 1660 inhabitants. The chapelry comprises 1603a. 1r. 10p., of which 930 acres are arable, 521 meadow and pasture, 74 woodland, 64 homesteads and orchards, and 11 canal. The manufacture of china and earthenware is carried on to a considerable extent at the Don Pottery, which employs about 250 hands: a manufactory belonging to Earl Fitzwilliam, now closed, produced, some years since, a splendid dessert service for the royal table, and many articles of great taste and elegance for several of the nobility; and the Rockingham porcelain, which obtained great and deserved celebrity, was manufactured here. Earthenware is also made at Kilnhurst, a small hamlet in the township, about a mile distant from the village, and where likewise iron-works are carried on. The river Don, and the Dearne and Dove navigation, form a junction at Swinton, by the latter of which coal is brought from the collieries of Earl Fitzwilliam and others, in and near the celebrated Worsbro' Dale. The North-Midland railway, also, passes for a mile and a half through the chapelry, and has here an intermediate station, from which passengers for Doncaster and other places are conveyed by coach or passage-boats to their destination. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £160; patron, Earl Fitzwilliam.

The chapel, dedicated to St. Margaret, was rebuilt in 1817, at a cost of £6300, of which £4500 were given by Earl Fitzwilliam, with the site; it is in the later English style, has a square tower surmounted by pinnacles, and contains 500 sittings; two beautiful Norman arches were taken from the old building, one of which forms the entrance from the churchyard to the parsonage-house. The Wesleyans and Independents have each a place of worship. A national school, also used for divine service on alternate Sundays, was opened at Kilnhurst in January 1836, and is supported by Earl Fitzwilliam, the rector of Rawmarsh, and the incumbent of Swinton; and in the village of Swinton is an infants' school. Charles Green, who accompanied Captain Cook, as astronomer, was a native of the place.

SWITHLAND (St. LEONARD), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, hundred of WEST GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Mountsorrel; containing 306 inhabitants. The parish consists of about 1600 acres, of which the soil in some parts is clay, resting upon marl, and in others light cold earth, underlaid with sand and stones; the surface is pleasingly undulated, and the scenery beautiful, comprising rocky projections ornamented with wood, and the romantic outline of the Charnwood forest hills, which, with neighbouring parks and plantations, embraces nearly two sides of the boundary of the parish. Some of the inhabitants are employed in slate quarries. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 4. 7., and in the gift of the Crown, with a net income of £300: there is a parsonage-house, with about 210 acres of land. The interior of the church was handsomely fitted up by Sir John Danvers, the late lord of the manor.

SWYRE (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of UGGSOMBE, Dorchester division of DORSET, 5½ miles (S. E.) from Bridport; containing 231 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and the village is situated about one mile from the coast. A fair was granted in the 36th of Henry VIII. The living is a discharged rectory, valued in the king's books at £7. 0. 5., and in the gift of the Duke of Bedford: the tithes have been commuted for £160, and the glebe comprises 25 acres. The church, consecrated in 1503, has a lofty tower, and north and south porches. Cornua Ammonis and Lapis Judæicus, the latter exactly resembling the half of a peascod, and of a faint green colour, are found; and in different parts is dug a grey coarse marble full of shells, and which is of a black colour when polished.

SYDE, county of GLOUCESTER.—See SIDE.

SYDENHAM, a chapelry, in the parish and union of LEWISHAM, hundred of BLACKHEATH, lathe of SUTTON-AT-HONE, W. division of KENT, 8½ miles (S. S. E.) from London; containing 2915 inhabitants. This place, which formerly consisted only of a few scattered dwellings, was brought into notice by the discovery, in 1640, of a saline chalybeate spring, the waters of which, similar in their properties to those of Epsom, made it the occasional resort of invalids; and though the wells have fallen almost into disuse, yet the salubrity of the air, the pleasantness of its situation, and its proximity to the metropolis, have made it the permanent residence of numerous families of respectability, who have erected in the vicinity many handsome seats and villas. The upper part of the common commands extensive and richly-varied prospects, and the surrounding scenery possesses much beauty; the neighbourhood affords many agreeable walks, and the adjoining woods are frequented by parties from the metropolis on excursions of pleasure. The London and Croydon railway intersects the chapelry, near the church, where a station has been established. The place is within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Bromley and at Greenwich, for the recovery of debts not exceeding £5. A fair, chiefly for pleasure, is held on Trinity-Monday, and is in general well attended. The proprietary episcopal chapel here, of which the Rev. P. A. French appoints the minister, was originally a meeting-house, where Dr. John Williams, author of a Greek Concordance, officiated for many years. A district church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was erected in 1831, at an expense of £9485, and is a handsome structure of white Suffolk brick, ornamented with stone, in the later English style, and having a square embattled tower crowned by pinnacles; it contains 1000 sittings, of which 500 are free, and the nave is lighted by a range of clerestory windows, and separated from the aisles by lofty piers and arches of graceful elevation. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £240; patron, the Vicar of Lewisham. There are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans.

SYDENHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of THAME, hundred of LEWKNOR, county of OXFORD, 2¾ miles (E.) from Tetsworth; containing 438 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with those of Towersey and Tetsworth, to the vicarage of Thame: the tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1823, under an inclosure act.

SYDENHAM-DAMAREL, or SOUTH SYDENHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of TAVISTOCK, forming, with the parish of Lamerton, a distinct portion of the hundred of LIFTON, Lifton and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (W. by N.) from Tavistock; containing 369 inhabitants. The parish is separated from Cornwall by the river Tamar, and its northern extremity is crossed by the Tavistock and Launceston road; it comprises between 1000 and 1100 acres, the surface of which is hilly, and the soil in general a light earth. A mine of lead and copper was discovered a few years since; and slate is quarried, and stone for building and for the repair of roads. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £10. 6. 8., and in the gift of John Carpenter, Esq.: the tithes have been commuted for £165, and there is a parsonage-house, with a glebe containing about 80 acres. The church is a small handsome edifice.

SYDERSTONE (St. MARY), a parish, in the union of DOCKING, hundred of GALLOW, W. division of NORFOLK, 7 miles (W. N. W.) from Fakenham; containing 504 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Fakenham to Docking, and comprises by admeasurement 2511 acres, of which 2246 are arable, 62 pasture, and 203 heath or common. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 13. 4.; net income, £534; patron, the Marquess of Cholmondeley: there is a parsonage-house, with a glebe containing 45 acres. The church is chiefly in the decorated and later styles. Here are places of worship for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists.

SYDLING (St. NICHOLAS), a parish and liberty, in the union of CERNE, Cerne division of Dorset, 3 miles (W. S. W.) from Cerne-Abbas; containing 675 inhabitants. It comprises 4950a. 2r. 32p., of which about 1962 acres are arable, 2778 pasture, and 179 woodland. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £13. 1. 0½; net income, £169; patrons and impropriators, the Warden and Fellows of Winchester College. The great tithes have been commuted for £513; there is a vicarage-house, and the appropriate glebe contains 6½ acres. The church is a neat structure in the later English style, with a high embattled tower; the chancel was elegantly rebuilt by the late Sir William Smith. At Hilfield, in the parish, is a chapel of ease, erected about 1680. There is a place of worship for Independents; and a national school is supported by endowment.

SYDMONTON, a chapelry, in the parish, union, and hundred of KINGSCLERE, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. by E.) from Whitchurch; containing 151 inhabitants. The manor was given by Henry VIII. to the Kingsmill family, whose spacious mansion here was entirely remodelled in 1837. The chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, and situated in the park, has its chancel separated from the nave by a fine Norman arch.

SYERSCOTE, a township, in the parish and union of TAMWORTH, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. N. E.) from Tamworth; containing 46 inhabitants.

SYERSTON (All SAINTS), a parish, in the union of SOUTHWELL, S. division of the wapentake of NEWARK and of the county of NOTTINGHAM, 5¼ miles (S. W.) from Newark; containing 208 inhabitants. The living is annexed, with that of Coddington, to the vicarage of East Stoke: the tithes of the township of Syerston were commuted for land and a money payment in 1792. The old Fosse-road passes through the parish, which is partly bounded by the river Trent.

SYKEHOUSE, a chapelry, in the parish of FISHLAKE, union of THORNE, S. division of the wapentake of STRAFFORTH and TICKHILL, W. riding of YORK, 5 miles (N. W. by W.) from Thorne; containing 628 inhabitants. The township is bounded by the Goole canal on the north, and, including the allotments awarded to it on the inclosure of Hatfield Chase and Thorne Common, comprises 4043a. 17p., of which about one-fifth is pasture, chiefly on the west side of the river Don; the soil is various, and the lands are mostly cultivated by their proprietors, by whom they have been much improved. The chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient structure of stone, to which a tower of brick was added in 1724: the living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £45; patron, the Vicar of Fishlake. There is a place of worship for Primitive Methodists. A school is partly supported by endowment; and £20 per annum are distributed among the poor.

SYLEHAM (St. MARY), a parish, in the union and hundred of HOXNE, E. division of SUFFOLK, 3½ miles (S. W.) from Harleston; containing 399 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the north by the river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Norfolk; it comprises 1600 acres, of which 30 are common or waste. Syleham Hall, an ancient building, formerly the property of the Barrys, is now the residence of the Rev. A.

Cooper. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £70; patron and incumbent, the Rev. A. Cooper; impropriators, Miss Doughty and others. Mr. Anthony Barry, by will in 1678, settled the inappropriate tithes on the minister, and that settlement was afterwards confirmed by his son Christopher, but not the fee simple thereof. The church is an ancient edifice, partly in the early and partly in the decorated English style, with a circular tower. There was once a chapel at Esham, a hamlet in the parish.

SYMONDSBURY (St. JOHN THE BAPTIST), a parish, in the union of BRIDPORT, hundred of WHITCHURCH-CANONICORUM, Bridport division of Dorset, 1¼ mile (W. N. W.) from Bridport; containing 1316 inhabitants. It is on the road from London to Exeter, and comprises about 4000 acres; the surface is marked by several conical hills; the soil in the low grounds is a strong clay, and in other parts loam and sand. The small river Simene runs through the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £36. 3. 4., and in the gift of the family of Raymond: the tithes have been commuted for £770, and there is a parsonage-house, and a glebe containing 160 acres. The church is a large cruciform structure, partly in the early and partly in the later English style, with a tower rising from the intersection, and contains some monuments to the family of Syndercombe. There are several springs in the neighbourhood slightly impregnated with iron.

SYMOND'S-HALL, with COMBE, a tything, in the parish of WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, union of DURSLEY, Upper division of the hundred of BERKELEY, W. division of the county of GLOUCESTER, 3 miles (N. E. by E.) from Wotton; containing 576 inhabitants.

SYNFIN, with ARLESTON, a liberty, in the parish of BARROW, union of SHARDLOW, hundred of APPLETREE, S. division of the county of DERBY, 2½ miles (S. by W.) from Derby; containing 85 inhabitants.

SYRESHAM (St. JAMES), a parish, in the union of BRACKLEY, hundred of KING'S-SUTTON, S. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 4 miles (N. E.) from Brackley; containing 889 inhabitants. It is situated on the road from Brackley to Towcester, and comprises about 1770 acres: stone is quarried for building and other purposes. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13; net income, £152; patron, C. C. Dormer, Esq. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1765: there is a parsonage-house, with 33½ acres of land. The Wesleyans have a place of worship. The Rev. George Hammond, in 1755, bequeathed £400 for teaching fourteen boys; and in augmentation, Conquest Jones, in 1773, left £100.

SYSONBY, a parish, in the union of MELTON-MOWBRAY, hundred of FRAMLAND, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 1 mile (W.) from Melton-Mowbray; containing 68 inhabitants. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Melton-Mowbray.

SYSTON (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of BARROW-UPON-SOAR, E. division of the hundred of GOSCOTE, N. division of the county of LEICESTER, 5¼ miles (N. N. E.) from Leicester; containing 1421 inhabitants. The parish comprises by measurement 1768 acres; the soil is various, and in good cultivation; plaster of Paris of very fine quality is obtained. The village is situated on the road to Yarmouth, and the manufacture of stockings is carried on, affording employment to about 400 persons. The Grand Junction canal passes through the parish; and near the village is an intermediate station on the Midland-Counties' railway. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £7. 2. 7.; net income, £115; patrons and impropiators, the Vice-Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Oxford: the glebe comprises $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres, with a house. The church contains 700 sittings. There are places of worship for Particular Baptists, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans; and a national school is supported by subscription.

SYSTON (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of NEWARK, wapentake of WINNIBRIGGS and THREE, parts of KESTIVEN, county of LINCOLN, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. N. E.) from Grantham; containing 226 inhabitants. The parish is bounded on the east by the Ermin-street, and comprises 1864*a. 3r.* The Hall, which stands on the summit of a hill, and commands very extensive prospects, is surrounded by a beautiful park and gardens, containing together more than 500 acres, and has a library furnished with one of the finest selections in the country. The living is a vicarage; net income, £83; patron and impropiator, Sir J. C. Thorold, Bart. The church contains portions of the Norman and early English styles, and in the chancel are four mural monuments to members of the Thorold family. The church and burial-ground, with the distant woods of Jericho, are celebrated by Sir Walter Scott, under the name of Willingham, in his Heart of Mid-Lothian.

SYWELL (St. Peter and St. Paul), a parish, in the union of WELLINGBOROUGH, hundred of HAMFORDSHOE, N. division of the county of NORTHAMPTON, 6 miles (N. E.) from Northampton, on the road to Stamford; containing 211 inhabitants. The parish comprises by admeasurement 1950 acres, exclusively of 127*a. 24p.* occupied by Sywell woods. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £11. 1. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$; net income, £492; patron, Earl Brownlow. There is a parsonage-house, and the glebe contains 70 acres.

T

TABLEY, INFERIOR, a township, in the parish of GREAT BUDWORTH, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 3 miles (S. W. by W.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 100 inhabitants. Here was formerly a chapel, the site of which is still called Chapel field. Tabley confers the title of Baron on the family of Leicester, created July 16th, 1826, at which period the late Sir J. Fleming Leicester, Bart., a gentleman distinguished for his munificent patronage of the fine arts, and encouragement of native artists, was raised to the peerage by that title.

TABLEY, SUPERIOR, a township, in the parish of ROSTHERN, union of ALTRINCHAM, hundred of BUCKLOW, N. division of the county of CHESTER, 2 miles (W. N. W.) from Nether Knutsford; containing 510 inhabitants. Here are the ruins of an ancient chapel called, from its situation, "The chapel in the street."

TACHBROOK, BISHOP'S (St. Chad), a parish, in the union of WARWICK, partly in the Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, but chiefly in the Warwick division of the hundred of KINGTON, S. division of the county of WARWICK, 3 miles (S. E.) from Warwick; containing 723 inhabitants, of whom 648 are in the township. The parish comprises by computation 3200 acres, of which the surface is boldly undulated, and the soil in general a strong clayey earth, forming good-corn land. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £5. 13. 4.; net income, £293; patron, the Bishop of Lichfield; appropriator, the Prebendary of Tachbrook in the Cathedral: there are about 4 acres of glebe. A school, erected in 1771, is endowed with £39 per annum.

TACHBROOK-MALLORY, a hamlet, in the parish of BISHOP'S-TACHBROOK, union of WARWICK, Kenilworth division of the hundred of KNIGHTLOW, S. division of the county of WARWICK, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles (S. E. by E.) from Warwick; containing 75 inhabitants, and comprising 942 acres.

TACKLEY (St. Nicholas), a parish, in the union of WOODSTOCK, hundred of WOOTTON, county of OXFORD, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles (N. E.) from Woodstock; containing 583 inhabitants. The parish comprises 2825 acres, of which 154 are common or waste. Earth of a peculiar quality, used for flooring barns, cottages, &c., abounds. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £19. 9. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$., and in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford: the tithes have been commuted for £750; there is a parsonage-house, and the glebe contains 56 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres. The church is an ancient cruciform structure, chiefly in the early English style. There are places of worship for Wesleyans. The Roman Akeman-street passes through the parish, and separates the two manors of the Duke of Marlborough and Sir Henry Dashwood, Bart., on the latter of which two gateways of an ancient mansion built by the Harborne family still remain.

TACOLNESTON (All Saints), a parish, in the union and hundred of DEPWADE, E. division of NORFOLK, 5 miles (S. S. E.) from Wymondham; containing 518 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from New Buckenham to Norwich. The Hall, a fine brick mansion, is a good specimen of the domestic style prevalent in the 17th century, and is said to have been built in 1670, by the Browne family, who then held the estate. Edward I. granted to John de Uvedale a market to be held on Wednesdays, and two yearly fairs, all of which have fallen into disuse. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £12, and in the patronage of Mrs. Warren; net income, £498. The parsonage-house, a neat and commodious mansion, has been much improved by the Rev. W. Corbould; the glebe consists of about 33 acres. The church is partly in the early and partly in the later English style, and contains monuments to the Knipe and Gobbet families. At the inclosure, 10 acres of land were allotted to the poor. John Tasephans, prior of the Carmelite friary at Norwich, a learned and pious divine, and a powerful orator, was born here in 1404.

TADCASTER (St. Mary), a market-town and parish, chiefly in the Upper division of the wapentake of BARKSTONE-ASH, but partly in the W. division of AINSTY wapentake, W. riding of YORK; containing, with the townships of Catterton, Oxtou, and Stutton with Hazlewood, 3188 inhabitants, of whom 2693 are in the town, 867 being in East, and 1826 in West, Tadcaster, 10 miles (S. W.) from York, and 189½ (N. N. W.) from London. This place was the Roman station Calcaria, so named from the nature of the soil, which abounds with calx, or limestone; and was one of the out-ports, or gates, on the Consular way, to the Romans' chief military station, Eboracum (York). Under the name Calca-cestre Bede relates that Heina, the first female who assumed the habit of a nun in this country, retired hither, where she built a residence. In all the great civil wars, it was regarded as a post of considerable importance, and the possession of it was repeatedly contested. On the appointment of the Earl of Newcastle to the command of the royal army, in 1642, he advanced from York towards the town, with 4000 men and seven pieces of cannon, and commenced an attack on the enemy's works, which lasted without intermission from eleven in the morning to five in the afternoon, when, his ammunition being exhausted, he desisted from the assault, in expectation of a fresh supply from York, before the following morning; but during the night, Sir Thomas Fairfax, who was posted here with 700 men, drew them off to Cawood and Selby, and left the royalists in possession. The town is situated on the navigable river Wharfe, over which is a very handsome stone bridge, considered the finest in the county, erected in the beginning of the last century; as a great public thoroughfare, it is much frequented, and contains numerous inns and hotels for the accommodation of travellers, and on the banks of the river are several flour-mills. The streets are arranged on each side; the houses are neat and modern, and the walks near the stream are highly interesting, and have been greatly improved. There is a station on the York and North-Midland railway at Bolton-Percy, within three miles. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on the last Wednesdays in the months of May and October, for cattle and sheep; and in November, for hiring servants.

The parish comprises 7379*a.* 15*p.*, of which the soil is generally fertile, and the substratum abounds with freestone of admirable quality, whereof one quarry, called the Jackdaw Crag, belonging to the Vavasour family, supplied stone for the erection of York Minster, and also materials for its repair after the conflagration in 1829. The scenery in many parts is beautiful; and Grimston Hall, the seat of Lord Howden, is a splendid mansion, finely situated about two miles from the town, in a demesne commanding good views. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 4. 9½.; net income, £240; patron, Col. Wyndham; impropiator, Thomas Shann, Esq. The church is a handsome structure in the later English style, with a fine tower. There are places of worship for Independents, Inghamites, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyans. The grammar school, and an hospital for four men, were founded and endowed with lands and the sum of £600, by Dr. Oglethorpe, Bishop of Carlisle, and confirmed by licence in the 5th of Philip and Mary; the annual income is £120. A parochial school is supported; and forty girls are instructed by four women, almshouse pensioners, on the foundation of Mrs. Henrietta Dawson, who bequeathed £15 per annum to ten widows, and £10 a year to ten spinsters, with an additional £5 per annum, and £3 for coal, to each of the four women for teaching the children. A Sunday school, in connexion with the Established Church, was built by subscription in 1788, on a plot of ground given by the late Earl of Egremont; and Miss Hill has ever since contributed materially towards its support, and has endowed it with £15 per annum. The four almshouses founded by the Bishop of Carlisle are tenanted by aged men, each of whom receives one shilling per week. Several Roman coins have been found at different times; and there are some vestiges of a trench surrounding part of the town, which is supposed to have been thrown up in the reign of Charles I.

TADDINGTON, a chapelry, in the parish and union of BAKEWELL, hundred of HIGH PEAK, N. division of the county of DERBY, 3½ miles (S. S. W.) from Tideswell; containing, with the township of Priestcliffe, 499 inhabitants. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £87; patron, the Vicar of Bakewell; appropriators, the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, is fast going to decay: near it is the mutilated shaft of an ancient cross. There is a place of worship for Baptists. A school, erected in 1805, is supported by a rent-charge of £15, the bequest of Michael White, in 1798.

TADDINGTON, a hamlet, in the parish of STANWAY, union of WINCHCOMB, Upper division of the hundred of TEWKESBURY, E. division of the county of GLOUCESTER; containing 65 inhabitants.

TADLEY (ST. PETER), a parish, in the union of KINGSCLERE, hundred of OVERTON, Kingsclere and N. divisions of the county of SOUTHAMPTON, 7 miles (N. N. W.) from Basingstoke; containing 817 inhabitants. It is on the road from Basingstoke to Aldermaston, and comprises about 2000 acres, of which 700 are common: the making of brooms is carried on to a considerable extent. The living is annexed to the vicarage of Overton: the tithes have been commuted for £264, and the glebe contains about 1½ acre. There is a place of worship for Independents.

TADLOW (ST. GILES), a parish, in the union of CAXTON and ARRINGTON, hundred of ARMINGFORD, county of CAMBRIDGE, 4½ miles (E. S. E.) from Potton; containing 173 inhabitants. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £6. 17., and in the gift of the Master and Fellows of Downing College, Cambridge, who are the impropiators: the great tithes have been commuted for £5. 10., and those of the vicar for £125. 8.; there are 9 acres of glebe.

TADMARTON (ST. NICHOLAS), a parish, in the union of BANBURY, hundred of BLOXHAM, county of OXFORD, 5 miles (W. S. W.) from Banbury; containing 404 inhabitants. It comprises 2004*a.* 3*r.* 18*p.* by computation, of which 1308 acres are arable, 591 pasture, and 80 wood, furze, &c. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13. 11. 0½.; net income, £307; patrons, the Provost and Fellows of Worcester College, Oxford. The works called Tadmarton Castle and Hook-Norton Barrow, of which there are some vestiges, are supposed to have been raised by the Danes, when, in 914, they plundered this part of the county, and advanced with great havoc to Hook-Norton, where they killed many of the Saxons.

TAKELEY (HOLY TRINITY), a parish, in the union of DUNMOW, hundred of UTTLESFORD, N. division of ESSEX, 4 miles (W.) from Dunmow; containing 899 inhabitants. This parish, which had formerly a very extensive forest, comprises 3155*a.* 4*p.*, whereof about 2408 acres are arable, 486 meadow, and 106 wood. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £11; patron and appropriator, the Bishop of London. The great tithes have been commuted for £654. 10., and the vicarial for £220; £105. 10. are paid to certain impropriators; a glebe belonging to the appropriator and impropriators contains 22*a.* 38*p.*, and the vicar has 1*a.* 1*r.* 22*p.* The church is an ancient edifice of stone, with a south aisle, in which is a sepulchral chapel belonging to the Bassingbourne estate. A small priory was founded here in the reign of Henry I., as a cell to the abbey of St. Valery, in Picardy. Dr. Robert Fowler, Archbishop of Dublin, was buried here October 19th, 1801.

TALATON (St. James), a parish, in the union of HONITON, hundred of HAYRIDGE, Cullompton and N. divisions of DEVON, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from St. Mary Ottery; containing 462 inhabitants. The parish comprises about 2100 acres, of which 87 are common: the London and Exeter road runs through it. Escott House, here, which was destroyed by fire in 1808, was erected in the reign of James II., and several of the men employed in the work were tried by Judge Jefferies, and sentenced to be hanged in this parish, for having joined in the rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth. George III., and three of the princesses, were entertained in the mansion by Sir George Young, Bart., on the 14th of August, 1780. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £32. 3. 1½., and in the gift of the incumbent, the Rev. R. P. Welland: the tithes have been commuted for £333; there is a parsonage-house, and the glebe contains 62 acres. The church is in the later English style, with a very handsome tower, and contains several canopied niches having figures of saints, and a beautiful wooden screen, with a flight of stone steps leading to a rood-loft. A church was erected at Escott, by Sir J. Kennaway, at an expense of more than £2000, and consecrated on the 8th of May, 1840; the east and west windows, of large dimensions, are embellished with painted glass. Dr. Thomas Sprat, Bishop of Rochester, an historian and poet, was born here in 1636, when his father was rector; and Southcote, situated within the limits of the parish, was the occasional residence of Sir William Pole, the antiquary.

TALK-O'-TH'-HILL, a chapelry, in the parish of AUDLEY, union of NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME, N. division of the hundred of PIREHILL and of the county of STAFFORD, 5 miles (N. N. W.) from Newcastle; containing 1611 inhabitants. The great north road formerly passed through the village, which is situated upon an eminence commanding a view into nine counties, with the mountains of North Wales in the distance. In the centre is a stone cross, where a market was once held. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £118; patron, the Vicar of Audley; impropriator, G. Tollet, Esq. The chapel is a small brick building, surmounted by a cupola; and an elegant church has lately been erected at Clough, in the chapelry, the cost of which, amounting to £5500, was defrayed by Mr. Kinnersley, of Clough Hall. There is a place of worship for Wesleyans; also a free school erected in 1760. Adjacent to the village is a spring, the water of which is of a blue milky colour, strongly impregnated with sulphur, and much in request for cutaneous diseases.

TALKIN, a township, in the parish of HAYTON, union of BRAMPTON, ESKDALE ward, E. division of CUMBERLAND, 3 miles (S. E. by S.) from Brampton; containing 344 inhabitants. The township comprises 2357 acres, of which 1400 are common or waste land; it is bounded on the west by the river Gelt, and contains quarries of freestone and limestone, and collieries. The tithes have been commuted for £129. 5., of which £33. 15. are payable to an impropriator, £45. 10. to the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle, and £50 to the vicar of Brampton. Three valuable gold clasps were discovered in the year 1790, on Netherton farm, where a battle was formerly fought.

TALLAND (St. Tallan), a parish, in the union of LISKEARD hundred of WEST, E. division of CORNWALL, 2 miles (S. W. by W.) from West Looe; containing 1450 inhabitants, of whom 834 are in that portion of the parish exclusively of West Looe. The parish comprises 1860*a.* 2*r.* 17*p.*, and is bounded on the south by the English Channel, and on the east by a small estuary of the sea called the Looe river, the channel of which is nearly dry at low water. There is an ancient bridge of mean appearance, forming a communication between the old borough-towns of East and West Looe, the latter of which, as well as part of the small romantic fishing-town of Polperro, is in the parish of Talland. Stone is quarried for the roads. A canal was constructed about the year 1830, from Moor's water, near Liskeard, to within two miles of Looe, forming a communication with the Looe river; and a new road has been made from West Looe, towards Pelynt Church Town, from some parts of which the views are much admired. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £10; patron, N. Kendall, Esq.; impropriator, J. Graves, Esq. The great tithes have been commuted for £314. 14., and the vicarial for £136. A Roman Catholic chapel was lately erected by aid of a bequest from Sir Harry Trelawney; and there are places of worship for Independents and Wesleyans. At Polperro is a school endowed with the interest of £300, by Captain and Mrs. Kendall; and at West Looe is a national school, the master of which receives, from endowment, £30 per annum.

TALLENTIRE, a township, in the parish of BRIDEKIRK, union of COCKERMOUTH, ALLERDALE ward below Derwent, W. division of CUMBERLAND, 3½ miles (N. by W.) from Cockermouth; containing 246 inhabitants. Limestone is quarried and burned in the vicinity. The impropriate tithes have been commuted for £104, and the vicarial for £23.

TALLINGTON (St. Lawrence), a parish, in the union of STAMFORD, wapentake of NESS, parts of KESTEVEN, county of LINCOLN, 3 miles (W. by S.) from Market-Deeping; containing 246 inhabitants. A canal from Stamford to Boston, and the river Welland, run through the southern portion of the parish. The living is a discharged vicarage, valued in the king's books at £8. 9. 8.; net income, £200; patron and impropriator, the Earl of Lindsey. The tithes were commuted for land and a money payment in 1801; the glebe contains about 120 acres. On the outside of the church, above the chancel, is a rood bell, formerly rung at the elevation of the host. Edward Héron, in 1582, bequeathed some tenements and land, now producing, with an augmentation, £45 per annum, which sum is applied to the payment of a schoolmistress, to the repairs of the church and bridges, and to the relief of the poor.

TALWORTH, a hamlet, in the parish of LONG DITTON, union, and Second division of the hundred, of KINGSTON, E. division of SURREY, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles (S. S. E.) from Kingston; containing 317 inhabitants. It is on the road from Kingston to Ewell.

TAMERTON-FOLLIOTT (St. Mary), a parish, in the union of PLYMPTON ST. MARY, hundred of ROBOROUGH, Midland-Roborough and S. divisions of DEVON, 5 miles (N. by W.) from Plymouth; containing 1214 inhabitants. This place, supposed by Camden to be the ancient Tamara, is delightfully situated on a creek of the river Tamar, and is inhabited by several respectable families. Warlegh House, a venerable mansion with a fine hall, has been the residence of the lords of the manor from the reign of King Stephen; and the heronry, still existing as an appendage to the establishment, is among the indications of its former splendour. Maristow, the property of Sir Ralph Lopes, Bart., whose uncle, in 1789, had the honour of entertaining here George III. and three of the princesses, is a noble mansion with a chapel attached, in which divine service is regularly performed; the domain is extensive, and enriched with pleasingly-diversified scenery. The parish comprises 4090 acres, of which 287 are common or waste. The living is a vicarage, valued in the king's books at £12. 7. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$, and in the patronage of the Crown; impropiators, G. Leach, Esq., and others. The great tithes have been commuted for £134, and the vicarial for £338. 10.; there is a vicarage-house, and the glebe contains 5 acres. The church has a remarkably fine tower, and contains, among several handsome memorials of the Copleston, Bampfylde, and Radcliffe families, an ancient altar-tomb with the figures of an armed knight and his lady, supposed to represent Sir Ralph de Gorges and Ellen Folliott, his wife. A free school was founded, and liberally endowed with land and money, by Mary Deane, in 1734, and the income is about £120 a year.

TAMERTON, NORTH (St. Denis), a parish, in the union of HOLSWORTHY, hundred of STRATON, E. division of CORNWALL, 5 miles (S. S. W.) from Holsworthy; containing 589 inhabitants. The parish comprises 4775 acres, of which 450 are common or waste; the surface is in general hilly; the soil, though various, is for the most part a poor clayey earth. The river Tamar and the Bude canal run through the parish, parallel with each other, from north to south. The living is a donative curacy; net income, £230; patrons, R. P. Coffin, Esq., and the Heirs of the late Colonel l'Ans: the glebe contains about 20 acres. There is a dilapidated chapel at Hornacot.

TAMHORN, an extra-parochial place adjacent to the parish of WHITTINGTON, union of LICHFIELD, N. division of the hundred of OFFLOW and of the county of STAFFORD, 3 miles (N. W. by N.) from Tamworth; containing 5 inhabitants. The Birmingham and Fazeley canal passes in the vicinity, and on the east flows the river Tame. The estate comprises a wood of 108 acres, and a farm of 505 acres, and is the property of Sir Robert Peel, who, in the year 1827, purchased it from Lord George Cavendish.

TAMWORTH (St. Edith), a borough, market-town, and parish, and the head of a union, partly in the N., and partly in the S., division of the hundred of OFFLOW, S. division of the county of STAFFORD; and partly in the Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 7746 inhabitants, of whom 3789 are in the old borough, 22 miles (S. E. by E.) from Stafford, 27 (N. by W.) from Warwick, and 112 (N. W. by N.) from London. This town, which is considered the most ancient in the county of Stafford, derives its name from the river Tame, and Waert, or Worthidge, a water farm. At a very early date, it was the site of a Mercian fortification and royal residence, and was the seat of government under Offa, Cenwulf, Beornwulf, and others, at which period it had also a mint. Having been nearly destroyed by the Danes, it was rebuilt early in the 10th century, by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, who also erected a castle for its defence, which, having undergone recent repairs, is now a private residence; and the ancient fosse that surrounded the town, called the King's Dyke, is still visible. The town, which is about equally divided between the counties of Stafford and Warwick, though commonly considered a Staffordshire place, is situated near the confluence of the rivers Tame and Anker, both crossed by bridges about a mile distant from the Coventry canal, and consists of some good streets. The manufacture of paper and tape affords employment to several persons; and many others are engaged in the raising of fruit and vegetables. Many veins of coal have been found, and are worked in the vicinity; and bricks and tiles of great durability are made from a clay which abounds in the district. Here is a first-class station on the Birmingham and Derby Junction railway: the highest embankment on the line, rising 30 feet above the level of the surrounding country, occurs to the south of the town; and between this place and Kingsbury the railway crosses the river Anker, by a beautiful viaduct of 18 arches of 30 feet span, and one oblique arch of 60 feet, the whole erected at a cost of £18,000. There is a permanent library, under the direction of a committee; and a reading-room, to which is attached a collection of books, was established under the auspices of Sir Robert Peel, Bart., M.P. for the borough, in 1841. The market is on Saturday; fairs are held by charter on May 4th, July 26th, and October 24th, for cattle and merchandise, and there are five new fairs for the sale of cattle only. The town was, till the passing of the Municipal act, governed under a charter granted by Charles II., upon the surrender of one which had been conferred by Elizabeth. The government is now vested in a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors; the mayor and late mayor are justices of the peace, and the total number of magistrates is four, but the county justices have concurrent jurisdiction. The borough returns two members to parliament: the elective franchise was extended in 1832, to the £10 householders of the entire parish, which has been made to constitute the new borough, comprising an area of 11,000 acres, of which 4649 are in the Warwickshire portion: the old boundaries included only 83 acres; the mayor is returning officer. The corporation hold courts leet and baron; and petty-sessions for the borough take place every alternate Wednesday. The town-hall is a handsome building in the market place.

The parish comprises the townships of Syerscote and Fazeley, and the chapelry of Wigginton, in the county of Stafford; and the townships of Amington with Stony-Delph, and Bolehall with Glascote, the liberty of the Castle, and the hamlet of Wilnecote with Dosthill, in the county of Warwick. The living is a vicarage; net income, £170; patron, Captain A'Court, R.N. The church, situated in the county of Stafford, is spacious and handsome, with a fine tower, in which are two remarkable spiral staircases, communicating with separate floors, their respective entrances being within and without the church; beneath the edifice is a small crypt. The building combines the decorated and later English styles. It was formerly collegiate, and occupies the site of an ancient monastery: the foundation of the college, which consisted of a dean and six prebendaries, is uncertain, but is attributed, with the greatest probability, to the Marmions, who were owners of the castle. Some tessellated pavement, now placed in front of the communion-table, was discovered a few years since, when the church was undergoing repair. There are places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, and Wesleyans; and a Roman Catholic chapel. The free grammar school was refounded in the reign of Edward VI., and a stipend of £10. 13. 2½. was confirmed to the master from the revenues of the crown: in the reign of Elizabeth the bailiffs were incorporated governors, and, in 1677, the schoolroom was rebuilt; the revenue has been increased by various benefactors, and now amounts to £33. 11. Boys from the school are eligible to a scholarship at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, established by Mr. Frankland; and a native of the town to a fellowship in St. John's College, Cambridge, on the foundation of Mr. Bailey. A free school for twelve-boys and ten girls has an income of £20 per annum, partially arising from a bequest. In 1686, the Rev. John Rawlett bequeathed land and houses for teaching and apprenticing children; and there is an almshouse for fourteen men and women, endowed in 1678, by Thomas Guy, founder of Guy's Hospital, London, who represented the borough in seven parliaments, and, in 1701, rebuilt the town-hall. The poor law union of Tamworth comprises 24 parishes or places, 11 of which are in Stafford, 10 in Warwick, and 3 in Derby, and contains a population of 12,897. A bridge has been erected over the Tame, at Fazeley, along which passes the ancient Watling-street. Edward, Lord Thurlow, was a representative of the borough until his elevation to the peerage, and recorder until his death. Tamworth confers the inferior title of Viscount on Earl Ferrers.

TAMWORTH-CASTLE, a liberty, adjoining the borough, and in the parish and union, of TAMWORTH, Tamworth division of the hundred of HEMLINGFORD, N. division of the county of WARWICK; containing 59 inhabitants.

TANDRIDGE (St. PETER), a parish, in the union of GODSTONE, First division of the hundred of TAN-

DRIDGE, E. division of SURREY, 2 miles (E. by S.) from Godstone; containing 674 inhabitants. The parish is situated on the road from Guildford, by Godstone, to Maidstone; and the South-Eastern railway passes through it, to the south of Tilbusta Hill. The living is a perpetual curacy; net income, £80; patron and proprietor, Sir W. Clayton, Bart. The church is an ancient edifice, with a tower surmounted by a spire of wood. A priory of Augustine canons, in honour of St. James, to which Odo de Damartin was a great benefactor, was founded in the time of Richard I., and at the Dissolution had possessions valued at £86. 7. 6. per annum. In the grounds of the priory are the lids of two stone coffins dug up here, and in 1828 several silver and copper coins of Julius Cæsar and other Roman emperors were found.
